Nevertheless, if only half of the millennial population shall be truly righteous, there will then be a greater number of righteous persons on the earth in one generation than there have been altogether in all the past two hundred generations, because at present there are not estimated to be more than four or five million truly godly Christians among the existing thirteen hundred million inhabitants of this globe ; and, indeed, a thousand million are supposed to be heathen who have never heard of salvation through Jesus Christ.

Moreover, instead of merely thirteen hundred million, this earth is capable of containing, and very likely will contain in the Millennium, at least a hundred times that number of inhabitants.* At that time the twelve tribes of Israel will reoccupy Palestine, which will be divided afresh among them, and enlarged from the Mediterranean and the Nile to the Euphrates and Persian Gulf (Gen. 15 : 18 ; Ex. 23 : 31 ; Deut. 11 : 24 ; Josh. 1 : 4 ; Ezek. 47 : 13–21 ; 48).

The earthly Jerusalem, together with a new Jewish temple, will be rebuilt on a scale of unapproached magnificence, as described in the last nine chapters of Ezekiel, and in the latter part of Isaiah ; and will be nine miles square, or eighteen thousand measures, that is, about thirty-six miles in circumference (Ezek. 48 : 35).

(To be continued.)

---

* This earth is eight thousand miles in diameter, and contains two hundred million square miles of surface, of which only sixty million square miles are dry land ; hence there are 38,400 million acres of land, at 640 acres to a square mile. And if we reckon that three fourths of this land surface will be cultivated, there will be three fourths of 38,400 million acres—that is, 28,800 million acres—under cultivation ; and then, computing an acre of soil of millennial fertility to produce every year enough food for seven persons, there would be thus sufficient food annually for seven times 28,800 million persons ; that is, just about 200,000 million persons, which would be 150 times greater number than the present population of 1,300 million people.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH

In London.

(Continued from page 287.)

When Ernest met Rose at the London terminus he was startled with a sudden and quite natural surprise at the loveliness of his little daughter. They had never been separated for a fortnight before, as they had been now; and memory is but a poor substitute for sight. Her face had lost its girlish quiet, but it had gained a higher beauty by the half-unconscious mournfulness which looked out through her blue eyes. Her smile was no longer bright and ready, but it had a world more tenderness in it; and her voice was less ringing, but softer and lower. She was no longer a child with no shadow of a care upon her; and it brought a sharp pain to his heart to perceive the change.

The lodgings he had taken seemed intolerably dingy and miserable for Rose, when he came to look at them through her eyes. He had surrounded her hitherto with every thing that was pretty and elegant — little dainties lying altogether outside his own life, but forming an important portion of hers; and it struck him keenly how comfortless and mean this new dwelling-place would appear to her. But how could he alter it? He was a poor man in quest of work; no holiday task in these times.

"I hope it will be only for a little while, my darling," he said, as Rose's eyes wandered from one shabby object to another; "very soon, as soon as possible, we will have a little home of our own, and you shall be the mistress of it."

"Father," murmured Rose, hiding her head on his breast, and lifting her hand caressingly to his anxious face, "father, I do not mind where —with you."

She fully believed it, and meant it as she spoke. Anywhere with her father. She roused herself, and tried to chatter and laugh like the Rose of old; stealing furtive glances at his altered face. For he too was changed. He looked old and grave compared with the rich and prosperous man who had found a welcome entrance into many a high circle.

It was the close of the season, and the special meetings had long been over, and the speeches made at them forgotten, except by the orators themselves. The county families, and the bishop with his wife and daughters, who had taken so much notice of Rose, had all gone out of town, and were scattered abroad. Sir John Fortescue only was in London, being kept there by the late parliamentary proceedings; but Ernest had not come across him. The correspondence that had passed between them made them mutually desirous to drop all acquaintance.

London, therefore, was changed. To Rose it was a mere labyrinth of hot and dusty streets, broiling under the August sunshine, with not a breath of fresh air to cool her fevered lips. Presently she found her way to Kensington Gardens, where there were green and leafy avenues and corners less frequented than others, where she could sit for hours undisturbed, panting for the breezy cliffs of Clifford, and pondering over the lost days of the spring-time, when life had stretched before her as one long holiday of unbroken joy and gladness. Was it possible that only three months parted her from that blissful time?

But for Ernest London was the hunting-ground for a livelihood for Rose and himself. He had seen his bishop, and given him a plain, unvarnished account of his first fault, and of the restitution he had made; and the bishop had offered him the first living that should fall into his gift. But he could not resolve to enter the Church again for a living. He had felt no real call. During the seven years in which he had been vicar of Clifford he had not kept the solemn injunction of his church: "See that you never cease your labor, your care and diligence, until you have done all that lieth in you, according to your bounden duty, to bring all such as are or shall be committed to your care, unto that agreement in the faith and knowledge of God, and to that ripeness and perfectness of age in Christ, that there be no place left among you either for error in religion, or for viciousness in life."

He had not done that at Clifford. It was clear in his memory how irksome the duties of his pastoral office had been. Now that he knew more of the kingdom of God, and of eternal life, he marvelled at his own temerity in rushing into so sacred a post as the ministry. It would be impossible to him henceforth to take the charge of souls as a means of gaining a livelihood for himself.

If it had not been for Rose, he felt that he could have gone out as a missionary into some half-civilized communities, or some savage land, where his power of management and direction and his physical strength could have been turned to use. He would have gladly joined some mission enterprise that was full of difficulty and danger, and flung all his energy into it.

He made one or two inquiries in this direction, but he did not push them, for there was Rose to be considered, and Ruth. What could these two do without him? He must have a very distinct, emphatic call, an unmistakable assurance that it was the will of God, before he could forsake these two, as the disciples had forsaken all to follow Christ.

Somewhat heavy-hearted, he bethought himself at last of the editor of a religious newspaper, whose acquaintance he had made during the spring, when he had been the welcome speaker on several platforms. They had held some friendly converse together whenever they had chanced to meet; and he had struck Ernest as being a shrewd, sensible, keen-witted man. Such a man, if he was in truth a Christian, could be of service to him in his present straits. For Ernest's funds were ebbing fast, though he had no dread of actual poverty. It was with some difficulty that he penetrated to the editor's office, and when he reached it he was received with stiffness and coldness by his former acquaintance. The editor rose from his chair when he was announced, and did not sit down again, though he motioned him to a seat.

"You do not remember me?" asked Ernest, also standing.

"Quite well," he answered.

"You are, perhaps, aware of the change in my circumstances since I saw you last?" he resumed.

"Perfectly," was the reply.

"I have to begin life anew," continued Ernest.

"You are in orders," interrupted the editor; "your bishop was speaking kindly of you, the last time I saw him, at Sir Robert Fortescue's. There would be no difficulty in getting a curacy or a small living."

"I cannot take a charge again," he said, "unless as a missionary, where I should have something more than the routine work of an English parish. I had no right to be in the Church when I was there. I cannot, however, offer myself as a missionary at present, till I see whether my daughter could rough it with me. I want something to do for a while that I can do here till she grows accustomed to this great change."

"Sit down, Mr. Clifford," said the editor, resuming his chair, "and let us have a friendly chat together."

In another minute Ernest had entered once again upon a full narration of his story to this casual friend, whose face was half hidden from him by the hand that covered his eyes. When it was ended, he stretched out his hand to Ernest, and grasped his heartily.

"There's one post I know of you could enter into at once," he said, "but the salary is small —not more than three hundred pounds a year. We are looking out for a secretary for our mission to seamen. The duties are stiff. There are the chief seaports to visit, and to hold meetings at, where you would have to be the chief speaker; and now and then a sermon to preach on behalf of the mission. All the correspondence would fall to you, and the one clerk who is always at the office. There would be reports to write, and notices, etc., to newspapers, at tively put, you know. Of course we desire a thoroughly in earnest."

"I would take it gladly, if you think me able," said Ernest.

"You're the very man," replied the e heartily, "almost a seaman yourself. I sha the committee this very night, and they jump at you. We could never have hope get a man like you."

"Thank God!" exclaimed Ernest.

"What! for such a fall in the world?" the editor. "You were introduced to me a weeks ago as one of the leading men in county; and now you are going to be the elling secretary of a poor mission, yet i infancy."

Their eyes met with a frank, comprehe gaze, and both smiled as they shook hands with a friendly clasp.

"Thank God!" they ejaculated at the instant.

It was still the early autumn, but thoug sultry heat of the summer was gone, the st of London, with their ceaseless stir and cl of many sounds, were oppressive to the heart of Rose, pining for her native place, its fresh sea-breezes and tranquil silence. tude in the midst of a throng of fellow-crea was a new thing to her, for in Clifford every was familiar, and every tongue had some to say to her. There was something inex sibly painful to Rose's warm and girlish he passing a continuous stream of people, might be so many phantoms hurrying away some ghostly world of which she knew not and whither she could not follow them.

It was a relief to her when her father fo settled employment. He set about seeki house for Rose at once, in the suburbs, f could not think of planting his little cou bred daughter in the midst of streets, neither fresh air nor sunshine could come t readily. They fell in with a little old-fash cottage on Epping Forest, before the bea the autumn was over; and Ernest, seeing t struck Rose's fancy, immediately offered hi as tenant for it.

It stood at a short distance from one of the roads intersecting the Forest, upon an open resembling a village green, about which wer a few scattered dwellings, most of them than the cottage, and one or two of the mansions of wealthy people. Past the garden in front of their new home swe avenue of chestnut trees, on which the po brown nuts were just bursting through prickly husks.

It was this avenue that had caught Rose at first. Behind the house stretched the low glades of pollard trees and tangle of wood and bracken, and wild, uncultivated with shallow pools lying in the hollows, an and there clumps of old oak trees and m cent beeches which form the forest. Th cluded spot, within six miles of London, s almost as free from the din of traffic as C itself.

The wind, blowing softly through the and over the fields of fern and bramble cool and fresh. The sky was still as blu summer, and the leaves were only beginn change their dark green for brilliant hues low or crimson. Hollyhocks and sunflowe some late roses were blooming in the c garden. It seemed a paradise to Rose aft months of dreary solitude in the stifling of London.

Rose fought bravely against the hearts and homesickness that were pressing her ha undermining her strength. She laughed as as she had done in her old home, but it longer the merry, impulsive laughter, could be traced to no cause except that of mirthfulness. The servant, who had recommended to them by the wife of the fr editor, never saw her smile when her fath away. The absence of all familiar wounded Rose's eye.

The utter newness of the furniture, which she hoped to choose herself, contrasted painfully with the dear old household chattels at home, as she still called Clifford. All was strange, and to Rose strangeness was terrible. Very soon her father was necessarily occupied with his new engagements, which were many and various. Some of his work he could bring home, and Rose was never so happy as when he was busy among his papers, in the little room which was called his study.

(To be continued.)

THE MARRIAGE FEAST.

S. S. Lesson for May 16th.—Matt. 22 : 1–14. Golden Text, verse 9. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

THE parable which forms our subject for to-day has evidently a primary application to the Jews, who as a nation have lost the privilege of being the bride of Christ. It is often confounded with that of Luke 14 : 16–24. There are some points of resemblance, but the difference between them is most essential. The feast of Luke 14 is evidently prepared for the guests, but in our parable we read, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, which made a marriage for His Son." It is a type of God's joy, in which those who know Him are called to participate. We know well that enemies and strangers are not the guests usually bidden to a marriage feast; it is the near relations and the friends of years who are expected to throw themselves into the joy of those who shall be united. Consequently, while they who are bidden in the parable of Luke typify the unconverted, the appeal here is to the children of God, who are called away from their own joy, sorrows, interests, to enter into the joy of their Lord.

In the parable of Luke those who would not come made an excuse—there was a perception that things were not as they should be. In the question of mere safety from hell and destruction it is not difficult to awaken the unconverted thus far, to make at least an excuse for not being saved; everybody does this; and it is an acknowledgment of conviction stifled—it is a proof that the Holy Spirit has been doing His work and has been resisted. But they who were called unto the marriage made no excuse whatever—"they made light of it." Oh, how truly does this represent the spirit of the religion of our day! Everything which is addressed to the selfish instinct of self-preservation is received, or at any rate recognized; men acknowledge the necessity of seeking after that which is best for themselves; but it needs the divine instincts of Christ's nature in order to enter into the teaching of Christianity, which is nothing for self, all for God.

"If any man will come after Me," said our blessed Lord, "let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me" (Matt. 16 : 24). There is a company "which follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth" (Rev. 14 : 4); but these are "first-fruits," the best and ripest, because they have understood their vocation. The call to the bride in Ps. 45 : 10, 11 is in full accordance with what we have been saying: "Hearken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear; forget also thine own people, and thy father's house; so shall the King greatly desire thy beauty: for He is thy Lord; and worship thou Him." Let us here learn a lesson. There can only be union where there is something which unites, and love which is unselfish can never unite with self. Thus, however much we may say that the Church is the bride of Christ, and however much we may claim to be one of her members, there is an utter impossibility of union with Him personally unless we possess the bride-spirit and become bride-souls.

The first requisite to the bride is silence: "Hearken, O daughter, and consider." We cannot listen to God's voice unless all is still within us—all questionings, all agitation, all energy of self. Our heavenly bridegroom is the Word. He wants in His bride one who is receptive, who can receive what He gives. "Incline thine ear:" there must be the bowing down, coming low to receive His instructions; and if we have any thing of the bride-spirit, and we still do not incline our ear, He will bring us to it in His own way by some physical or other suffering. He must have in his bride a reflection of Himself; she must be a mirror, a still lake where He manifests Himself.

The next requisite is, "Forget also thine own." All reference to self, all care for self, all consideration for, even all recognition of, self, must cease, that we may find ourselves only in Him. This was the life of Jesus. He "pleased not Himself" (Rom. 15 : 3), sought not His own (1 Cor. 13 : 5), but did always those things which pleased God (John 8 : 29). And unless we possess the same spirit we can no more be really united to Christ than oil can mix with water. How, then, obtain such a spirit? Beloved in Christ, all the power of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, is at work to produce this spirit in you and me, to wean us from self, and to make us divine. Believe this fully, and you will learn to understand and enter into God's dealings with you. And when a call comes, like that in our subject, to leave any thing you may be occupied with, however needful and important it may seem to be, do not hesitate to leave it, that you may be at God's disposal for all that He wills. Your part and mine is to yield ourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and our members as instruments of righteousness unto God (Rom. 6 : 13).

It is only when we learn to forget our own that the Lord can see beauty in us; and this beauty is "the beauty of the Lord our God" (Ps. 90 : 17); it is the divine nature (2 Pet. 1 : 4) of which we are made partakers if we escape "the corruption which is in the world through lust" ("epithumia," which means rather the strong desires of our natural will, the life of self, than fleshly lust); it is "the life of Jesus" . . . "manifest in our mortal flesh" (2 Cor. 4 : 11). But how glorious the anticipation! "Then shall the King greatly desire thy beauty." The bride in the Song of Solomon says, "My beloved is mine, and I am His" (Cant. 2 : 16); but mine is first and His is last. In Cant. 6 : 3 there is a change: "I am my Beloved's, and my Beloved is mine;" self is last here, He has increased, she has decreased (John 3 : 30), and the result is, "I am my Beloved's, and His desire is toward me" (Cant. 7 : 10). Now the King can greatly desire her beauty because it is His own.

In our parable, when the king sent forth his servants to call them which were bidden to the wedding "they would not come." The first appeal contained no other inducement than the marriage of the king's son. But now he adds other inducements: "Tell them which are bidden, Behold, I have prepared my dinner: my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready; come unto the marriage." In His tender love and consideration our Father tells us that there is something for us as well as for Him in the call to the marriage. But, alas! while the main call is not addressed to selfish interests, the bidden guests are not attracted by it. "They made light of it, and went their ways, one to his farm, another to his merchandise." Their ways instead of His way, their interests before His. And so it is even now. Among the mass of those who are converted, how few leave their own interests for His! how often the farm, the merchandise, the position in society, take precedence of the love of souls!

And even amongst Christian workers and earnest winners of souls, how often we find the need for the reiterated lesson, "Forget also thine own." How often we hear workers choosing their work, saying, "I like working amongst such and such a class, or in such and such a locality, but I do not like such and such another place and work; I like to work with so-and-so, but I cannot work at all with so-and-so." Where is the forgetting one's own where such a spirit is manifest? Again, the painful jealousies and divisions among Christians, which can only exist where self lives. Do not all these things come from the failure to accept the marriage invitation, to forget our own for His, to deny ourselves and take up our cross and follow Him? And do we not see that while such a spirit lasts, union, marriage union, with Christ is an impossibility?

"And the remnant took his servants, and entreated them spitefully, and slew them." Persecution does not often arise from the simple preaching of the Gospel. But when the lives of those who are converted become so changed that they are a standing reproach to the selfish policy of the world and of half-hearted Christians, then it is that these latter are stirred up to enmity, and as a rule persecution takes its rise from them. This provoked the wrath of the king, as this will provoke our God to send the time of great tribulation upon the earth, and especially upon Christendom. And in the "distress of nations, with perplexity" (Luke 21 : 25), which we see before our eyes, the unsettled state of kingdoms and empires, the stupendous military preparations throughout Europe, it may be we are on the verge of this time of trouble.

"Then saith he to his servants, The wedding is ready, but they which were bidden were not worthy." Let us notice that in the parable of Luke nothing is said about worthiness; we are saved by the blood of Jesus, not because we are worthy, but unworthy. Here, however, there must be a fitness—a worthiness to come to the marriage of the Lamb. And the condition of worthiness is to have no other preoccupation. Neither gifts nor service for the Master, neither knowledge nor experience, can make us worthy if we are occupied with these things instead of with Him. It is only when filled with the knowledge of His will that we can "walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing" (Col. 1 : 9, 10); we can only "walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love" (Eph. 4 : 1, 2); always in living out of ourselves and in Him.

"Go ye therefore," says the king, "into the highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage." God is marvellously unveiling His truth in our days, and there is a preaching, not only of salvation from sin and everlasting death, proclaimed with the utmost clearness, but also there is a preaching of holiness. It is not only, "Come unto Me . . . and I will give you rest;" there is also the cry, "Come unto the marriage." And the reports of those who work among the native Africans, the Chinese, and in many of the dark places of earth, bear witness that some of these who were so far off are they who most intelligently and with the most whole-heartedness lay hold of, and live out, the deep principles of true Christianity.

The servants went out into the highways and gathered together all as many as they found, both bad and good, and the wedding was furnished with guests. How explain that the higher calls of Christianity can attract bad and good, i.e., converted and unconverted? There is something in the call to self-renunciation which awakens the ambition of certain minds, and without passing by the cross they endeavor to practise Christian principles, and to take their place among the guests at the marriage feast. Such are the earnest-minded and devoted who give their lives to good works, but without standing on the work of Christ's redemption. These are like the man who had not on a wedding garment, who thought that his own clothing was good enough. "Friend," said the king, "how camest thou in hither, not having a wedding garment?" And he was speechless. It is only as condemned, crucified with Christ in His death, only as washed in His most precious blood, that we have any standing ground with our God. We deserve what Christ suffered, and only through the virtue of His atoning blood can we lay claim to any place in the palace of the king. The guest who entered under false pretences was cast "into outer darkness;" for "many are called, but few are chosen." Many are saved, but few are amongst the chosen bride-souls.

FOREIGN TOPICS.

Public Attention in Great Britain has been concentrated, during the past week, on the selection Mr. Gladstone was making from among his supporters, of men to fill the various ministerial positions at his disposal. These appointments have not been made without considerable jealousy and irritation. The party of which Mr. Gladstone is the head comprises men with a wide variety of political principles. At the one extreme are the Whigs, whose ideas of political change are so moderate, that they are but little removed from Conservatives; at the other extreme are the Radicals, many of whom would rejoice in the substitution of a republic for a monarchy.

Early in the week the Radicals saw with dismay that Mr. Gladstone was giving the most important offices to the Whigs, and the inference was drawn that his government would not differ from that of his predecessor in a sufficient degree to satisfy the more advanced section of the party. An intimation was conveyed to the statesman that unless the Radicals were represented in the Cabinet, that section would not consider themselves bound to support his measures. The situation was serious, for if Mr. Gladstone found himself opposed by the Conservatives, the followers of Mr. Parnell, and the Radicals, his majority would be insufficient to constitute a strong government. A concession was therefore necessary, and it was made.

As the Cabinet is now formed, Mr. Gladstone occupies two offices himself: he is first Lord of the Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer. Lord Granville, who is better known for his suavity and courtesy than his firmness, is Foreign Minister; Lord Selborne, an eminent Christian and an able lawyer, is Lord High Chancellor; Mr. Fawcett, the blind statesman, noted for his profound knowledge of Indian affairs, has the control of the Post Office; and Mr. Chamberlain, an avowed republican, is President of the Board of Trade. Sir Charles Dilke, also a republican, is Under Foreign Secretary, his duty being to represent the Foreign Office in the House of Commons, and answer all questions on Foreign Affairs raised there, the principal Foreign Secretary being in the Upper House. The two last-mentioned appointments are the concession made to the Radical wing of the party. The other offices are filled with moderate men, such as usually constitute the Liberal Cabinets. The new Ministers have now to seek re-election by their constituencies, it being a principle of the British Constitution that a member of Parliament vacates his seat in accepting office. As a rule they are re-elected, but in this case opposition is threatened in one or two instances.

An Atheist's Difficulty.—Charles Bradlaugh, recently elected Member of the English Parliament by the citizens of Northampton, is placed in an embarrassing position by the oath required to be taken by all representatives. He objects to the oath, first, because he does not believe in the existence of God, and therefore would stultify himself by calling upon God to witness the sincerity of his oath; and, secondly, because he, being a republican, objects to swear fealty to the Crown and Constitution.

The oath has already been twice modified—once to admit Roman Catholics, and secondly to admit Jews. Mr. Bradlaugh now desires it may be dispensed with altogether to admit him. Mr. Bradlaugh is by no means a desirable acquisition to the House of Commons, and there will doubtless be decided opposition to any proposal to lower the standard so as to secure his presence there.

There has been more Fighting in Afghanistan. A correspondent of the London Times reports that on April 19th a fierce engagement took place near Ghuznee, between the Afghans and the British under the command of General Stewart. The Afghans numbered about fifteen thousand, and while General Stewart was preparing to attack them three thousand of the enemy's horse rushed upon both flanks of his line. After an hour's desperate fighting the enemy was beaten, and the whole body dispersed over the country. The Afghans lost over a thousand killed. Another engagement occurred at Hydabad on April 25th, in which General Ross achieved a decisive victory over the Afghans. These accounts confirm the belief that the English supremacy in Afghanistan will be obstinately contested by the Afghan tribes.

A Russian Mechanic has been Arrested, who is believed to have been concerned in the explosion in the Czar's Winter Palace on February 17th. His name is Sheirtch; he is a Lithuanian, and a nephew of the Governor of the Province of Kalouga. Three persons of higher rank have also been arrested—it is presumed on account of disclosures made by Sheirtch.

Correspondents of the European journals report that the condition of the three Russian invalids occasions much anxiety. The Empress is being kept alive only by stimulants, and is believed to be rapidly sinking; Prince Gortschakoff, notwithstanding his unexpected improvement, cannot be expected to recover; and the Emperor is said to be in a critical condition, brought on by the shock to his nerves produced by the successive attempts on his life. On the three lives now trembling in the balance hang serious issues, not only to Russia, but to the rest of the world.

Horrible Atrocities in Bulgaria are again reported. It was hoped that when Bulgaria was freed from Turkish rule law and order would be maintained, but the Bulgars appear to be no less brutal than their former masters. European journals contain details of revolting deeds recently committed, of which Bulgarian soldiers, led by Russian officers, were the perpetrators.

The Sultan of Turkey is being Pressed for money by his creditors. The Constantinople correspondent of the Manchester Guardian telegraphs that the Turks are almost at the end of their resources. There is little money coming in from the impoverished provinces, and the custom-house receipts are inadequate for the requirements of the departments. On Monday last several army and navy contractors went to the palace, demanding an interview with the Sultan, for the purpose of securing a settlement of their accounts. Some of them were received by the Chamberlain, and stated that they were ruined by the Porte and were unable to provide further provisions. As there is no money to meet the emergency, it is greatly feared that the supply of provisions to the army will be stopped. The sum due the contractors is more than $5,000,000. The merchants will now supply for cash only. Rations were heretofore supplied to officers and their families, but are now furnished to officers only. Their families are consequently suffering great deprivation.

The Meetings Held by Rev. E. Payson Hammond in Montreal, Canada, are being greatly used by God in the conversion of adults as well as of children. Mr. Hammond, in the course of a letter written to Mr. Dougall, of this city, says: "Rev. Dr. Douglass, of the Methodist Theological Seminary, stated publicly, yesterday, that he had known Montreal for thirty-five years, and that the city had never been moved by God's Spirit as now. The work among the children has been far greater than when I was here before, for it has reached all parts of the city. St. James' Street Church is crowded nightly." It is the largest building in the city devoted to Protestant worship.

An Explosion with a View to Robbery took place on April 24th, in the gaming room at Montecarle. It seems that a large cartridge was placed under the clock on the mantelpiece near the trente-quarante table. The force of the explosion was so great that it shattered the windows; the lights were extinguished, and a scene of the most terrific disorder ensued. Hundreds of people rushed wildly about in every direction; many persons fainted, and a large number were seriously wounded by the falling glass of the chandeliers. The explosion was the work of a number of robbers, who succeeded in get away with upward of 150,000 francs. In panic which followed several persons were t pled under foot, and the number of thos jured in one way or another is very large. end of the main room was completely wrec Montecarle has acquired an unenviable re tion as a place for unrestricted gambling, an doubt the thieves hoped to secure an even l booty.

Female Drunkenness in London.—The J of one of the London police courts recentl occasion to call attention to the great nu of women who were brought before hi charges of drunkenness. On one day fi women were so charged; on another o eleven prisoners placed in the dock for offence eight were females; and this sta things, the judge observed, was perfectl graceful, and in future more severe steps have to be taken with regard to this f drunkenness. There was a great increase and it was a miserable and disgraceful th see woman after woman brought before hi after day for drunkenness. Fines were im on those female prisoners of whom nothin known, but those who were shown to be fre occupants of the dock were sent to prison.

The Police or the Salvation Army?—Mr ry Varley attended a meeting of the Sal Army at Barnsley, England, recently. I scribed the testimony of many of the co among which was the following: "The L praised for sending the Army to Bar that's what I say. I well remember how I 'em talking about the young women a-pr in the market-place, an' I went, and I sc lered 'em. Some of my mates said, 'You pretty follerin' them in the streets, didn't They meant it a-jeerin' like; but, my f afore this I've follered the policeman, a said nought about it. I'd rayther foller vation Captain an' our other friends a praise the Lord. Why, afore I joined th all my things was in the pawn-shop, an why, bless 'em, my home is summin' oughter be. I only wish they'd comed my missus knows the difference, and the knows it, an' all; and I means by His hold on."

The Russian Factory Workman's L health are sacrificed to rapid profits, an far more in the power of the grasping, ur factory-owner than the serf of twenty y was in that of the nobleman landown Russian workman, as a rule, is never wages in money, but in groceries, cloth firewood, all of bad quality, and furn shortened quantity—thanks to a widel system of false weights. They are treac encouraged to get into their employer's a certain amount, and thus their future are made sure of. The hours of work are some factories fifteen hours a day—and dren work as long as their parents. T hands sleep in underground cellars o wooden sheds—men, women, and chi huddled together. Their habits and t are still those of the serf-peasant. The before their employer, for to them he i personation of the old historical and st authority.

Too Much Washing.—A Daily Pa "The wretched beggars whose feet ar every year on Good Friday by the King are the most unhappy of mortals. forced to take six foot-baths a day fo previous, and a whole army of chirop let loose upon them to extract corns, perfume." It is a well-known work o the Church of Rome to wash the feet in imitation of our Saviour. No washed His disciples' feet, because the been walking on a dusty road in op without stockings; but Romish dev the feet of people who are poor eno them do so without asking whether to be washed. The Pope's own foot not washed.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

ed at 63 Bible House, New York City, and 2 Ivy Lane, London. Edited in London by the Rev. M. Baxter, in New York by Mr. B. Aitken.
Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr
GE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also occasionally a Sermon by the Rev. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL.D., the celebrated Methodist Minister, Rev. W. M ITKEN, or some other Eminent Preacher; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

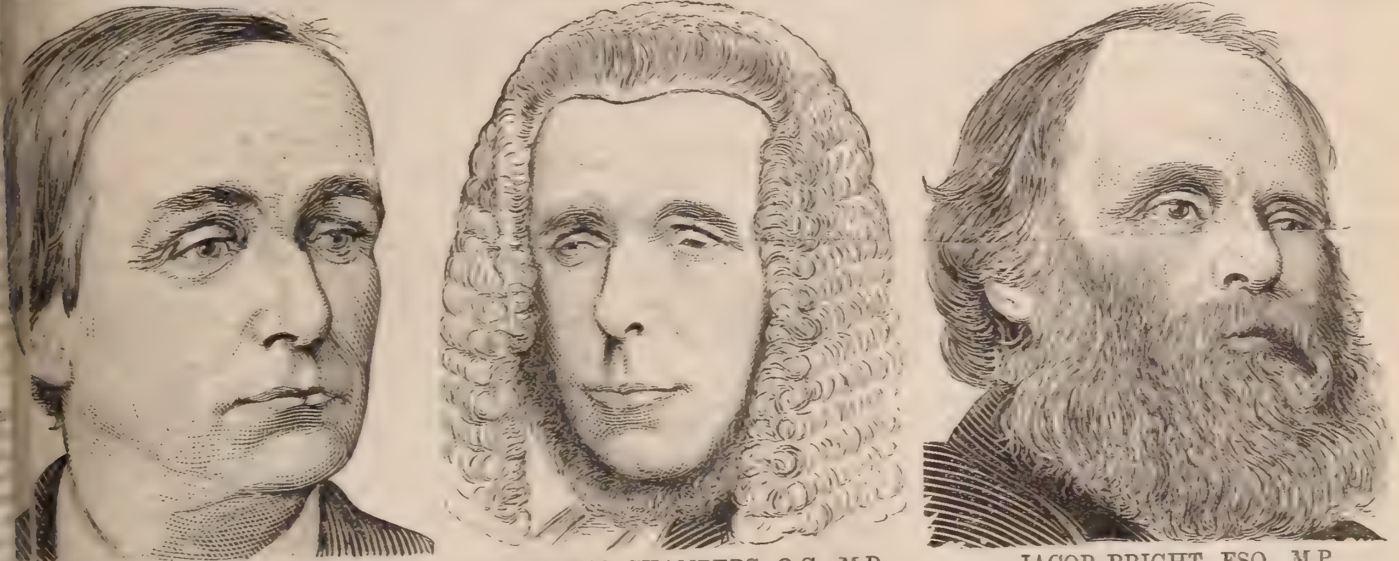
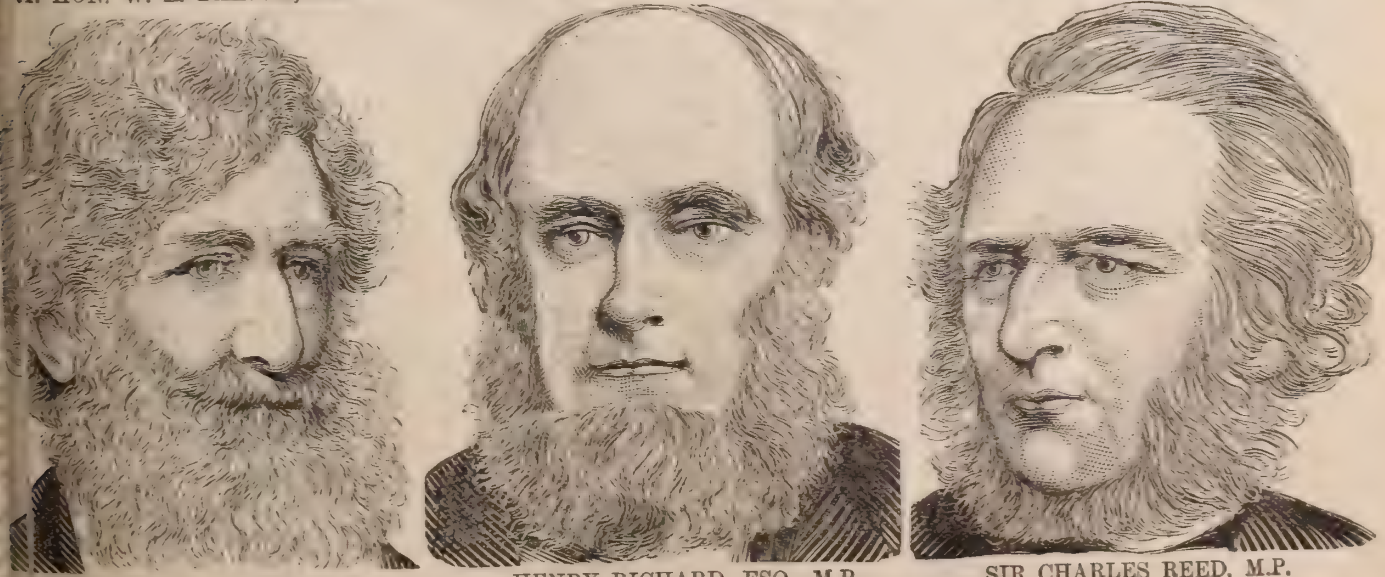
gle Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, MAY 20, 1880. 14th Year. No. 21—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

AITS OF SIX PROMINENT MEMBERS OF BRITISH PARLIAMENT, with Sketches of Lives—The Fever at Dr. Barnardo's Homes.
SS IN THE MANSION. A New Sermon by lmage.
BLESSED VIRGIN MARY'S CREED." By eary Martin (Concluded).
OR'S FATAL INHERITANCE. A Temper- story (Concluded)—Healed by Faith.
WHAT COMING WARS MAY WE EXPECT? by Rev. M. Baxter (Continued).
CURRENT EVENTS: The Presidential Campaign—Waiting for Appropriations—The Bible Society—A Town in Pennsylvania Burned—The New Methodist Bishops—The Future of America—A Subscription Declined on Principle—Sudden Death of Chief Judge Church—A Meeting in the Old Brewery, etc.
THE SPIRIT OF POWER AND LOVE. A Sermon by Rev. W. M. Punshon, LL.D.
SALVATION BY WORKS, A CRIMINAL DOCTRINE. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
A WEIGHT OF WEALTH (Continued).
GETHSEMANE. S. S. Lesson by Mrs. M. Baxter.
FOREIGN TOPICS: The British Administration—Roman Catholic Appointments to Responsible Offices—The Princess Louise Seriously Injured—A Popular Novelist's Conversion—The Irish Famine and the Government—A Natural Electric Light—A Clergyman Reproved by a Bride, etc.



T. HON. W. E. BAXTER, M.P SIR THOMAS CHAMBERS, Q.C., M.P. JACOB BRIGHT, ESQ., M.P.



SIR ROBERT CARDEN, M.P. HENRY RICHARD, ESQ., M.P. SIR CHARLES REED, M.P.

Six Prominent Members of the British Parliament.

OUR SIX PORTRAITS.

RIGHTLY understood, the position of chosen representative of the people is one of the most honorable positions to which any man can attain. Far above the appointments of the Executive is that the citizens confer when they say, "Go thou and make our laws, and represent us in the councils of the nation."

There is also a reflex consideration in the choice. An ignoble or unworthy choice indicates a lack of wisdom in the people. As Carlyle forcibly expresses it: "Given the men people choose, the People itself in its exact worth and worthlessness is given. A heroic people chooses heroes and is happy; a valet or flunky people chooses sham-heroes, what are called quacks, thinking them heroes, and is not happy." It would be well for themselves and for the whole nation if every constituency recollected that fact at the polls, and each man, as he registers his vote for the candidate of his choice, remembered that the man for whom he votes will be regarded as the representative of his own character and that of his fellow-citizens.

In the recent General Election in Great Britain, the six constituencies, of whose representatives we give portraits to-day, have honored themselves in selecting as their Members of Parliament men renowned for their religious and philanthropic character. In such men they may well place confidence.

THE RIGHT HON. W. E. BAXTER,

Liberal Member for the Montrose Burghs.

THE Right Hon. W. E. Baxter was born at Dundee in 1825, and, after passing through the high school of that town, studied in the University of Edinburgh. In 1855 he succeeded the late Mr. Joseph Hume as Member for the constituency he now represents. He had more than one offer to take office, but he persistently declined, he accepted the post of Secretary to the Gladstone's adminis Admiralty. Three years later he became Secretary to the Treasury, and this position he held till he resigned in 1873. The same year saw him become a member of the Privy Council. He is a merchant engaged in foreign trade, and his place of business is in Dundee.

He is well known to members of various religious societies, and on missionary occasions especially has spoken with considerable power. He is the author of several well-known works, including "Impressions of Central and Southern Europe" (1850), "Tagus and Tiber," "America and the Americans," "Hints to Thinkers," and "Free Italy," which appeared in 1874. In his "America and the Americans" he gives a description of the commencement of his voyage to New York, with which many who have made the Transatlantic voyage will, perhaps, keenly sympathize: "For the first few days the well-seasoned enjoy a monopoly of good things, their companions meanwhile lying in a dreamy, half-torpid state in nauseous cabins, trying to get their heads lower and even lower still, loathing the sound of the dinner-bell, and so helpless that one might, without a shadow of resistance on their part, throw them to the fishes! One cold, cheerless morning in March I lay in my narrow crib on board a Cunard steamer, listening to the sound on deck, and debating within myself whether I should muster courage enough to rise. The state-rooms in these vessels are entered from the other side of a long, narrow passage, and the doors are generally left ajar, so as to admit the fresh air.

"The steward whose business it was to arouse the sleepers was presently heard descending the companion, and never shall I forget the shouts of laughter which greeted him when, knocking at the door of a cabin where slept a little Frenchman from New Orleans, and announcing, 'eight o'clock, sir; time to get up, sir. Your trousers at the door, sir,' he received for answer in a tone of calm resignation, 'Oh, vell, take dem away; I shall never need my trousers no more!'"

While in America Mr. Baxter paid great attention to the religious condition of the country, to its educational system, and Sunday-school plans.

Mr. Baxter has also travelled over the greater portion of Italy, and, much as he admired the scenery and the wonderful works of art which attracted annually so many visitors, he was more deeply interested in the political state and prospects of the country, and felt convinced from all he heard and saw that there was a great future before it. He prayed that while permitted by a kind Providence to remain undisturbed in possession of the temple of art and the garden of Europe, it might become increasingly irradiated with Gospel light.

SIR THOMAS CHAMBERS, Knt., Q.C.,

Liberal M.P. for Marylebone, and Recorder of the City of London.

THIS gentleman, whose portrait will be readily distinguished by the horse-hair wig which, in common with all English judges and barristers, he wears while in the courts, is Recorder of the City of London, as well as a prominent member of the House of Commons. He is a native of Hertfordshire, though of distinguished Scottish descent. He was born at Hertford in 1814, and was educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge. On leaving the university he commenced the study of law, and kept his terms at the Inner Temple, London. Having completed the usual curriculum, he was called to the bar. Being but twenty six years of age at the time of this event, he spent a considerable period in the practice of his profession ere he aspired to a seat in Parliament.

An opportunity was in 1852 afforded by which it was possible for him to attain the coveted position of M.P., and his nomination was invested with the greater honor as it was associated with his native town, Hertford. He represented this borough until 1857, when he was elected Common Serjeant of London. In this capacity he always showed great consideration for those persons whose limited means compelled them to conduct their own defence, when charged before him, and who disdained the plea in formâ pauperis.

Perhaps in addition to his generous disposition, Sir Thomas remembered Lord Lyndhurst's reply to Mr. Cleave, the newsvender, who was tried before his lordship for some offence against the government. Mr. Cleave began his defence by observing that he was afraid he should, before he sat down, give some awkward illustrations of the truth of the adage, that "he who acted as his own counsel had a fool for his client." "Ah, Mr. Cleave," said his lordship, with great pleasantry, "don't you heed that adage; it was framed by a lawyer."

In 1861 he was appointed a Queen's Counsel, and in 1865 was chosen one of the Members of Parliament for Marylebone, which constituency he has continued to represent ever since. In Parliament he has shared with Mr. Newdegate and the late Mr. Whalley the duty of keeping public attention drawn to the necessity of official supervision of convents by state officers; but the Bill for legalizing marriage with a deceased wife's sister he has adopted as his own, and with the regularity of the returning seasons he presents it to the House for acceptance. Hitherto he has not been successful, but he patiently bides his time.

He was knighted for his judicial services in 1872, and in 1878 he was appointed to succeed the late Mr. Russell Gurney as Recorder of the City of London, which office he now holds, and for which he receives an annual salary of $15,000. Though his official position is created and maintained for the purpose of repressing crime by means of punishment, still Sir Thomas loses no opportunity in his private capacity to support such measures and agencies as may issue in the prevention of crime and the reformation of repentant offenders. He is said to have endeavored by personal conversation to induce criminals upon whom he has passed sentence of the law to submit to the reformi fluence of the Gospel. He has manifeste interest in various religious and philant institutions and undertakings, and at th Meetings he presided over the Annual M of the Sunday-School Union at Exeter H May 6th.

JACOB BRIGHT, ESQ.,

Liberal M.P. for Manchester.

MR. JACOB BRIGHT, like his disting brother, the Right Hon. John Bright highly esteemed member of the Soci Friends, and for many years his opini religious and political questions have l accord with those of this peace-loving c nity. As a speaker he has not the chas vigorous eloquence of the member for B ham, but he has the faculty of marsha collection of facts into array, and can sup denounce them according to the convict has of their justice or the contrary, with ing clearness and force which in Parliar circles carry great weight.

In the late election he retained the Manchester which he had won in 187 told the electors that the Parliament he to see was one with much of the spirit ing to that of 1868, and that he was des seeing the people of the three kingdor With a touch of keen business wisdom pressed the belief that with a Liberal Ch of the Exchequer we should have s arising "which would not be muddled but be remitted to the people to the g vantage of the whole community.

He has taken as deep an interest in tion of temperance as the most arde abstainer can desire, although those seeking for political action for the sup of intemperance might not in all points to eye with him. At a yearly meeting society four or five years ago, he said t liament might fairly be asked to mal changes as the shutting up of publi when decent and well-behaved people indoors and a-bed, and to preserve orde streets. He was candidly of opinion yearly meeting of the society should ha ing to do with the question of legislatio

Mr. Jacob Bright has also courageou dered assistance to Mrs. Josephine Bu the devoted band of ladies at work witl opposition to the State regulation of vice in Great Britain as the Contagious Disea It has been for some time in operation soned towns, and its supporters desire i sion throughout the kingdom, while M Bright, Mrs. Butler, and some other people seek to have the act rescinded is in operation.

SIR ROBERT W. CARDEN, K

Conservative M.P. for Barnstaple, and A of the City of London.

THIS prominent magistrate and alde the City of London was born in 1801, in Square, a part of the metropolis scarcel the sound of "Bow Bells," yet Sir Ro lay claim to the citizenship of "no mea He has been Lord Mayor, and in climbi that distinguished position he duly a every round of the civic ladder. He fol father's profession of stockbroker, and i ally supposed to have a share in th newspaper, which he inherited by righ mother, who was a daughter of the late ter, the founder of the fame and prosp that journal.

His early aspirations were toward a life, and he went so far in that directi be gazetted an officer in the 82d Regime he left his military life for the equally one on the Stock Exchange, he marr Andrews, daughter of Dr. Andrews, of Foot.

His first attempt to enter Parliament unsuccessful one for St. Albans in 185 ough was afterward disfranchised for corrup- Alderman Carden paying the expense of the tigation which led to the step. The period g which he has occupied a seat in the House he two years which preceded the general on of 1859, when he sat for Gloucester. as rejected in 1865 by Marylebone, and a months since by Barnstaple, the borough ich he was returned at the recent general n.

was the founder of the City Bank, but his thropic efforts will far eclipse his other actions. He is a great supporter of the Shoeblack Brigade. The new movement m the tide of intemperance by means of hunter attraction of coffee palaces has Sir t's hearty co-operation. The school train- ips on the Thames find also in him a sym- ic helper. The flower-girls who ply their in the open space in front of the Royal ge have not looked to him in vain for tion when attempts have been made to e them, until now they are as a body d as an institution in the City. The f their huge baskets of beautiful flowers day cheers the hearts of many a city waif hose breast has vanished all hope of ever a flower growing in the country.

Midnight Mission in London, which has valuable work among the fallen women etropolis, has always found in Sir Robert usiastic and energetic friend. No man eener sympathy with suffering and misery r Robert, and wherever there is any soci- anized for their alleviation his aid and are always ready.

HENRY RICHARD, ESQ.

iberal M.P. for Merthyr Tydvil.

RY RICHARD was born at Tregaron, his eing a highly esteemed member of the Calvinistic Methodists, a powerful and body in the Principality. He himself that when he was young, Wales was, y speaking, in a state of great apathy. ember," he says, "when I was a boy, all itics of the magazine received in my house were compressed into about half of most insipid summary at the end." s true, not only in relation to his own he country, but to Wales generally.

he lost, however, in this direction, he an gained in another and a higher. No have heard him speak of his early days, read his descriptions of the religious es which surrounded him like a health- osphere, without feeling that he had a ecious privilege than those who politi- joyed greater advantages. The great reachers whom he was constantly hear- his boyhood were unrivalled masters of loquence.

uld be interesting, especially with Mr. as our guide, to linger long over these ys, and to hear him tell of the great reli- en-air gatherings of which he retains a membrance, when the whole population rict for many miles round, suspending ness and labor, would flock together "Sometimes the platform was pitched rom the sea-shore, the softened murmur cean mingling with, as if it bore burden sound of sacred song that from the ed multitude arose like a stream of rich perfume, and stole upon the air. es it was in an open glade amid rich d scenery, a spot being usually chosen e greensward sloped up gradually from e on which the ministers stood, forming natural gallery. And as the surround- s, gently swayed by the wind, bent and it might almost seem, amid the solemn ons of the scene to the excited feelings eople, the forest leaves were stirred with prayer.'"

amid such kindling associations that, tle more than a youth, Henry Richard himself resolved to become a preacher of the Gospel, and to devote his life to the work of winning souls. He was but eighteen when he entered Highbury College as a student, the Rev. Dr. Halley then being Principal. Very beautiful in after years was it to notice the affectionate esteem in which each held the other. On the conclusion of his college days Mr. Richard accepted the pastoral charge of the church at Marlborough Chapel, London. His ministry was a happy combination of the thoughtful and the fervent, and he was instrumental in establishing a large and vigorous church fellowship. His views upon what is shortly called the Peace Question may be said to be the convictions of a lifetime, and as a young minister they were firmly expounded. It was not surprising, therefore, to find him becoming Secretary of the Peace Society, and relinquishing the pastorate that he might devote undivided attention to the defence and wide diffusion of peace principles.

It is on record that during the period of the Russian war he was successful in bringing arbitration before the representatives of the great Powers who were then assembled in Paris to settle the conditions of peace. He succeeded in placing a memorial before the Plenipotentiaries proposing some system of international arbitration.

The result was satisfactory. Lord Clarendon brought the subject before the assembled Plenipotentiaries, and they adopted a resolution in which they expressed, in the name of their Governments, the wish that States between which any serious misunderstanding might arise, should, before appealing to arms, have recourse to the good offices of a friendly power. Mr. Gladstone viewed this proposal as being in itself a great triumph, a powerful engine on behalf of civilization and humanity.

Mr. Richard has counted no trouble too great in the diligent discharge of the duties belonging to his position. He has attended at Brussels, congresses which have been held at Brussels, Frankfort, London, Edinburgh, and Manchester, with a view to promote international peace. In company with the late Mr. Elihu Burritt, of whom he was an attached and intimate friend, he visited France, Belgium, Holland, and most of the States of Germany, with the object of bringing the question of peace under the notice of those whose position gave them power to spread or to hinder the promotion of its principles.

His labors in this direction brought him into connection with those distinguished men, Joseph Sturge and Richard Cobden, whose efforts in the cause of peace are well known.

In 1860 he addressed a letter to the directors and supporters of Bible and missionary societies against their invoking any military or naval protection to defend Christian missionaries in foreign lands, or desiring the secular arm to chastise or menace the heathen into submission.

Of Mr. Richard's well-known "Letters upon the Social and Political Condition of Wales" there is no need to speak. In 1868, when he was returned as M.P. for Merthyr, his countrymen were loud in their enthusiasm, and his success in the House of Commons, where his brilliant powers of debate have been employed in the cause of religion, philanthropy, and peace, has amply justified the choice of his constituents. He has been again elected to fill his seat in the new Parliament. It may be added that Mr. Richard has, in the high capacity of chairman, presided over the interests of the Congregational Union.

SIR CHARLES REED, Knt.,

Liberal M.P. for St. Ives, and Chairman of the London School Board.

THIS gentleman has not occupied a seat in the House of Commons since 1874, when he retired from Hackney. At the present general election he has secured a seat for St. Ives, Cornwall, in the Liberal interest. He was born at Sonning, near Reading, where his father, Rev. Dr. Andrew Reed, was the Congregational pastor. Dr. Reed was the founder of the Orphan Asylum at Reedham, Surrey, and the Earlswood Asylum for Idiots, and was an earnest supporter of every kind of philanthropic enterprise. It is said of him that his benevolent mind had imbibed the spirit and made for him the motto of his life of the last verse of the first chapter of the Epistle of James. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and the widows, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." Having devoted himself to the Christian ministry for some years, he felt that there remained for him a further opportunity to exemplify in his own person his attachment to his Master and His pure religion in providing for helpless orphans.

Sir Charles was educated at the Grammar School of the borough which he represented in Parliament, and finished his studies at University College, London. He is the head of a large firm of type-founders in London, Messrs. Reed & Sons. Besides being actively concerned in the great charitable institutions founded by his father, he is Chairman of the London School Board, of which he had been Vice-Chairman since its formation. Upon his appointment to this office he was knighted, and received the degree of LL.D. from Yale University. He is also President of the Sunday-School Union, and obtained for the public the great boon of the free opening of the Guildhall Library by his writings and agitation.

He aims at no civic distinctions, but labors hard in all benevolent matters where good can be done without ostentation. He married, in 1845, Margaret, daughter of the late Edward Baines, of Leeds. He is a member of the Congregational body, and a J.P. for the county of Middlesex, and an officer of the Legion of Honor of France.

[illegible] writes: "It is impossible to declare all the goodness of God as felt by us during the past three months. At length the fever has entirely disappeared from our Village Home, leaving in our minds a chastened, holy feeling, as of the realized presence of the Master. Altogether 170 children and adults were attacked, some very seriously. The rapid onward progress of the disorder alarmed us all. Cases occurred in every cottage, in spite of the utmost precaution. Some of these were very well marked and some very serious, although the greater proportion had the disease in a mild form. When at our wits' end and our resources had been well-nigh exhausted, earnest united supplication was made to the Lord for deliverance. From that very hour relief came, the disease slowly but surely abated, and, although occasional fresh cases occurred, none of these were serious. Now all are convalescent, and we have not had one death; while the gracious softened tone among the recovered patients, as well as among their companions, fills our hearts with thankfulness and our eyes with tears.

A Rescue from a Pit.—An Illustration Showing the superiority of Christ's religion over the so-called religions of the East was used by a converted Chinaman. He said: "A man had fallen into a deep pit, and lay groaning in the miry bottom, utterly unable to move. Confucius passed that way, and looking over into the pit, said: 'Poor fellow! I am very sorry for you. Why were you such a fool as to get in there? Let me give you a piece of advice: If you ever get out, be careful you don't get in again.' And that was all he could say for him. Next came the Buddhist priest, and looking down at him, said: 'Poor fellow! I am pained to find you in such a condition. I think if you could scramble up two thirds of the way, or even half, I might reach down and help you out.' But the man was unable to move. Last of all the Saviour came by, and hearing his cries, went to the edge of the pit, and reached entirely down to the bottom, and lifted him up, and set him on his feet, and said: 'Go, and sin no more.'"

SICKNESS IN THE MANSION.

A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage, preached on Sunday Morning, May 16, 1880.

"A man mighty in valor, but he was a leper."—2 Kings 5 : 1.

Everybody has Something he Wishes he had not—God is thus Whipping us Ahead—Naaman's Wife Goes for Sympathy to her Maid—The Finger of Childhood—The Little Child Beholds the Star of Pardon—The World-renowned Invalid—Good-bye Naaman—Naaman had Two Diseases—The Message Sent Out—Naaman's Indignation—His Servants' Entreaties—The Prescription Tried—The Wild Huzza—A Changed Man in the Congregation—The Two Things Naaman did—He got out of his Chariot—The Chariot of Pride—He Washed—Naaman's Return—The Soul Cured of its Leprosy.

HERE we have a warrior sick; not with pleurisies or rheumatisms or consumptions, but with a disease worse than all these put together. A red mark has come out on the forehead, precursor of complete disfigurement and dissolution. I have something awful to tell you. General Naaman, the Commander-in-chief of all the Assyrian forces, has the leprosy! It is on his hands, on his face, on his feet, on his entire person.

ULCERS! ULCERS!

Get out of the way of the pestilence! If his breath strike you, you are a dead man. The Commander-in-chief of all the forces of Assyria, and yet he would be glad to exchange conditions with the boy at his stirrup, or the hostler that blankets his charger. The news goes like wildfire all through the realm, and the people are sympathetic, and they cry out: "Is it possible that our great hero, who shot Ahab, and around whom we came with such vociferation when he returned from victorious battle—can it be possible that our grand and glorious Naaman has the leprosy?" Yes.
David, an Absalom to disgrace him; Paul, a thorn to sting him; Job, carbuncles to plague him; Samson, a Delilah to shear him; Ahab, a Naboth to deny him; Haman, a Mordecai to irritate him; George Washington, childlessness to afflict him; John Wesley, a termagant wife to pester him; Leah, weak eyes; Pope, a crooked back; Byron, a club-foot; John Milton, blind eyes; Charles Lamb, an insane sister; and you, and you, and you, and you, and would like to get rid of. The reason of this is that God does not want this world to be too bright; otherwise, we would always want to stay and eat these fruits, and lie on these lounges, and shake hands in this pleasant society. We are only in the vestibule of a grand temple. God does not want us to stay on the doorstep, and therefore He sends aches and annoyances and sorrows and bereavements of all sorts to push us on and push us up toward riper fruits and brighter society and more radiant prosperities. God is only whipping us ahead.

SOMETHING YOU NEVER BARGAINED FOR,

The reason that Edward Payson and Robert Hall had more rapturous views of heaven than other people had, was because, through their aches and pains, God pushed them nearer up to it. If God dashes out one of your pictures it is only to show to you a brighter one. If He sting your foot with gout, your brain with neuralgia, your tongue with an inextinguishable thirst, it is only because He is preparing to substitute a better body than you ever dreamed of, when the mortal shall put on immortality. It is to push you on, and to push you up toward something grander and better, that God sends upon you, as He did upon General Naaman, something you do not want.

Seated in his Assyrian mansion—all the walls glittering with the shields which he had captured in battle; the corridors crowded with admiring visitors who just wanted to see him once; music and mirth and banqueting filling all the mansion, from tessellated floor to pictured ceiling. Naaman would have forgotten that there was anything better, and would have been glad to stay there ten thousand years.

But, oh! how the shields dim, and how the visitors fly the hall, and how the music drops dead from the string, and how the gates of the mansion slam shut with sepulchral bang, as you read the closing words of the eulogium: "He was a leper! He was a leper!" Ulcers—dripping, loathsome, excruciating ulcers.

There was one person more sympathetic with General Naaman than any other person. Naaman's wife walks the floor, wringing her hands and trying to think what she can do to alleviate her husband's suffering. All poultices have failed. The surgeon-general and the doctors of the royal staff have met, and they have shaken their heads, as much as to say, "No cure; no cure!" I think that the office-seekers had all folded up their recommendations and gone home. I think that the most of the employés of the establishment had dropped their work and gone out to look for some other situation.

What shall now become of poor Naaman's wife? She must have sympathy somewhere. In her despair she goes to a little Hebrew captive, a servant girl in her house, to whom she tells the whole story; as sometimes, when overborne by the sorrows of the world, and finding no sympathy anywhere else, you have gone out and found in the sympathy of some humble domestic—Rose, or Dinah, or Bridget—a help which the world could not give you.

WHAT A SCENE IT WAS!—

one of the grandest women in all Assyria in cabinet council with a waiting-maid over the declining health of the major-general! "I know something," says the little captive maid, "I know something," as she bounds to her bare feet. "In the land from which I was stolen there is a medicine-man by the name of Doctor Elisha, who can cure almost anything, and I shouldn't wonder if he could cure my master. Send for him right away."
cal talent in all the land cannot cure that leper, there is no need of your listening to any talk of a servant girl." But do not scoff, do not sneer. The finger of that little captive maid is pointing in the right direction. She might have said: "This is a judgment on you for stealing me from my native land. Didn't they snatch me off in the night, breaking my father and mother's heart? and many a time I have lain and cried all night because I was so homesick." Then, flushing up into childish indignation, she might have said: "Good for them; I'm glad Naaman's got the leprosy; I wish all the Assyrians had the leprosy." No. Forgetting her own personal sorrows, she sympathizes with the suffering of her master, and commends him to the famous Hebrew doctor.

And how often it is that

THE FINGER OF CHILDHOOD

has pointed grown persons in the right direction. O Christian soul! how long is it since you got rid of the leprosy of sin? You say: "Let me see. It must be five years now." Five years. Who was it that pointed you to the Divine Physician? "Oh," you say, "it was my little Amie or Fred or Charley that clambered up on my knees, and looked in my face, and asked me why I didn't become a Christian, and all the time stroking my cheek, so I couldn't get angry, insisted upon knowing why I didn't have family prayers."

There are grandparents here who have been brought to Christ by their little grandchildren. There are hundreds of mothers here who are Christians. How did you get rid of the leprosy of sin? How did you find your way to the Divine Physician? "Oh!" you say, "my child, my dying child, with wan and wasted finger, pointed that way. Oh! I never shall forget," you say, "that scene at the cradle and the crib that awful night. It was hard, hard, very hard; but if that little one on its dying bed had not pointed me to Christ, I don't think I ever would have got rid of my leprosy." Go into the Sabbath-school this afternoon, and you will find hundreds of little fingers pointing in the same dire toward Jesus Christ and toward heaven.

Years ago the astronomers calculated there must be a world hanging at a c point in the heavens, and a large prize offered for some one who could discove world. The telescopes from the great ob tories were pointed in vain; but a girl at tucket, Mass., fashioned a telescope, and ing through it, discovered that star, an the prize, and the admiration of all the nomical world, that stood amazed at her g
And so it is often the case that grown cannot see the light, while some little ch holds

THE STAR OF PARDON,

the star of hope, the star of consolatio star of Bethlehem, the morning star of "Not many mighty men, not many wis are called; but God hath chosen the things of the world to confound the m and base things, and things that are not, t to nought things that are." Oh! do not the prattle of little children when th speaking about God, Christ, and heaven see the way your child is pointing; w take that pointing, or wait until, in the w some awful bereavement, God shall li child to another world, and then it will you upward? Will you take the point will you wait for the beckoning? Ble God that the little Hebrew captive po the right direction. Blessed be God saving ministry of Christian children.

No wonder the advice of this little captive threw all Naaman's mansion a hadad's palace into excitement. Good- man! With face scarified, and ridged, flamed of the pestilence, and aided by th supported him on either side, he stag to the chariot. Hold fast the fiery co the royal stable while the poor sick man swollen feet and pain-struck limbs int nicle. Bolster him up with the pillows him take a lingering look at his brig
ment, for perhaps the Hebrew captive mistaken, and the next time Naaman that place he may be a dead weight shoulders of those who carry him—a chieftain seeking sepulture, amid the tions of an admiring nation.

Good-by, Naaman! Let the chariot gently over the hills of Hermon, lest he invalid. Here goes the bravest man day, a captive of horrible disease. A bulance winds through the streets of D the tears and prayers of all the people g

THE WORLD-RENOWNED INVALI

Perhaps you have had an invalid go your house on a health excursion. Y how the neighbors stood around a
"Ah! he will never come back again
Oh! it was a solemn moment, I tell you, invalid had departed and you went room to make the bed, and to remove t cine phials from the shelf, and to th the shutters so that the fresh air might the long-closed room. Good-by,
There is only one cheerful face lookin and that is the face of the little Hebrew who is sure he will get cured, and who i she helped him.

As the chariot grinds out, and the mounted courtiers, and the mules la sacks of gold and silver and embroide of apparel went through the gates of D and out on the long way, the hills of and Ephraim look down on the proces the retinue goes right past the bat where Naaman, in the days of his hea to rally his troops for fearful onset, a the procession stops and reclines a wh groves of olive and oleander; and Gen man so sick—so very, very sick.

How the countrymen gaped as the p passed! They had seen Naaman go p whirlwind in days gone by, and had stoo at the clank of his war equipments; but miserate him. They say: "Poor man, he ever get home alive; poor man!"

whole procession brightens up at the prospect of speedy arrival. They drive up to the of the prophet. The charioteers shout, oa!" to the horses, and the tramping hoofs inding wheels cease shaking the earth.

COME OUT, ELISHA, COME OUT;

ve company; the grandest company that me to your house has come to it now. No side Elisha's house. The fact was, the had told Doctor Elisha that the sick captain was coming, and just how to treat him. In when you are sick and the Lord wants you well, He always tells the doctor how to you; and the reason we have so many ng doctors is because they depend upon wn strength and instructions and not on d God, and that always makes malpractice. e out, Elisha, and attend to your business. Naaman and his retinue waited and and waited. The fact was, Naaman had ases—pride and leprosy; and the one hard to get rid of as the other. Elisha is ng that General Naaman, so he sits quiis house and does not go out.

a while, when Naaman, he thinks, is d, he says to a servant: Go out and tell Naaman to bathe seven times in the rdan out yonder five miles, and he will rely well."

THE MESSAGE COMES OUT.

at!" says the commander-in-chief of the forces, his eye kindling with an animach it had not shown for weeks, and his fist clinched until the bloody ichor isn the cracks, and his swollen foot stamphe bottom of the chariot, regardless of What! isn't he coming out to see me? thought certainly he would come and me cabalistic words over me, or make egmatical passes over my wounds. Why, think he knows who I am. Isn't he ut? , when the Shunamite woman came to rushed out and cried: 'Is it well with it well with thy husband? is it well child?' and will he treat an untitled ke that and let me, a titled personage, in my chariot and wait and wait? I dure it any longer. Charioteer, drive sh in the Jordan! Ha! ha! the slimy the muddy Jordan—the monotonous I wouldn't be seen washing in such a hat. , we watered our horses in a better river t on our way coming here. The beaur, the jasper-paved river of Pharpar. hat, we have in our country another e river, Abana, with foliaged bank, nt ever swift and ever clear, under the shadows of sycamore and oleander. Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damasr than all the waters of Israel?"

ose Naaman felt very much like we el, if by way of medical prescription should tell us to go and wash in the or the Rhine. We would answer: the Connecticut and the Hudson just Or, as an Englishman would feel if old by way of medical prescription he and wash in the Mississippi or the St. He would cry out: "Are not the nd the Shannon just as well?"

t was, that General Naaman needed to every Englishman and every American earn—that when God tells you to do a must go and do it whether you unthe reason or not. Take the prescripher you like it or not. One thing is nless General Naaman does as Elisha him, he will die of his awful sickd unless you do as Christ commands will be seized upon by an everlasting vay.

AND LIVE—DISOBEY AND DIE.

over-arching, under-girding, stupendative!

eneral Naaman could not stand the test. The charioteer gives a jerk to the right line until the bit snaps in the horse's mouth, and the whirr of the wheels and the flying of the dust show the indignation of the great commander. "He turned and went away in a rage." So people now often get mad at religion. They vituperate against ministers, against churches, against Christian people. One would think from their irate behavior that God had been studying how to annoy and exasperate and demolish them. What has He been doing? Only trying to cure their death-dealing leprosy. That is all. Yet they whip up their horses, they dig in the spurs, and they go away in a rage.

So, after all, it seems that this health excursion of General Naaman is to be a dead failure.

POOR, SICK, DYING NAAMAN!

Are you going away in high dudgeon and worse than when you came? As his chariot halts a moment, his servants clamber up into it and coax him to do as the doctor said. They say: "It's easy. If the doctor had told you to walk for a mile on sharp spikes in order to get rid of this awful disease, you would have done it. It's easy. Come, my lord, just get down and wash in the Jordan. You take a bath every day anyhow, and in this climate it is so hot that it will do you good. Do it on our account, and for the sake of the army you command, and for the sake of the nation that admires you. Come, my lord, just try this Jordanic bath." "Well," he says, "to please you I will do as you say."

The retinue drive to the brink of the Jordan. The horses paw and neigh to get in the stream themselves and cool their hot flanks. General Naaman, assisted by his attendants, gets down out of the chariot and painfully comes to the brink of the river and steps in until the water comes to the ankle, and goes on deeper until the water comes to the girdle, and now standing so far down in the stream, just a little inclination of [illegible] immerse him.

HE BOWS ONCE INTO THE FLOOD, and comes up and shakes the water out of nostril and eye; and his attendants look at him and say: "Why, General, how much better you do look." And he bows a second time into the flood and comes up, and the wild stare is gone out of his eye. He bows the third time into the flood and comes up, and the shrivelled flesh has got smooth again. He bows the fourth time into the flood and comes up, and the hair that had fallen out is restored in thick locks again all over the brow. He bows the fifth time into the flood and comes up, and the hoarseness has gone out of his throat. He bows the sixth time and comes up, and all the soreness and anguish has gone out of the limbs. "Why," he says, "I am almost well, but I will make a complete cure," and he bows the seventh time into the flood and he comes up, and not so much as a fester or a scar or an eruption as big as the head of a pin is to be seen on him.

He steps out on the bank and says: "Is it possible?" And the attendants look and say: "Is it possible?" And as, with the health of an athlete, he bounds back into the chariot and drives on, there goes up from all his attendants

A WILD "HUZZA! HUZZA!"

Of course they go back to pay and thank the doctor. People ought always to pay the doctor. When they left the prophet's house they went off mad; they have come back glad.

People always think better of a minister after they are converted than they do before conversion. Now we are to them an intolerable nuisance because we tell them to do things that go against the grain; but some of us have a great many letters from those who tell us that once they were angry at what we preached, but afterward gladly received the Gospel at our hands. They once called us fanatics or terrorists or enemies; now they call us friends.

Yonder is a man—I speak a literal fact—who said that he would never come into the church again. He said that two years ago. He said: "My family shall never come here again if such doctrines as that are preached." But he came again, and his family came again. He is a Christian, his wife a Christian, all his children Christians, the whole household Christian, and I shall dwell with them in the house of the Lord forever. Our undying coadjutors are those who once heard the Gospel, and "went away in a rage."

Now, my hearer, you notice that this General Naaman did two things in order to get well. The first was—he got out of his chariot. He might have stayed there with his swollen feet on the stuffed ottoman, seated on that embroidered cushion, until his last gasp, he would never have got any relief. He had to get down out of his chariot. And you have got to

GET DOWN OUT OF THE CHARIOT

of your pride if you ever become a Christian. You cannot drive up to the Cross with a coach and four, and be saved among all the spangles. You seem to think that the Lord is going to be complimented by your coming. Oh no; you poor, miserable, scaly, leprous sinner, get down out of that.

We all come in the same haughty way. We expect to ride into the kingdom of God. Never, until we get down on our knees, will we find mercy. The Lord has unhorsed us, unchterioted us. Get down out of your pride. Get down out of your self-righteousness and your hypercriticism. We have all got to do that. That is the journey we have got to make on our knees. It is our infernal pride that keeps us from getting rid of the leprosy.

But he had not only to get down out of his hariot. He had to wash. "Oh!" you say, "I am very careful with my ablutions. Every day I plunge into a bright and beautiful bath." Ah, my hearer! there is a flood brighter than Croton or Ridgewood. It is the flood that breaks from the granite of the eternal hills. It is the flood of pardon, and peace, and life, and heaven. —That flood started in [illegible] accumulating flood, until all earth and heaven could bathe in it. Zechariah called it the "fountain open for sin and uncleanness." William Cowper called it the "Fountain filled with blood." Your fathers and mothers washed all their sins and sorrows away in that fountain. O my hearer, do you not feel like wading into it?

WADE DOWN NOW INTO THIS FLOOD,

deeper, deeper, deeper. Plunge once, twice, thrice, four times, five times, six times, seven times. It will take as much as that to cure your soul. Oh! wash, wash, wash, and be clean.

I suppose there was a great time when General Naaman got back to Damascus. The charioteers did not have to drive slowly any longer, lest they jolt the invalid; but as the horses dashed through the streets of Damascus, I think the people rushed out to hail back their chieftain. Naaman's wife hardly recognized her husband; he was so wonderfully changed she had to look at him two or three times before she made out that it was her restored husband. And the little captive maid, she rushed out clapping her hands and shouting: "Did he cure you?

DID HE CURE YOU?"

Then music woke up the palace, and the tapestry of the windows was drawn away that the multitude outside might mingle with the princely mirth inside, and the feet went up and down in the dance, and all the streets of Damascus that night echoed and re-echoed with the news: "Naaman's cured! Naaman's cured!"

But a gladder time than that it would be in Brooklyn, or wherever this sermon shall be read, if the soul should get cured of its leprosy. The swiftest white horses hitched to the King's chariot would rush the news into the eternal city. Our loved ones before the throne would welcome the glad tidings. Your children on earth, with more emotion than the little Hebrew captive, would notice the change in your look and the change in your manner, and would put their arms around your neck, and say: "Mother, I guess you must have become a Christian. Father, I think you have got rid of the leprosy." O Lord God of Elisha, have mercy on us!

"THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY'S CREED."

By Mr. Henry Martin.

(Concluded from page 311.)

Ned's Study of the Bible—Little About the Virgin Mary in it—Its Inexhaustible Freshness—Its Beautiful Descriptions of Christ's Love—No Purgatory Mentioned in it—Stephen and the Dying Thief—Affecting Adieu.

TAKING the handsome but somewhat worn Bible again in his hand, Ned Cassidy went on to say:

"It would be hard for me to tell you, sir, how Kathleen and myself have pored hour after hour over the sacred pages of this Book, especially in the winter season, when there is no work for me to do as guide to visitors. The long evenings seemed to pass over our heads in no time. Its contents at first greatly surprised and a good deal disappointed us. I had especially wished to get it to learn from it all about the blessed Virgin; but, though I turned over and examined every page from beginning to end, I could find in the Book really very little concerning her.

"It just told me about the visit of the angel to her, announcing the mystery of the Saviour's incarnation; of her going down to Bethlehem to be taxed, and the birth of Jesus Christ there; of her visit to the temple, and her flight into Egypt; of her forgetting the lovely boy Jesus, her divine Son, on His first visit, when twelve years of age, to the temple at Jerusalem, and her sorrowful search for Him during three days; of her telling Jesus of the want of wine at the marriage of Cana of Galilee; of her coming with His brethren to seize Christ, supposing Him (in a moment of unbelief) to be 'beside himself'; of her mournful visit to Calvary, and of Jesus when dying on the cross commending St. John to her as now her son, and her to John as now his mother. [illegible] blessed Virgin's name at all in the Bible: it is in the Acts of the Apostles, where she is mentioned as in the upper room in Jerusalem with the apostles after the ascension of Jesus, and before the descent of the Holy Ghost in tongues of fire on the day of Pentecost. I couldn't find, sir, that St. Paul, in any of his fourteen great letters, or epistles, ever mentions her at all, nor St. Peter in his letters, nor St. John in his, and this struck me as being a very strange fact altogether.

"It is true a woman clothed with the sun is spoken of in the twelfth chapter of the book of the Revelation (the Apocalypse); but it is very clear to me, sir, that that woman means the Church of Christ under the figure of a woman, and not the blessed Virgin.

"But, sir, while we could find upon the whole so little about the blessed Virgin Mary in the Book, it was brimful of Jesus Christ and His Gospel, and we never grew tired of the Saviour's precious words, or of reading about the Saviour's miracles. Oh, sir, when He was on earth what a time it was to be blind, or lame, or deaf, or dumb! It was only for the wretched to go to Him, and relief was had in a moment; even the very dead were restored from the grave to their weeping friends, and bitter tears were turned into laughter."

"Yes, Ned Cassidy," I remarked, "and that very Jesus has the same power now, and uses it, and in a higher manner. It is the souls of men He now heals."

"True for you, sir," he replied, "and I know something of His power. You remember the man that was born blind, and who received his sight, saying to the scribes and Pharisees, 'Once was I blind, but now I see'? Why, sir, the words fit me to a nicety, for I can truly say, 'Blind in mind once was I, but Jesus Christ, by His Spirit, has touched my dark soul, and the brightness of a day not of this world has poured its gladness upon me.'

"There was one thing, sir, in connection with the Book that greatly struck me. No matter how often I read a chapter (and some of them I have read scores and scores of times), it always seemed new, and each time something I had not seen in the words before caught my attention. One reading of another book almost tires you, but God's Book, sir, seems like a hundred books in one, and is ever as a morn in May, fresh and beautiful; or it's like the lakes out there, sir. Often as I see them, and I have looked on them from childhood, they are ever fresh and beautiful, and each day I find something in them to admire that I had not seen before."

"Will you tell me, Ned Cassidy," I replied, "two or three of the things that most struck you in your study of the Book? I do not want to pry into your secrets, Cassidy, yet I am curious to know how the Book appears to one that late in life comes into contact with it."

Pausing for a little, he answered, "The whole Book was so new and wonderful to me, sir, that I find it hard to say what impressed me most; but I think nothing half so moved and delighted me as the loving heart and tender pity of the blessed Saviour, Jesus Christ, holy be His name! Why, sir, as the Book shows, He never refused a helping hand to the sinful and the miserable; of the thousands on thousands of suppliants that flocked to Him, He never turned away one—no, not even one. And the more sinful and wretched any one was, if only with a true heart longing for deliverance he came to Him, the more ready was the Lord to help and bless him. And, sir, it was all done freely too, 'without money and without price.'

"Another thing, sir, that greatly moved me was the prompt help of the Saviour. Those who came to Him He saved and blessed them on the very spot. I had been accustomed to see men over the country perform for weeks and months hard and sore penance, thinking thereby to make the Lord at last willing to forgive and save them; but according to the Book, sir, the Lord is always ready on the instant to pardon and save. As the Book elsewhere says, He blots out sin—mark, sir, blots it out, and that is a thing which even a child knows is done in a moment. It seems to me that the Lord's word is, 'Now, now this hour; even as you are I am willing to bless you.'

"One thing more, sir, I should like to remark, if my talk is not too free, for it's a new thing for me to have one to whom I can open my mind. I see I must soon be done, for the storm is spent and the clouds are breaking, and you and this gentleman will be wanting to go. What I wish to mention is this. The Book seems to teach that to a forgiven man when he dies heaven is immediate. Though I didn't say much, for I was a feared to do so, often and often, at many a wake and 'berrin' this thought used to come over me with a tremble and horror. The soul of the corpse that lies there so calm and still in that coffin is, as the priests say, this hour in purifying pain, aye, in an agony of fire; and how long it is to be endured even the dead man's priest himself isn't sure.

"But the Bible, sir, reads that at once the blessed St. Stephen, first of martyrs, expected the Lord Jesus 'to receive his spirit.' One night, thinking over this, however, the thought occurred to me. Ah, well, he was a man full of the Holy Ghost, as the Book says, and besides was baptized with blood, dying as a martyr, and therefore, as fit at once for heaven, he entered it; but his instantaneous admission to glory can furnish no such hope to ordinary Christians. The thought troubled me, until one day I chanced to come upon the account given in the book of the dying thief.

"'If ever man needed,' I said to myself, 'a long and purifying process to fit him for heaven, it was this thief and murderer, who at the beginning even reviled the Saviour Himself on the very cross.' Yet to him, upon his repentance and faith—yes, to him, vile up to that hour as he had been—the blessed Lord said, 'This day shalt thou be with Me in paradise.' Oh, what a change it must have been to him, sir, when death released him! One moment he was on a cross fainting and dying, and the next was in the glorious heaven of the Lord in paradise! It makes me hope and believe, sir, that if I the same Lord, when I come to die, He give me in His infinite grace at once a His divine kingdom."

"Ned Cassidy," I said, "how ha neighbors acted toward you under the n you have got from the Book?"

"Well, sir," he replied, "perhaps been to blame, but both me and Kathl kept our thoughts very much to oursel first we felt eager to make known to ot blessed truth we had found—we imagi there wasn't one of our neighbors bu have thanked us; but our endeavors taken kindly; we were rebuffed, rebuke last suspected for heretics, except by three. It was said, Who were we, to pr know more than others around us? sufficed for long generations in the pari surely satisfy us? Some of those who our most familiar friends nicknamed there were many who were quite read persecute and injure us.

"I cannot tell you, sir, how great tempest of fear and doubt that at times and hard upon us, as King David ha waves and billows went upon us.' So the conflict, that me and my wife reso we would talk to others very little up matters, and that we would pray and the Holy Spirit's further guidance an edge.

"But your present visit to our huml sir, has been of God to us. While you gentleman talked together, little did you how your words were thrilling with joy heartstrings of those whose lowly ro vored by your presence. We soon saw 'discourse' that the thoughts we en were not confined alone to our bos what we believed was also the faith that the light we had seen was indeec light of God, and that the dayspring Christ's own Gospel had visited us. I sir, that made me suddenly exclaim my wife 'Kathleen, as sure as I l gentlemen believe as we do.' A sur happiness that I could not keep ur overmastered me."

"Excuse you, Cassidy!" I cried; " been the means, in God's hand, of brin piness to you, you are the means of happiness to me. Thank God for this of the power of His Word, simply a when read with a devout and child-l 'to make wise unto salvation,' to 'co soul,' 'enlighten the eyes,' and 're heart.' Your diligent study of the made you, my friend, no mean discip Lord; you have drunk deeply into t edge and spirit of His glorious Gospe have far outstripped many whose gr leges far and away surpass your small o

At these words a flood of gladne to rush into Ned Cassidy's bosom, beamed upon his face, and yet a tear tr his eye; seizing my hand he warmly p I knew what it meant, though no spoken. He had found a brother—a l Christ: and the fact that he was not al convictions and experience, but was ship of thought and feeling with the m a great spiritual kingdom, filled him that was too deep for utterance.

As may be supposed, both my frien self were reluctant to lose the acquair man whose history was so remarkab structive, and upon whose heart the w was so singular. It had been our in spend the next day upon the Killar we therefore asked him to act as He eagerly assented, and it was arra he should meet us in the morning nea ing-stage on Ross Island, at the rear castle. His extraordinary and peril ture on that occasion, in connection Foley and the Eagle's Nest, will form t of our next narrative (in the CHRIST ALD for May 27).

....

HAT COMING WARS MAY WE EXPECT?*

By Rev. M. Baxter.

(Continued from page 317.)

R. R. A. Purdon's Interpretation continued—he Disappearance of the Saints—The True iltonic War—The Defeat of the Devil—The arriage of the Lamb—The Marvellous Scene The Golden City.

HE atmospheric heavens are at this period cpied by the Devil and his army (see Ephesias 6 : 12) ; the armies of Satan are encamped on he azure fields of the skies, like an army of encamped upon a plain.

The Devil will be attacked by Michael and his ls, and will be driven by force of arms from the eavenly places, neither shall 'their place be fod any more in heaven.' Then the Great Dr on shall be cast out into the earth, and his an's shall be cast out with him. 'Therefore rejce, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. W to the inhabiters of the earth and of the sea for the devil is come down unto you, having reat wrath, because he knoweth that he but a short time.' And then, while some e saints flee into a wilderness for 3½ years, ths will be left to endure Antichrist's persecut (see Revelation 12 and 13 throughout).

"hile these great events take their course t heavens, what will be the condition of the art? Astonishment and dismay at first, and ar ned impiety at last, will overspread the or When the morning comes, tens of thousan will be missing—vanished together, without aving a trace behind!—one taken and oer left! All other thoughts will be overhe ed ; all other conversation will cease. The sa earance of those saints will occupy every in The public journals will be filled with te gence, poured in from all sides, of this micu us vanishing of thousands.

'EXTRAORDINARY DISAPPEARANCE'

In countable mystery'—will resound every- both in conversation and in the daily blations. 'Where are they gone?' will be iversal question. Error, misunderstanding, hd dismay will fill the hearts of those who behind. Yet a glimmering suspicion of al fact will arise in the minds of a few. ubt the removal of the Watchful Christians will be a most powerful means for awakening ose who constitute the Woman's Seed er he Wise Virgins shall be gone. No ext on, no miracle, has ever been so effectual t rapture of the Living Saints will prove, rning the hearts of the disobedient to the sd n of the just.'

" en the war will break forth in heaven.

THE TRUE MILTONIC WAR.

y suppose that clouds and darkness and r in the atmosphere, will indicate to the he tremendous conflict in the skies. We y ppose that the elements will be shaken, ven heaven itself will shake throughout erlasting frame.'

e battle will be won, and the Devil and his driven headlong from the skies. They own into the earth, like a discomfited nd fill the whole atmosphere of the globe. rth will become peopled with demons, y formidable by their strength and numt by their implacable rage. Knowing eir time is short, they will compensate brevity by a sevenfold effort. 'Woe to abiters of the earth and of the sea!'

ny a one who now scoffs at these awful will then—too late—upbraid his own nd wish that he could exchange places e meanest of the translated saints! Then be compelled to own that the least in the gdom of heaven is greater than the greatest upon earth. To such it will be a terrible surprise when 'one shall be taken and the other left;' then the war of angels shall shake the heavens, and Satan and his armies shall be driven into the earth to glut their rage upon mankind. Then, indeed, the sleeping congregations will awake. They will turn round upon those who have failed to warn them, and upbraid them with their faithlessness. They will cry out in their anguish, 'Woe unto me! The treacherous dealers have dealt treacherously; yea, the treacherous dealers have dealt very treacherously.' The treacherous dealers are the preachers who have suppressed the solemn truth of Christ's Second Appearing and Millennial Kingdom, and have set up their own feeble voice in place of the thunders of the Messiah.

"After the 3½ years, when Babylon the Great—apostate Rome—has been destroyed, and before the fall of the Wild Beast (the Antichrist) and False Prophet: at Armageddon, a mighty event is to take place in heaven,—

THE MARRIAGE OF THE LAMB

(Rev. 19 : 2, 3, 7). 'And her smoke rose up forever and ever;' 'Let us rejoice and be glad, and give honor to Him, for the Marriage of the Lamb is come, and His wife hath made herself ready.' The connection is self-evident. The smoke of Great Babylon, that European Gomorrah, ascending from the earth, mingles with the golden clouds which encompass the gold-veiled Bride. The terrible judgments of the earth are contrasted with the refulgent serenity of heaven. Just as the world begins to perish, the saints begin to reign.

"Long before this time the Wise Virgins have been removed from the earth. Their removal is to take place before the first seal, and before the 3½ years' reign of Antichrist. But the Bride is not completed at the removal of those saints. There are confessors and martyrs; all those who are to be behead [illegible] and which have not worshipped the Wild beast (i.e., the Infidel Antichrist), neither his image, neither have received his mark in their foreheads or in their hands!' all these are to be embodied with those saints, and to complete the Bride. Until these martyrs and confessors have been taken up from the earth, the Bride or Church is not complete. But when all have been taken up (after the 3½ years), and united with those who went before, then the Bride is completed, and there is no more delay.

"The seventh vial has then been poured out, and Great Babylon has been destroyed; but the Antichrist and his armies are still in full strength, collected together at the siege of Jerusalem; the war between heaven and earth is still raging; the Jews are still under the wrath of God when the Marriage of the Lamb takes place. It is not, as one might think, in a time of peace that this event occurs, but in a time of deadly war and indescribable terrors. Strange time for so joyful event!

"But the Marriage is in heaven, not upon earth. Far above in the azure sky, in the golden fields, in the soft and lovely light from the face of God, above the blood-stained earth, above the sun itself, in the pure, unsullied air, the Marriage of the Lamb takes place. Above the thick, black smoke of apostate Christendom, above the ruins of all human pride, above the eagle's flight and the terrific mountain cliffs, the saints in their glorious bodies shall stand in unimpaired serenity.

"They have no fear of death; they are no longer affected by material laws: the elements have no power over their bodies: to them it will be as natural to rise as it is to us to fall. As the Bride of the Lamb they are gifted with His attributes—glory, immortality, and light. With the purity and swiftness of the sunbeams, with the force of lightning, with an inward spirit as perfect as the body, they stand in the centre of celestial life, the brightest objects of that world of brightness. Angels themselves must give precedence to the Bride, and yield up to her the inmost circle around the throne. There in the place of honor in heaven stands the Church before the throne of the Lamb, as a Bride standing at the altar.

"Taking the multitude of which the Church or Bride is composed, God then takes in His hand

THE GOLDEN CITY,

the New Jerusalem, in that hand which holds the heavens, and lets it gently descend over the multitudes of the Church, like a veil of golden network over a bride upon her marriage-day; and with that golden veil He covers and envelops all the millions of the Church; the veil descends to the feet like that of an Eastern bride, and nothing but the veil is seen. A multitude of persons, but a single veil for all, and so the diversity of persons is changed into a unity of aspect.

"The millions of the Church are thus brought forward as one individual bride under the encircling veil of the golden city. The ceremony is finished, the marriage is completed; and those whom God hath joined together, shall no man and no created thing be able to put asunder. The whole idea and essence of the marriage of the Lamb is a perfect and eternal union between the Divine Man from heaven and the men of dust and ashes from the earth. It is the taking up of a people out of the dying world and absorbing them into union with the Lord of Life.

"When the marriage of the Lamb has taken place, it is followed by a banquet, the most magnificent, we may be assured, that even heaven itself has ever seen. It is called the 'Marriage Supper of the Lamb' (Rev. 19 : 9). What a feast will that be! Imagine all the splendors of Eastern kings, of Imperial Rome, of over-civilized Europe, and what are they when compared with the splendors of the marriage of the Lamb?

"Those present at the august and imposing banqueting-room are [illegible] gates are pearls, the light of the banqueting-room is the light of God's countenance!

"The last supper of the Lord with His disciples was in the earthly Jerusalem, at a humble table in an 'upper room,' and darkened by the heaviest cloud that ever fell upon human hearts—the shadow of the cross. But the next supper; how different! In the golden city, in the upper skies, at a table decorated by all the skill of heaven, covered with celestial light, with the cross behind and a happy eternity before them, the disciples in resurrection bodies will again sit down to supper with their Lord.

"The splendors of this Marriage Supper of the Lamb can neither be imagined nor described, nor its divine music, nor its celestial conversation. The golden harps shall be strung, and the immeasurable vault of heaven shall be filled with the melodious voice of glorified millions—a voice as perfect as their beauty; and a song shall be raised, which shall pierce the clouds, and bring back harmony even to the earth: 'Hallelujah, for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth!' 'They shall hunger no more, neither shall they thirst any more, neither shall the sun light upon them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall lead them to living fountains of water: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.'

"When this wondrous feast has ended, another scene of a far different kind shall follow. Heaven is not a place of unvarying occupation or of incessant feasting. It is a place of sublime action, as well as of sublime music. The manifold gifts and matchless construction of the mind and body were never intended for one monotonous occupation or one unwearied state. The employments of heaven will be as various as the capacities of its inmates. The Marriage Feast being ended, the saints go forth to Battle. The Lord with His glorified Church then goes forth at the head of His armies to tread down the wicked as ashes, and to suppress the reign of evil forever, and to slay the armies of Antichrist, as described in Revelation 19."

(To be continued.)

---

* racted from "Coming Wars," by Rev. M. ted in two pamphlets—five cents each by mail. amphlet contains "Ten Signs of the End, and cr ion of Approaching Events," with two maps f large diagrams. Second pamphlet contains quotations from Forty Expositors on these Address, 63 Bible House, New York.

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50

per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to MR. BENJAMIN AITKEN, 63 Bible House, New York.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of back numbers to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

Persons requiring single or special copies can obtain them most conveniently through

NEWSDEALERS.

Any complaint that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer is promptly attended to if we are given the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, May 12th, at 11.35 A.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

[illegible] favorable to Mr. Blaine. Of four State Conventions held on May 12th he is the choice of three. Michigan adopted a resolution in his favor and selected Blaine delegates, leaving them uninstructed. West Virginia and Nevada instructed its delegates for Blaine. The Florida Convention was enthusiastic for the ex-President; it elected Grant delegates, with instructions to vote for him as a unit so long as his name was before the National Convention.

There has been a bolt in Illinois before the State Convention meets. The Cook County Convention, which includes Chicago, assembled on May 10th to select delegates to the State Convention. Early in the proceedings the supporters of General Grant, believing that they would be ignored in the selection, separated themselves, and held another meeting, and selected delegates of their own. Two sets of delegates will therefore be sent from Cook County, and the Convention will have to decide which of the two it will receive.

The Democratic Convention of Wisconsin elected delegates on May 12th. They were uninstructed, and are considered merely as prominent members of the Democratic party, having no decided Presidential preferences, except that they will vote steadily against Mr. Tilden's nomination.

The Adjournment of Congress was voted by the House on May 15th, to be fixed for May 31st. The arguments of those Representatives who opposed the resolution, were that the interests of the country demanded action upon the tariff, the bill to change the method of counting the electoral votes, the Funding bill, and twelve hundred other bills which have been reported by the Committees. Besides these, great inconvenience is experienced by the failure of Congress to pass the appropriation bills. There is no money to pay the fees of jurors or witnesses, or the board of prisoners left for trial, to pay revenue officers, or to provide gas and water in the Post-Offices, Custom-Houses, and other public buildings throughout the country. In New York the Chambers of Commerce have guaranteed the payment of the gas bill at the Post-Office, but in Boston the work has been done since May 13th by the light of lanterns. The money has been duly furnished by the tax-payers, but the needful appropriation bills are not passed. It seems scarcely likely that Congress will adjourn leaving such an accumulation of business unperformed.

Over Thirty-seven Million Bibles have been issued by the American Bible Society during the sixty-four years of its existence. At the annual meeting in the Bible House, on May 13th, it was stated that during the last year the managers issued from the Bible House 1,129,078 copies of the sacred volume. Of these, 45,218 copies were sent to foreign lands. The receipts for the last year amount to $608,342.28, of which $221,728.38 was from legacies; $257,287.14 in payment for books; and $129,329.77 from gifts and other sources. Over $1,750,000 had been disbursed by the society, and now a bequest of $50,000 would soon be in the treasury to be expended in revising and publishing a new version of the Bible.

The Town of Milton, Pa., was Almost Entirely destroyed by fire on May 14th. The fire broke out at noon in the finishing shop of the car-works, and a high wind prevailing at the time carried the flames in the direction of the town. Aid was telegraphed for to adjacent towns and was promptly rendered, but before the flames were brought under control four hundred buildings, including all the churches, were destroyed, and some six hundred families rendered homeless. The loss is estimated to be nearly two million dollars.

A telegram states that contributions are pouring in from all points. Provisions and clothing are arriving from all the near towns. Two hundred tents from the State Arsenal reached there and were erected in a field for the accommodation of the homeless. Many of those who [illegible] for in the near country districts.

The Methodist Conference now assembled at Cincinnati has passed by a unanimous vote the following resolution: Whereas, The purity and exalted character of the family and social life of the White House at Washington is not surpassed in the history of our country; therefore,

"Resolved, That the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church assembled in Ohio, the state of the nativity of the President, Rutherford B. Hayes, and of Mrs. Hayes, hereby express our high appreciation of the personal worth and noble example of the President and his wife; and we recommend to the women of America the heroic conduct of Mrs. Hayes in regard to temperance, and especially the beautiful symmetry of her Christian life." Four additional bishops were elected on May 12th, as follows: The Rev. Henry W. Warren, of Philadelphia; Cyrus D. Foss, D.D., LL.D., President of Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn.; John F. Hurst, President of Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, N. J.; and Dr. E. O. Haven, Chancellor of the Syracuse University. The election occupied the entire day and created much interest.

The Sudden Death of Chief Judge Sanford E. Church, at Albion, N. Y., on May 14th, has caused a painful shock throughout the community. He had been slightly unwell for a few days, but had been able to attend to the duties of his office. On Friday evening he called at the Orleans County National Bank, on his way to his office, and while there was seized with severe pain in the chest. He was driven to his residence and a physician was summoned, but before medicine could be administered, he was seen to struggle convulsively and fall over on his side, dead.

The deceased Judge was sixty-five years of age, having been born at Milford, N. Y., in 1815. He had twice occupied the position of Lieutenant Governor of the State of New York, and was offered a third nomination, but declined it. He was chosen Comptroller in 1857, and administered the affairs of his office with remarkable ability. When the Court of Appeals was remodelled in 1870, Mr. Church was enthusi cally nominated for Chief Judge, and was ele by the enormous majority of 88,000. His had been before the country several times possible Democratic candidate for the F dency, and in 1868 the New York deleg cast the vote of the State for him in the seven ballots, but he was never nominated. a Judge, Mr. Church enjoyed the confidenc respect of his associates and of the bar, an opinions carried great weight with the p He was an earnest and consistent member Episcopal Church.

A Subscription has been Declined fo sake of principle by the directors of the Chr Home for Intemperate Men. At their me on May 7th they decided not to accept th nual subscription of about fifteen hundre lars paid them by the Commissioners of E The reason is not that the home is wealth has no need of the money; for it is notor straitened in its efforts by lack of means. reason is that the directors are aware th money given by the commissioners is d from the traffic in intoxicating liquor, an feel that for conscience' sake they must it. Their action will be approved by the of temperance, who will doubtless tak that the funds of the institution are not ished by the consistency of the directors.

A General's Prayers were Accepted servant as an indication of approaching Some officers during the war were on on sion speaking to Jim, the colored serv General Stonewall Jackson, about his m habits, when the following testimony was "Yes; the general is a great man for pra all times. But when I see him get up many times in the night to pray, then there is going to be something to pay; a straight and pack his haversack, because he will call for it in the mornin'." The was doubtless unconscious of his servant' vation of his devotions and of the infere drew from them, but so does the earnes tian preach silent sermons to those who s him which are no less effectual for being p in actions instead of in words.

The Future of America was Sketched i of a sombre character by Dr. Goodwin, cago, at the Broadway Tabernacle, New Y May 9th. The occasion was the annive the American Home Missionary Socie the vivid picture Dr. Goodwin drew of t gers which menace our national life sho up every Christian citizen to renewed e the cause of his Master. Dr. Goodwin the influence of Socialism, Mormonis Roman Catholicism, and proved by fa statistics how grave reason he had for h Having shown that the centre of the n moving gradually in a western direct pointed out that the three gigantic sys error are making rapid progress in that and are growing in wealth and status. fluence of the Western States will ere paramount in the Republic, and if that i is controlled by the enemies of Christ under the banner of Popery, Commu Mormonism, or a combination of the th result must be disastrous to the natio Goodwin's views drawn from facts and it will be observed, coincide with those eminent men who have given careful s the unfulfilled prophecies of the Bible.

The Prophetic News and Israel's Wa (London) for May may be obtained at t of the CHRISTIAN HERALD. Price six c

The Second Volume of the Christian comprising Nos. 37 to 62 (July to Dec may be had, elegantly bound in cloth, a Bible House, New York. Price $1.75.

The Debt on Dr. Talmage's Churc tributions received during the week whic Saturday, May 15th: James Penn, Purl $1; Jno. T. Brarey, Central Point, Cal., $1 forwarded to Dr. Talmage, $2.

Irish Famine Relief Fund.—Contrib ceived from "A Christian of Montana," $2.

A Meeting in the Old Brewery, New York, n Tuesday, May 4th, was of an unusually intersting character. It is now nearly thirty years ince the building was a tenement-house occupied y 300 people, among whom were the worst riminals in New York. The journals of that ay described it as "the devil's own fort, which e held against Church and State." From it roceeded all manner of vice and iniquity, and it arbored men guilty of the foulest crimes in the lendar. The place was dreaded even by the west class of citizens who live in Five Points, which the Old Brewery is the centre. Even e police dared not enter it save with their relvers in their hands, and then they were in nger of their lives. Now the Old Brewery is e headquarters of the Five Points Mission, and ousands of families have reason to thank God the beneficent influences which have flowed om it. In 1852 the place was purchased for ssion work, chiefly through the exertions of ne Christian ladies, who were assisted by the quence of Mr. J. B. Gough. The meeting d on May 4th, was to celebrate the anniversary the Mission, and to receive the report.

ev. Joseph Cook not a Spiritualist.—In one his latest Boston lectures Rev. Joseph Cook lt with the subject of Spiritualism, and menned several phenomena he had witnessed ich he could not understand. The lecture e rise to the report that Mr. Cook had bee a convert to Spiritualism. He has now tten to the newspapers emphatically denying truth of the report.

Death from a Scratch.—William B. Steeples, iver for the New Jersey Express Company, ding at Newark, slightly scratched his left d three weeks ago while handling boxes. He no attention to the wound. Soon his hand an to swell, and finally reached enormous proions. It was then discovered that he had been [illegible] Medical assistance was called in, it was too late; he died on May 7th.

he laws regulating our physical nature also y to our moral and spiritual nature. Little which the world calls venial it frequently pens that the sinner thinks nothing of, but r a time their effect is seen in a seared conce and a readiness to commit sins of deeper until the sinner becomes an utter spiritual k. It is only when the Holy Spirit has enened the soul that the smallest sin is seen to hat it really is—the heinous thing God hates.

Missionary Attacked by Robbers.—The Wm. Patterson, superintendent of the hodist Mission in Mexico, writes to the ville Advocate, that while he was on his to the scene of his labors he was attacked ighwaymen. They shot at him, providenonly hitting his hat; they struck him with guns on the back of his head and in his crushing his nose and injuring his eyes. r robbing him of all he had with him at the, they left him bleeding in the road, where he until mercifully rescued and cared for by the pants of a passing diligence. Those who te their lives to the work Jesus committed is disciples, to go into all the world and h the Gospel to every creature (Mark 16: are even in these days in peril of their lives, they need the prayers of the Church that may be sustained in their work Alarming Oil Fire broke out near Rew Pa., on May 6th. Two workmen were atting to explode a nitro-glycerine torpedo oil well owned by the Oakshade Oil Com. As the torpedo was being lowered the made a flow of oil, throwing the torpedo of the hole against the derrick. Instantly was a terrific explosion, scattering the enhouse, boiler-house, derrick, and machinery fferent directions. The oil caught fire and up into the air a hundred feet in a blazing n. The ground for miles around was cov with a thin layer of oil and oil-soaked s. A strong wind was blowing from the and the fire spread with frightful rapidity in irection of Rew City. The people of that were paralyzed with fear, and tried to remove their household goods before the fire reached them, but so great was the speed of the flames that nothing could be saved and the village was totally consumed. The people ran for their lives, and sought a place of shelter in an open field.

On the same day another oil fire broke out at Gillmor, six miles from Rew City, which spread from tank to tank until the whole mountain side was a sheet of flame. As far as can yet be learned, no lives were lost, but the loss of property was very great.

Theological Students and Croquet Playing.—The colored theological students of the Richmond Baptist Institute have been in the habit of playing baseball and croquet, but some of the brethren in the neighborhood thought that the amusement was inconsistent with their profession, and two aged deacons called upon the students and remonstrated. The latter replied: "We do not believe there can be any sin in our taking such exercise; but, if it hurt your conscience, we will play croquet and ball no more while the world standeth."

The reply of the students indicates that whether they were right or wrong in croquet playing, they had received the true spirit of Christ, which is one of self-renunciation.

A Letter Asking for Prayer was Read at the Fulton Street Prayer Meeting last week from a young lady in England who had read in the English edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD the narrative of a young lady who had been healed of a sore sickness in answer to prayer. For many years she has been an invalid, unable to leave her room, and a great sufferer. For four years her father has suffered in the room below hers, and neither has seen the other in all that time.

A Friend who would not Wait.—A Dissipated young man was converted at one of Mr. Moody's meetings and subsequently joined Dr. Tyng's church in New York. Some time afterward he met in the city one of his former associates, who was [illegible] him and asked him to celebrate their meeting with a drink in [illegible] neighboring bar-rooms. But the young Christian refused, saying:

"I have a Friend with me."

"I don't see any one with you."

"You can't see Him, but He is here."

"Bring him in with you."

"No; He never goes into bar-rooms."

"Then let him wait outside."

"No, no," was the final answer. "My friend is Jesus Christ, and if I go in with you He'll not wait."

How many temptations would a Christian be saved from if he only considered whether Jesus would go into certain places which are sometimes considered innocent and harmless!

"Her Pilot was Asleep Below" is given as the simple and sufficient explanation of the disaster that happened to the Guion steamer Montana, which was grounded and wrecked upon a rock off the English coast on Saturday, March 13th. Of how many shipwrecked souls might the same thing be said, "The pilot was asleep below"! "What I say unto you," said our Saviour, "I say unto all, Watch, and pray, lest ye fall into temptation."

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works.—We have much pleasure in announcing that another large consignment of volumes by this eminent author and preacher has been received. They are now on sale at the office of the CHRISTIAN HERALD, No. 63 Bible House, New York, and are offered at prices so low as to bring them within the reach of every one. Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with photograph of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Ploughman's Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth, 60 cents. The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volume of fifty sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, a homiletical exposition of the book of Psalms, five vols., as far as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon's Birthday-Book. This popular gift-book contains a suitable passage selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for every day in the year, with a blank space opposite for autographs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon appear at their respective birthdays. The book is elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cents. Remittances should accompany orders.

SALVATION BY WORKS, A CRIMINAL DOCTRINE.

A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"I do not frustrate the grace of God: for if righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain."—GALATIANS 2: 21.

The Doctrine Insinuating—Plausible—A Natural Doctrine—Arising from Ignorance—Pride—Unbelief—I. The Two Great Crimes of Self-Righteousness—1. It Frustrates the Grace of God—2. Makes Christ to have Died in Vain—It is a Sin against Sinners—Against Saints—Against the Well-beloved—II. These Crimes Committed by Many People—1. Those who Trifle with the Gospel—2. Those who have no Sense of Guilt—3. Those who Despair—4. Those who Mangle the Gospel—5. Those who Apostatize—III. No True Believer Guilty of those Crimes—Two Great Principles.

THE idea of salvation by the merit of our own works is exceedingly insinuating. It matters not how often it is refuted, it asserts itself again and again; and when it gains the least foothold it soon makes great advances. Hence Paul, who was determined to show it no quarter, opposed every thing which bore its likeness. He was determined not to permit the thin end of the wedge to be introduced into the church, for well he knew that willing hands would soon be driving it home: hence when Peter sided with the Judaizing party, and seemed to favor those who demanded that the Gentiles should be circumcised, our brave apostle withstood him to the face.

He fought always for salvation by grace through faith, and contended strenuously against all thought of righteousness by obedience to the precepts of the ceremonial or the moral law. No one could be more explicit than he upon the doctrine that we are not justified or saved by works in any degree, but solely by the grace of [illegible] uncertain sound, but gave forth the clear note, "By grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God." Grace meant [illegible] tampering with the matter, [illegible] endure any of its meaning.

So fascinating is the doctrine of legal righteousness that the only way to deal with it is Paul's way. Stamp it out. Cry war to the knife against it. Never yield to it; but remember the apostle's firmness, and how stoutly he held his ground: "To whom," saith he, "we gave place by subjection, no, not for an hour."

The error of salvation by works is exceedingly plausible. You will constantly hear it stated as a self-evident truth, and vindicated on account of its supposed practical usefulness, while the gospel doctrine of salvation by faith is railed at and accused of evil consequences. It is affirmed that if we preach salvation by good works we shall encourage virtue; and so it might seem in theory, but history proves by many instances that as a matter of fact where such doctrine has been preached virtue has become singularly uncommon, and that in proportion as the merit of works has been cried up, morality has gone down.

On the other hand, where justification by faith has been preached, conversions have followed, and purity of life has been produced even in the worst of men. Those who lead godly and gracious lives are ready to confess that the cause of their zeal for holiness lies in their faith in Christ Jesus; but where will you meet with a devout and upright man who glories in his own works?

SELF-RIGHTEOUSNESS IS NATURAL to our fallen humanity. Hence it is the essence of all false religions. Be they what they may, they all agree in seeking salvation by our own deeds. He who worships his idols will torture his body, will fast, will perform long pilgrimages, and do or endure any thing in order to merit salvation. The Romish Church holds up continually before the eyes of its votaries the prize to be earned by self-denial, by penance, by prayers, or by sacraments, or by some other performances of man.

Go where you may, the natural religion of fallen man is salvation by his own merits. An old divine has well said, every man is born a heretic upon this point, and he naturally gravitates toward this heresy in one form or another. Self-salvation, either by his personal worthiness, or by his repentance, or by his resolves, is a hope ingrained in human nature, and very hard to remove. This foolishness is bound up in the heart of every child, and who shall get it out of him?

This erroneous idea arises partly from ignorance, for men are ignorant of the law of God, and of what holiness really is. If they knew that even an evil thought is a breach of the law, and that the law once broken in any point is altogether violated, they would be at once convinced that there can be no righteousness by the law to those who have already offended against it.

Nor is it ignorance alone which leads men to self-righteousness: they are also deceived by pride. Man cannot endure to be saved on the footing of mercy; he loves not to plead guilty and throw himself on the favor of the great King; he cannot brook to be treated as a pauper, and blessed as a matter of charity; he desires to have a finger in his own salvation, and claim at least a little credit for it. Proud man will not have heaven itself upon terms of grace; but so long as he can he sets up one plea or another, and holds to his own righteousness as though it were his life.

This self-confidence also arises from wicked unbelief, for through his self-conceit man will not believe God. Nothing is more plainly revealed in Scripture than this—that by the works of the law shall no man be justified, yet men in some shape or other stick to the hope of legal righteousness; they will have it that they must prepare for grace, or assist mercy, or in some degree deserve eternal life. They prefer their own flat[illegible] searching God. The testimony of the Holy Spirit concerning the deceitfulness of the heart is cast aside and the [illegible] good, no, not one, is [illegible]ner denied. Is not this a great evil?

Self-righteousness is also much promoted by the almost universal spirit of trifling which is now abroad. Only while men trifle with themselves can they entertain the idea of personal merit before God. He who comes to serious thought, and begins to understand the character of God, before whom the heavens are not pure, and the angels are charged with folly—he, I say, that comes to serious thought and beholds a true vision of God, abhors himself in dust and ashes, and is forever silenced as to any thought of self-justification.

At this time I desire to shoot at the very heart of that soul-destroying doctrine, while I show you, in the first place, that two great crimes are contained in the idea of self-justification. When I have brought forth that indictment, I shall further endeavor to show that these two great crimes are committed by many; and then, thirdly, it will be a delight to assert that the true believer does not fall into these crimes. May God, the Holy Spirit, help us while meditating upon this important theme!

I. TWO GREAT CRIMES

are contained in self-righteousness. These high crimes and misdemeanors are frustrating the grace of God, and making Christ to have died in vain.

1. The first is the frustration of the grace of God. The word here translated "frustrate" means to make void, to reject, to refuse, to regard as needless. Now, he that hopes to be saved by his own righteousness rejects the grace or free favor of God, regards it as useless, and in that sense frustrates it.

It is clear, first, that if righteousness come by the law, the grace of God is no longer required. If we can be saved by our own merits we need justice, but we certainly do not want mercy. If we can keep the law, and claim to be accepted as a matter of debt, it is plain that we need not turn suppliants, and crave for mercy. Grace is a superfluity where merit can be proved.

A man who can go into court with a clear case and a bold countenance asks not for mercy of the judge, and the offer of it would insult him. "Give me justice," he says; "give me my rights;" and he stands up for them as a brave Englishman should do. It is only when a man feels that the law condemns him that he puts in a plea for mercy. Nobody ever dreamed of recommending an innocent man to mercy. I say, then, that the man who believes that by keeping the law, or by practising ceremonies, or by undergoing religious performances, he can make himself acceptable before God, most decidedly puts the grace of God on one side as a superfluous thing as far as he is concerned. Is it not clearly so? And is not this a crimson crime—this frustration of the grace of God?

He makes the grace of God to be at least a secondary thing, which is only a lower degree of the same error. Many think that they are to merit as much as they can by their own exertions, and then the grace of God will make up for the rest. The theory seems to be that we are to keep the law as far as we can, and this imperfect obedience is to stand good, as a sort of composition, say a shilling in the pound, or fifteen shillings in the pound, according as man judges of his own excellence; and then what is required over and above our own hard-earned money the grace of God will supply: in short, the plan is every man his own Saviour, and Jesus Christ and His grace make-weights for our deficiencies.

Whether men see it or not, this admixture of law and grace is most dishonoring to the salvation of Jesus Christ. It makes the Saviour's work to be incomplete, though on the cross He cried, "It is finished." Yea, it even treats it as being utterly ineffectual, since it appears to be of no avail till man's works are added to it. According to this notion we are redeemed as much by our own doings as by the ransom price of Jesus' blood, and man and [illegible] shares, [illegible] the work and in the glory. This is an intense form of arrogant treason against the majesty of divine mercy:

A CAPITAL CRIME,

which will condemn all who continue in it.

More than that, he who trusts in himself, his feelings, his works, his prayers, or in any thing except the grace of God, virtually gives up trusting in the grace of God altogether: for be it known unto you, that God's grace will never share the work with man's merit. As oil will not combine with water, so neither will human merit and heavenly mercy mix together. The apostle saith in Romans 11:6, "If by grace, then it is no more of works: otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then is it no more grace: otherwise work is no more work."

You must either have salvation wholly because you deserve it, or wholly because God graciously bestows it though you do not deserve it. You must receive salvation at the Lord's hand either as a debt or as a charity; there can be no mingling of the ideas. That which is a pure donation of favor cannot also be a reward of personal deserving. A combination of the two principles of law and grace is utterly impossible. Trust in our own works in any degree effectually shuts us out from all hope of salvation by grace: and so it frustrates the grace of God.

This hoping to be saved by our own righteousness robs God of His glory. It as good as says, "We want no grace; we need no free favor." It reads of the new covenant which infinite love has made, but by clinging to the old covenant it puts dishonor upon it. In its heart it murmurs, "What need of this covenant of grace? The covenant of works answers every purpose for us." It reads of the great gift of grace in the person of Jesus Christ, and it does despite thereto by the secret thought that human doings are as good as the life and death of the Son of God. It cries, "We will not have this man to save us."

A self-righteous hope casts a slur upon the glory of God, since it is clear that if a man could be saved by his own works, he would naturally have the honor of it; but if a man be save the free grace of God, then God is glori Woe unto those who teach a doctrine w would pluck the crown royal from the hea our sovereign Lord and disgrace the thron His glory. God help us to be clear of this offence against high Heaven.

I grow warm upon such a subject as this my indignation rises against that which dishonor to my Lord, and frustrates His g This is a sin so gross that even the heathen not commit it. They have never heard of grace of God, and therefore they cannot slight upon it: when they perish it will be a far lighter doom than those who have told that God is gracious and ready to par and yet turn on their heel and wickedly boa innocence, and pretend to be clean in the of God. This is

A SIN WHICH DEVILS CANNOT COMMI

With all the obstinacy of their rebellion, can never reach to this. They have never the sweet notes of free grace and dying love ing in their ears, and therefore they have used the heavenly invitation. What has been presented to their acceptance cann the object of their rejection. Thus, ther hearer, if you should fall into this deep you will sink lower than the heathen, lowe Sodom and Gomorrah, and lower than the himself. Wake up, I pray, and do not d frustrate the grace of God.

2. The second great crime which self-jus tion commits is making Christ to be dead in This is plain enough. If salvation can the works of the law, why did our Lord die to save us? O thou bleeding Lamb of Thine incarnation is a marvel, but Thy upon the accursed tree is such a miracle of as fills all heaven with astonishment. W dare to say that Thy death, O incarnate was a superfluity, a [illegible] Do they dare think Thee a generous but enthusiast, whose death was needless? thousands virtually do this, and, in fact, so who make it out that men might hav saved in some other way, or may now be by their own willings and doings.

The doctrine of salvation by works i against all the fallen sons of Adam, for cannot be saved except by their own what hope is left for any transgressor? shut the gates of mercy on mankind; y demn the guilty to die without the possib remission. You deny all hope of welc the returning prodigal, all prospect of P to the dying thief. If heaven be by thousands of us will never see its gates. that I never shall. You fine fellows may in your prospects, but what is to become You ruin us all by your boastful scheme.

Nor is this all. It is a sin against the for none of them have any other hope ex the blood and righteousness of Jesus Remove the doctrine of the atoning blo you have taken all away; our founda gone. If you speak thus you offend the generation of godly men. I go further mongering is a sin against the perfec above.

The doctrine of salvation by works silence the hallelujahs of heaven. H choristers, what meaning is there in you You are chanting, "Unto Him that lo and washed us from our sins in His own But why sing ye so? If salvation be by your ascriptions of praise are empty fl You ought to sing, "Unto ourselves w our garments clean, to us be glory fore ever;" or at least "unto ourselves wh made the Redeemer's work effectual share of praise." But a self-lauding n never heard in heaven, and therefore sure that the doctrine of self-justificatio of God.

I charge you, renounce it as the foe and man. This proud system is a sin of dye against the Well-beloved. I cannot to think of the insult which it puts u lying Lord. If you have made Christ to live in ain, that is bad enough; but to represent Him s having died in vain! What shall be said of his? That Christ came to earth for nothing is statement most horrible; but that He became bedient to the death of the cross without result ; profanity at its worst.

II. I will say no more concerning the nature f these sins, but in the second place proceed to ie solemn fact, that

HESE TWO GREAT CRIMES ARE COMMITTED BY MANY PEOPLE.

I am afraid they are committed by some who ar me this day. Let every one search himself id see if these accursed things be not hidden in s heart, and if they be, let him cry unto God r deliverance from them.

1. Assuredly these crimes are chargeable on ose who trifle with the Gospel. Here is the eatest discovery that was ever made, the most onderful piece of knowledge that ever was re-aled, and yet you do not think it worth a ought.

The death of Christ is nothing to you—a very autiful fact, no doubt; you know the story ll, but you do not care enough about it to sh to be a partaker in its benefits. His blood y have power to cleanse from sin, but you do want remission; His death may be the life men, but you do not long to live by Him. To saved by the atoning blood does not strike as being half so important as to carry on ur business at a profit and acquire a fortune your family. By thus trifling with these cious things you do, as far as you can, frus-e the grace of God and make Christ to die in n.

. Another set of people who do this are those have no sense of guilt. Perhaps they are urally amiable, civil, honest, and generous ple, and they think that these natural virtues all that is needed. We have many such, in om there is much that is lovely, but the one g needful is lacking. They are not con-us that they ever did any thing very wrong, think themselves certainly as good as ers, and in some respects rather better.

ou are very bad, because you are so proud as hink yourself righteous, though God hath that there is none righteous, no, not one. tell your God that He is a liar. His Word ses you, and His law condemns you; but will not believe Him, and actually boast of ng a righteousness of your own. This is presumption and arrogant pride, and may Lord purge you from it!

Another sort of people may fancy that they escape, but we must now come home to . Those who despair will often cry, "I I cannot be saved except by grace, for I uch a great sinner; but alas! I am too great ner to be saved at all. I am too black for st to wash out my sins." Ah, my dear d, though you know it not, you are making the grace of God, by denying its power and ing its might. You doubt the efficacy of Redeemer's blood, and the power of the er's grace.

hat! The grace of God, is not that able to ? Is not the Father of our Lord Jesus able rgive sin? We joyfully sing—

"Who is a pardoning God like Thee?
Or who hath grace so rich and free?"

you say He cannot forgive you, and this in eeth of His many promises of mercy. Oh ot so: let not thine unbelief give the lie to

4. And those, I think, commit this sin in a measure, who make a mingle-mangle of the l. I mean this: when we preach the Gos-e have only to say, "Sinners, you are ; you never can be any thing else but in and of yourselves: if that sin of yours doned, it must be through an act of sover-race, and not because of any thing in you, at can be done by you. Grace must be to you because Jesus died, and for no reason; and the way by which you can that grace is simply by trusting Christ. By faith in Jesus Christ you shall obtain full forgiveness." This is pure Gospel.

If the man turns round and inquires, "How am I warranted to believe in Christ?" If I tell him that he is warranted to believe in Christ because he feels a law-work within, or because he has holy desires, I have made a mess of it: I have put something of the man into the question and marred the glory of grace. Those who mingle their "ifs," and "buts," and insist upon it "you must do this, and feel that, before you may accept Christ," frustrate the grace of God in a measure, and do damage to the glorious Gospel of the blessed God.

5. And so, once more, do those also who apostatize. Do I speak to any here who were once professors of religion, who once used to offer prayer in the assembly, who once walked as saints, but now have gone back, breaking the Sabbath, forsaking the house of God, and living in sin? You, my friend, say by your course of life, "I had the grace of God, but I do not care about it: it is worth nothing. I have rejected it, I have given it up: I have made it void: I have gone back to the world." You do as good as say, "I did once trust in Jesus Christ, but He is not worth trusting."

You have denied Him, you have sold your Lord and Master. I will not now go into the question as to whether you ever were sincere, though I believe you never were, but on your own showing such is your case. Take heed lest these two terrible crimes should rest upon you, that you do frustrate the grace of God, and make Christ to be dead in vain.

III. On my third point I shall carry with me the deep convictions, and the joyful confidences, of all true believers. It is this, that

NO TRUE BELIEVER WILL BE GUILTY OF THESE CRIMES.

In his very soul he loathes these infamous sins.

First of all, no believer in Christ can bear to think of the frustrating of the grace of God or the making of it void. Come, now, honest hearts, I speak to you. Do you trust in grace alone, or do you in some measure rest in yourselves? Do you even in a small degree depend upon your own feelings, your own faithfulness, your own repentance? I know you abhor the very thought. You have not even the shadow of a hope nor the semblance of a confidence in any thing you ever were, or ever can be, or ever hope to be. You fling this away as a foul rag full of contagion, which you would hurl out of the universe if you could.

I do avow that though I have preached the Gospel with all my heart, and glory in it, yet I cast my preachings away as dross if I think of them as a ground of reliance: and though I have brought many souls to Christ, blessed be His name, I never dare for one moment put the slightest confidence in that fact as to my own salvation, for I know that I, after having preached to others, may yet be a castaway. I cannot rest in a successful ministry, or an edified church, but I repose alone in my Redeemer.

What I say of myself I know that each one of you will say for himself. Your almsgivings, your prayers, your tears, your suffering persecution, your gifts to the church, your earnest work in the Sunday-school or elsewhere—did you ever think of putting these side by side with the blood of Christ as your hope? No, you never dreamed of it; I am sure you never did, and the mention of it is utterly loathsome to you: is it not? Grace, grace, grace is your sole hope.

Moreover, you have not only renounced all confidence in works, but you renounce it this day more heartily than ever you did. The older you are, and the more holy you become, the less do you think of trusting in yourself. I know there are some who never felt themselves to be sinners, who shift about as if they were sitting on thorns when I am preaching grace and nothing else but grace; but it is not so with you who are resting in Christ. "Oh, no," you say, "ring that bell again, sir! Ring that bell again; there is no music like it. Touch that string again, it is our favorite note."

The true believer is also free from the second crime: he does not make Christ to be dead in vain. No, no, no, he trusts in the death of Christ; he puts his sole and entire reliance upon the great Substitute who loved and lived and died for him. He does not dare to associate with the bleeding sacrifice, his poor bleeding heart, or his prayers, or his sanctification, or any thing else. "None but Christ, none but Christ," is his soul's cry.

He detests every proposal to mix any thing of ceremony or of legal action with the finished work of Jesus Christ. The longer we live, I trust, dear brethren, the more we see the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. We are struck with admiration at the wisdom of the way by which a substitute was introduced—that God might smite sin and yet spare the sinner; we are lost in admiration at the matchless love of God, that He spared not His own Son; we are filled with reverent adoration at the love of Christ, that when He knew the price of pardon was His blood, His pity ne'er withdrew.

We are one with Him, and being one with Him we realize more every day that He did not die in vain. His death has bought us real life: His death has already set us free from the bondage of sin, and has even now brought us deliverance from the fear of eternal wrath. His death has bought us life eternal, has bought us sonship and all the blessings that go with it, which the Fatherhood of God takes care to bestow; the death of Christ has shut the gates of hell for us, and opened the gates of heaven; the death of Christ has wrought for us mercies, not visionary or imaginary, but real and true, which this very day we do enjoy, and so we are in no danger of thinking that Christ died in vain.

It is our joy to hold

TWO GREAT PRINCIPLES

which I will leave with you, hoping that you will suck marrow and fatness out of them. These are the two principles. The grace of God cannot be frustrated, and Jesus Christ died not in vain. These two principles, I think, lie at the bottom of all sound doctrine. The grace of God cannot be frustrated after all. Its eternal purpose will be fulfilled, its sacrifice and seal shall be effectual: the chosen ones of grace shall be brought to glory. There shall be no failures as to God's plan in any point whatever: at the last when all shall be summed up it shall be seen that grace reigned through righteousness unto eternal life, and the top stone shall be brought out with shoutings of "Grace, grace unto it."

And as grace cannot be frustrated, so Christ did not die in vain. Some seem to think that there were purposes in Christ's heart which will never be accomplished. We have not so learned Christ. What He died to do shall be done; those He bought He will have; those He redeemed shall be free; there shall be no failure of reward for Christ's wondrous work: He shall see of the travail of His soul and shall be satisfied.

On these two principles I throw back my soul to rest. Believing in His grace that grace shall never fail me. "My grace is sufficient for thee," saith the Lord, and so shall it be. Believing in Jesus Christ, His death must save me. It cannot be, O Calvary! that thou shouldst fail; O Gethsemane! that thy bloody sweat should be in vain. Through divine grace, resting in our Saviour's precious blood, we must be saved. Joy and rejoice with me, and go your way to tell it out to others. God bless you in so doing, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

[Portion of Scripture read before Sermon, Galatians 1:11; 2.]

[The prayers of the readers of this Journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors in America and England, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and for its weekly circulation of more than 175,000 copies to be blessed by the Holy Spirit to the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Talmage especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

A DOCTOR'S FATAL INHERITANCE.

A Temperance Story.

(Continued from page 316.)

Miss Garrington's Recovery—An Operation by an Intoxicated Surgeon—Arthur Disappears—Found in a Low Court Robbed and Suffering—His Terrible Death.

Poor Mrs. Garrington sank back into a chair and covered her face with her hands. "My God! my God!" she exclaimed, "this dreadful thing has come upon us at last! What shall we do? O dearest Lord, have mercy and pity upon us!" I made no attempt to check the mother's passionate grief for some time, but at last I appealed powerfully to her reason, and told her all would yet be well. I advised her to say nothing to her daughter, but to treat her with increased kindness—a recommendation I knew needed no urging.

Mrs. Garrington and her daughter, who had recovered, soon after this went abroad for change of air and scene, and Arthur remained at home alone. The occasional fits of gloom to which he was subject were now more frequent, and he appeared to be listless, and to have lost that interest in his profession which had so distinguished him. Every thing he did now seemed to be done with an effort, and though I often called and literally dragged him into society, I could not effectually arouse him from his lethargy. He was passionately fond of music, and I prevailed upon him to frequent the opera. This restored him to cheerfulness more than any thing, but the influence soon passed away, and he relapsed into the morbid condition into which the shock of his sister's mishap had thrown him.

Some time after this there was a patient in a well-known hospital suffering from aneurism of the heart, and it had been determined to try upon him the last resource known in such cases. His right arm was to be removed from its socket, and Arthur was selected to perform the operation. On the day appointed the patient was prepared, and Arthur arrived punctually, and immediately set to work. But there was something in his air and look so wild, so horrible, that I gazed at him with a terrified glance. The students in the room nudged each other and whispered, "Look at his eyes!"

The fixed, glassy stare, the stolid, vacant face, was to me appalling at such a moment, and I remained spellbound until the operation, thank God! was successfully and cleverly performed. "He is drunk!" said some one near me, and when I looked up Arthur reeled, and laughed an idiotic laugh. I rushed to him, seized his arm, and dragged him from the room. It was too true; he was drunk, hopelessly intoxicated, and how he had got through the operation I could never tell. He told me afterward he remembered nothing about it.

He kept away from the class-room after this, and as several days elapsed without hearing any thing of him, I called in Russell Square. To my surprise his servant informed me that his master had not been home for four days. He had come home hurriedly one evening, sent to get a check cashed for a large amount, and had not since returned. He said nothing of his intention to stay, but from the largeness of the amount of money he had taken and his long absence the servant concluded he might have gone to join his mother, who was staying at Ems. But he had taken no clothes with him, not even a change of linen; and the servants did not know what to do, and asked my advice.

I did not wish to unnecessarily alarm his mother, so I thought, before taking any steps, it would be advisable to wait a day or so longer. However, two days after he had not returned, and I wrote to Mrs. Garrington asking if Arthur had joined her. In due course an answer came that he was not at Ems—why did I write? Was Arthur not at home? and if not, what had become of him? I was to telegraph reply immediately. Well, there was nothing else to be done, for I became really alarmed, and I telegraphed Mrs. Garrington to return home at once. She soon arrived with her daughter, and they were both distracted on learning the news.

Miss Garrington was the first to recover her self-possession, and she lovingly soothed her mother's bitter anguish. She had regained her health, and although she had long suffered from the memory of that painful event in her life, I could see that she was chastened, and had at last found that joy and peace in Christ, where alone any real happiness can be found. Would that Arthur could have gone with faith and confidence to the same Source of all strength!

One night, returning home through Oxford Street, London, rather late, I felt myself plucked by the sleeve, and turning round I confronted a shabbily-dressed female who asked me if I was not a doctor. "I have often seen you, I think," said she, "with that good doctor who comes our way so often."

"Yes, my good woman," I quickly replied. "What of him? Where is he?"

"Oh," she said, "then I am right; I am so glad; come with me."

"Is he alive?" I asked.

"Yes," she said, "but terribly ill." She led me through Drury Lane into an abominable-looking court, and stopped outside a wretched house.

"Come upstairs," said she, "and don't be afraid."

There was no light, and I groped my way up, convinced that I ran no risk, though I was in a notoriously evil neighborhood. In a small room, destitute of furniture except a table and chair, I saw by the faint glimmer of a candle the figure of a man lying in one corner on a mattress. His hair was matted, his face unwashed, and with the bloodshot eyes and swollen lips I could scarcely recognize my poor friend Arthur.

It was indeed he, but oh, how changed! The woman said she had noticed him drinking in the locality for several days with some of the vilest characters, and at last she had discovered him in the street one night lying utterly helpless, without coat or waistcoat, of which he had been robbed. She had once received some kindness from him, and she knew he was a medical man, but did not know where he lived. She had brought him in and sheltered him, poor as her accommodation was. He had been raving of his mother, but was now quiet.

I could see he was conscious, though his frame was trembling from his past excess. He recognized me, and turned his face to the wall. He was too feeble to stand, and I had him at once placed in a cab and conveyed home.

The meeting between the mother and son I will pass over; it was too harrowing to describe. He recovered very slowly, and he was completely broken in spirits. Nothing could remove the depression that followed this debauch, and I was not surprised to hear that he had come to the determination to relinquish his profession. His case appeared to me hopeless, and the family soon after went to a watering-place in the South of England. Letters often reached me, and I was afraid things were not going on well, when one day I received a telegram begging me to come immediately.

I went by the first train, and was not much surprised to hear that Arthur had again given way to drink. He had become so bad and unmanageable that the local doctor had sent in a man to watch. He was in the height of delirium when I entered his bed-room.

"Come on, come on!" he shouted to me, "you mean, pitiful, white-livered scoundrel; you would take my life, would you?" and, breaking from his keeper, who sought to hold him down in bed, he darted out of the room downstairs, and into the street.

With nothing but his shirt on, and his hair streaming in the wind, he sped like lightning up a cliff that overhung the sea. It was impossible to overtake him, but he turned and looked at us for a moment, and then sprang into the sea. Tossing his arms wildly up, he shouted, "Come on, come on!" and sank out of sight forever.

THE SPIRIT OF POWER AND LOVE

Sermon by Rev. W. M. Punshon, LL.D.

"For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; b of power, and of love, and of a sound mind."—2 Ti OTHY I : 7.

Unfailing Affection of Christ and the Apostles Paul's Intrepidity and Last Utterances—I. Tl True Spirit of Power not Physical, but Mor and Spiritual, Strength—Its Varied Characte istics and its Value.

It is recorded as an example of the unfaili affection of our Saviour toward those whom I had chosen out of the world, and made partake of His wondrous life, that, having loved H own that were in the world, He loved them un the end. His was a constancy of affection th suffered no abatement, either by human frail or by His own crushing weight of adversity a sorrow.

Similar constancy of regard in imitation His loving example seems to have been exhib ed by the apostles toward the churches whi they had been instrumental in establishing, toward those whom they tenderly designate their children in the faith. With an affecti fatherly in its solicitude and undimmed by t lapse of time, Paul watches over churches a fortifies the young evangelist whom he had ju inducted into his sphere of holy trial. Alwa anxious to forward the cause of his Master, suffers neither sickness to abate nor fetters paralyze his usefulness, and he writes this Ep tle "as an ambassador in bonds."

Already once has he been before the bar Nero; and, although forsaken by recre human hearts, the Lord stood by him a delivered him out of the mouth of the li But he knows that the danger is not over, t he will be a second time summoned, and t distinct and near there looms upon him shadow of martyrdom.

But this thought gives him no pain. It be but, to him, the introduction to the fi chariot in which he will the sooner cleave skies. How sublime his attitude as he stan Paul the aged. The young blasphemer tra formed into the veteran saint, looking cal down the vale of the future, and absolut losing sight of death in the thought of recompense beyond it. "I am now ready to offered, and the time of my departure is hand."

"Of my departure"—as if he were just m ing from one room to another in the gr house of life, and that was all. "The tim my departure is at hand. I have fought a g fight, I have finished my course, I have k the faith: henceforth there is laid up for m crown of righteousness, which the Lord, righteous Judge, shall give me at that day."

Now, words coming from such lips, at suc time, are eminently worthy of attention. prepossessions of yore have been confirmed later experience. Any thing which the glow fancy might have persuaded the unripe judgm to adopt hastily, has been corrected by the p ress of years. The things of earth appea all their littleness, for eternity looms sol and large upon the view. The mind get clearer insight and a farther-reaching visio the death-hour projects the invisible, and then, with all the past in memory, with all boundless hope of future glory at hand, apostle gives us his matured judgment of Christianity which he loved so well.

Now, words from an apostle like this, a time like this, when he looked straight ac the river and saw the shining ones on the o side, could not fail to be fraught both with dom and solemnity for those of us who wis learn; and he tells us that wherever it is wisely and perfectly embodie not the spirit of fear, but the spirit of power love and of a sound mind. And as the w of the world are the same, and as the Ch has spiritual forces in the midst of her that intended to win the world to Christ, the s pression of Christianity must be accepted now, order that it may be displayed, not morbidly, it in its comeliest and most winning aspects, fore the sons of men.

THE SPIRIT OF OUR CHRISTIANITY,

The spirit, therefore, which the Church should hibit to-day must be a brave, affectionate, ber one—"for God hath not given us the irit of fear, but of power and of love and of a und mind." Let us look at these things for moment.

The apostle's negative affirmation and his first firmative one may be considered as the same—the spirit of fear being put in opposition to the spirit of courage, which is attended by the spirit of power. The main design of the affirmation in the connection is to give weight to the exhortation which follows it, "Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me, his prisoner."

1. The remembrance of his unsupported appearance before the tribunal of Nero seems to have haunted the apostle's mind and to have evoked a fear that the bravery of confessorship should die out of the Church; lest the faith that was valiant enough at a distance should fail before the rod of the lictor or before the axe of the headsman. So, he says, the spirit which God has given us, which is the very essence of our religion, is not dastardly craven-heartedness at the prospect of disaster, but the courage that will avow its faith and do its duty in the presence of every possible danger—not the spirit of fear, but

THE SPIRIT OF POWER.

The world's old idea of power, you know, was connected, both in classic and in pagan times, with physical energy and stalwart, muscular strength, such as slumbered in the right arm of Hercules or dwelt in the sinews of his Scripture prototype, Samson. While these were prodigies of strength, fit types of the crusaders and warriors of the world's later age of chivalry, there was not an atom of real power in the one or in the other.

The prowess of the physical courage which you can purchase for a shilling a day was impotent against the giants of lust and malice and pride, and there are significant and humbling lessons of bravest physical energy coexistent with the utmost moral cowardice, as, for instance, in the case of a Samson upon the lap of Delilah. Intellectual eminence, considered by itself and without any corresponding excellence, we are entitled to regard as among the world's lost powers.

I know, of course, all that can be said on the other side. I know that genius wields an empire in its own realm of undisputed lordship. I know the resolute will always find the abject roth beneath their commanding will. I know, too, that in the world's past, a past for the most part of strife and struggle and imperiousness and superb regal spirit, the men whom the chroniclers have canonized have been the brave forces, which they seemed to impress upon each succeeding age; but I know, too, or I think I know, that Christianity is gradually leavening the nations, and that, as the world grows wiser and better, its admiration will be dispensed for the heroes of its ancient worship with only very prudent parsimony.

Intellectual eminence, then, is not spiritual power, for it can consist (witness numberless instances) with vicious practice—and some of those who have scaled its loftiest heights have stooped to such low-souled meanness, that the poet has well described them as > "The wisest, brightest, meanest of mankind."

No, the spirit of power is very different from all this. It can only dwell in a heart that is renewed—which to the foundation of faith has added courage as the first and among the noblest of Christian graces. The minister who preaches the truth as he ought, who doesn't smooth it down that it may fall blandly on courtly ears, who does not shrink from the utterance because the utterance causes an unpleasant twinge in the countenances of some who listen to him; who makes a stand for some noble principle, as against the pride of rank, and wealth, and office, and intellect, and the coarser pride of money, and, in spite of scathing slander, maintains his hold upon it; the struggling tradesman, newly brought under the impulse of the Christian principle, who will close his shop on the Sabbath at the risk of losing his most profitable trade, and who spurns the deceptive hand-bill, and the cooked accounts, and the fictitious capital—both the enormous dishonesties and the little lies of trade; all who hold to the truth when friends shrink away from their side, and the air is dark, and the heavens rattle with the roar of the storm—all these have gone quietly aside into some Jerusalem of God's adoption, and have tarried until they have been endowed with power from on high—the spirit of power, power in rebuke, power in perseverance, power in consistent living, power in the allegiance of a holy life, power in the diverse paths of Christian witness-bearing.

THE BRAVE CONFESSOR

Oh, I sometimes long for that race of Hebrew prophets back again!—strong-souled, loyal men, who feared God so much that they had no room for any other fear whatever. They would not have been ashamed of Jesus. They would have gone without the camp, if necessary, bearing His reproach, and the Church filled with such witnesses, would have gone forth to the conquest of the world.

To my idea, what is meant by the apostle by the spirit of power is not complete yet, nor can it be without the introduction of another element, which our old fathers used to call

UNCTION

—the communion with the Holy Ghost, the indwelling of the Holy Ghost, making the man and the truth alike instrumentalities of power, and it is just this upon which we have to depend for the conversion of the world to Christ.

This mysterious, subtle power is not talent, for the unlettered frequently wield it. It is not scholarship, for it has waited upon men who have been guiltless of all science except the science of saving souls. It is not eloquence, for it has come forth from lips that have stammered out their painful words, and whose style has broken hopelessly loose from the trammels of every classical model.

It is not the exclusive heirloom of the ministerial office. It is not the treasured possession either of poverty or of riches. I will tell you what it is; it is the Lord's secret that He whispers in the ears of those who reverently fear Him. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him, and He will show them His covenant."

The spirit of power! He conferred it upon Christianity in the first age of its promulgation, and more wonderful than all physical conquest was its rapid spread in the teeth of barbaric brutality, the Stoic eloquence of Greek philosophy, the overbearing rites of Isis, the magnificent paganism of Rome. Then the spirit of power cleaved its onward way. God preserved it in the Church during those dreary middle ages, when, although crusted over with selfishness and sin, enough of life remained to preserve and to transmit the truth, and when underneath the crust there smouldered the hidden fire which burst out afterward into the Reformation.

The spirit of power! He conferred it upon our fathers of the last century, and they lighted that has never gone out until this day.

THE CANDLE OF LIVING GODLINESS

The spirit of power! He bestows it in copious supply upon all who seek it yet, and wherever it comes error is abashed at its presence, and wrong-doing falls before the lightning of its eye, and the mountains flow down at the sight of it, and the feeblest believer under its inspiration rises into the strength of David; and David, purified from all sources of disaster, becomes valiant as the angel in his song.

The spirit of power! God has given to us the spirit of power: where should we look for it else? From whom should we expect it, but from Him—from Him whom giving doth not impoverish—from Him whom withholding doth not enrich? All who have exerted this power, all who have been benefited by this power, the Lazaruses who have been brought again to life by it, and in whose face the life is shadowed with a new and hallowed inspiration, the apostles and the prophets who have been commissioned to resuscitate the dead, and to whom the wondering multitude would fain have offered worship and sacrifice, are the first to rebuke them in tones of indignant denial.

Costlier than all price is the free gift of God. Richer than the wealth of California can buy, it is without money and without price; and as the right-hearted only are partakers of it, others are excluded, lest there should be any like Simon Magus, who would fain have purchased this gift of God with money. God hath given to us the spirit of power.

Brethren, is it true? Is it a romance, or is it true? Do you believe it? Is it wrought into your spirits as a conviction that there is somewhere or other this spirit of power that God has made ready to bestow upon you? What! power to restore my Lord to His dominion—power to dethrone the usurper who reigns over so many fair hearts, to leave an embalming influence behind me—power to present myself at last in the fulness of a fulfilled mission, with troops of children whom I have been instrumental in winning for the Master—"Here am I, Lord, and the children whou Thou hast given me"—power like this all reserved, laid up in God's treasury for me, and I, the feeble, foolish, erring thing, full of wickedness and sin! Brethren, there is enough in the thought to drive us to our knees in a pertinacious besieging of the throne of grace such as we have never known before.

God wonders, I tell you, why their power is suffered to lie idle in His hands. It is your treasure if you choose to take it, and, if it were possible to condense into one brief word the passionate want of the churches, in this age of multiplied organizations and multiplied movements, that one word is power. "God has given us the spirit of power."

(To be concluded.)

Healed by Faith.—The Rev. B. Lounsbury, of Albany, New York, writes: "I am a minister of the Gospel; had overworked my brain and nervous system, and as a result was unable to fix my attention upon any subject long at a time, or to endure much labor. My attention was called by Robert Boocock, M.D., of Coxsackie, Greene Co., N. Y., to 'Faith Cures' as performed through Charles Cullis, of Boston.

"At once I associated in my mind these cures with our Lord and Saviour's commission as recorded in the last of the Gospel by Mark, where he is recorded as saying that those who believe on Him shall, together with other things, 'lay their hands on the sick and they shall recover.' Also with the Scripture, 'Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord. And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him.'

"I believed this promise, saw no reason why it should be limited in its application and effects to any one locality, and concluded to prove it. I asked Dr. Boocock, who also is an ordained minister of the Gospel, if he had faith to pray over me and anoint me with oil in the name of the Lord. Upon his replying in the affirmative, I asked him to do them, which he did. I felt myself at once cured; the symptoms of disease all ceased; I felt my strength return, and have experienced it increasing daily since. Through not working my body much for years my muscles were small and soft. I commenced doing work on a farm, was able to work from light until dark each week-day, and now my muscles have grown hard and firm."

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

Julia "Made a Lady."

(Concluded from page 319.)

CHARLES CLIFFORD muttered an oath or two when he found, on coming down to a late breakfast on the day that Mr. Britton removed his daughter from the grange, that Jenny's pretty face was gone, and none but his mother's was left to meet him at his table. He made a call at the vicarage during the day, but saw only Mrs. Britton, who told him, with a beating heart, and in her meekest voice, that Jenny was going away from home, as a governess. "She'll be a confoundedly nice governess," said Charles, but that was all.

There was a vague plan, half formed in Charles Clifford's mind, that he would never marry, and that upon his death the estate should revert to Ernest or Ernest's heirs. He knew perfectly well that his step-brother had yielded obedience to a higher rule of right than any he himself felt. An uneasy love and respect for Ernest was born of this conviction ; and though he could not bring himself to make any compensation to him by giving up even a small portion of his hereditary possessions, he took pleasure in the idea of enjoying his life to the utmost, and of bequeathing any thing that might be left at his death to his half-brother's family.

Charles also felt a very distinct dislike to the responsibilities and restraints of marriage. He had led a free and wandering life, and was already older in many ways than Ernest. It had never been his lot to come across any marriage that had worn a smiling aspect in his eyes ; and he had an unconquerable dread of linking his fate either with a vixen or a simpleton, whose claims would very much interfere with his own liberty and gayety. "A short life and a merry one," was his motto, delivered boastfully at the dinner-table, to his comrades.

But of all this Mrs. Britton was necessarily ignorant ; and she could not quite forego her hope of seeing Jenny the mistress of Clifford. Never was fond mother more difficult about a situation for a daughter. Nothing pleased her. Even the wife of the rural dean was baffled, and almost offended ; as much offended, indeed, as one clergyman's wife could be with the wife of the vicar of the next parish.

Mr. Britton could not understand how his efforts to remove Jenny to a distant home were frustrated. Mrs. Britton remained the meekest and humblest of women ; and the objections she raised to every place that was open to Jenny were so plausible he could not gainsay them. He did not like Jenny staying in Clifford, but he could not get her out of it. Even when Ernest urged that she would come and spend the winter with Rose, who sadly needed a companion, the welcome door was closed in Mr. Britton's face.

"You should recollect, my dear," said Mrs. Britton, in the severest tone she had ever used to him, "that there is no elderly lady like Mrs. Clifford living in the house ; and your friend Ernest Clifford is quite as likely to marry as Charles. He is little over forty, and a most attractive man. I really cannot consent to send Jenny there for several months."

"Louisa," he said reproachfully, "Jenny is quite a child ; not two years older than Rose."

"She does not think of him as an old man, I can tell you," she replied. "I ought to have kept her more at home than I did, but she was under my own eye, besides Mrs. Clifford being at the Grange. No, my dear, if you would like Ernest Clifford for a son-in-law, send her there ; I have no power to prevent it, but she shall never go with my sanction. You may talk to her yourself if you please."

Mr. Britton felt quite miserable, and exceedingly perplexed. He could not fix the idea in his mind of his old friend becoming his son-in-law. Speaking to Jenny only made the matter worse, for she blushed and stammered, and said she would do what he chose ; the poor girl having been made uncomfortable about Rose's father. He was forced into declining the invitation ; and Rose was doomed to solitude.

But Mrs. Britton was not the only person whose eye was upon the coveted position of mistress of Clifford Grange. Julia Rush, who saw him frequently at Rockwood, found food for her secret hopes in Charles' gay carelessness and familiarity. There had been a close intimacy between him as a boy, and Squire Symons, in spite of the difference in their age ; and this intimacy was renewed on a more equal footing.

Thanks to Julia Rush and her supremacy, Squire Symons was in better health than he had been for several years ; and few days passed in which Charles did not visit Rockwood or Squire Symons was not seen at Clifford. The boat, in which Ernest and Rose had so often run along under the cliff to Rockwood, was still constantly sailing to and fro ; and the path along the edge of the cliff was as frequently trodden. Ruth felt the change more keenly than if all intercourse between the houses had ceased.

Julia had been making the most of her opportunities of studying the customs and manners of gentlefolks. She had Ruth as a model ; and though she felt the full difficulty of her task, confidence was usually stronger than despair. Charles took inexhaustible pleasure in Julia and her airs and graces. She was always "good fun," he said to himself ; and he paid her a good deal of attention, in which she failed to perceive the tone of mockery. He had not forgotten the faithfulness with which she had watched for his return ; and he allowed her to believe that it was somehow due to her worthless scraps of paper that he had come into his inheritance. It was November—the same November that was so foggy and full of gloom for Rose. Here the days, short as they were, were warm and sunny.

It was a month of quiet calm and rest, as if the winter's sleep were stealing on silently and softly to take earth and sky into its embrace. Charles Clifford himself was not altogether insensible to the profound peace of this tranquil season, as he was crossing the cliff to Rockwood. More than once he stood quite still, gazing absently across the sunny waters, not thinking, but vaguely wishing himself a better man. He had not learned that it was to make him so the Son of God came down from heaven.

He had been standing thus for a minute or two, watching the progress of a three-masted ship in full sail, with her white canvas reflected on the water, when he was startled by the sound of Julia Rush's voice close beside him.

"Good-morning, Mr. Clifford," she said, with an affected smile.

"Good-morning, Miss Rush," he answered, taking off his hat mockingly.

"Ah ! now you're makin' fun of me, Master Charlie," she said, blushing crimson ; "I know you think I can never make a lady of myself ; but I'm a better woman than most of 'em. They're a pack of idle, selfish, good-for-nothing hussies, except Miss Ruth ; fit for nothin' that I know of."

"So they are, Julia," he assented good-humoredly.

"I know folks that think me quite good enough to be a lady," she continued, "those that know a right good woman when they see one. There are folks that are always tellin' me I'm handsome and clever, and could hold up my head with the best. Do you think that's true, Master Charlie?"

"Quite true, Julia," he said ; "it's truth, when truth is as sober as a judge. I've always been of that opinion myself."

A sudden pallor spread over Julia's brown and red face, and her brilliant black eyes looked at him through tears.

"Oh, Master Charlie !" she cried, "do you really think so? I've been tryin' to make myself a lady, for your sake. I've loved you all these years, and kept faithful to you, and never let any man court me nor kiss me—no, not once. It isn't because you are the master of Clifford. If you was only a poor workin' man, I'd rather wash your clothes, and cook your victuals, and carry your dinner to the field, tl marry the richest man in Dartford ; I would certain. Oh ! do believe me, Master Char And it's me that helped you to get your rig and made you what you are ; and I'm tryin' very best to be a lady like Miss Ruth, that think so much of ; and I don't eat as much want, no more than she eats, and I've left drinkin' beer, and I walk quiet and soft ; it's all for your sake, Charlie !"

The mocking smile certainly passed a from Charles's face, but it changed merely an expression of blank amazement. "Ind Julia, this is folly," he cried ; "such an never entered my head. Come, come ; giv this silly notion of being a lady ; it only m you uncomfortable and ridiculous. You a handsome, fine young woman, and be con with that. You may marry very well ye you don't look too high."

"I suppose you're too high?" stamm
Julia, half angrily and half imploringly.

"Much too high, my good girl," he answe not unkindly. "I'm not a marrying man, you'll never see me bringing a new mistres Clifford Grange. Women are very pretty c ures in their places, and I'm fond of se them when they are as handsome as you I've no mind to marry. There's only woman I ever saw that I would marry, and would no more look at me than an angel heaven. I'll tell you who she is, Julia, and you'll know there's no chance for me—no waited a hundred years. It's Ruth Symon

"Miss Ruth !" exclaimed Julia.

"Yes," he replied, looking down at R wood, which lay below them, with a disc late smile ; "I might be a good man y Ruth would take me in hand. You can k secret, I know, and you will keep that fo
But you get spliced as soon as you can,
There's no chance of having me."

"That's what I mean to do," she answ wiping her eyes. "I'd sooner wed you tha grandest of 'em all ; but if you won't mak a lady, somebody else will. You'll hear weddin' very soon, Mr. Clifford."

She dropped him a rustic curtsey, hal antly, and tossed her head as she turne back upon him, and walked away in a ver nified and ladylike manner, as she flattere self. Charles watched her till she was sight, and then he laughed aloud, till the and seagulls on the cliffs around flew out ing and screaming with a clamor that dr his laughter.

Julia was not without a definite plan i of disappointment with Charles. She him ; but if her love was lost, why shou ambition be ungratified too ? She hurrie to Rockwood, and entered Squire Symo ting-room, with the firm, vigorous tread to her. He looked up at her with admi mingled with a little fear.

"I'm come to give you notice ; I must l she said abruptly.

"Then what is to become of me?" he in a peevish tone. "Do you want me killed by bad nursing?"

"No ; but I'm goin' to leave you answered. "There's Miss Ruth."

"My daughter is not strong enoug said. "Come, Julia, you know I cann with you. What can I do to keep you?"

"Well, it's not your fault, and it's fault," replied Julia, casting her eyes ground ; "but folks are beginnin' to talk say you ought to have an old woman you."

Squire Symons sat silent, and Julia st far from him, crying. It was not the fir that the idea of securing Julia by marry occurred to him, and he was not alt averse to it. But there was Ruth ! How she feel if he made Julia mistress ! He w of Julia as his nurse ; but as a gentle could not help dwelling a little upon grace and ridicule he would bring upon by marrying his servant. Yet if she lef as much the same as having his death-warrant gned and sealed. He had learned to lean on her more than he did on Ruth. She uld allow him to run a certain length in his vorite vice, while Ruth tried to prevent him king a single step. Julia could restrain him om fatal excesses, by indulging him a little, t Ruth could not restrain him at all.

"It would be the death of me for you to go," said.

"Nobody can nurse you like me," she swered; "but I've my name and character to k to; it's all I've got. I must go."

Julia, would any thing prevail upon you to y with me?" he asked, trembling and shiver-i.

"If you'd make a lady of me," she suggested, ling that she ventured all on this one chance.

It's only my daughter I'm thinking of," he wered querulously. "I'd marry you to-mor-r, but for her."

It shouldn't make no difference to Miss h," she replied, with repressed eagerness; m very fond of her, and there should be ery thing the same. If you'll make me a lady, be true and kind to you, and nurse you bet-than ever I nursed you before; but if not, I t go. Choose for yourself."

You can't go, Julia," he said, "and there's nd of it."

ut the end of it, so far as Julia's ambition concerned, did not come till she was driv-from Dartford to Rockwood as Mrs. Symons few weeks later.

(To be Continued.)

GETHSEMANE.

S. Lesson for May 30.—Matt. 26 : 36–50. Golden Text, verse 39. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

is holy and solemn ground that we tread as we draw nigh to behold those suffer-of our Lord which no human eye looked . The battle of the cross was first fought won in Gethsemane. Let us tread softly, h! may we learn something of what we owe im Who for our sakes "became obedient death, even the death of the cross" (Phil. : Our beloved Lord said (Luke 12 : 50), "I a baptism to be baptized with, and how am itened until it be accomplished." Surely baptism of blood in Gethsemane was that ich He referred.

blessed Lord's whole life was one offering nself. "Wherefore when He cometh into the He saith, Sacrifice and offering Thou st not, but a body hast Thou prepared Me. rnt-offerings and sacrifices for sin Thou ad no pleasure: then said I, Lo I come (in lume of the book it is written of Me) to y will, O God." He was the living sacri-ho was not only to pour out His life once l, but in every moment, and by every . He was to be a living Renunciator of lf, choosing the will of His Father instead own at every point. In all the humbling stances of His birth and early youth, enunciation for the Son of God!

this complete consecration of our beloved ntered into every tiny detail of His life. o could multiply the loaves among the de would not turn stones into bread to His own hunger, while He was proving man shall not live by bread alone, but by word which proceedeth out of the mouth " (Matt. 4 : 4). He of whom it was said r man speak like this man" (John 7 : 46), o could say "the words that I speak ou, they are spirit and they are life" : 63), yet spoke none of these words of without His Father's direction: "the hat I speak unto you I speak not of My-t the Father that dwelleth in Me, He he works" (John 14 : 10); He with whom ay is as a thousand years, and a thousand one day" (2 Pet. 3 : 8), would not raise from the grave until the hour of His s choice was come; nor would He even e water into wine at the marriage supper in Cana of Galilee until His hour was come (John 2 : 4). He said to His brethren (John 7 : 6), "My time is not yet come: but your time is alway ready." All through His holy and blessed life we see the renouncement in great things and little, and He had all throughout the consciousness of His Father's smile.

But in Gethsemane He must pass through an experience which from all eternity He had never known; He must face the fact that in taking our place upon the cross the real anger of His Father against sin most fall on Him, and He must enter into the awful death of God's displeasure. And among all those for whom He would bear this unspeakable agony there was none who could understand or sympathize with Him. Leaving eight of the disciples, He took with Him "Peter and the two sons of Zebedee." We know that deep grief seeks to hide itself; it cannot endure the presence of many. "He began to be sorrowful and very heavy. Then saith He unto them, My soul is exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death; tarry ye here and watch with Me." What an opportunity to have! what an opportunity to lose!

"And He went a little farther"—He must be alone—"and fell on His face and prayed, saying, O My Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from Me, nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt." In Heb. 5 : 7, 8 we read of our beloved Lord, "Who in the days of His flesh, when He had offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, unto Him that was able to save Him from death, and was heard in that He feared, yet learned He obedience through the things which He suffered." And this seems to correspond with Luke 22 : 42: "Father, if Thou be willing to remove [marginal rendering] this cup from Me; nevertheless, not My will, but Thine be done."

Can it be that the Father was willing, that He who asked this only petition on His own behalf in all His life of suffering was heard, and nevertheless even when the answer was in His hands, He laid it back in His Father's hands and let Him choose for Him? This is self-renouncement, this is our power and our example. By this holy will of Jesus a lifelong offering, you and I, dear reader are sanctified to God "through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all" (Heb. 10 : 10). Had there been one flaw in the offering of His will, no renunciation of our will could have availed us for an instant. God must have perfection. And being made perfect, our precious Lord "became the Author of eternal salvation unto all them who obey Him" (Heb 5 : 9), i.e., who do His will as He did His Father's will.

"And He cometh unto the disciples and findeth them asleep." At the moment of Jesus' birth the population of Bethlehem was asleep; only a few shepherds were awake; when Jesus rose from the dead, Jerusalem was wrapped in sleep, and now at the time of His great agony the disciples, the nearest to His heart, were sleeping. Who enters into the sufferings of our Lord? He who "knew no sin" (2 Cor. 5 : 21), and yet was identified with every sin of every sinner. We who were born in sin, and who have known sin during our whole life, can little conceive what must have been the horror, to Him who was all purity, of the loathsome atmosphere which He was entering. He must appropriate all the unholy motives and be the Representative of all the ignoble self-love which led to sin in every child of Adam. As fully as we now appropriate His pure and holy life, so fully must He in that awful hour make our unclean life His. Is it a wonder that He "resisted unto blood"? (Heb. 12 : 4.) Is it a wonder that He prayed "Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from Me"?

The Word of God declared to Adam regarding the forbidden fruit (Gen. 2 : 17), "in the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die:" the principle of death is bound to departure from God. There is life for body and soul in obedience to the Word of God (Deut. 30 : 6 20; 32 : 46, 47, etc.). In the Lord Jesus there was no principle of death; He could not have died as man except He had borne our sins, and as death which is brought forth by sin accomplished (James 1 : 15, Gr.) drew nigh unto Him, and cast its unnatural shadow upon Him first in the garden, no wonder that He shrunk from it with such inexpressible sorrow. Let [illegible] not forget that if faith in Christ, the ide[illegible]ing of ourselves with Him, brings us into a new world of love and light, power and purity, it is because first our sins brought our Saviour into a world new to Him, of degradation and bitterness.

After the first fearful conflict, when He found the disciples asleep, He spoke to Peter, "Simon, sleepest thou? Couldst not thou watch one hour?" (Mark 14 : 37.) It was Peter who had said (Luke 22 : 33), "Lord, I am ready to go with Thee both into prison and to death;" and now an hour later he cannot even keep awake while the moments are passing in which the most stupendous struggle is taking place. So much for Peter, so much for you and me. But He who was under such a weight of anguish had still an excuse for His sleeping disciples: "Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation: the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." Here is love, the tenderest, the most delicate; while Himself in the furnace, He was occupied with others. Lord, make us like Thee.

"He went away again the second time, and prayed, saying, O My Father, if this cup may not pass away from Me except I drink it, Thy will be done. And he came and found them asleep again: for their eyes were heavy. And He left them," this time in silence, "and went away again, and prayed the third time, saying the same words." No bitterness, no reproach against these disciples: now after the third time, He cometh to them and said, "Sleep on now, and take your rest." Yes, rest for the sons of men was secured at an awful price. "Behold," He continues, "the hour is at hand, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners."

"And while He yet spake, lo, Judas, one of the twelve, came, and with him a great multitude, with swords and staves, from the chief priests and elders of the people." Could it be that he who was one of the chosen twelve, to whom Jesus had given "power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases," and sent "to preach the kingdom of God and to heal the sick" (Luke 9 : 1, 2); and who, in common with the other eleven, had "preached that men should repent" and had cast out many devils and anointed with oil many that were sick and healed them" (Mark 6 : 12, 13)—could it be that this Judas should betray Him? Oh what a lesson this teaches us! Neither knowledge nor gifts, nor even communion with the Lord, can save us from the gravest sins while we have a divided heart and seek any thing for our own selves. Judas may have thought, He who can do so many miracles can surely save Himself from the hands of these men, and I may as well profit by the chief priest's money: but he was not free to seek his own, he belonged to another; and so do we.

"Now he that betrayed Him gave them a sign, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is He; hold him fast. And forthwith came he to Jesus, and said, Hail, Master; and kissed Him. And Jesus said unto him, Friend, wherefore art thou come?" Not in irony, but from a heart which hath nothing against His betrayer, Jesus said "Friend." Many are against Him, but He is against no man, until He comes again "to take vengeance upon those that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Thess. 1 : 8). "Wherefore art thou come?" Must it be an apostle who betrays Jesus? Even so. And now also Jesus is wounded in the house of His friends (Zech. 13 : 6); for every unchristlike word and action is a betrayal of His cause, betraying Him into the hands of sinners. It is giving the world a ground for saying that the work of Jesus is a failure, and that Christianity is only one among many opinions of which every man has a right to hold or to reject what he will.

FOREIGN TOPICS.

Mr. Gladstone has appointed as Viceroy of India the Marquis of Ripon, who a few years ago joined the Roman Catholic Church. On this subject the London Rock very pertinently obser[illegible] "The last act of Lord Beaconsfield's Government was the appointment of a thoroughgoing Protestant, Canon Ryle, to the Bishopric of Liverpool. The first act of Mr. Gladstone's Government is to appoint a thoroughgoing Roman Catholic pervert to be Viceroy of India. Considering that our sovereign, by the law of the land, must be a Protestant, it does seem extraordinary that her majesty's representative in India should be a Roman Catholic—more Romish than the Romanists themselves, as all perverts from Protestantism are. We have come to a crisis at last, and what may be in store for this nation in the not remote future it is not difficult to foresee. The old landmarks, one by one, are being taken down." Another indiscreet act is that the Earl of Kenmare, who is a Roman Catholic, is appointed Lord Chamberlain, and will thus control the appointment of most of the attendants in the queen's household. How many Jesuits in disguise will consequently be placed about her majesty it is impossible to say.

Three Events During the Past Week have diminished the prestige of the British Government. The apology of Mr. Gladstone to the Austrian Government for the remarks made prior to his appointment, which apology is said by German and French journals to be the most abject ever wrung from the chief of a great nation. Secondly, Mr. Fawcett, the Postmaster-General, made a charge against the late government, he had to retract the next day; and, thirdly, Sir W. V. Harcourt, who accepted the post of Secretary for Home Affairs, has lost his seat in Parliament. There is, however, no doubt that the new government, despite these matters, is very popular in the country.

The Irish Famine has been Brought Formally under the attention of the new British administration by a deputation from the Dublin Mansion House Relief Committee, which waited on Mr. Forster, Chief Secretary for Ireland. The Lord Mayor said the distress was not likely to be mitigated before the end of July, and as the committee had no reason to hope that their resources would suffice until that time, they left the matter in the hands of the government. Mr. Gray read telegrams from Clifden, Galway County, stating that if immediate relief were not given, people would die by the score. Mr. Forster replied that the government fully recognized the extent of the distress, and added: "We are doing our utmost to alleviate it by means of loans to landlords."

The French Jesuits are preparing a Refuge in England. Sayes Court, near Deptford, England, the seat of that Evelyn family to which the celebrated writer of the "Diary" belonged, has been purchased by the French Jesuits, who intend to set up there an educational institution. Six members of the Jesuit order are guests of the Duke of Norfolk, whose invitation to them is said to have been unlimited. Six others are in the Scotch Highlands at Rothesay Castle, the guests of the Marquis of Bute. There is a report that two Jesuits have gone to Dublin with a view to inspecting certain properties for sale in Ireland, which may be adapted to their needs. About forty members desire to make their home in that country. A considerable number have already taken up a residence in the Channel Islands.

The British Agricultural Outlook.—Mr. James Caird, who is an eminent authority on agricultural matters in a letter to the London Times says: "Nothing like the present depression in the agricultural interest has been since the repeal of the corn laws. In nine years there have been seven defective wheat harvests, the last culminating in intensity, and including in its grasp a portion of the animal in addition to the other produce of the land. In England, where the bulk of the wheat crop is grown, there has been lost in these years a fourth more than a whole year's wheat crop—a loss to the wheat-growers of more than £30,000,000 sterling, with no compensation in higher prices." He suggests, as the best mode of dealing with American competition, that farmers give their attention to the production of articles which will not bear long storage or carriage, such as milk, fresh butter, early meat, vegetables, hay, straw, potatoes, and the sugar beet, as the only mean of keeping them from ruin.

The Injuries the Princess Louise, the Royal wife of the Governor-General of Canada, sustained when her sleigh was overturned on February 15th have turned out to be more serious than was at first supposed. It will be remembered that her ear was severely cut and bruised; it now appears that it must have been injured internally, for although the external wound has healed, the slightest noise or sudden sound causes her to suffer acute pain, which is succeeded by inflammation. She will shortly return to England for surgical treatment.

The Cheapest New Testament yet Produced is one by Mr. Elliot Stock, an English publisher, who has just issued a pocket English Testament, with copious notes, references, and introductions, three maps, and twenty-four illustrations, for one penny (two cents). The object of the issue of the Sacred Book at this exceptionally low price is to give Christian people the opportunity of circulating the Word of God throughout the length and breadth of the land, at the slightest possible cost.

The Conversion of Charles Reade, the Popular novelist and dramatic author, whose works have been for many years extensively read on both sides the Atlantic, was, when first reported, generally received with incredulity. We notice now with sincere pleasure that Dr. R. L. Stanton, in a communication to the Independent, states that he received lately from the lips of Mr. Reade's pastor an account of the change of heart which the talented author has evidently undergone.

For many years Mr. Reade professed himself a rationalist, and his works show that he had not received the enlightenment of the Holy Spirit. The death of an intimate friend, upon whom Mr. Reade was conscious that he had exercised a baleful influence, first produced uneasiness in his heart, which has by the blessing of God led to his giving himself to the Saviour. The Congregationalist pastor to whom Mr. Reade went for counsel in his anxiety and distress, describes his present disposition as childlike and humble, sincerely seeking Christian knowledge and opportunities for doing Christian work. Those who have read Mr. Reade's works will appreciate the change that has passed over the writer (2 Cor. 5:17).

Memorial to Prince Louis Napoleon.—By command of Queen Victoria, a stone cross has been erected on the spot where Prince Louis Napoleon lost his life. The cross bears the following inscription: "This cross is erected by Queen Victoria in affectionate remembrance of Prince Napoleon Eugene Louis Joseph, Prince Imperial, to mark the spot where, while assisting in a reconnaissance with the British troops, on the 1st June, 1879, he was attacked by a party of Zulus, and fell with his face to the foe." A statue of the Prince will also be placed in Westminster Abbey.

A Clergyman was Reproved by a Bride during the marriage ceremony recently. The Princess Pauline of Würtemberg, feeling a sincere affection for an eminent physician, has married him in defiance of the prejudices of her family. He had won her regard in the first instance by his unremitting attentions to her sick father, to whom she was devotedly attached. At her marriage the clergyman, with a singular lack of propriety, reminded the bridegroom that in marrying him the royal bride had surrendered a good deal that was esteemed grand and valuable in life. When the bride's turn came to make the marriage response she added to the word "yes" the following words in a quiet tone: "I declare I give up nothing that can at all be val in comparison to the happiness awaiting and I consider my lot a most enviable one."

The royal bride probably spoke, in the ful of her heart at the slight given to one she lo somewhat hastily and too confidently of the tainty of the happiness awaiting her.
future is in the hands of God, and may be o happiness or of misery; but if she and the band of her choice have given their hearts to they will in all the vicissitudes of life hav joy of knowing "that all things work tog for good to them that love God" (Rom. 8 This joy is offered to all, of whatever stati society.

Two Little Irish Boys Walked Two Hu miles recently to see if "the good Duch Marlborough" would give their father pounds to help him to pay his rent. They respectively twelve and fourteen years ol had undertaken that long journey, asking way as they went, to prevent their father ejected from his cottage. The Duchess p them for their filial affection, and promis send their father the money. They were taken to the clothes-room, and their ta garments changed for a new suit of twee Having been regaled with a substantial they were brought before the ladies of the mittee, who rewarded the brave adventure a pocketful of silver. Next morning the their first ride in a train, accomplishing hours a distance that took them twe days to walk. On the same day the as secretary to the relief fund wrote to the priest, inclosing a post-office order f pounds, payable to the father of the boys.

A Blind Man used to Sit in one of the streets and read from a Bible with raised to passers-by among whom the charita posed gave him money. On one occa lost his place, and while he was searchi his fingers for the place where he had bee ing, he kept repeating aloud the last wo he had read: "there is none other "none other name." A passer-by, who had been sadly troubled by certain fa trines, heard the words repeated ag again, and felt the message come ho heart there and then. He said, "N Jesus, and there I will cling." Thes were to him as life from the dead.

A Natural Electric Light shone on th of a missionary in Syria recently. Dr. J his latest letter from Beirut, describes which partially demolished a house w was staying. He had gone to Shmeir, o Lebanon, to administer the ordinanc Lord's Supper, and slept at the house of tian physician whose labors for the phy spiritual good of the people have been cessful in Syria. During the night a storm, which had been threatening all from which Dr. Jessup had been merci served as he crossed the mountain above the sea, burst in great fury ove lage, and partially unroofed the p house. His host told Dr. Jessup went out into the storm and "saw on t the lightning-rod a huge star of elect parently as large as a man's head, a mained several minutes unchanged." before, the party had been wondering villages as Shmeir would be lighted wit electric light. The doctor now remark have had the electric light introduced village, and without expense."

The Blue Ribbon Army Organizat the direction of Mr. and Mrs. William doing a great work in London. The in the Hoxton Music Hall have since mencement, in March, 1878, been at over 900,000 men and women, many have been rescued from lives of dissip

Over Two Hundred Sermons were in London on April 18th on beha Church Temperance Society. On the evening a grand festival service w Westminster Abbey.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Single Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, MAY 27, 1880. 14th Year. No. 22–New Series.

ONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

RTRAIT OF CAPTAIN STIRLING, OF THE MISSING BRITISH TRAINING-SHIP ATALANTA, with Sketch of his Life.
CTURE AND DESCRIPTION OF THE ATALANTA.
E DESPOTISM OF POLITICS. A
New Sermon by Dr. Talmage.
D CASSIDY AND THE EAGLE'S
EST, by Henry Martin.
nie Saved by a Text in a Coal-Box.
RTRAIT OF MRS. FRASER AND KETCH OF HER LIFE.
RENT EVENTS: The Convenons — A Judge's Experience — A eplorable Accident — A Call to ayer—The Dangers of Immigrants n Interesting Telegram, etc.

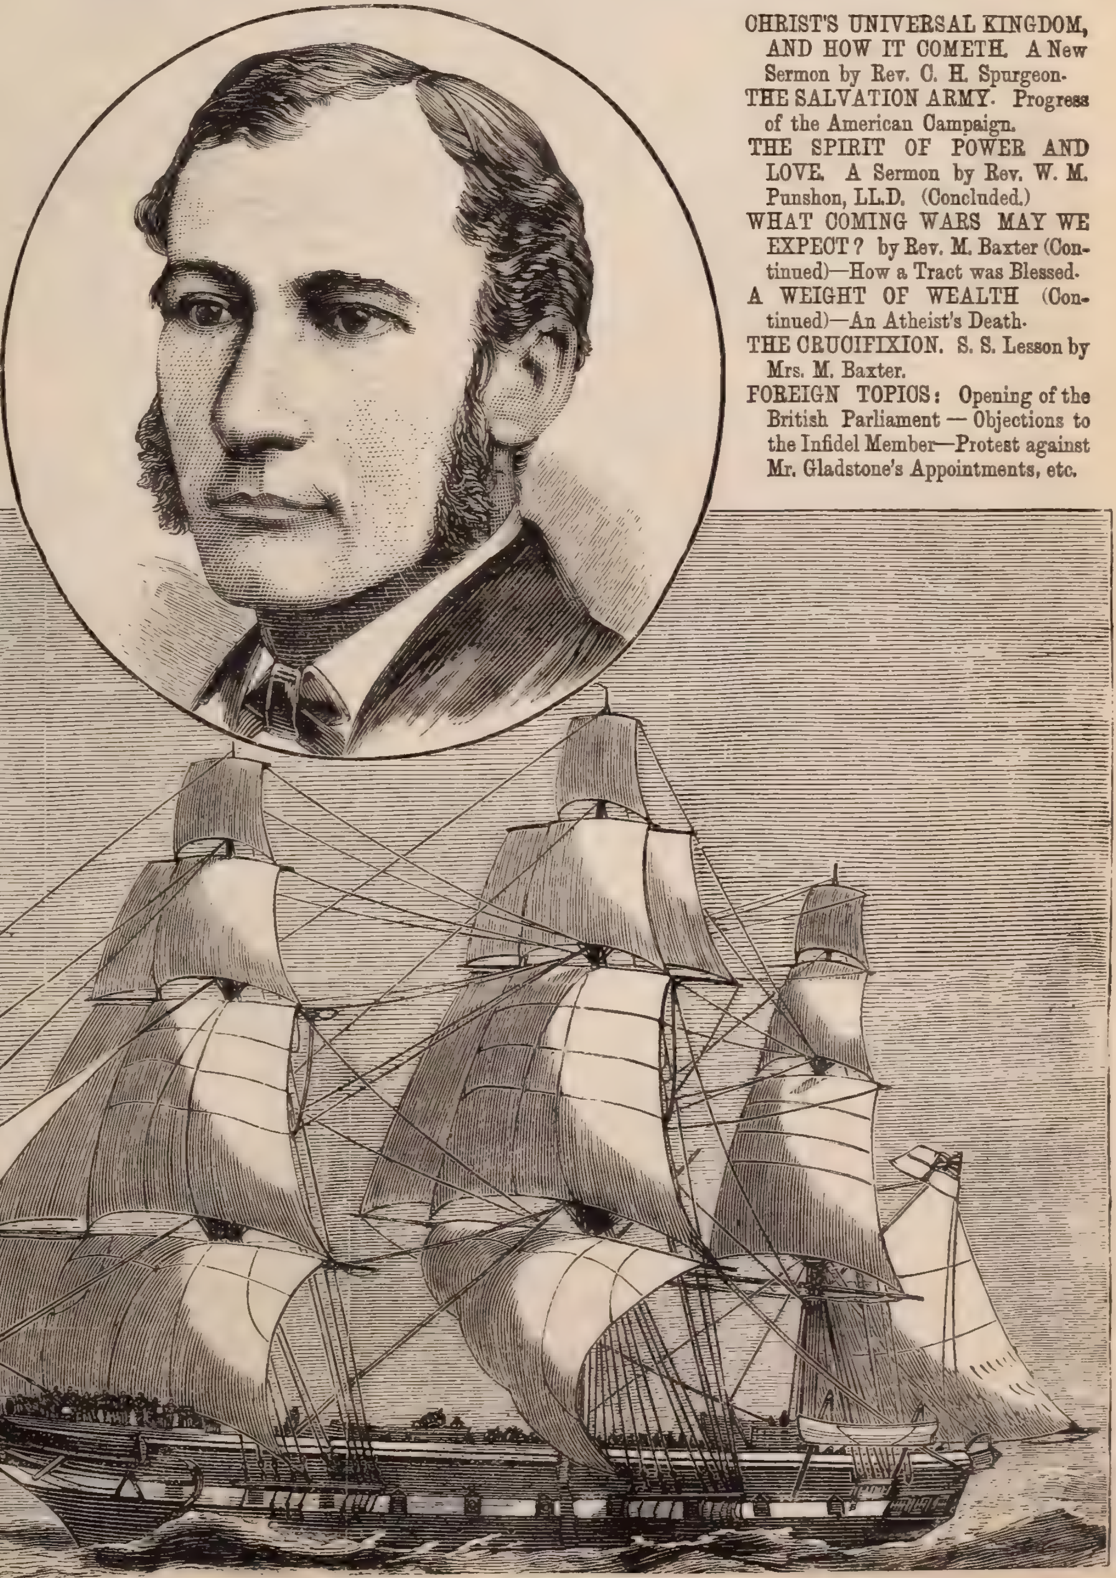
CHRIST'S UNIVERSAL KINGDOM, AND HOW IT COMETH. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
THE SALVATION ARMY. Progress of the American Campaign.
THE SPIRIT OF POWER AND LOVE. A Sermon by Rev. W. M. Punshon, LL.D. (Concluded.)
WHAT COMING WARS MAY WE EXPECT? by Rev. M. Baxter (Continued)—How a Tract was Blessed.
A WEIGHT OF WEALTH (Continued)—An Atheist's Death.
THE CRUCIFIXION. S. S. Lesson by Mrs. M. Baxter.
FOREIGN TOPICS: Opening of the British Parliament — Objections to the Infidel Member—Protest against Mr. Gladstone's Appointments, etc.



Captain FRANCIS STIRLING, and the Missing British Training Ship Atalanta.

CAPTAIN FRANCIS STIRLING, R.N.,

Commander of the Atalanta.

Naval Cadetship—Becomes Midshipman—Distinguishes himself in the Crimean War—Is Appointed Mate—Takes Part in the China War—Obtains a Lieutenancy—His Ship Destroyed by Fire—Is Made Commander, and Returns to China—Revolt of Malays—Gazetted as Captain—His Interest in the Welfare of his Crew—His most Highly-prized Ornaments.

THIS gallant British officer, about whose safety, together with that of his crew of well-trained officers and young seamen, much anxiety has been experienced by the public generally for many weeks, was born at Bedhampton, near Portsmouth, on April 1st, 1839. He had not reached his fourteenth year when, in March, 1852, he entered his sovereign's service as a naval cadet; and after a brief theoretical and technical training in the Portsmouth Dockyard College, he went to sea in the Blenheim, in which vessel he served in the English Channel, under Capt. Henderson, until May, 1853.

Having honorably terminated the period of his cadetship, he attained the status of midshipman in the Highflyer, under the late Capt. John Moore, C.B., and distinguished himself in the Black Sea throughout the war between Great Britain and Russia, especially at the bombardment of Sebastopol, on the 17th of October, 1854, in the capture and occupation of Kertch, in the same campaign, and all the operations on the coast of Circassia.

In July, 1856, he was transferred to the Sans Pareil, under the command of Capt. Astley Cooper Key, C.B., and served as midshipman and mate under that humane and Christian commander with much distinction. During the China war of 1857–8 young Stirling displayed intrepid heroism in the operations of the Naval Brigade, in the assault, capture, and occupation of Canton, for which he received a medal with clasp, and was nominated for promotion. The capture of Canton will be ever memorable, not only for the decisive character of the conquest which was achieved by British valor, but also for the pre-eminent humanity of the victors toward the vanquished.

On the 28th of June, 1859, he obtained a lieutenancy, and was immediately appointed to the Mars, serving throughout her commission under Captain, now Admiral, J. H. Strange on the Mediterranean Station until the early part of 1863. After a year's course of study in the gunnery ship Excellent, Lieut. Stirling was appointed, 24th of March, 1864, to the Bombay, the flagship of the present commander-in-chief at Devonport (Admiral Elliott), and was acting in the capacity of second lieutenant when she was destroyed by fire, off Monte Video, in December, 1864, and ninety of her crew perished by burning or drowning on that calamitous occasion.

In the ensuing March, Lieutenant Stirling was transferred as first lieutenant to the Narcissus, and remained in her during her subsequent commission under Captain J. C. Wilson, and on returning home, in 1869, he was appointed, on the 14th of September of that year, flag lieutenant at Portsmouth to his former friend and commander, Rear-Admiral Key. Three months afterward he was elevated to the rank of commander and appointed to the Invincible, in which responsible capacity, after some coastguard service in the river Humber, he returned, in 1874, to Hong Kong, China, where as sole commander of the gunboat Thistle he sustained his appointment.

Commander Stirling shortly afterward brought his ship to Singapore, and while cruising in the Straits of Malacca was called upon to take service against the Malays, who had defied the power of Great Britain. For his marked bravery with his Naval Brigade on shore during this rebellion he was often specially mentioned in despatches for "zeal and energy and distinguished service." As a well earned reward for personal merit, and the successful issue of his operations, Commander Stirling was specially promoted to the rank of captain on his return to England in March, 1876.

His distinguished career and recognized proficiency in seamanship pointed him out as pre-eminently qualified to assume the command of the training-ship which was to take the place of the Eurydice, which, as will be remembered, foundered off the Isle of Wight on Sunday afternoon, March 24th, 1878, and in which three hundred young sailors were drowned. He therefore commissioned the Juno, afterward renamed the Atalanta, on September 17th, 1878.

The ship had been for some years the housing hulk of the water police in Portsmouth Harbor, and on Captain Stirling's suggestion several alterations were made in her rig, and after a few trials, which by experts were pronounced quite satisfactory, he set sail in her for the West Indies, with nearly three hundred youthful seamen and a selected staff of officers. From this voyage the Atalanta has never returned.

Captain Stirling was one among the gradually growing number of commanding officers who, with strict and inflexible regard for all that the discipline of the service demands, are characterized by urbanity and generous consideration for their subordinates, and foster by their ungrudging encouragement every agency which exerts a moral or religious influence upon the crews with which they are intrusted. The time is nearly past when any of Queen Victoria's officers can be found inimical to any steps in this direction initiated by any other person than the ship's chaplain, or even view with a well-bred coolness the earnest work of that officer if he is a sincere lover of souls.

Not long since, dominated by an erroneous idea, the British War Office checked Major Malan in his loved work of soul-winning. It was presumed by the authorities that the discipline of the service would suffer, forgetting that in the case of a Christian soldier or sailor the most powerful motives exist to stimulate him to a conscientious discharge of duty which are absent elsewhere. In both services it has been proved that Christian men give less trouble than others to their officers, and never flinch from the perilous post of duty to which they are called.

As a Christian commander, while naturally concerned for the spiritual and eternal welfare of his numerous youthful crew, Captain Stirling was, according to the statement of one of the young men who sailed with him, equally solicitous for their temporal safety and material comfort. He says that in a terrible gale which they encountered on leaving the West Indies, and which lasted seven days, Captain Stirling was rarely off the deck, keeping a sharp watch on the instrument which measured the rolling of the ship, and manifesting the utmost anxiety for the crew.

Captain Stirling had three medals—the Crimean, with the Sebastopol clasp; the Turkish; and the China, with the Canton clasp; but the ornaments which he prized most highly were of a moral and spiritual character, among which may be enumerated "a meek and quiet spirit." Though he was as brave as a lion, his Christ-like grace and beauty shone forth conspicuously. His concern for the honor of his queen and country was only surpassed, as it was intensified, by his fealty to the Saviour.

THE MISSING SHIP ATALANTA.

Two years ago England was lamenting the loss of the unfortunate Eurydice in a sudden gale of wind off Dunnose, Isle of Wight, and now, after waiting wearily for weeks, her sister training-ship, the Atalanta, it is feared has also foundered with all on board. A few particulars of her at this juncture may prove both acceptable and interesting.

The Atalanta sailed from Portsmouth, England, for the West Indies on November 7th, 1879, six months ago, on a cruise of instruction under the able command of Captain Francis Stirling, a brief biography of whom precedes this article. She is classed as a fourth-rate corvette, of 958 tons, a training-ship for ordinary seamen, h been converted from the frigate Juno. Sh one of the well-known Vestal class, the bro and shortest ships of the frigate class that ever built.

The missing vessel was built at Pembrol 1844. She measures 131 feet long by 4c wide. After service as a man-of-war she used as a police hulk in Portsmouth harbor 1877, when the water-police went into barr and upon the foundering of the Eurydic was fitted as a training-ship for young sa After her first cruise to the West Indie armament was somewhat reduced, the defic of weight being made up by iron ballast. fore and main masts were reduced in lengt her other spars in proportion; and, afte second cruise, her rolling keels, which wer water-tight, were removed, and one was recalked.

On the 7th of November, 1879, as al mentioned, the Atalanta left Portsmouth, three hundred young seamen on board, fc West Indies, on her third cruise of instru with orders to return home about April 4th consequence of two cases of yellow-fever ring on board, Captain Stirling determin proceed at once to Bermuda, where he a on January 29th, and left on the 31st for land, the crew being then in good health, which date no intelligence has been re either of the vessel or her living freight. the > "Ships that sailed for summer isles,

> But never came to shore," of which Hervey sings, the story of the A ta's voyage is henceforth a blank. Having her to Bermuda and her departure fron port, there is no further record of he silence.

No tidings have arrived at Portsmou Devonport to alleviate the anxiety of dist friends and relatives; no wreckage has discovered in the wide expanse of the signals of distress were neither seen nor i conjecture is speechless; the telegraph ha tried to every available port, but no satisf answer has been received; the authorit sad and serious; the Admiralty has no hope; and meanwhile the precise fate Atalanta remains a mystery. But the trustworthy opinion now is, that she c grief shortly after leaving Bermuda, doubt is now entertained that she found the terrific gale of February 12th. Trul moves in a mysterious way His wonders form. Britannia boasts her rule over the but she oft finds them far too powerful puny arm to cope with. One alone, wh winds rage, and waves roll mountains hi say, "Peace, be still," with the assuran He will be obeyed.

It was at first hoped that the non-ar the ship was caused by Captain Stirling leaving Bermuda, deciding to prolong hi in accordance with the original orders. time having expired without any news vessel, commands were given for her m despatch vessel Salamis to proceed at on Gibraltar to the Azores, and make inqu each of the islands for any traces of t lanta. The ships of the Channel Squadr received orders on the 10th of April to from Gibraltar to the Azores, and cruis on the track from Bermuda. It was hop that the Bacchante, in which the Pr Wales' two sons were sailing homewa Bermuda, would have fallen in with the ship if she had been dismasted, and rende ance. But the Bacchante arrived brin tidings.

Painful enough was the story of the lo dice, that went down in the bitter snow sight of friends and England—at one proudly sailing upon the ruffled surface of and the next suddenly disappearing fr and carrying to death almost every soul o But there was at least a consolation, w fitful and fatal storm had passed away, i the mast-heads that too surely marked the sailors' graves in "the dark caves of ocean," and a pious office to perform in hauling the old hulk to the land which so truly mourned for her gallant crew. If it be true that her sister training-ship has been the victim of a similar casualty, there will be no comfort or satisfaction of the kind for those who eagerly anticipated her homeward journey, and were waiting the signal to welcome her. She has disappeared no one but Heaven knows where. The Admiralty authorities think she may have been dismasted in one of the severe storms which have of late so frequently swept across the Atlantic; but all is conjecture, and must remain so while the silence of the seas continues unbroken.

There is, indeed, something intensely impressive in the solemn silence that surrounds this lost vessel, as there is in the stupendous loneliness of a ship becalmed at sea, if her course be out of the ordinary tracks of commerce. Seldom, however, is it that ships do go in unknown depths away from all eyes, and with no requiem but the cry of passing sea-birds or the howling of the winds. There is usually some vessel on the horizon. The last despairing survivors find their way somehow or other across the interval of ocean; a broken boat, a spar, a sail, or some scrap of wreckage sooner or later discovers the dismal story. But up to the present there has been no voice or language to clear up the mystery of the missing Atalanta and her crew. The anxious relatives need all our sympathy and prayers.

A SOLEMN VOICE FROM THE DEEP.

The voyage of the missing ship will suggest a reference to the fact that we are all sailing upon a wide, deep sea, over which fierce blasts or wild Euroclydons are constantly sweeping. It is the sea of life, which at the moment of death is merged into the boundless ocean of eternity. Toward that ocean every human bark is now sailing. Now, storms and tempests assail every vessel but as the last cape is passed and the craft glides into the great ocean, a wide separation instantly takes place. Not a class separation of battered old hulks to the one side and luxurious yachts gayly decorated to the other. It is no separation of wealth and rank, from poverty and obscurity; in both fleets will be seen the poor and the rich. The dividing line is one higher than that the world draws, and it is drawn with unerring hand. Those who have accepted Christ as their Saviour, their helm and compass, their guiding star, enter into the light of the Father's countenance, while those who have rejected the Gospel go to nether darkness, unbroken by star of hope or ray forever.

AN ATHEIST'S TERRIBLE DEATH.

ONE evening a minister called upon a gentleman who was very ill, and evidently dying. No one was in the room but his physician and an intimate friend of the dying man, whom he loved, and whom by his evil influence he had ruined. As soon as the minister entered, the gentleman said:

"You and the doctor are come too late. I have neither life nor hope. You both aim at miracles. You would raise the dead."

"Heaven," said the minister, "was merciful—"

"Or I could not have been thus guilty," he replied. "What has it not done to bless and save me? I have been too strong for Omnipotence! I plucked down ruin."

The servant of Christ commenced his entreaty by pointing the wretched man to the blessed Redeemer. At the mention of that dear name, he exclaimed, "Hold, hold! you wound me! This is the rock on which I split—I denied His name."

He refused to hear any thing about the Saviour of the hopeless and lost, or take any thing from the physician. He lay quite silent, as far as torturing paroxysms of pain would permit, till the clock in the room struck the hour. Then, with agonizing vehemence, he said:

"Oh, time, time! it is fit thou shouldst thus strike thy murderer to the heart. How art thou fled forever! A month! Oh, for a single week! I ask not for years; though an age were too brief for the work I have to do."

On the minister urging him to believe in Christ, and telling him that heaven was a blessed place—"So much the worse," the sick man said. "'Tis lost! 'tis lost! Heaven is to me the severest part of hell." Prayer was proposed.

"Pray you that can. I never prayed. I cannot pray—nor need I. Is not Heaven on my side already? It closes with my conscience: Its heaviest strokes but second my own."

His friend being much affected, even to tears, at this (who could forbear?), with a most affectionate look he said:

"Keep those tears for thyself. I have undone thee. Dost thou weep for me? Nay, that's cruel; what can pain me more?"

Here his friend, quite overcome, would have left him.

"No, stay. Thou still mayest hope. Therefore hear me," groaned out the sinking man. "How madly have I talked! How madly hast thou listened and believed! But look on my present state as a full answer to thee, and to myself. This body is all weakness and pain; but my soul, as if strung up by torment to greater strength and spirit, is full powerful to reason—full mighty to suffer. And that which thus triumphs within the very jaws of mortality is, doubtless, immortal."

The minister of the Gospel was about to congratulate this passive, involuntary confessor on his asserting the two prime articles of the creed of the Bible, extorted by the rack of nature, when the hopeless victim of his own mad folly said, very passionately:

"No, no! Let me speak on. I have not long to speak. My much injured friend! My soul, as my body, lies in ruins—in scattered fragments of broken, blasphemous thought. Remorse for the past throws my mind on the future. Worse dread of that awful, unknown future, strikes it back again on the past. I turn, and turn, and find no ray. All is dark—horribly, oppressively dark. Didst thou feel half the mountain that is on me thou wouldst struggle with the martyr for his stake, and bless Heaven for the consuming flames; that at least is not an everlasting flame; that is not an unquenchable fire."

Both friend and minister were struck dumb with dismay. Yet, soon after, the awful stillness was once again broken, and with an eye which rolled in a very frenzy of distraction, and with a face which betokened the extremity of despair, he shrieked aloud:

"My atheistic principles have poisoned my friend; my selfish extravagance has beggared my boy; my fiendish unkindness has murdered my beautiful wife! And is there yet another, a deeper, a hotter hell? Oh, Thou blasphemed, yet most indulgent Lord God! Hell itself is a refuge, if only it hides me eternally from Thy just frown."

Soon after this, tottering reason was hurled from her throne, and his understanding failed. His terrified imagination uttered horrors not to be repeated, nor ever forgotten. And ere the morning's sun arose, the most wretched man expired.

"Showing Himself that He is God" (2 Thess. 2:4). A rich American, now resident at Rome, desiring to possess the bust of Leo XIII., engaged the services of the celebrated sculptor Tadolini. The latter, not content with a simple portrait of the head of his church, went to the Vatican and asked permission of Leo XIII. to reproduce his features from the original. The pope consented. When the work was finished Leo congratulated the artist, who asked him to trace a word on the still fresh clay. To the Pope took the burin from the sculptor, and wrote, with a smile, "Leo de tribu Juda"—"The Lion of the tribe of Judah."

MRS. FRASER,

Wife of the Bishop of Manchester, England.

Her Practical Philanthropy at Bath—Her New Sphere of Usefulness at Manchester.

THIS lady is the eldest daughter of Mr. John Shute Duncan, of Weston, Bath. She was widely known for her practical philanthropy. Such was the energy with which she applied herself to this laudable work, that she sought out cases for charitable help with a pertinacity worthy of imitation by many a hired almoner, and her investigation of every case presented to her notice by others was with the utmost care. Miss Duncan did, indeed, recognize her responsibility most fully, although it was not to man that an account need be rendered in her case. But the motive which evidently prompted her in all her works of charity was a full recognition of her duty to her Master, which she desired to render through the medium of her more needy fellow-creatures. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, My brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

From this good school, in and around fashionable Bath, this benevolent lady has been transferred in the order of Providence to busy Lancashire, with its teeming thousands, where squalor, disease, and poverty, the natural concomitants of drink, may be found in, alas! too great abundance. The reason for this transference of her kindly offices from the south to the north of England is her marriage with the Right Rev. Dr. Fraser, Bishop of Manchester. This event took place on January 15th last; the details of the event were given in our issue for February 12th. In her new sphere, with the weight of influence which her worthy husband can add to her endeavors, how useful will be her position in the midst of a dense population, among whom distress, in its many grim forms, is an abiding factor!

That the popular bishop and his wife will endeavor to guide the charity of the rich into proper channels and distribute them upon a systematic basis, few can doubt who know the bishop's antecedents. These, conjoined with the characteristics of his fellow-helper, which we have already alluded to, will be, we hope, sensibly felt among the poor in the diocese of Manchester.

The cable informs us that the mother of the Bishop of Manchester, to whom he has referred more than once in terms of filial endearment and to whom he was devotedly attached, died a few days ago at an advanced age.

THE DESPOTISM OF POLITICS.

A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage, preached on Sunday Morning, May 23d, 1880.

"I was free born."—ACTS 22 : 28.

Paul's Declaration of Independence—How to Break the Despotism of Politics—A Protest against the Tyrannous Machine—I. We must Refuse to Believe in a Quadrennial National Crisis—There have been Pivotal Elections—Generally the Only Thing at Stake is Official Patronage—There is no Cause for Disquiet—The Green Bottle Flies—II. Neither Party is Immaculate—The Louisiana Board as Bad as the Garcelon Trick—Both Parties need Radical Reformation—Who Ought to be the Next President—A Man of Established Moral Character—A Respecter of the Christian Religion—A Large-hearted Man—The Great Panacea—Christianization of the People—Gladstone's Apology—No Matter who is President if God is King.

So, seventeen hundred years before Thomas Jefferson wrote the Declaration of American Independence, Paul wrote his declaration of independence. Some official brag had been telling how that, by eminent services or through large compensation, he had purchased his liberty, when Paul, bethinking himself of the fact that Tarsus, the place of his nativity, had been manumitted by Antonius, responds to the braggadocia in these words, practically : " My freedom dates farther back than yours ; I am not a liberated slave ; my cradle had no shackle on the rockers ; my mother was not a serf ; I was free born."

That is descriptive of all the population born in this country during the last seventeen years, and is true of all the white population ever born in this country. And yet the attempt constantly is being made to manacle the people.

CHAINS ARE BEING FORGED

for our slavery.

I speak to you this morning on the despotism of American politics, and how we are to break that despotism. We are on the eve of the great Presidential nominations. The troops are gathering for Chicago and Cincinnati. The air is hot with political imprecation. We are all being whipped into line as far as is possible. One of three or four pairs of spectacles we are to wear, or suffer for it. The political guillotine is rolled out, and the recalcitrants are shown the knife for their neck, and the basket into which their head will probably roll.

The managers of the political " machine" are tightening the screws and making more firm the cranks. Delegates are having a stout rope of " instructions" put around their neck, and have intimated to them that if they vote contrary to the behests of their party the rope will tighten until their facilities for respiration may be seriously interfered with.

Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego are commanded to bow down to the images set up, or be roasted in the furnaces seven times heated. Every town and village and city and neighborhood has what is called, in old-fashioned English parlance, its " boss," and every State its larger " boss," and then all these " bosses" meet together and elect a great National " boss." Against this despotism of American politics I utter a protest, and demand that at convention and at ballot-box and everywhere, without hindrance and without malediction, men shall vote as they think best, God their only judge.

NO QUADRENNIAL NATIONAL CRISIS.

I. First, if we would resist this despotism of American politics we must refuse to believe every four years that everything is at stake. If our institutions are so rickety that every four years they are in danger of smash-up, the sooner they go to pieces the better, and we have a government substituted which has in it some of the elements of durability.

I remember ten Presidential elections, and each election the leaders of parties told us, with vehemence ghastly and terrific, that everything was in danger of ruin. As near as I could calculate, we were about a quarter of an inch from the eternal precipice. Men went to the ballot-box tremulous with omens. Carriages were sent to bring aged voters and invalids. At party expense they were brought, and patriots who by strange coincidence at the same time were candidates for office, lifted these invalids out of bed into wagons with pillows and mattresses, and supported them to the ballot-box, while they dropped, for the very life of the country, their precious vote.

I admit there have been pivotal elections on which everything turned , but more than half the time there has been nothing at stake but official patronage. This disposition to magnify peril and work before the eyes of the nation, on wires, the skeleton of danger every four years halts our American commerce and demoralizes everything.

What do Western merchants want to come to buy goods for in New York if next autumn the land is going to be a howling wilderness ? Merchants in all styles of business will tell you that every Presidential year is a dull year. Everything is unsettled. What do men want to buy ploughs and harrows for, if before they get their crops in, according to the intimation of some, we are to have a bloody Cæsar on the throne who shall have vultures and buzzards caged as ordinary pets, and, as these men intimate, may turn the Senate Chamber into a Coliseum, where shall be thrown to the lions all those who are opposed to the third term ?

Or, on the other hand, a paralytic President who will pension the Confederate generals, and reinstate American slavery, and let the South miserably eat up the North. Why, the political orators are getting out their old speeches that they made in the Fremont campaign, and in the Lincoln campaign, and in all the campaigns since, for the speeches do just as well for the one campaign as for the other, for we are always in imminent peril and always just going to ruin, and therefore they do just as well now as they did forty years ago.

When I was a lad eight years of age I heard the first political speech of my life. I stood barefooted in the broiling sun, at Somerville, New Jersey, and heard a Western orator show me conclusively that if William Henry Harrison instead of Martin Van Buren was elected President of the United States, there would be no use of my living to grow up, for there would be no country to live in ! A few months ago I went to Boston to lecture in the Music Hall, and I heard in the ante-room that night that a celebrated orator from the West was to speak in Faneuil Hall ; so I hurried through my work and hastened down to Faneuil Hall, the cradle of liberty, and I found the cradle that night was rocked by the very same speech that I had heard in the days of my boyhood, and that the country was in the same imminent peril as forty years ago ; and the only difference I could observe was that in the one speech it was William Henry Harrison, and in the other it was Benjamin F. Butler.

Some of us remember when Henry Clay and James K. Polk were contestants for the Presidential chair. When Henry Clay was defeated, my father, pale and sick with the news, sat down and said that all was lost. He had felt the magnetism of that splendid Kentuckian, whose name I cannot pronounce without enthusiasm tingling from scalp to heel. But was everything lost ? Why, that election gave us the Texan domain, rich beyond all agricultural estimate, and opened the door for annexation after annexation, until now, when the wind blows from the west our national flag dips in the Atlantic, and when the wind blows from the east the flag dips in the Pacific.

We were told that the existence of the country depended upon Mr. Lincoln's second election to the Presidency. After his second inauguration he died, and Andrew Johnson put the administration in just the opposite direction, and

WE STILL LIVE.

Last autumn we were told the prosperity of the State of New York depended upon the election between Mr. Robinson and Mr. Cornell. We changed officers ; but I do not see any wonderful change in the prosperity of the St The sun rises about the same time it did year this month. The tides come in with al equal strength.

My Christian fellow-citizens, while the con election shall have greater or less importanc tached to it,

LET US QUIT THIS CRISIS BUSINESS, and believe that God built this country to st I have made up my mind that the Almigh capacity to keep his nation on the marcl prosperity does not entirely depend upon ei the Chicago or the Cincinnati Convention.

If there ever was a time when we could af to have a calm, deliberate, unfevered Preside election, this is one. There is no crisis. tween any two of fifty good men named for Presidential chair there will not be a half cent change in your taxes, nor the thousar part of an inch of variation in your nati prosperity. The only difference will be th the Democrats come into power the Rep cans will have to get out, whereas if the publicans stay in power, then their men will their places. But in many cases there may even be that difference, for professional p cians forecast the result, and they change political sentiments in time to save their tunes ! A good sailor sets the sails accor to the direction of the wind.

A journalist not far from where I stand me that after there had been a change in a tain administration he went into a place w there were many employés of the governm and he expected to find new incumbents ; lo ! they were the same old incumbents, when he asked how it was, they told him just at the time the administration happene change they changed their sentiments, and it " conscientiously !"

The lion of our nation's strength is covere over with green-bottle flies that are sucking life-blood out of its neck and flanks, and or first Tuesday in November the old lion may ribly shake himself, and there may be a nev of green-bottle flies, but more hungry, to their places. Do not stand agape as to wh to come next. Go and attend to your h business. Do not believe the despotic pol bureaus which tell you that the country danger of going to ruin. It is no more in da of going to pieces than the moon is in dang going to pieces.

II. Again : If we want to resist the despo of American politics, we must realize that and we must judge for ourselves as to who i best man for official position. Do not vot the man merely because your party nomi him. To show how much better one par than the other, I put side by side the Louis Returning Board and the political schem Maine last autumn ; the Belknap frauds o one party, the Tweed larcenies of the other p There is a difference between men ; but bet the two parties as parties there is just the d ence as between fifty and half a hundred.

NETHER PARTY IS IMMACULATE,

Both parties need radical reformation, an the time they are fully reformed, perhaps or both of them will be reformed out of ence. But you say, " Is there no test ? are have no preferences ?" Ah ! so far from s that, I declare that the man who refuses to or neglects to vote is not worthy of Ame citizenship. But do not be submissive to wire-pullers ; do not go kneeling before d gogic behest.

The question with a vast multitude of peop

WHO OUGHT TO BE THE NEXT PRESIDENT THE UNITED STATES ?

I remark, in the first place, he ought to man of established moral character. It is a ter of congratulation that the most of the didates on both sides are moral men.

Some of us can look back to the time whe gubernatorial or Presidential position men named who were libertines and drunkard gamblers. One of our Vice-Presidents was s is drunk. A United States Secretary of State was once carried from his office in a beastly state of intoxication. The American Congress again and again has been disgraced by men who could not walk straight, yet pretending to represent Delaware, Illinois, and New York.

am glad that now the question of morals comes into the political discussion. I care not how much talent a man has if he is bad. Genius is worse than stupidity if it move in the wrong direction. A nation of homes needs over it a man who has regard for the sanctity of the domestic circle. A nation of young men looking up for example needs over it a man of undisputed integrity. A man who cannot govern himself cannot govern forty-four millions. Our churches, our universities, our schools, and our homesteads must vote for good morals.

oreover, our coming President must be

A RESPECTER OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

I apply no religious test; but a country discovered by a Christian man and settled by the Pilgrim Fathers and the Huguenots and men of other nationalities who, persecuted for their sentiments, came here and took possession of this continent in the name of the God of Heaven—that nation must have over it a respecter of the Christian religion.

The foundation of our institutions is not, as has been sometimes stated, the Constitution of the United States, but the Bible. Without that, republican institutions are an everlasting impossibility. Our first President was a Christian, and the coming President must at least be a respecter of religious institutions.

A LARGE-HEARTED MAN.

I go further, and say our coming President must have a heart large enough to take in all the States and Territories. If he be a Western man and he despise the seacoast, and is chiefly anxious to change the commercial centre, if he be an Eastern man, and he is disposed to denounce all the West as in favor of repudiation; if he be a Southern man, and think only of the North as an ignoble generation—if he be a Northern man and he wants to keep the old grudge up against the South, and wants to fight over the battles that were settled seventeen years ago—that man must not be backed by convention or by ballot-box.

The country needs a bigger President than ever before—because the country is bigger. When Washington took his seat as charioteer, he had only thirteen coursers to drive. Now, there are thirty-eight, and some of them are very skittish! Of course, with the wire bit of the telegraph they can be guided much easier than one might suppose; but still there are increased responsibilities. Three fourths of this century has been taken up with sectional strife. Now, let us have twenty years for something else.

Let the political orators get out their old speeches that discussed dead issues, and send them to the paper-mill and have them changed into white sheets, on which they shall write one good rousing speech about the moral, or commercial, or agricultural, or mining prosperities that are now about to burst upon us. Do not let the despotism of politics make you believe there are only one, or two, or three, or four men that can save this nation. There are a hundred that can save it. In other words, it is saved.

The old ship of state has got out into calm waters, and it does not require any very skilful navigation. The flowers of this spring-time have covered up the Northern and Southern graves, and let no hoof of contention trample the flowers. In pulpit, and on platform, and in convention, and at ballot-box, let us plan amity.

WHY DO WE WANT TO FIGHT

any longer? Is life so long we are in a hurry to get rid of a surplus of it? Is the sword better than the wheat-cradle? Can we not raise rich pasturage except by mouldering human bones and the red rain of human carnage. I pray God there may be no more use for the musket in this country except for holiday turn-out. I pray God that the time may hasten on when your navy-yards will be museums containing ships that were used in barbaric ages, when nations settled their quarrels by slaughter.

I pray the time may come when the eagle shall be taken off our coin, and there shall be substituted the dove, the bird of blood giving way for the bird of the olive-branch. Peace once established, let it be established forever. I give you, my friends, as a panacea and a preventive of all national calamity, the Christianization of the people. Get their hearts right and they will vote right.

FOR ALL POLITICAL ILLS

Have you any idea that the professed politicians of this day will lift our country to its high destiny? They never did anything but get office and make trouble. The masses of the people rose up again and again, and commanded national reformation. Professed politicians got us into the four years' war. Did they get us out of it? No. The people came and fought out the fight, and then commanded peace.

Professed politicians again and again have ruined our American commerce. Did they ever restore it? No. The people rose, and with hard-handed and besweated industry overcame the financial calamities. To the people, then, we look, praying God for their evangelization. Let a practical Christianity take possession of the ballot-box, and that will settle illegal voting. Let practical Christians take possession of the primaries and the caucuses, and that will give us righteous nominees.

Let Christian apology like that which William E. Gladstone the other day sent to the Austrian Government, be the key-note for the settlement of all difficulties between men, between states, between nations. I know some denounce that apologetical letter of Mr. Gladstone as weak-minded and as imbecile. I pronounce it sublimely Christian. If men can settle their difficulties by apology, why not nations? Instead of bullets and gun-carriages and cities on fire and national massacre, let us have explanation and treaty and forgiveness and apology.

Oh, I believe, my friends,

GOD HAS GRAND THINGS FOR THIS NATION.

Never was the prospect so bright as it is, this Sabbath morning. The churches of God, instead of being a select car for a few passengers with tender feet on soft ottomans to ride to heaven in, will be thronged by the great masses. The Mississippi, the Ohio, the Hudson, rolling on from source to outlet, will not find, after a while, an overtasked workman, or a single waste place.

The morning, laughing on the eastern coast, will give glad salutation to evening waving its red banner on the western coast. And agriculture shall bring all its sheaves, and mining all its precious metals, and manufacturing all its adroit fabrics, and art all its pencils and chisels, and literature all its printing-presses, and commerce all its masts, and religion all its altars and towers, and put them down at the feet of Him on whose vesture and on whose thigh is written "King of kings, and Lord of lords."

Most High God of Plymouth Rock, and Bunker Hill, and Valley Forge, and Appomattox Court House, protect this nation! I care not who is President if God is King. When to Him from all parts of this land the doxology shall rise, we will give grateful, prolonged, universal, and triumphant "Amen!"

AN AUSTRALIAN JEWESS BROUGHT TO CHRIST.

A Jewish lady, who had been brought up by religious parents, landed in Australia one Sunday evening, after a long passage from England. A mirthful party had been assembled to meet her, and in the festivities of the hour she joined most heartily. In describing her subsequent career, and her happy translation "from darkness to light," she thus writes:

"For twelve months I went into every kind of gayety Melbourne afforded—dress, balls, the opera. I met a gentleman to whom I became attached: our affection was mutual, but the thought of marriage I could not entertain, as he being a Christian, and I heart and soul a Jewess, it seemed out of the question. However, time wore on, and I at last consented to marry him, though I knew it would involve the leaving all who were dear to me. Before we were married I exacted a promise from my husband that he would never use any arguments to make me believe in Christ, as I was determined to live and die a Jewess.

"I will not dwell upon my married life; my husband was all in all to me—I wanted nothing more. God blessed us with two dear little children, and He who gave them to me only knows the agony of mind I endured in the thought, 'How shall I teach these little ones what I do not believe myself?' for I had made up my mind, simply out of love to my husband, that they should be brought up in their father's faith.

"Although I attended God's house regularly, my heart was in no way changed, and I never thought of Jesus as my Saviour. But after my second child was born I became earnestly impressed with a desire to become a Christian. My prayer at that time always was, 'O God, if it be right, let me believe!'

"There came a time of trial that I must pass over quickly. My beloved husband was taken suddenly from me. So unexpected was the blow that I could hardly realize that he had gone. I knew he had died in the faith of Jesus, and I—I was as far off being a Christian as the first day I met him. I felt that God had dealt cruelly in crushing me so, taking all the youth and brightness out of my life. It seemed impossible to live, and I felt nothing but the desire to be with my loved one again. Many a day have I lain on his grave in the damp, and prayed that God would take me: but God, 'while I was yet a long way off,' took compassion, and showed me that only in one way could I ever hope to see my husband again. The desire to be a Christian now became part of my life.

"One day I was reading the old, old story, when something whispered to my soul, 'He suffered all this for you,'—and the truth seemed to burst upon me like a flash of lightning. I had found the Saviour—my Saviour—and such a flood of love as came into my heart for Him I cannot describe. I went into my room, and on my knees I sobbed aloud for joy. Words fail me in attempting to tell you half my Saviour is to me now. He is indeed my all; and I can say, 'The life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me.'

The Centenary of the Memorable Dark Day occurred last week, and has recalled public attention to a phenomenon which has never been satisfactorily explained. It was on May 19th, 1780, that darkness spread itself over the New England States. The records of the day state that by ten o'clock the air was loaded with a thick gloom. The heavens were tinged with a yellowish or faint red; few, if any, ordinary clouds were visible. The sun, in disappearing, took on a brassy hue. By eleven o'clock it was as night itself, and from this time until three in the afternoon the darkness was extraordinary and frightful; at noon the keenest eyes in-doors could not see to read the common print. So far beyond any ordinary fog was the effect that stages on the road either put up at the nearest hotel during the mid-day hours or carried candles or lanterns to enable the perplexed driver to see his way.

The journal of the Connecticut House of Representatives puts on record the fact that "None could see to read or write in the house," the deepening gloom that wrapped about the city darkened the rooms of the State House, and set the lawgivers trembling with the apprehension that the Day of Judgment was at hand, and a motion for adjournment was made. Colonel Abraham Davenport, afterward Judge of Stamford, Conn., said, "I am against the adjournment. Either the Day of Judgment is at hand or it is not. If it is not, there is no cause for adjournment. If it is, I wish to be found in the line of my duty. I desire that candles may be brought."

NED CASSIDY AND THE EAGLE'S NEST.

By Henry Martin.

A Pleasant Sail on Killarney Lakes—The Island's Image Reflected in the Mirror-like Lake—The Soul's Reflection of God's Image—Legend of O'Donohoe on his White Horse—Christ Sleeping on the Ship in a Storm—The Soul's Storm Stilled—Beautiful Scenery.

According to our purpose to have a day on the Killarney Lakes,* my friend and myself, after a brief visit to Muckross Abbey, were at the landing-stage, Ross Island, at nine o'clock next morning, the appointed hour. Ned Cassidy was waiting for us at the boat's side, having secured a crew of four oarsmen, a coxswain, and a bugleman to attend us. He warmly greeted us, and after we had embarked, leaping into the bow of the boat, he pushed her from the shore, and in a few moments more we were out on the lake.

As he passed us on the landing-stage he had whispered hurriedly, "These men, though not altogether of our way of thinking, are a right decent set of fellows; out of a good many, I have chosen them for our companions to-day, so that we can talk pretty freely in their presence."

The day was a delightful one for our excursion, calm and bright, yet not cloudless; fleecy masses, white as snow, floated lazily along the azure depth above us, and their shadows sweeping over mountain and hill, wood and forest, island and lake, added variety and solemn grandeur to the enchanting scenery around us.

To those only accustomed to the rattle of a cab over the "stony street," or the uneasy jog of a railway train, how pleasant is the motion of a boat on the smooth surface of a lake; it is change of place without the sense of movement.

"Look back, gentlemen," said Cassidy, after a little, "upon the island with its fine old castle from which we have lately started. See how every tree, every rock on the shore, every broken turret and battlement of the old ruin there, is pictured on the water. There is an island and an island, a castle and a castle, the one the very image of the other. Is it not beautiful? It was very different, gentlemen, the other day when I was here. The sky, indeed, was as clear as this, but a squall of wind having rushed down yonder mountain, the surface of the lake was broken into a thousand waves, and not a portion of the fair scene, now reflected without a single flaw, was visible.

"The island, and the castle, and the rocks, gentlemen, of course were all in their places as they are this moment, waiting, as it were, for the lake to reflect them, but, in the state in which the water then was, it was all to no purpose. The lake couldn't receive their image."

"Ned," asked my friend, "has there been anything like this elsewhere in the world? I think there has, and, if I mistake not, so do you. Perfectly as the lake to-day reflects the surrounding shores and the beautiful heaven spread out in such calm majesty above us, as perfectly did man's soul once reflect a still higher and purer heaven, for we were made in the image of God, 'in righteousness and true holiness;' but, alas! sin has effaced the image, or rendered it all distorted and broken. God still looks down upon His sinful creature, man, waiting and longing that he may receive and reflect again His likeness all glorious in holiness; but so long as evil remains a master-force within us, God's loving yearning is in vain."

"At times," remarked Cassidy, "when I'm on the lake here, my thoughts go back to the day when the blessed Lord Jesus and His apostles used to sail on the Sea of Galilee. Though called a sea, I think, sir, it must have been a sheet of water something like this, because at times I have observed it is called a lake."

"You are right, Cassidy," I answered; "it is called the Lake of Gennesaret, and it was a sheet of fresh water, as this is, but somewhat larger, and also the surrounding headlands were not wooded like these. If I remember right, it was thirteen miles long and six broad, which would make it a good deal bigger than any of the lakes in this neighborhood."

That the men rowing were attentively listening to our conversation was here proved, for Alick Flannagan, the bow oarsman, cried out, "I'm told, sir, this lower lake on which we are now rowing, and which is the largest of all the three, is about five miles long and three broad, so that the sea on which Ned says the Lord Jesus used to sail was a great sight bigger than this."

"If what people say be true," broke in Andy O'Toole, another of the oarsmen, "it's a very different person indeed from the blessed Lord that floats at times over these waters. They say, sir, every seven years the great O'Donohoe, one of the old Irish chiefs, but who long since has been dead and gone, returns to earth, and, a ghost himself, rides a snow-white phantom steed over the lake in the early mist-wreathed morning, and gallops up to a castle there on yonder hill, restored by magic; but it's only for an hour or two that either he or his castle is to be seen, the wise ones say, for when the sun gets up strong O'Donohoe and his white horse and his castle, all decked with diamonds, vanish into air."

"These stories," rejoined Cassidy, "may be all very well in their way, and I shouldn't altogether like to lose the remembrance of them, for they are links as it were to bind one to the old times and ways of thinking; but you know well, Andy, they aren't true. There was a time, however, when tales like these used to fill my head from morn to night, and nothing else in the world beside did I think of; and somehow I used to feel, too, as if they were true. But I don't mind telling you and my comrades here—indeed, you know it pretty well already—that I have found out better stories to link, in my mind, with the lakes than any of these. And the stories are all true, Andy, every one."

Then speaking to me, Ned added, "You, sir, will remember the beautiful account in the Book of the blessed Lord in the ship with His disciples, fast asleep in the stern, I suppose overcome with the heat and toil of the day. Any one to look at Him then would have taken Him for a feeble mortal like themselves—a mere man and nothing more. But you remember, sir, as He thus lay a storm came, and struck the little ship, and nearly heeled her over, sunk her gunwale under water, and she began to fill. The Lord, however, lay on, unaware, as it were, of it all, so weary was He, buried deep in slumber.

"His disciples for a little bore up bravely against the danger, and did their best to meet it; but the wind continuing to press down violently upon the vessel, all their courage at last gave way, and, death seeming to stare them in the face, they came hurriedly to their blessed Master, and woke Him somewhat roughly, saying, 'Lord, save us; we perish;' and the blessed Lord, prompt to hear the cry of those dear to Him, arose, and, raising His hand, He said 'Peace' to the winds, and 'Be still' to the waves, and there was a sudden hush and quietness, so that the great storm became a great calm.

"Oh! it was wonderful, and it fills me with delight to think of it. What a change it was for the disciples from the hurry and dismay of the past minute to the rest and ease of the present! Well might the men marvel and say, 'What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey Him?'" (Mark 4 : 41.)

Cassidy became quite animated with his narrative, his color heightened, and his voice rose as he spoke; and while he proceeded his companions in the boat looked at him in a kind of wonder. When he was done they glanced significantly at each other, but said nothing.

"Cassidy," remarked my friend, "all our blessed Lord's miracles are marvellous and touching, but, besides demonstrative of His command over nature, they are signs and proofs of His power and goodness in another kingdom, namely, that of the soul. A short time since we were talking about the similitude betw the lake here when all disturbed and wa broken, and a human soul disquieted and m tered by evil passion and sin. When in t state there is no likeness to God within us, real happiness, and no fitness for death or other world, and the danger is unspeakable.

'No human power could have calmed storm you have told us of on the Sea of Galil or could have stayed even one of its waves. disciples' own efforts would all have been v to keep them from a watery grave—toil struggle would have only added to the agony death; but what human effort itself could ne have done was at once accomplished by di application to the Lord Jesus.

"It is hard to get men to believe it, but ye is a fact, that no labor of ours can put to the force of evil passion within us. At ev new temptation 'our sins, like the wind, ca us away.' But what human power never accomplish the cry of simple faith to Jesu once can do. He is the Prince of Peace, and the blood of His cross has made peace. W He by His Holy Spirit breathes upon the the conscience finds a rest which is not of world, the heart is renewed, the storm of pas is stilled, and a new kingdom takes its p within us—a kingdom 'of righteousness, pe and joy in the Holy Ghost.'"

Both my friend and myself imagined t these words found a response in the minds the men before us. They could remember t Ned Cassidy, who was now the most exemp man of their acquaintance—sober, kind, for ing, and forbearing—was, before he becam student of the Bible, often the worse for a drop too much," as those who themselves d mildly express it—was selfish, revengeful, rather quarrelsome, quick to resent an inj while very slow to pardon one. It seemed t that more than one of his comrades said wi himself, "I feel sure that Ned must have g direct to the great and blessed Lord Jesus help and blessing on himself. We all foun hard to explain the great change that it plain for months past had come over him, this fact would account for it at once."

We had by this time traversed the greater of the way from Ross to Dennis Islands, were approaching the channels which, on either side of the latter island, lead to the dle or Torc Lake. In our course we passed eral smaller islands, both on the right hand the left, such as Pigeon Island, Crane Isl Yew Island, and on our right hand a beau islet, named rather fantastically Darby's den.

Besides these whose names we have g there were several others—some of them rocks of grotesque form—studding the b of the lake; but whether wooded heights lichen and moss-covered crags, or barren r whitened by the sun or discolored by the w storms, they, one and all, added to the lovel of the landscape.

After passing "Darby's Garden" we pa into Glena Bay, and as we neared the heigh our right, we could imagine, so easy was the tion, that our boat lay still, and that it the mountain itself which was ever growing lifting up its masses of tree-covered rock h and higher into the heavens, gradually filli the scene, and awe-inspiring us with its fai majestic presence. The illusion was comp and wondrously beautiful.

Here our bugleman first brought his art requisition; as we floated along some dis from the impending precipices, he every and then sounded out a vigorous blast. Th sult was magical; every projecting crag and of rock reflected the sound, echoed and echoed, and seemed to spiritualize it, so t hundred voices filled the air with what se more than earthly music. Thus we proce every advance affording renewed pleasure, we arrived at the channel to the Upper La the Glena side of Dennis Island.

(To be continued.)

---

* See Christian Herald page 326.

TH SPIRIT OF POWER AND LOVE.

Sermon by Rev. W. M. Punshon, LL.D.

(Concluded from page 333.)

“or God hath not given us the spirit of fear ; but f wer, and of love, and of a sound mind.”—T OTHY I : 7.

e Spirit of Love—Mercy as well as Power b ng to God—Teaching of the Storm on the L e of Galilee—3. The Spirit of a Sound Mind.

2. AND God has given us also

THE SPIRIT OF LOVE.

s n the gift of power enough ? No ; because ow is sometimes haughty, and people don't ke pride, and are not won by it. Power is om imes repulsive in its littleness and in its fe ation of superiority. “ It is noble to have gi t's strength, but tyrannous to use it like a iar ;” and so the spirit of power must be iel d by the spirit of love.

T spirit of power and love—this is just the ha ter of God, just that that makes up a m nent part of the perfection of the charac- r God. God hath spoken : “ Once, twice ve heard this, that power belongeth unto od What is the result in such a revelation ? im y to abase me in the dust ? simply to cause e hide my face in my hands before the daz- in glory ? simply to put into my lips the ex- res on of the wondering Peter, “ Depart from e, r I am a sinful man, O Lord” ?

B the revelation does not end there : Al unto Thee, O Lord ! belongeth mercy.” hu can feel that power and mercy are in the m hands, and that there is a guarantee that is nnipotent shall be used, not to blast me, t bless me, not the power of the lightning, t e power that does not wake a baby from s mbers and enriches and sustains and es all.

S ar as I know, you can't get this spirit of ve oined with the spirit of power except in ri ianity. It is no use sometimes launching t discriminate condemnation of the old at n symbols. There was a good deal that s orth knowing in them. Courage, endur- ce all the hardy virtues, if you like—grow in at n soil, under the shadow of the old phi- so ies, where you may read of some of the bl types of natural men.

W n I speak of the Ciceros, the Senecas, e atos, and the Aristotles, I speak of men n ordinary calibre. There was a hardihood c acity for deed and for suffering in these at n. But after all, when we think of them, w we think of them ? With a sort of awe ; th passionless and distant admiration. They n wake the heart-throbs ; they do not uc the chords of deepest feeling.

Ar it is just the union of the spirit of power d ve that is manifest in all Christianity— ni st in the Saviour's life, manifest in the in g of His disciples for their work, and ow g them that the teaching that was to win e rld must be a teaching of love. Don't u member the on he Lake of Galilee. You have read it an imes, but have you read it intelligently d connection with what goes before and at omes immediately after, viz., the feeding th multitude ? Do you remember what hap- ne hen ? The disciples were a little envious ca so many people were crowding in upon e ster, and so interfering with their selfish joy ent and privilege, and they said, “ Send e ltitude away.”

W NDERFUL TEACHING OF THAT STORM

c fancy how the Saviour looked at them, H may have said, “ You are not fit to be st s yet, if you send anybody away from me. y b iness is to bring everybody to Me, and t send anybody away ; but I will teach you less h by and by.” “ Send them away, that ey ay go and buy themselves victuals.” Giv ye them to eat.” That is an easier busi- ss. “ There is a lad here with five barley ave and two small fishes ;” to be sure, what e th among so many ? “ Cause ye them t do n, and leave the rest to Me.” And ther the basketful swelled into the banquet, and the fragments were greater than the original provision. But you read here, and these side-lights give us a knowledge of the Saviour's mind more richly than any thing besides—“ He told His disciples to go in a boat to the other side, while he sent away the people.”

They do not complain. They said, “ Send the multitude away ;” but He said, “ I will send you away too, and you shall know from experience in hard times what it is to be without the Lord you love ;” and so, whilst the multitude went to their homes, the disciples put to sea, and the storm arose, and

THERE WAS NO SAVIOUR IN THE SHIP.

The first watch of the night came and went, and there was no deliverer ; and the second watch departed, leaving the skies blacker and the storm more fearful than before.

The third watch came and went, and still no deliverer came ; and then in the fourth watch, just before morning—and they say the darkest part always comes before the dawn—in the fourth watch, just when He had taught them sufficiently, and when they were in the very agonies of despair, and found that they could do nothing, just when they were beginning almost to have the shadow of a doubt whether He could do any thing at all, just then He walked upon the water, and there was a great calm : and when they got safely to land they were better apostles, depend upon it, for that night's anxious vigil.

They knew from experience what it was to feel the pangs of an absent Master, and you don't find them saying “ Send the multitude away,” any more. No ; the teaching of love was the teaching of the Master, and it was evidenced in the preparation of the apostles for their work.

And so it is in the experience of us all. It was the spirit of love in each case prompting the messenger, and in each case inspired by the great Spirit of God, that made London thieves some years ago attentive and grateful, while nobility doffed his coronet to whisper to them of hope and mercy ; and that, in Scutari's feverish wards, drew tears from dark eyes, and stayed the oaths upon profane lips, while there flitted from couch to couch the type of noblest and of truest womanhood.

And it is the experience of the ministers of Christ yet ; the experience of Greenland's missionaries, who labored away for years, flinging their moralities upon sterile soil, and then, in what was intended to be a farewell sermon, preached just once about the love of Christ, and found the frost of Polar hearts melting beneath the warmth of its spell ; and such is the experience of many a missionary and minister of the truth as it is in Jesus.

Oh, just as there are gleams of light in the darkest cloud, and glimpses of sanity in the most audacious madness, so there are chords in the most stubborn and difficult human heart which the hand of kindness knows how to strike to those sensibilities that find their best relief in tears. It is the old fable, you know, transformed into fact. The cloak, that the driving sleet and pelting hail only made the man wrap more around him, is flung off at once and forever when the Sun of Righteousness appears with healing in His wings.

The heart must speak to the heart about the love of the Saviour. We want utterances of kindness and looks of love—looks that children understand (for you can't deceive a child), that the most accomplished hypocrite would fail to simulate. You must convince people that you love them, and then draw them by the cords of love that are the mightiest and most effectual bands of a man.

I trust we shall have more of this winsome teaching. It is upon it we are to depend for the silencing of the scoffer and the largest acquisitions to the Church of Christ ; and as these witnesses multiply, by the blessing of God we shall see greater things than these—brawny arms of labor lifted up in prayer, cheeks down which suffering has chiselled many a tear-stroke, eyes glancing with unspeakable calm and contentment, sunny smiles of unutterable loving-kindness, where a while ago the oath was the living emphasis, and the blow the fierce appeal ; rich and poor meeting together as children of the same dear God—working for the uplifting of the ransomed earth, and rejoicing in the hope of the same promise of the wealth of heaven. Brethren, it is His love that is to accomplish this. Oh, let us see that it be shed abroad in our hearts' appeal.

3. “ The spirit of power and love, and of

A SOUND MIND.”

The Lord won't be served by madmen. His must be an intelligent, a reasonable service, nothing disproportionate, nothing unnatural, nothing exacting, and therefore to the spirit of power and the spirit of love He adds the spirit of a sound mind.

There is no madness in Christianity. “ Paul, thou art beside thyself ; much learning doth make thee mad.” Which was the madder, I wonder, the man who spoke or the man to whom he spoke ?

You may look at a Christian. He is the spirit of power and the spirit of love, and if he be a shapely Christian—a Christian altogether of God's making—he has the spirit of a sound mind. Look at his eye. It does not glare with unnatural fires : it is only a sparkle from the sunshine of the soul. Feel his pulse. It is not fevered ; it is healthy, robust, athletic ; and his mouth speaks forth none but the words of truth and soberness.

Now here is the shapely Christian—praying, affectionate, sober. This is what God wants for His witnesses. Brethren, wherein we have come short of this, I charge you, and I charge myself, let us go to our knees, let us go into our closets, let us go to the great Source of truth and blessing, and ask that we may be truly furnished for every good word and work. May God's blessing rest upon His Word ! Amen.

HOW A TRACT WAS BLESSED.

THE following incident, related by Bishop Riley, of Mexico, at a recent meeting of the Religious Tract Society, points to an interesting succession of men who have been instrumental in the Lord's hand in promoting the spread of the Gospel in Spain, and who were links in one chain of which the first link was the blessing of God on a tract

A tract published in Italian by an American missionary, and left at the door of the house of the late Dr. De Sanctis when he was a parish priest in Rome, was eagerly read by him. It pointed to and led him to the Bible, and the true interpretation of it. The study of the Bible led him to the Saviour, and he gave up his high position and prospects in Rome, and became a preacher of Protestant truth.

At Turin he began to preach. There a Spaniard, Ruet, heard him, and accepted from him the Gospel message. Ruet went to Barcelona, was imprisoned and banished for the faith's sake, took refuge at Gibraltar, and there began to work for Christ.

Here another young Spaniard, Matamoros, heard him preach. He asked for a copy of the New Testament, compared Ruet's teaching with it, found that they were in harmony, and joined him. He returned to Spain, and began to work there, and was imprisoned for three years ; but, though silenced, he was able to do some work through the press.

One of his publications came into the hands of a Roman Catholic priest, Cabrera. These words of our Lord were specially brought home to him : “ Come unto Me, and I will give you rest.” He gave up his position, came to Gibraltar, worked there as a sign-painter, till, under General Prim's Government, he was at liberty to go back to Spain. His work as a Protestant minister, first at Seville and now at Madrid, is well known.

Who can tell, when in faith he plants a little seed, whereunto it will grow ?

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

The aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50

per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to Mr. Benjamin Aitken, 63 Bible House, New York.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of back numbers to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

Persons requiring single or special copies can obtain them most conveniently through

NEWSDEALERS.

Any complaint that the Christian Herald cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer is promptly attended to if we are given the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

Last week's edition of the Christian Herald was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, May 19th, at 11.35 A.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Senate has Passed the Marshals Bill, Introduced by Senator Bayard, by a strictly party vote. The measure provides for the appointment of deputy-marshals for election by the judges of the Circuit Courts, the officers to be of different political parties. Senator Edmunds opposed the measure on the ground that officials so appointed would be practically irresponsible, and also that the bill was inconsistent with existing laws regulating the appointment of supervisors.

No provision has yet been made for the fees of the marshals. One United States marshal in Iowa, who has advanced $10,000 to keep his office in operation, was compelled to inform the Attorney-General a day or two ago that he was unable to pay any more money out of his own pocket. The courts in that district, therefore, will be obliged to suspend business until Congress passes the appropriation for the purpose.

Nothing has been done either to provide money to furnish lights and water for the public buildings, or to pay the salaries of internal revenue officers.

The Conventions.—Republican Conventions have been held during the past week in Illinois, Minnesota, Dakota, Nebraska, and Alabama. In Illinois the question of the Cook County delegation was settled by a compromise in which 36 Grant and 56 anti-Grant men were admitted. The result of the convention, so organized, was that a resolution was adopted naming General Grant as the choice of the convention, a solid Grant delegation was elected and instructed to vote as a unit for the ex-President.

Minnesota and Dakota instructed delegates to vote for Senator Windom, but as Blaine is the choice of the majority of the delegates elected, the conventions have been counted as practically Blaine victories. Nebraska elected a solid Blaine delegation. Alabama sends a Grant delegation, instructed for him under the unit rule.

Only two States and one Territory have yet to choose delegates for Chicago. They are Colorado, Louisiana, and Idaho, and the aggregate delegation from the three will be 24 votes. Thus 732 delegates of the 756 have been chosen, but the accounts of the preferences of the delegates given by the bureaus of the candidates differ so materially that it is impossible to form an accurate estimate of the position. It is, however, manifest that at the opening of the National Convention General Grant will be the strongest candidate. The danger his supporters apprehended of his missing the nomination of his own State being now averted, there seems a strong probability of his success at Chicago. This position has been achieved principally by the dexterous management of prominent men in the Republican party, and does not appear to have been the spontaneous action of the rank and file. Grave apprehensions are entertained by many thoughtful members of the party that the tactics which may avail at the National Convention will be ineffectual in the decisive test of the elections.

A Call to Prayer on the Subject of the Presidential election has been issued, signed by nineteen eminent ministers of New York. It is as follows: "In view of the fact that the nominating conventions of the political parties in June next will designate those citizens to whom the choice of the people for the chief magistrate of these United States for four years next ensuing will be restricted, the undersigned ask their brethren of all denominations to unite with them in making Sabbath, the 30th of May, a special occasion for prayer to Almighty God that he will vouchsafe to guide and direct these assemblies in the choice of men fit for the suffrages of the people."

The Secretary of State has Received Official thanks from the English government for the relief sent to Ireland in the Constellation. Sir Edward Thornton, the British minister at Washington, states that, in compliance with an instruction which he has received by telegraph from Earl Granville, her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, he has the honor to convey to the government of the United States the sincere and cordial thanks of her Majesty's government for its generous and friendly conduct in having dispatched the United States ship Constellation, loaded with provisions, which were so much needed for the relief of the distressed subjects of her Majesty in Ireland, and which, besides being a substantial aid to them in their affliction, have been accepted by all her Majesty's subjects as a proof of the friendly feelings entertained toward them by the government and citizens of the United States.

The Dangers to which Immigrants are Liable on their landing in New York were illustrated last week in the cases of two Englishmen, one of whom was decoyed into a saloon and robbed of all he possessed, and the other lost all his money to a man who invited him to a game at cards in a low resort in a street near the pier. It is also feared that female immigrants have been deceived by respectably dressed women, who frequent the docks and offer to perform little services for them when they arrive. They are thus led into conversation, and induced to enter houses of ill-repute and eventually live an immoral life.

Reports of Massacres of White Men by the Utes come from the reservation. In one case seventeen men are said to have been killed, only one of the party which set out on the expedition escaping to tell the tale. In another case twelve of a party of twenty-five are reported killed. There seems every probability of a Ute war if decisive steps are not taken by the government to settle the question on right principles.

The American Sunday School Union held its fifty-sixth anniversary at the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, on May 11th. It appears from the report that during the last fifty-six years 68,431 schools have been organized, with 441,085 teachers, and 2,916,599 pupils. The amount expended in missionary operations from 1824 to 1880 is $2,549,588.89, of which about $567,470 was for books and papers. During the last year 1277 new schools were organized, with 5629 teachers and 46,727 scholars; 2908 other schools have been visited and aided.

Dr. P. S. Henson, of Philadelphia, in course of an able address, drew attention t tain dangers which he apprehended in co tion with our Sunday-school system. He There was danger at present from the multi of books on the Bible, that the Bible itself be neglected. The speaker regretted to not tendency to abandon the old system of mem ing passages of Scripture. Even if chi could not fully grasp the meaning of ce verses, the remembrance would afford great consolation in old age. Another d lay in the anti-parental system of the age. ents sent their children to Sunday-school, they took their ease at home. The Su school should be an auxiliary to the parents not the sole instructor of their children.

A Murderous Plot of a Peculiarly Inge character providentially failed in New Yo May 12th. The Spanish Consul-Genera that day, received a small package by mail, which he tore the paper covering. A pastel box was then disclosed. The Consul rem the lid, when instantly there was an expl and several red-hot balls were projected the box, nearly hitting him. The lid had attached to the side of the box in such a w that its removal would cause the explosi some dangerous compounds and force the out with the force of a pistol-shot. The age was mailed at Philadelphia, but no cl the cowardly assassins has as yet been di ered.

A Deplorable Accident has Occurred a gola, Ind. A dwelling in that town, occupi Mrs. Smith, was destroyed by fire on May Mrs. Smith was absent at the time attend dance several miles distant. She left thre dren at home, a boy fourteen years old, an girls of the ages of nine and five years, wh ished in the flames. A man who was sle in the cellar also perished. He had gone late at night in an intoxicated condition. was unmarried, and twenty-five years old. roof of the building fell in before the fir discovered. The charred remains of the dren were gathered together for interment the mother returned from her dance.

The Society for the Prevention of Crue Children in New York had its origin in a t ing incident. A charitable lady was visi dying woman in an East Side tenement ho the poorest part of the city, and asked her couldn't do something for her. "Yes," r the dying woman, "I can't die in peace that unnatural stepmother on the other s the wall is beating poor little Mary Ell death." The lady applied to the polic they said the law would not allow them to fere without evidence. She then appea several charitable societies, but they coul according to their charters, take action private matter. Nothing daunted, she a to the Society for the Prevention of Cru Animals, and the secretary, Mr. Henry rescued the child, had the cruel stepmoth prisoned, and put little Mary Ellen in a home. The result was that the aid c Bergh's society was asked in so many cases that finally the Society for the Prev of Cruelty to Children was organized.

The Bible on the Ironing-Board.—The sion work among the Chinese in Boston is ing rapid progress. Mr. Cushing, who su tends the mission, speaks in a recent re strong terms of the earnestness and since the Chinese converts in their efforts t scriptural knowledge. In some cases th not only devote all their hours of relaxat the study of the Bible, but even during hours of labor the sacred volume may b placed on their ironing-boards, so that wh ing their work they, at the same time, c to memory the precious promises of the Irish Famine Fund.—Contributions re during the week which ended May 22.

A Friend in Maine	2
A Friend New Lisbon, Ohio	1
Total	3

An Interesting Telegram. Mr. B. Aitken writes from Cincinnati: "The day after Dr. Foss, President of the Wesleyan University, was elected bishop by the General Conference at Cincinnati, he received the following beautiful message from his family:

"310 Elm St., Middletown, Ct., May 13th.

"Rev. C. D. Foss, D.D.—We stand by you as usual, but rejoice with tears.

"May, Fannie,
Millie, Rossie, Helen."

Stolen Daughter Recovered after the Lapse of fifteen years.—An interesting history is that of the wife of a gentleman named Mr. Henry Mtt, now residing near Hempstead, N. Y. When only three years old she was carried off by a sailor, who, having a quarrel with her father, adopted that mode of revenging himself. He left her on a desolate point of the coast, careless what became of her. She would doubtless have died had not a gentleman who was on a fishing excursion noticed her, and, pitying her helpless condition, confided her to the care of a worthy couple living on Barren Island. She grew up without learning anything of her parents, and was married. Shortly after her wedding a friend of her husband remarked a striking likeness in her countenance to that of a lady she knew who had lost her child. Further inquiries led to the discovery that she was the child stolen fifteen years before. The joy of the parents may be imagined. As the face of the daughter furnished the key to her lost identity, so ought the character and daily life of Christians so closely to resemble in their simplicity, self-sacrifice, and freedom from guile the character of their Master that the world may know without hesitation that they are the sons of God.

Ill-gotten Wealth is never Productive of happiness, even in this world. A practical illustration of this fact occurred in New York last week. The body of a middle-aged man dressed in a suit of blue, found off Governor's Island on May 11th, was identified at the Morgue as that of a man who, during the war, had amassed a large fortune as a saloon-keeper and had squandered it afterward in riotous living. He has latterly been living on the bounty of his brother-in-law, but his intemperate habits producing unpleasantness, he was expostulated with and in his excitement went out and drowned himself.

A Judge's Experience.—In Sentencing a Prisoner to two years' imprisonment in the penitentiary on May 18th, Recorder Smyth of New York gave utterance to a statement which ought to be carefully pondered by our legislators and public men. The convict was the son of respectable parents, remarkable for their refinement and high principle, but he had become the slave of intoxicating drink, and while under the influence of liquor had caused the death of a man with whom he had quarrelled. The judge said his experience on the bench had demonstrated to him that "seventy-five per cent of the cases which came into the courts had their origin in the use of intoxicating liquor.

A Five-Dollar Bill was Surreptitiously Placed in a man's pocket at a prayer-meeting, in New York some time ago. He rose to offer prayer, and a stranger seated behind him felt an uncontrollable impulse for which there appeared no cause either in the man's dress or manner, to give him money. He felt a delicacy in offering it to him, so he quietly slipped the five-dollar bill into his pocket, and said nothing about it. The next day he and a friend to whom he had spoken of the strange impulse and the result, attended another prayer-meeting, when, to their surprise, a man arose in another part of the room to tell of God's help in the time of great trial. He had been very sick, and thus his means had become exhausted. He left home the day before, not knowing whence the overdue rent was to come. He returned at night penniless, as he supposed, but going to the pocket of his coat to take out his handkerchief, something fell out and dropped on the floor. It was a five-dollar bill; a counterfeit, surely, he at first thought, but perfectly genuine, as he was soon convinced. Thus God often acts directly upon the minds of His children, and moves them to do His work in ways they do not understand at the time.

A Christian Editor Shot.—The Hon. George Brown, editor of the Toronto, Ont., Globe, died on May 9th from the effects of a pistol wound inflicted in March last by a discharged employé. Mr. Brown was a Scotchman, who came to America in 1843. He was engaged in journalistic work in New York for a short time, subsequently removing to Toronto, where he published the Presbyterian Banner. After a short period that journal was discontinued, and the Globe was issued, and soon became the leading liberal journal of Canada. Mr. Brown took a prominent part in politics, and was much respected by men of all parties. He was a life Senator in the Dominion Parliament, and had given considerable attention to the question of the Reciprocity Treaty with the United States. During his illness he suffered from delirium brought on by the shock to his nervous system, but in the intervals of suffering, when his mind was clear, he expressed submission to the will of God, and his undying faith and joy in the sacrifice of the Saviour.

A Piteous Appeal for Prayer was read by Dr. Cuyler at the anniversary of the National Temperance Society held last week in New York. "I am killing my mother; I am killing myself," wrote a young man, and asked for the prayers of the Christian friends that he might be delivered. It was a deplorable case, for, as Dr. Cuyler observed, the writer's sin was matricide and suicide, but Satan's chains were so strong that no human power could break them. The young man knew who could rescue him, and besought others to unite their prayers with his to the great Deliverer that he would exercise His power over the enemy of souls.

A Preacher was Interrupted at Portland by a sailor who was desirous of understanding an illustration the preacher had used. In the course of the sermon he said he was once out on a lake in a boat, when by a mishap he lost both oars. The wind was rising, night was coming on, and he was in imminent danger of being swamped and finding a watery grave. What could he do? Evidently nothing himself; so he knelt down and prayed long and fervently for deliverance. He placed himself in the hands of the Lord, and so was saved. The sailor listened to the story with breathless interest, and was manifestly disappointed that the details of the rescue were omitted. After waiting until the end of the sermon, he rose in his pew, as the benediction was about to be pronounced, and said, "Say, Mr. Preacher, I want you to tell me how you got ashore." The minister explained that a man saw him from the shore and put out in a boat to rescue him.

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London) for May may be obtained at the office of the Christian Herald. Price six cents.

The Second Volume of the Christian Herald, comprising Nos. 37 to 62 (July to December, 1879), may be had, elegantly bound in cloth, at No. 63 Bible House, New York. Price $1.75.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works.—We have much pleasure in announcing that another large consignment of volumes by this eminent author and preacher has been received. They are now on sale at the office of the Christian Herald, No. 63 Bible House, New York, and are offered at prices so low as to bring them within the reach of every one. Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with photograph of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Ploughman's Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth, 60 cents. The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volume of fifty sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, a homiletical exposition of the book of Psalms, five vols., as far as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon's Birthday-Book. This popular gift-book contains a suitable passage selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for every day in the year, with a blank space opposite for autographs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon appear at their respective birthdays. The book is elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cents. Remittances should accompany orders.

CHRIST'S UNIVERSAL KINGDOM, AND HOW IT COMETH.

A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"Ask of Me, and I shall give Thee the heathen for Thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for Thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; Thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel."—Psalms 2 : 8, 9.

The Sublimity of the Divine Calm—We may be Confident since God is so—I. The Whole Earth Christ's Inheritance—The Covenant with Abraham—Confirmed in the Sacred Writers—II. This Universal Dominion is to be Asked For—The Prayer Commanded by God Himself—It will be Effectual—The Prayer should Include All Lands—III. This Dominion to be Gained by the Power of God—Not by Force—Nor by Civilization—IV. All the Confederacies of the Earth to be Broken Up—The Rod of Iron—The Silver Sceptre—Daniel's Image.

Observe, dear friends, the wonderful contrast between the violent excitement of the enemies of the Lord, and the sublime serenity of God Himself. He is not disturbed, though the heathen so furiously rage, and their kings and mighty ones set themselves in battle array. He smiles at them; He hath them in derision. You and I are often downcast and depressed, and our forebodings are dark and dismal, but God sits in His eternal peacefulness, and serenely overrules tumult and rebellion. The Lord reigneth, and His throne is not moved, nor His rest broken, whatever may be the noise and turmoil down below.

Notice the sublimity of this divine calm. While the heathen and their princes are plotting and planning how to break His bands asunder, and cast His chords from them, He has already defeated their devices, and He says to them, "Yet have I set My King upon My holy hill of Zion." "You will not have My Son to reign over you, but nevertheless He reigns. While you have been raging I have crowned Him. Your imaginations are indeed vain, for I have forestalled you, and established Him upon His throne. Hear Him as He proclaims my decree, and asserts His filial sovereignty."

As if it were a banquet rather than a conflict, the Lord God, as Himself a king, speaks to the King's Son, even to His Anointed on His right hand, and having owned His royal rank, confers upon Him the highest honors. At great feasts many a monarch has been known to say to his favorite, "Ask what I shall give thee, and nothing shall be denied thee this day." Even thus doth the great Father say to His glorious Son the Prince of Peace, "Ask of Me, and I will give thee the heathen, Thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth, Thy possession." He bids Him open His mouth wide, and request a boundless dominion. He will give Him distant nations, yea, and the whole round earth, to be His kingdom. There is an air of regal festivity and peaceful joy about all this which strangely contrasts with the uproar of the adversaries.

Brethren, I wish we could enter in some measure into this sublime quiet. We may well be confident since God is so. If the Captain be assured of victory it behooves the common soldier to be bravely hopeful. The battle is the Lord's, and since He is the Lord God omnipotent, fear about the issue of the conflict is foolish and wicked. All events are in His hand—His hand who can dash whole worlds to dust, or make them when it pleases Him. What can stand against the Almighty will? Who shall say unto Jehovah, "What doest Thou?"

In this eternal all-sufficiency is our rest, and we may therefore cease from anxiety. Stand thou still, my weary brother, and see the salvation of God. Put not forth thy timorous hand to stay the trembling ark, but know that Jehovah can protect His own. Lay thy Martha cares aside: sit at thy Saviour's feet, and listen to His voice. He will tell thee that God reigneth yet, and that His anointed shall reign also. Despite all opposition, the sacred purpose will blossom into the actual providence, and the providence will ripen into salvation. God's plan will be carried out without failure in any point, and there is no cause for alarm.

Our text suggests to us this morning, first, that the kingdoms of the earth, and the earth itself, are Christ's inheritance—"I shall give Thee the heathen for Thine inheritance." Leave out those little words which the translators have inserted, for they but feebly help the sense. "I will give the heathen, Thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth, Thy possession." When we have dwelt upon that, we shall then notice that this is to be had for the asking: "Ask of me, and I shall give." Thirdly, we shall note that the power by which the dominion shall be gained is altogether of God: "I shall give." And, fourthly, we shall remark that in order to complete the conquest of the world all existing and all future confederacies against the Lord, and against His Christ, shall be utterly destroyed: "Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; Thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel."

CHRIST'S INHERITANCE.

I. For our comfort let us notice the teaching of the text that the Lord will give to Christ the heathen as His inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth as His possession. This I take to refer to our Lord as man. Already as God the kingdom of the divine Son ruleth over all. There never was a limit to the reign of Jesus as God, not even when He was hanging on the cross; He was the everlasting Father, even when He was "the child born, the Son given."

It is in His wondrous nature as God-man Mediator that these words may be understood, for so the Apostle Paul evidently interpreted them. The mysterious sentence, "Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten Thee," may refer to the deep and secret truth of the eternal filiation of our Lord, whatever that may be; but Paul quotes it in the thirteenth of Acts as referring to His resurrection. Here are his words: "And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that He hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten Thee."

It is in resurrection power that Christ comes forth, and God gives to Him to have dominion over the earth and all that is upon it. Because He liveth and was dead He hath the keys of hell and of death. By virtue of His humiliation He reigns. For the suffering of death He is crowned with glory and honor. We now speak therefore of Jesus Christ the risen One, who once died, but has now risen from the tomb, and quitted this earth for the splendors of the New Jerusalem.

Our conviction is that this same Jesus is to reign over the whole world. I shall not enter into the question whether this will be accomplished before His second advent, or will be the result of His glorious appearing. I should not like to assert that this consummation will be reached before His advent, for that might seem to militate against our duty to watch for His coming, which may be at any moment: on the other hand, I would not venture to assert that the Gospel cannot be universally victorious before His coming, because I perceive that this opinion is a pillow for many an idle head, and is ruinous to the hopeful spirit of missionary enterprise. It is enough for me that a wide dominion will be given to our Lord at some time or other, and that assuredly His kingdom shall embrace all the nations of mankind. The whole earth shall yet be filled with His glory; the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head and clear the world of his slimy trail.

For the next few minutes you will be so good as to keep your Bibles going, for the appeal must be to God's own Word. I gather that the kingdom of Christ is to be so extensive as to comprehend all mankind, first, because of the exceeding breadth of the prophecy of it which was made to Abraham in Genesis 12 : 3. That is an old covenant promise which refers to Abraham as the father of the faithful, and to His one great seed, even Jesus, the promised Messiah. Here are the far-reaching words—"In Thee shall all families of the earth be blessed."

Assuredly they are not as yet all blessed in Him to such an extent as to exhaust the divine meaning. When God in covenant promises a blessing it is no light thing, and therefore I am sure that this grand covenant blessing of the nations is something more than a name. Though I doubt not that the whole earth is to some extent the better because of the coming of Christ, and His peace-making death, and the spread of His pure faith, yet I cannot believe that multitudes who live and die in the thick darkness of ignorance and idolatry are really blessed in Christ in such a sense as to make it

A COVENANT BLESSING.

How much are Tartary, China, and Thibet blessed by the Gospel? There must be something better yet for all the families of the earth than anything they have hitherto received. All the families of the earth shall yet know that the promised seed hath lived and died for them, and some of every kindred and tongue shall find salvation in Him.

Jacob, too, when he spake concerning the Shiloh in Genesis 49 : 10, said, "Unto Him shall the gathering of the people be." By the people is not meant the seed of Israel, but the nations, or the Gentiles; so the Septuagint and the Syriac understand it, and so indeed it is. Jesus, our great Shiloh, sets up the standard, and His chosen rally around in ever-growing numbers till the dispersed of Babel shall find in Him a new centre, and a pure language shall be given to them in Him. The words mean not "gathering" only, but a willing obedience, the fruit of faith and the expression of piety.

Moses, too, in Deuteronomy 32 : 21, to which passage Paul in the Romans so especially refers, speaks of the heathen nations when he says, "I will move them to jealousy with those who are not a people; I will provoke them to anger with a foolish nation." Truly this is fulfilled in these days when the Gospel line hath gone out throughout all the earth, and its words unto the ends of the earth.

When we reach the Psalms we come into the clear light of prophecy concerning the kingdom of our blessed Master. Our text stands first, and is sufficient in itself: the heathen are to be His inheritance, and the utmost bounds of the world are to be His possession. Turn to that famous passion psalm, the twenty-second. Its pathos with regard to the griefs of the crucified One is deep and touching. You see Him hanging on the tree, a gazing-stock to scoffers, with His tongue cleaving to His jaws, and His heart melting like wax in the midst of His bowels; and yet ere the psalm closes the plaintive gives place to the triumphant, and the dying One cries, "All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord: and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before Thee. For the kingdom is the Lord's: and He is the governor among the nations."

How glowing is the language of Psalm 72! Can we expect too great things for our King when we remember the gracious words beginning at the eighth verse: "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." These terms include the most barbarous tribes that exist, and they specially mention nations which boast that they were never conquered: such as the untamed rovers of the wilderness, who centuries ago laughed at the Roman power. The legions which subdued all other peoples could not conquer the sons of Ishmael; fleet of foot as a hart, swift as a young roe, they fled over the desert sands, out of reach of the pursuer; yet these shall bow before our Lord, and joyfully pay Him homage. He will sway His sceptre where sceptre was never owned before; He shall set up a throne where all other authority has been laughed to scorn.

We expected to find, and we are not disappointed in our expectation, that Isaiah would be sure to speak concerning these things. See what he says in his second chapter. "It shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it." I can but give samples. The passages abound all through Isaiah in which there is the intimation of the general spread of the Redeemer's kingdom.

Nor is Isaiah alone in such prophecies as these. I cannot detain you by reading what Ezekiel saith concerning the ever-deepening waters which shall carry life to all lands; and I will only mention one word of Jeremiah, because it so peculiarly proves that the homage paid by heathen nations to our Lord will be that of their hearts; and that the reign of Christ, whatever it may be else, will certainly be a spiritual reign. Jeremiah 3 : 17: "They shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem; neither shall they walk any mor after the imagination of their evil heart."

CHRIST WILL WORK A HEART-CHANGE.

when He shall win the nations to allegiance and this shall lead to a manifest change of life—"neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart."

Daniel, that John of the Old Testament, o course saw more clearly than any the comin kingdom of the Anointed One. What doth h say in chapter 7 : 18? "But the saints of th Most High shall take the kingdom, an possess the kingdom forever, even foreve and ever. Until the Ancient of days cam and judgment was given to the saints of th Most High; and the time came that the saint possessed the kingdom. And the kingdo and dominion, and the greatness of the kin dom under the whole heaven, shall be give to the people of the saints of the Most Hig whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, an all dominions shall serve and obey Him." Ca anything be more positive than this last word

Look how the idols are to be destroyed a cording to the prophet Zephaniah (2 : 11 "The Lord will be terrible unto them: for H will famish all the gods of the earth; and m shall worship Him, every one from his plac even all the isles of the heathen." Zechari says to the same effect (9 : 10): "He shall spe peace unto the heathen, and His dominion sh be from sea even to sea, and from the river ev to the ends of the earth." (14 : 2) "And t Lord shall be King over all the earth: in th day there shall be one Lord, and His name one

Lest I should weary you, I forbear to qu any more. To me it is evident beyond all c tradiction that according to the whole run Scripture the kingdom of Christ is to exte over all parts of the earth, and over all races a conditions of men, and therefore I charge y never despair for the grand old cause.

An infidel notion is abroad that these differ religions have sprung up at different times developments of the religious instinct, and t they may all profitably exist side by side w ours. It is admitted that the religion of Ch is excellent, and that it deserves a large foll ing, but still other religions have their adv tages and must not be despised: nay, someth better than the Gospel of Christ may yet be covered. This is the current talk in cer circles, and we would at once express our ho at it. Jesus is not to share a divided thr Cast ye with abhorrence from your souls e such blasphemous thought. Jesus must r till all enemies are put under His feet, an Him all rivals are enemies.

II. It appears from our text that

THIS UNIVERSAL DOMINION IS TO BE AS D FOR.

Thus saith the Father to His glorious "Ask of Me, and I will give Thee." Bel Jesus fails not to ask. We do not doubt He responds to the Father's invitation, asks for His inheritance. This is the w which the psalm before us touches upon priestly character of Christ as combined kingly office. He ever liveth to intercede, a part of His daily intercession is to ask that heathen may be His inheritance.

ur union with Him has given us a kingdom—same kingdom as that which He claims. He nself has said it: "It is your Father's good sure to give you the kingdom." As surely He sets His Son upon His holy hill of Zion, surely will the Lord bring us all there. Our ers therefore should daily rise together with pleadings of the great Intercessor Himself. ord! Thine is the kingdom, and the power, the glory; let Thy will be done in earth as in heaven.

his prayer is one which is commanded by God self. About its fitness we can, therefore, e no doubt. Your Saviour taught you to "Thy kingdom come." In this text we it prescribed as a prayer to the Well-beloved — Ask of me"; and therefore it is certainly a er prayer for us, and we may use it without stion. We are highly honored in being per- ed to present such a petition. Whatever we forget, never from our private interces- s let us omit the prayer that the heathen come to glorify Christ.

is a joy to know that this prayer will be ef- al to the full. It is no vain desire, no m of a fevered brain: the infinite wisdom of Himself suggests it, for He says, "Ask, I shall give thee." This union of precept promise is found attached to every covenant sing, but here it is conspicuously and dis- tly stated in so many words, "Ask, and I l give thee." Concerning this thing the nise of God is definite, we may therefore with full assurance. Let us avail ourselves of his plain direction every hour of our lives. O hurch of God! ask on Christ's behalf, and the Lord God will give Him the kingdom.

t our prayer be wide and far-reaching. Let desires embrace the world. Pray not for own country only, though it needs it, and alone knows how much; but pray for the nies, the Continent, and the far-off lands. A that all heathens may become Christians. P d that the whole round earth may be the L's: that the uttermost parts of the earth resound with songs in His praise. On this His blood has fallen; the precious drops d not be gathered up again, and so this e remains blood-marked —the one star upon h the Son of God poured out His life. It be the Lord's: the sacrifice of Calvary has e it sacred to the Son of God.

our government marks with the broad ar- those stores which belong to it, so did st upon the tree, when the blood fell from hands, and feet, and side, mark, as it were, something more full of meaning than the d arrow, this round earth on which He , and it must be forever and ever His by right of urchase and ransom. It was made subject to anity for a little season, but it is to be re- ed from it; and when it shall be purified beautified in the day of the manifestation of the sons of God, you will not know it: for it come forth as "a new heavens and a new , wherein dwelleth righteousness."

II THIS DOMINION IS TO BE GAINED BY THE POWER OF GOD.

otice the text, for it is very explicit: "Ask of Me, and I shall give Thee." The power and of God will be conspicuously seen in the gation of this world to Christ: every heart know that it was wrought by the power of in answer to the prayer of Christ and His ch. I believe, brethren, that the length of spent in the accomplishment of the divine has much of it been occupied with getting f those many forms of human power which intruded into the place of the Spirit.

you and I had been about in our Lord's day, could have had everything managed to our , we should have converted Cæsar straight by argument or by oratory; we should have converted all his legions by every s within our reach; and, I warrant you, Cæsar and his legions at our back we would have Christianized the world in no time; would we not? Yes, but that is not God's way at all, nor the right and effectual way to set up a spiritual kingdom. Bribes and threats are alike unlawful, eloquence and carnal reasoning are out of court, the power of divine love is the one weapon for this campaign.

A Roman emperor professed to be converted, using a deep policy to settle himself upon the throne; then Christianity became the state-patronized religion; it seemed that the world was Christianized, whereas, indeed, the church was heathenized. Hence sprang the monster of a State-church, a conjunction ill-assorted, and fraught with untold ills. This incongruous thing is half-human, half-divine; as a theory it fascinates, as a fact it betrays; it promises to advance the truth, and is itself a negation of it. Under its influences a system of religion was fashioned, which beyond all false religions, and beyond even Atheism itself, is the greatest hindrance to the true Gospel of Jesus Christ. Under its influence dark ages lowered over the world; men were not permitted to think; a Bible could scarcely be found, and a preacher of the Gospel, if found, was put to death.

Frequently do we meet with the idea that the world is to be converted to Christ by the spread of civilization. Now, civilization always follows the Gospel, and is in a great measure the product of it; but many people put the cart before the horse, and make civilization the first cause. According to their opnion, trade is to regenerate the nations, the arts are to ennoble them, and education is to purify them. Peace Societies are formed against which I have not a word to say, but much in their favor; still, I believe the only efficient peace society is the Church of God, and the best peace teaching is the love of God in Christ Jesus.

The grace of God is the great instrument for uplifting the world from the depths of its ruin, and covering it with happiness and holiness. Christ's cross is the Pharos of this tempestuous sea, like the Eddystone lighthouse flinging its beams through the midnight of ignorance over the raging waters of human sin, preserving men from rock and shipwreck, piloting them into the port of peace.

Oh! that we could keep in perpetual motion the machinery of prayer! Pray, pray, pray, and God will give, give, give, abundantly, and supernaturally, above all that we ask, or even think. He must do all things in the conquering work of the Lord Jesus. We cannot convert a single child, nor bring to Christ the humblest peasant, nor lead to peace the most hopeful youth; all must be done by the Spirit of God alone, and if ever nations are to be born in a day, and crowds are to come humbly to Jesus' feet, it is Thine, Eternal Spirit, Thine to do it. God must give the dominion, or the rebels will remain unsubdued.

IV. Thus the power of God worketh to bring about the kingdom of Christ; and this involves the breaking up of all which now exist or ever shall exist for the hindrance of the Redeemer's kingdom.

THE CONFEDERACIES

Our text employs a figure which is very full of meaning: "He shall break them with a rod of iron." He breaks not the subject nations, nor the inherited heathen, but the kings of the earth who stood up and took counsel together against the Lord, and against His Anointed. Against these He will lift up His iron rod of stern justice and irresistible power.

Over His own inheritance He will sway a silver sceptre of love; over His own possession He shall reign with gentleness and grace; but as for His adversaries, He will deal with them in severity, and display His power in them. How shall they stand out against him? They have formed their confederacy with great care and skill: as when men prepare clay and make it plastic for the potter's use, so have they made all things ready; they have set their design upon the wheel, and caused it to revolve in their thoughts, and with great skill they have fashioned it. Lo, there it stands finished, and fair to look upon. Yet, at its very best, it is nothing more than a potter's vessel. It may be of the purest clay and of such exquisite workmanship that it shall enchant every man of taste, but it attaineth to be nothing more than an earthen vessel, and therefore, woe unto it when the rod of iron falls upon it.

Woe to all human societies and brotherhoods which are framed to resist the Lord. Mark the conflict and its end! It is brief enough. A stroke! Where is the hope of the Lord's adversary? Gone, gone, utterly gone; only a few potsherds remain. Oh for such a smiting of the apostacy of Rome! Oh, for one touch of the iron rod upon the imposture of Mohammed! Oh, for a blow at Buddhism, and a back-stroke at the superstition of Brahminism, and at all the idols of the heathen! Woe unto the gods of the land of Sinim in that day; a single stroke shall set the potsherds flying. Wherefore, then, should we fear, although they plot and plan; although a solemn conclave of cardinals be held, though the Pope fulminate his bulls, though the Sultan ordain that every convert to Christianity shall be put to death, though still the scoffers revile at Christianity, and say that it spreads not as once it did? A speedy answer shall confound them, or if not speedy, yet

THE STROKE SHALL BE SURE.

Our King waits a while. He hath leisure. Haste belongs to weakness; His strength moves calmly. Only let Him be aroused and you shall see how quick are His paces. He redeemed the world in a few short hours upon the tree, and I warrant you that when He getteth that iron rod once fairly to work He will not need many days to ease Him of His adversaries, and make a clean sweep of all that set themselves against Him. If you want to see how it will be done, read, I pray you, Daniel 2 : 31 : "Thou, O king! sawest, and behold a great image. This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible. This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay."

It was a strange conglomeration: all the metallic empires are set forth as combined in one image; which image is the embodied idea of monarchical power, which has fascinated men even to this day. The prophet goes on to say, "Thou sawest still that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth."

And so it is to be: the vision is being each day fulfilled. The Gospel stone, which owes nothing to human strength or wisdom, is breaking the image, and scattering all opposing powers. No system, society, confederacy, or cabinet can stand which is opposed to truth and righteousness. I, even I, that am but of yesterday, and know nothing, have seen one of the mightiest of empires of modern times melt away on a sudden as the rime of the morning in the heat of the sun. I have seen monarchs driven out of their tyrannies by the powers of a single man, and a free nation born as in an hour.

Evil is short-lived. Truth shall yet rise above all. The Lord saith, Overturn, overturn till He shall come whose right it is, and God shall give it Him. Woe unto those that stand against the Lord and His anointed, for they shall not prosper "Be wise now, therefore, O ye kings: be instructed, ye judges of the earth. Kiss the Son, lest He be angry, and ye perish from the way, when His wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him."

[PORTION OF SCRIPTURE READ BEFORE SERMON—
Psalms 2 and Acts 13 : 13–14.]

ANNIE SAVED BY A TEXT IN A COAL-BOX.

ANNIE BROWN was a servant in a pretty seaside lodging-house in the West of England. As long as health and strength continued she went cheerfully through her work without making any complaint. Her mother, however, had died of consumption, and Annie had inherited the fatal disease. A troublesome cough commenced, and she felt herself getting weaker day by day. She began to think, What if I should die as mother did? What would become of me after death?

Annie was very ignorant. She occasionally went to the house of God, but did not understand much of what she heard; and now her thoughts troubled her, and she could not silence them. She had been honest and industrious, but yet her conscience told her she was unfit to stand in the presence of a holy God, and her sins became a heavy burden to her. She had heard that Jesus died to save sinners, and she knew she was one, but how was she to obtain this great salvation?

She had no Christian friend to help her, none to whom she could open her heart, and tell its deep distress. Her mistress advised her to talk with a boarder in the house, who she thought knew more about such things. The girl watched eagerly for an opportunity to unburden her heart to the boarder.

But the boarder knew no more than the mistress; she could only tell her that God was very merciful, and would not expect much from a poor ignorant girl. There was no comfort in this, no easing of the burden of a guilty conscience, no way to get rid of sin. And so the days went on and the burden grew heavier, and the cry went up from the depth of Annie's heart, "What must I do to be saved?" God heard that cry, and speedily sent peace. The boarder's bell had rung one day for more coals to be put on the fire, and Annie, throwing them on, caught sight of a piece of paper—it was part of the leaf of a Bible. She took it out of the coal-box, and as she did so, these words caught her eye, "Be of good cheer, thy sins be forgiven thee." A gleam of gladness broke into her heart.

Forgiveness! Why, that was just what she was longing for. It must have been Jesus who spake these words, she felt sure; but who did He say them to? Perhaps it was some one who had given costly gifts or done some great thing to merit such a blessing. Carefully she put the fugitive leaf in her pocket, determining to search the Bible until she found the words.

All that day she was unable to get time for her search, but at night, on going to bed, she put her little Bible under the pillow, "and as soon," she said to herself, "as ever the daylight comes in at the window, I will try to wake and begin."

She did awake soon after the sun was risen, and sitting up in bed in the early morning, turned over leaf after leaf in her eager longing to find the words. After a while she came to them, and again and again she read through the narrative, which she found in the ninth chapter of Matthew's Gospel. Yes, there it was; there could be no mistake about it; they were the words of Jesus, and he to whom they were spoken a poor, sick man. His friends had brought him to Jesus, and Jesus, seeing he needed forgiveness, had offered it to him at once; then surely He would do the same for her, for was He not the same Jesus now? God's Spirit was in her heart and leading her to Jesus.

Quickly she sprang out of bed, and on her knees begged for pardon, her one plea being her deep need. And the same voice which had spoken pardon eighteen hundred years before seemed to speak to her. It was as if she had heard Jesus say, "Be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven thee." She believed Him at once; she rose from her knees with the burden all gone; she had taken it to Jesus and left it there, and her heart was full of joy.

Ere-long her strength gave way from consumption, and she could not continue her work. She had no home to go to, so, taking a very humble lodging, she moved there; but though she had no earthly parents, her Heavenly Father knew her need, and speedily raised up kind, Christian friends to help her. One lady, whom she much loved, visited her constantly, and learned many lessons of simple faith and trust from Annie's sick-bed. "I often think," the dying girl said one day, "when you come here we are like the two disciples on their way to Emmaus, for Jesus Himself draws near and stays with us. And when you see my shabby funeral go by, don't you think I'm there; oh no, I shall be in the glory with Jesus."

At last, without an earthly friend to smooth her dying pillow, she passed into the presence of that Saviour whom she had so truly loved and trusted, washed in His blood, and freely forgiven, to join the song of the Redeemed in praising Him forever.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

THE AMERICAN CAMPAIGN.

A Despatch from Commissioner Railton.

Success in Philadelphia—"My Mother did not Know Me"—The Work of the Different Corps—A Blessing in New Jersey—Saloon Meetings—A Crowded Meeting—Councils of War to be Held.

SINCE we last reported, the Army has continued to push on mainly in the various districts of Philadelphia, where it has now seven stations and corps. The original FIRST PENNSYLVANIA CORPS has removed from the old factory in which the work began to a large hall (the Athletic, Thirteenth Street, above Jefferson Street), where the large numbers desiring to attend will be able to gain admittance without the great discomforts experienced at the old place, whose hallowed memories, however, must always endear it to the hearts of the many who never entered a place of worship for many a year till curiosity led them there.

THE SECOND PENNSYLVANIA continues in their hall at Forty-first and Market Streets, where God has wrought with them so wondrously.

"MY OWN MOTHER DID NOT KNOW ME yesterday," said a young man, who four weeks ago was one of the most wretched objects we ever saw, but is now in a most respectable position, and appears altogether a new being. We could well believe him, for he would not have been recognizable even by some of us but for his voice.

THE THIRD PENNSYLVANIA (Frankford) has an array of fifty speakers on its platform every night, most of whom have been notoriously godless men and women up to the time of the army's coming into their midst. And this success has been attained through the mercy and power of God, in spite of the illness of the English sister who is in command.

THE FOURTH PENNSYLVANIA (Germantown) occupies the entire upper floor of a large building over the railway depot, where large congregations have been nightly gathered, and although the time has not yet come to reckon up results, there are abundant signs of coming victory.

THE FIFTH PENNSYLVANIA is being raised in the southern half of the city, in a Presbyterian church in Spruce Street, lent by the trustees, it being no longer required by the original congregation (a noble example, by the way). The daily prayer-meeting has been held near this spot for weeks, and has gathered daily hundreds of all classes, who have listened, as they stood in the front part of a store thrown open to the street, to the testimonies of the Lord's soldiers. Many have come into the store for prayer, and some have found peace with God. But the want of evening meetings near the spot has prevented our gathering as yet the greater part of the fruit which will now undoubtedly appear.

THE SIXTH PENNSYLVANIA has for its battery an empty theatre at the corner of Eleventh and Wood, one of the most central positions in the whole city. The building was first a church, but has since been used for all manner of purposes, even for boxing. This seems to rende it all the more attractive to the Salvation Army

Not far from it are many of the vilest haunt of iniquity, and the large population of all sort within reach holds out the prospect of a gloriou harvest. This building will very probably become the permanent headquarters of the army.

As to the First New York, the notices of th local press perhaps render it unnecessary to sa more than that the salvation of souls goes o nightly, in spite of the mean attempts of rough and other opponents to create disturbances.

THE FIRST NEW JERSEY (Newark) continue to witness in the Odeon Theatre more and mor marvellous displays of the Divine power. Th other Sunday afternoon no less than 78 persor testified in little more than an hour to the wor derful goodness of God to their souls. Oppo tunity has been found, notwithstanding oppos tion in certain high quarters, to parade th streets and hold open-air demonstrations.

THE SECOND NEW JERSEY has been formed Camden, where some very remarkable circun stances have occurred. One young man, whi seeking mercy, fell back on the floor in what a peared to be just like "the Jerks" mentioned connection with religious movements many yea ago. Writhing all along the floor he lay f nearly an hour amid the most hardened si ners in the hall. But at length he arose rejoi ing in God, and has since continued daily witness for Christ both out of doors and i When converted he was in rags.

Several persons who carried on their busine on the Lord's Day attended the meetings a were deeply convinced of sin, but struggl against it, hoping to be able to hold to the wor still. But one evening one of these said to t others, quite in joke, "I'll start if you will"—r ing to his feet as if to go to the penitents' benc The others, to his dismay and surprise, took seriously, went forward, and soon had the joy seeing their jocular companion follow them the feet of Jesus.

THE THIRD NEW JERSEY is being raised Atlantic City. Our first thought in establishi a corps here was to complete our Philadelpl operations by attacking the multitudes w flock from that city to the sea every Sund and some of them for weeks and months. E the congregations gathered so far have c sisted almost exclusively of residents in Atlan City, and almost all of them persons of the v roughest and worst descriptions. The const flow of bad language, the utter disregard of t Sabbath, the prevalence of drinking and gan ling in this city have astounded us; but h at the same time encouraged us to labor among the large congregations of the very s we want who daily assemble and who g promise of so much better things to come.

SALOON MEETINGS.

At a meeting held in a saloon some we back, many were in tears, and one who among the converts has ever since been on our bravest soldiers in Philadelphia. She duced a saloon-keeper with whom she had sp many a day to invite us to his house on Th day, the 13th.

We marched there about sixty strong, and h meetings in the bar-room, kitchen, and fr room upstairs, every inch of standing room the house being occupied, and great crowds rounding every door and window. The att tion of all around was excellent, and sev sought the Lord.

One poor woman sought salvation an hou two later, kneeling on the ground at the o nary evening open-air meeting. She had b convinced of sin in the saloon, but had not found the Lord. The following day a v greatly increased crowd listened in the open at the noonday meeting, and we have every p pect of a very greatly enlarged work in every w

We purpose (D.V.) to hold councils of wa New York and Newark, N. J., the 29th, 30th, 31st, by means of which we trust many ma stirred to give themselves more fully than to the Lord.

HAT COMING WARS MAY WE EXPECT?*

By Rev. M. Baxter.

(Continued from page 327.)

Drunkenness of the Scarlet Woman—The ry before the Avenging—The Compound Sys-em of Apostacy—The Last Enemy of the hurch — What can Deliver ? — The Coming evivals.

HE late Rev. E. Bickersteth repeatedly re- ed in his prophetic books to the future and l persecution of Christians for three and a years ; and as one proof of it, he empha- d the fact that the Scarlet Woman is pre- ed to be especially drunk with the blood of saints just before her future destruction. In Lent Lecture in 1848, on in his "Signs of the Times," p. 35, he said : It is remarkable that the Wild-beast which esents the ten kingdoms of the secular Ro- Empire, and which has crowns on its ten s in Rev. 13, has no crowns upon its ten horns Rev. 17, as if to describe the revolutionary ges which seem about to commence. The lonish Harlot, the Papacy, is trying again ount and command the Wild-beast, and, before her destruction, is foreshown to ride iumph upon the ten kingdoms of the Wild- t which shall ultimately assist in her de- tion. It may, then, in conjunction with lelity, have a brief season of triumph, with ter persecution of Christians.

THE DESTRUCTION OF BABYLON,

We must not look at the future glory of the ch of Christ without looking at its previous rings. In the intervening space of time that yet to elapse before the accomplishment of rst resurrection of the saints (Rev. 20 : 5, 6) ave many reasons from the general testimony e Scripture to believe that there will be a period of great trial and temptation. Va- intimations of prophecy show us that the ies of Christ will have a temporary tri- before their final fall ; and the servants rist will have to endure a short but bitter cution.

Babylon, the Great, the Mother of Harlots, is ibed as drunk with the blood of the saints before her burning. The ten kings of the loms of the Roman Empire are to make with the Lamb, and with His called and n and faithful people, JUST BEFORE those tings are finally overcome (Rev. 17 : 6, 16,). The elect are to cry day and night unto just before they are avenged by the coming e Son of man (Luke 18 : 1–8)."

c Rev. T. R. Birks, Professor of Divinity mbridge, in his book, "The Later Visions niel," and in his Lent Lecture of 1847, ex- ed the view that Infidelity, Heathenism, and mmedanism will become united with the cy in he Papacy, as directed by the wilful king niel 11, the future infidel Antichrist, will last days fill up the measure of its apos- and gather to itself those partial features Antichrist which are now to be seen in mmedanism and its open rejection of the f God. A leader will arise, the last per- head of this compound system of evil ; and enism, Popery, and Mahommedanism will ibute to supply the features of this system quity. The wilful king in this last stage power, and represented by this leader, ome down like a whirlwind upon the land ael. Success for a time will attend his ban- so that, in the words of Habakkuk, 'he will to himself all nations, and heap to him- l peoples.'

A COMPOUND SYSTEM OF APOSTASY.

"Previous to this time the Jewish restoration to Palestine will have commenced ; and their temple will have been built in Jerusalem. There this fierce and mighty king will seat himself as a sovereign, and claim to be the object of divine adoration. This king of pride will take Jerusalem, the holy city, for his seat, and there plant his standard and claim divine honors from the subject nations, as a worship to be paid in his person to the (so-called) dignity of regenerate and gloried humanity, freed from the long delusion of past ages. The faithful witnesses, who protest against his idolatry and blasphemy, will be persecuted with great wrath, and hunted out for destruction.

"Thus this last enemy of the Church of Christ will be neither Popery nor Infidelity alone, but a strange union of both. It will be infidelity, not as it was seen at its birth, naked and hideous, but now full-grown in Satanic wisdom, and clothing itself with all the robes of superstition. It may, perhaps, adopt every thing to Christianity, except Christ Himself and His salvation. It may boast its forms and ceremonies, its creed and miracles, its temple and altars, its priesthood and costly offerings, its high antiquity and the Catholic consent of admiring nations. All that is beautiful and mysterious may be pressed into its service and do homage at its shrine.

"Then when art and taste shall have lent all the beauty of their decorations, and architecture all its grandeur, and antiquity all its mystery, and talent all the sorcery of its eloquence—then amidst the sound of harp and psaltery of all pleasant music, the gigantic delusion may move on to its short triumph, and heat sevenfold the furnace of the last persecution for the Church of God. Now, what power can raise us above this temptation, and break the spell of this last enchainment? Nothing but the Gospel of Christ in all its depth and fulness, and in the power of the Holy Ghost, and above all the Gospel of the coming kingdom of the Son of Man."

THE COMING GREAT RELIGIOUS REVIVALS.

The Christian Church's present condition of midnight darkness, silence, coldness, and drowsiness, in relation to Christ's speedy Advent, is represented in the prophetic parable of the Ten Virgins by these words, "While the Bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept." But, it is added, "And at Midnight a cry was made, Behold the Bridegroom cometh : Go ye out to meet him. Then ALL those virgins arose and trimmed their lamps" (Matt. 25 : 1–10).

These words plainly predict an extraordinary awakening of attention throughout the Christian Church to the subject of Christ's speedy Advent. They indicate a marvellous stir, excitement, and agitation among Christians, such as can scarcely be conceived possible. The Midnight Cry will be the loud preaching of Christ's speedy Advent, consequent upon the startling events then transpiring, such as the coming tremendous wars and revolutions, the extension of France to the Rhine, the formation of the ten-kingdomed confederacy, the revival of the Napoleon dynasty, the rise of the Little Horn, his seven years' covenant with the Jews, and the renewal of their sacrifices between eight and ten months after the Covenant, etc.

These events will cause an extraordinary sensation, and lead Christians to seek for a supply of the oil of prophetic knowledge and faith in the speedy Advent of Christ. Very many true Christians—the foolish Virgins—while honestly seeking, by prayer and study of the Scriptures, to obtain this oil, will be left behind through lack of it when Christ comes into the air to raise the deceased Saints and to translate the first-fruits company of 144,000 watchful Christians to heaven without dying (Rev. 14 : 1–5 ; 1 Thess. 4 : 16) about two years after the Covenant. This great revival is also prefigured by the Christian Church travailing in labor to give birth to the man-child, or translated body of Christians (Rev. 12 : 5) ; and it will be most intense during those two years.

Another still greater Revival will take place immediately after the translation of the first-fruits Christians, for then an Angel representing a Body of preachers will go everywhere proclaiming, "Fear God, and give glory to Him, for the hour of His judgment is come." And vast numbers will be converted by this last warning message, so that, at the end of the subsequent 3½ years' tribulation and persecution, there will be a great multitude, which no man can number, come out of that great tribulation (Rev. 14 : 6 ; 7 : 14), and stand before the throne of God in heaven—being, in fact, the harvest company caught up in the second translation. (Matt. 24 : 29–31 ; Rev. 14 : 15, 16).

A far greater number of people will be converted and saved during the 3½ years' tribulation, than during any past 3½ years in the history of the world. As the Harvest must be one or two hundred times larger than the First-fruits of 144,000, there will thus be at least fifteen to thirty million people converted during the Great Tribulation. Thus, in its highest sense, God's promise to Noah will be fulfilled—"It shall come to pass when I bring a cloud over the earth, the bow shall be seen in the cloud."

In the present critical condition of the world, there is more need than ever for fervent prayer on behalf of the dark places of the earth, and for a larger outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon all members of the Christian Church. Let each examine himself whether he be in the faith. It is of the first importance for every one to ascertain whether they have been born again, for, "Except a man is born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3 : 3). No human being can escape eternal perdition, except by becoming born again, or, in other words, by being converted.

This momentous change is not produced by baptism, or by a mere reformation of conduct, or by living a decent, moral, respectable life. There are thousands, who are excellent outward Christians, attending services, partaking of the Communion, maintaining family worship, and fully believing every article of Christian faith, who are yet not born again, and consequently will be cast forever into the lake of fire unless they undergo this change. In cases where this inward transformation has been effected, those who have experienced it will take a real delight in constantly meditating upon the Scriptures, in frequently engaging in secret and social prayer, and in personally laboring to make known the Gospel to others by such means as visiting the sick and destitute, giving religious instruction in schools for the poor, distributing tracts, and warning their unconverted friends of the necessity of fleeing to Christ.

Those who desire to become born again must be convinced that they are, by nature and by practice, utterly sinful and corrupt, heirs of wrath, born under a curse, and with the sentence of condemnation to eternal perdition registered against them in heaven ; but that God has given His Son to die in their room and in their stead, and now offers a full and free pardon and eternal happiness to all who believe on Him and surrender themselves, body, soul, and spirit, to His service, and who pray earnestly, in the name of Jesus, for pardon and for a new heart until they feel they are answered.

When the sinner is truly converted, he feels that he has undergone a startling and indescribable change, as if he was in a new world ; old things are passed away, and he has become a new creature in Christ Jesus. Let those who have not yet attained to this momentous change no longer resist the tender invitations of the Saviour who has died for them, and who offers salvation freely to the worst of sinners. Let such persevere in secret prayer, in all places and under all circumstances (for no special place or posture is essential to this), until they feel and know that they have become born again. Let them do this, remembering that Jesus is willing to listen to the most guilty and depraved, and is abundantly able to transform them from slaves of Satan into children of God.

(To be continued.)

---

* xtracted from "Coming Wars," by Rev. M. , in two pamphlets—five cents each by mail. pamphlet contains "Ten Signs of the End, and ption of Approaching Events," with two maps ur large diagrams. Second pamphlet contains le quotations from Forty Expositors on these . Address, 63 Bible House, New York.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 335.)

An Unpleasant Surprise.

JULIA'S marriage was a secret, except at the church where she had been married. She heaped warm wrappers about her old husband, and kept both the windows of the carriage closed, though she was herself gasping for the fresh air. But she leaned back with a languid and indifferent air, such as she had noticed in carriage ladies, and looked out with partially closed eyelids on the narrow glen running down to the sea, of which she was now mistress.

It mattered little to Julia that the hedges were broken into gaps and the gates falling from their hinges, or that there was every symptom of bad farming and reckless neglect. The tumbling-down old house did not seem mean to her. She was the lady of Rockwood, and her heart was swelling with satisfied ambition. Upon Squire Symons' thin arm she laid her large, strong hand, encased in white kid gloves, for Julia knew that a bride must wear white gloves, if she had no other bridal finery.

"John," she said, and the old man started as if she had shot him; "I hope you will live a long while!"

"I will live as long as I can, my dear," he answered shortly. Old times had been busy with him, and he had been thinking of his first marriage with Ruth's mother, the last Sir Robert Fortescue's young sister, and the belle of the county. He felt unreasonably irritated by Julia calling him John, though she had no kind of hesitation in using his Christian name. She was his wife, and meant to be a good wife, but she did not mean to be Mrs. Symons of Rockwood, yet live in it as if she were merely Julia Rush.

She was very kind to him when they reached home, and waited on him, and fussed about him, until he felt that, after all, he had not been guilty of an utter blunder in paying so highly for her care. When he had had a comfortable lunch, and was lying down for a nap on the sofa, she gave a last touch to his pillow.

"John," she said, "I'm goin' to tell Miss Ruth."

Squire Symons felt a twinge of grief for Ruth; but he was too comfortable to experience any deep regret. He could not see what difference his second marriage should make to her; Julia would be very much the same as she was before. At any rate, he decided to leave them to settle the matter between them, and he fell into a gentle doze, being tired with the day's unusual exertion and excitement. His new wife, drawing on her white gloves again, went slowly and somewhat hesitatingly upon her errand, and entered Ruth's parlor with a beating heart.

"Miss Ruth, I have something to tell you," she said respectfully standing just within the door; for Julia held Ruth in a kind of sacred reverence.

"You are not going to leave us, I hope?" answered Ruth. She had fancied Julia was growing restless and discontented, and she looked at her earnestly. Her gaudy wedding bonnet and her white gloves brought a flickering smile to Ruth's grave face. Julia stood silent for a minute or two, twisting and untwisting her fingers in evident embarrassment.

"Miss Ruth," she stammered at last, "we've been married this mornin', but it shan't make no difference to you; I'll wait on you almost like a servant. I've never been in service, and I've always kept to myself, though I've been laughed at for makin' myself a lady. I've never been at all in company with common folks, Miss Ruth."

"Whom have you married?" asked Ruth, smiling. "I hope it is a good marriage, Julia."

"It's him: your father; Squire Symons," muttered Julia. "We were married this mornin'."

"My father!" exclaimed Ruth. Her head dropped upon her hands, and she was silent, struck dumb with sudden pain and amazement. This was the end, then, of her long and patient self-sacrifice! She could not help thinking of how she had refused to be Ernest's wife, and had spent all her youth and early womanhood at her post as guardian over her father; and now he had set this ignorant and vulgar woman at the head of his house. It was all to end in Julia Rush becoming the wife of his old age.

"Miss Ruth, why don't you say somethin'?" asked Julia, after a long pause, rapping the table impatiently with her knuckles. This utter silence alarmed and irritated her. "Don't treat me like a baby," she added; "it shan't make any difference to you, I say."

"It must make a difference to me," answered Ruth gravely. She felt bewildered still. The suddenness of the announcement had stunned and shocked her. Yet her clear, calm judgment quickly recalled her to the true position of affairs. If what Julia had said was true, it would do no good to resent her father's conduct. "Sit down, Julia," she added; "you are my father's wife, and I cannot behave to you as his nurse only. Let us talk over this change quietly. I do not want to say a word that either you or I might regret. How did you and my father come to think of such a thing?"

"He was afraid of me leavin' him," said Julia, dropping down into the chair which Ruth pointed out; "and I wanted to be a lady."

"A lady!" repeated Ruth, with a half smile.

"I like to be made much of as well as other folks," replied Julia, tossing her head, "and do nothin' all day but sit in a parlor, and drive about in a carriage, and play music, and paint pictures. Just like you do, Miss Ruth."

"Why, Julia!" exclaimed Ruth, "I would have changed places with you gladly. I wish I had no duty except to earn my own living. Do you know that I have never left this house for a single night for fourteen years? I have never been able to have my own friends to visit me here. It is years since I saw the face of any of my brothers and sisters, though I have loved them dearly. My father would not suffer them to come here, and I dare not leave him—no, not for a night.

"I have been obliged to sit up late to see him safe in his own room—yes, safe in his own bed, before I dare sleep myself. I have never slept soundly and peacefully as you sleep. And now that my long task is over, I have scarcely a friend in the world. My brothers and sisters are scattered, and have no home to give me."

"You won't go away, Miss Ruth," interrupted Julia; "I never meant to turn you out."

"There is no use in my staying any longer," she said sadly; "it may have been a useless sacrifice all along, but I believed it to be my duty. I found this cross close at my feet, in my own home; and it seemed to me that I must take it up and bear it for Christ's sake. Now you will have to bear it, Julia."

"Oh! Good sakes!" cried the new wife, bursting into tears, "I'll do my duty as well as I can. I'm going to be a good wife to him, though he is forty years older than me. But don't you go away from your home for me, Miss Ruth."

"I have a home to go to," said Ruth, with a faint flush on her clear pale face, and a smile stealing round her lips; "you have set me free, though you have put yourself into bondage. You'll not be free to come and go as you please."

"Oh! I shall be free enough," answered Julia. "I can manage John, though you can't. I'm going to keep him sober, trust me, now I'm Mrs. Symons. I'm harder than you, Miss Ruth; and it'll not fret me to death to hear him cursin' and swearin' and going into 'rageous passions. I am fitter for it than you; and I'll try to do my duty by him. Couldn't you wish me good-luck just once?"

"My poor girl, I wish you all the happiness you can have," replied Ruth; "but do you know how poor my father is? He has barely a hundred a year; and if I had not given him my income he would not have had enough to live upon. He has mortgaged his land so deeply that almost every penny goes to pay interest Do you understand, Julia? we have less tha three hundred a year, and two hundred of tha is mine, my own. He can give you nothin when he dies; not even the old furniture i this house. There will not be a farthing fo you; he has spent all he has already."

Julia's face grew pale. It had never crosse her mind that gentlefolk could be actually poo though she knew that the place was falling in ruins for want of necessary repairs; and th the whole household establishment consisted an old servant-woman and a young girl und her. Squire Symons had every comfort a many luxuries; and he always spoke careless of expense, as of a thing not to be consider for a moment. Julia stared hard at Ruth. S seemed to be conscious for the first time h shabbily she was dressed, and how careful s was of all personal expenditure. Julia clasp her hands together, with an almost tragic g ture of consternation.

"Miss Ruth!" she cried, "is it tru Couldn't he leave me well off, like a lac Should I have to go to service again if he di Oh! Miss Ruth, it's very cruel. He's fo years older than me; and I might have wed self well over and over again but for thinkin bein' a lady. Oh! don't go away, and t your two hundred pound with you. We coul hardly keep a servant if you did, and it's a house; and it would be hard work to do all cleanin' and cookin', and wait on him into bargain! Oh, Miss Ruth! if you'll only s I'll be just the same as if I wasn't his wife."

"Nonsense, Julia," said Ruth sternly; " are his wife, and that makes all the differenc o me. Do you suppose I could ever forget ? No; I stood nearest to him, and it was m ot to bear the continual burden of his poverty sickness and vice; but you have taken my p e. My task is mostly over."

Yet Ruth spoke sadly. She had always e- lieved that, in spite of all his failings, her f er loved her, and leaned upon her as much m affection as from weakness. It was a shock nd a bitter disappointment to her to discover he had sunk low enough to practise so ch cunning and concealment, as to contract a s et marriage with his servant. It was a relea to her; but it had not the softening influen accompanying it that would have come wit er father's death. Her freedom had a chilly se of disgrace and chagrin clinging to it.

"Go away now, please," she said, af a pause, to her father's second wife. Juli ad been collecting herself while Ruth was s ng, and considered it would be best to put a bod face on the matter, even if it should pr e a great blunder. Her little world must n see that she had made a grievous mistake in nb- ing to the height of her ambition. If ma ing a gentleman could make her a lady, the she was one assuredly; and who had ever hea tell of a Mrs. Symons of Rockwood going out service? Such a thing could not be; it m be impossible! Still she felt herself at sea, unknown currents. She dropped a deeper c tsey than usual to Miss Ruth before quittin the room.

"If you please, Miss Ruth," she said hu bly, "I mean to make him a good wife anyhov I've took him for better, for worse, for rich for poorer; and I'll stand to it. I know cle Dunnit 'll say it's the Lord's doings; f I'm fitter to manage him than you ever was Miss Ruth."

A few evenings later Ernest was w king slowly along the frosty road leading hon ward from the nearest station, under the starr dark ness of a wintry sky. He had been in ely happy all day in his office; for the one th denied to him in his days of prosperity w now falling into his hand. Ruth Symons had om- ised to be his wife. He had missed Ruth om panionship sorely.

Until this complete separation he h not known how dependent he was upon he sym pathy and appreciation. Rose was sca ly ›mpanion to him ; she felt no interest in his ıoughts or work, and his work was growing ore and more congenial to him, as it brought m into contact with many minds. With Ruth ıd with this constant stir of intellectual life, so fferent from the stagnation at Clifford, he ıould feel that he had gained instead of losing, the surrender of Charles' birthright.

But as he loitered along the road he could not ose his heart to some intrusive dread as to how ose would receive Ruth as her mother. He had ways been told that she was a spoiled child, ıd that he spoiled her, and he was not quite re that this was not true. He felt a chivalus devotion to his daughter. She had been e first object on whom he had been able to vish the passionate tenderness of his heart, for s first marriage had been a mistake of his boyıod. Rose, his little motherless child, with r utter dependence upon him, and her pretty by ways, had struck a chord which had never ased to vibrate. If she was not happy he uld not be.

He had been very anxious about her of late. ıe first cold of the winter had nipped her, as it ıd nipped the blossoms in the garden.

(To be Continued.)

THE CRUCIFIXION.

S.S. Lesson for June 6th.—Matt. 27 : 35–50. ›lden Text, 1 Pet. 2 : 24. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

If the entering into the cloud of His Father's spleasure in Gethsemane, was unspeakably bitr to the Son of God, how much more the conmmation of that bitterness upon the cross ! Reproach hath broken my heart," He says (Ps. : 20), "and I am full of heaviness, and I look: for some to take pity, but there was none ; ıd for comforters, but I found none." Neither ›d nor man could stand with Him in that awl hour. As in His life He was the incorporate ghteousness of man, so upon the cross He ıs made in His substitutionary work the inırporate sin of man, and in bearing our sins in is own body on the tree He must also bear ıe consequences of our sins, sickness, and ıath, that His redemption might include all hich man needed, and might nullify the effects the fall.

Thus, although we have to wait for the full alization of the redemption of our body om. 8 : 23) "till Christ shall return, and ll "the dead shall be raised incorruptible. ıd we shall be changed ;" till this corruptle shall have put on incorruption, and this ortal shall have put on immortality (1 Cor. : 52, 53) ; yet the provision for all which demption includes has already been made ›on the cross. Isa. 53 : 3 is rendered in any translations "full of pain and sickness," a man of pains and acquainted with sickness," ıstead of "a man of sorrows and acquainted ith grief." All translations agree in the 5th ıd 6th verses, "He was wounded for our transressions, and bruised for our iniquities ; the ıastisement of our peace was upon Him, and ith His stripes we are healed." Thus, our ace of soul and healing of soul and body are rovided for in His redemption. Then, "All e like sheep have gone astray, we have turned very one to his own way, and the Lord hath ıid on Him the iniquity of us all," or "hath ıade the iniquity of us all to meet on Him" ee margin). Thus there is no sin, past, present, or future, which He hath not borne in our ead, and for which the chastisement has not lready fallen upon Him.

Our golden text says, He "bare our sins in His wn body on the tree, that we, being dead to n, should live unto righteousness : by whose ripes ye were healed." This establishes clearly hat all connection between us and sin is cut off y the cross of Jesus, "that ye being dead unto in," etc. "If One died for all, then all died" 2 Cor. 5 : 14. See Gr.) : in His death we have uffered the reward of our sins, and having done o, we may and can, in His name and by His race, "live unto righteousness." Only let us remember that our place is with Him upon the cross, with Him in shame and death, that, in fact, we are to look for no other treatment from man than that which Jesus experienced. "God forbid that I should glory," said Paul, "save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified to me and I unto the world" (Gal. 6 : 14). The world must find us dead to its spirit, its allurements, its praise, its blame, while we live in the life of the crucified, and the world will be just as irresponsive to us ; "the world knoweth us not, because it knew Him not" (1 John 3 : 1).

Between the time of His agony in Gethsemane and His death upon the cross, our beloved Lord was brought before the judgment : first, the ecclesiastical court of Caiaphas the high-priest (Matt. 26 : 57–65), before whom Jesus made no defence ; then before the judicial court of the Roman governor, Pontius Pilate, before whom also He answered nothing to the accusations of the chief priests and elders (Matt. 27 : 12). Before Herod also, who questioned with Him in many words, "He answered him nothing" (Luke 23 : 9). The part our Lord took was before God, and not before men ; He gave an answer heavenward in the offering up of His body once for all a sacrifice for the sins of others. These human courts of justice were but faint types of the bar of God, where He stood in those awful moments chargeable with the sin of a world. With man He had nothing to do ; for man, every thing ; and by man He suffered, although He would not recognize man's hand in it, but prayed, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do" (Luke 23 : 34). O beloved friends ! are we living in His stead a life dead to the world, in which we are silent to all accusation of man ?

Before He was placed upon the cross, "they gave Him vinegar to drink mingled with gall"—some say to deaden the pain ; "and when He had tasted thereof, He would not drink :" He would drain the cup of suffering to the dregs. "And they crucified Him." Then it was that soul and body were crushed together under the wrath of God against sin. Every form of sin, perhaps also every form of sickness, lay there upon Him, as beforehand every form of temptation had been permitted to assail Him. He must tread upon every step of ground which the enemy of souls had gained in man's nature, that He might conquer and win it back in His own person, and give us conquered ground to stand upon.

They "parted his garments ;" and the only human body which had never in a single fibre served the purposes of sin, was exposed to the gaze of sinners. "And sitting down, they watched Him there ; and set up over His head His accusation written, This is Jesus, the King of the Jews ;" an accusation which we make an attribute when we pray, "Thy kingdom come ; . . . Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory," knowing as we do that He and His Father are one (John 10 : 30). That He might the more be "numbered with the transgressors" (Isa. 53 : 12), there were two thieves crucified with Him, and He had the joy of taking one with Him into Paradise. Near to Jesus none can remain indifferent ; there must be decision for or against Him, and thus it was with the two thieves (Luke 23 : 39–43).

Then came the bitter scorn of His enemies. First, the vulgar, unthinking rabble, always ready to take the popular view of things, saying, "Thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save Thyself. If Thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross." Oh ! if He had accepted the challenge, if He had come down from the cross, what sinner could have been saved ? But He who had been proof against all temptation to justify Himself, even innocent as He was, was also proof against the mockery of those He died for. "He was oppressed, and He was afflicted ; yet He opened not His mouth : He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so He openeth not His mouth."

Then the chief priests, scribes, and elders, they who for "envy had delivered Him" (Matt. 27 : 18) ; they who, knowing the Scriptures, ought to have understood that He was the Son of God, but who looked upon His ministry as a reflection on their own powerlessness to convert or to heal—these lowered themselves by joining the very rabble, and said, "He saved others : Himself He cannot save." Oh ! it was too true. The position He had taken as sin-bearer put it out of His power to save Himself. Love "seeketh not her own." And we, if we would represent Him, must cut off from ourselves every retreat whereby we might spare ourselves. Let it be said of us as of Him, They save others ; they never save themselves. "If He be the King of Israel," they say, "let Him now come down from the cross, and we will believe Him. He trusted in God : let Him deliver Him now, if He will have Him ; for He said, I am the Son of God."

They thought He was securely fastened there, but no nails of human manufacture could have kept Him there had He not willed to remain until His work was done. They thought in their sinful irony that they were proving to the multitude how His claim to the Godhead was false and blasphemous ; they were not prepared for His grappling with a stronger foe than the nails which bound Him there, and escaping also from "the pains of death, because it was not possible that He should be holden of it" (Acts 2 : 24). But Jesus knew all that should come upon Him, and that the words should be fulfilled, "All they that see me laugh me to scorn ; they shoot out the lips, they shake the head, saying, He trusted in the Lord that He would deliver Him ; let Him deliver Him, seeing He delighted in Him" (Ps. 22 : 7, 8). "The thieves also which were crucified with Him cast the same in His teeth."

"Now from the sixth hour there was darkness over the whole land until the ninth hour ;" Luke adds (23 : 45), "and the sun was darkened." Was there silence in that blasphemous crowd, during those three hours ? We know not. Only one eye might look upon the fearful crisis, when the concentrated condemnation and chastisement of man's sin was visited upon that one devoted Head, that one devoted body, when the iron entered into His soul, and even then all was dark, no light from His Father's countenance. "It pleased the Lord to bruise Him ; He hath put Him to grief" (or afflicted Him with sickness). He had prayed for His murderers. He had commended His mother to the beloved disciple, and the disciple to His mother (John 19 : 26, 27). But now it would seem that the three hours passed in silence, until that exceeding bitter cry broke forth, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me ?" Oh ! there was an answer, the offering was accepted, and He could utter other words, "Father, into Thy hands I commend my spirit" (Luke 23 : 46).

"After this, Jesus, knowing that all things were now accomplished, that the Scripture might be fulfilled, saith, I thirst. . . . . When Jesus, therefore, had received the vinegar, He said, It is finished ! and He bowed His head and gave up the ghost" (John 19 : 28–30). Yes, it was finished, and blessed be God, it remains finished unto this day. Oh that the whole world knew and believed in the finished work of their salvation and sanctification, by the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all ! Because it was finished, "the veil of the temple was rent in twain, from the top to the bottom ;" God's hand did it, the Divine rent the human, and so it is ever. God must break and supersede man. And there was no longer any veil needed ; the veil "is done away in Christ (2 Cor. 3 : 14), and we "have boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which He hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, His flesh" (Heb. 10 : 19, 20). Because it was finished, "the graves were opened ; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after His resurrection, and appeared unto many." He must have even then the first-fruits of His victory over death.

FOREIGN TOPICS.

The New British Parliament has Assembled, and the programme of the Cabinet has been announced in the speech from the throne. It appears to be the intention of the administration to insist on the provisions of the Treaty of Berlin being scrupulously executed, such fulfilment being regarded as "essential for the avoidance of further complications in the East." In Afghanistan the efforts of the government will be directed toward the establishment of institutions favorable to the independence of the people and friendly to Great Britain. In Ireland the policy of conciliation is to be tried. "The Peace Preservation Act," which gave the government the power to arrest persons suspected of treasonable intentions, is not to be renewed, and the administration expresses its hope that the loyalty of the Irish people will demonstrate that coercive measures are unnecessary. Other portions of the speech indicate that a measure will be introduced to remove the restrictions which prevent Nonconformists being buried in the cemeteries of "the Church of England;" also a law permitting farmers to kill the hares and rabbits which eat their crops, but which they are now prohibited from destroying; and a law to give workmen who may be injured in their occupations a legal claim on their employers for pecuniary compensation, in cases where the injuries have not been produced by negligence of the sufferers.

Mr. Bradlaugh, the Atheist, Elected Member of the British Parliament, was received on his appearance there with a storm of opposition. Sir Henry Wolff made an earnest speech against his being admitted. He urged that Mr. Bradlaugh should be excluded from the House because he was an avowed atheist, and also because he had published a book entitled "An Impeachment of the House of Brunswick," in which sentiments were expressed proving that the author was disloyal to the reigning family. Sir Henry Wolff's motion was said by the speaker of the House to be unprecedented, but strictly in order, and Mr. Gladstone moved for the appointment of a select committee to take the case into consideration. English journals state that Christian men throughout the country are putting pressure on their representatives in Parliament to vote for the exclusion of Mr. Bradlaugh, whose presence in the House is regarded as disgraceful to the country.

A Protest against the Roman Catholic Appointments in the new British ministry has been made by the British Reformation Society through Lord Oranmore and Browne. Among the reasons assigned for the protest is the following: "Because it has been so ably shown by the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone in certain pamphlets that no one can now become a convert to Romanism without renouncing his moral and mental freedom, and placing his loyalty, civil and mental, at the mercy of another; and because the spirit of a neophyte is expressed in the words, 'a Catholic first and an Englishman after,' which we take to mean that the convert intends, in the case of any conflict between the Queen and the Pope, to follow the Pope and not the Queen, and because the Marquis of Ripon, being in this position, it is, according to this showing, unbecoming to the dignity of the Empress of India and to the well-being of her subjects that he should fill this very important position." Mr. Gladstone in his reply says that the appointments were made on account of the fitness of the candidates, and that their religion will not interfere with the equity of their conduct.

The Famine in Persia still Continues and increases in severity. Many are dying daily at Oroomiah. In the mountains some of the families are living on bread made of flaxseed, which makes them ill, but it is all they can get. Mrs. Van Hook, a missionary's wife, of Tabriz, writes: "We are having a very cold winter, and although famine here is comparatively nothing to what it is in Oroomiah, the distress is fearful, and people are dying of hunger. One poor woman said she would rather have a knife put in her side than to struggle with life any longer. They say that in the memory of living man there has never been such a famine as now." Whatever Christians can do in the way of sending bread to these famishing Persians is so much toward breaking down the strongholds of Mohammedanism and building up the Church of Christ in its stead, for with the bread that perishes there is distributed at the same time the precious bread of life.

A Converted Cripple's Offering.—Rev. E. Payson Hammond, writing from Montreal, where he is still laboring successfully for Christ, relates the following incident. In one of the children's meetings in the Baptist church a sweet little girl with a curvature of the spine, and walking with a crutch, handed me a bouquet of white flowers, saying it was to show her love for her dear Saviour, whom she had found two weeks before. The tears were in her eyes as she told her story, and those standing around were deeply moved. Next evening I related the circumstance, and a young girl, who had recently come from England, was led by it to feel her sinfulness, and last night, in the young converts' meeting, she related the story of her conversion, and the severe struggle through which she had passed, in a way that affected all who heard her. She said: "I am an orphan, and alone in this country; but now I have a friend that sticketh closer than a brother."

A Wise Landlord.—The Earl of Zetland, who recently announced his intention to close all buildings on his estate where intoxicating liquor was sold, has refused to accede to the request of the commissioners of Graingemouth, which village is built on his estate, that he should rescind his order. In his reply his lordship says that four fifths of the ratepayers and all the clergy have, in a memorial, expressed their thanks for his decision, and that they are the best judges of their own interests.

At a Sunday-School Conference held in London, to consider the best plan for celebrating the centenary of Sunday schools in June next, Sir Charles Reed, M.P., reviewing the history of those schools, said that when a census was taken in 1851 it was supposed that 250,000 teachers were engaged in the gratuitous instruction of the young, and that they had 1,108,000 children in their charge. The Sunday School Union alone was this year able to report that there were no fewer than a million children at present in schools connected with their organization, and in addition to these were to be reckoned all the children in schools belonging to the Wesleyan body and the Church of England.

The Bible in China.—In the Report of the British and Foreign Bible Society, presented at the annual meeting, occurs the following interesting passage: "The heart of China is hidden from us, but beneath her placid face strong feelings are at work of which we see signs at both extremities of her vast diameter. The moment is propitious for enlarged effort, and your committee are prepared to make it. An old friend of the society, who conceals his name, but reveals his character under the aphorism, 'God's book is the best,' has placed one thousand pounds at the disposal of the committee for colportage in China. The arrangement made last year with the China Inland Mission, by which two members of that body were set apart for colportage in the famine-smitten districts, will be continued and enlarged. Never before was the interior of China so widely traversed; never was there so good a hope that in every province, including even the remotest, the salvation of God would go forth as a lamp that burneth."

A Boy in a House of Correction in London was visited recently by Dr. Barnardo who had known him as a bright, intelligent character. On talking with him about the matter, he found that, having had his evenings free from five o'clock, the lad had fallen in with bad companions, who had led him into gambling and other evil practices, until he had been found robbing his employer's till. Dr. Barnardo said he believed that gambling, improper places of amusement, and evil literature are mighty powers for evil in injuring respectable lads, who, if they had friendly advice and assistance, would probably be preserved from entering upon a path of evil.

A mission has been established in London, with the view of meeting this difficulty. The institution is open every evening for the use of the lads, and there are a variety of ways in which they can pleasantly and profitably occupy their time. The industrial work comprises instruction in carpentering, fret-saw work model and frame making, and wood-turning The devotional consists of a Bible-class for young men on Sunday afternoons, a short Gospe service on Sunday evenings, a Bible-class fo young believers on Wednesday evenings, and prayer-meeting on Saturday evenings. In addition to these, there are a reading-room an library, as well as a band.

Mrs. M. Baxter writes from Wesel, a Strongl fortified town on the borders of Belgium, which was once the refuge of Protestants from Romis persecution: "There is a little company of converted men and women who band together an hold meetings for mutual benefit, but they nee the influence of the Holy Spirit to awaken the to evangelizing activity and power. Our mee ings are well attended, and God is blessing soul Some little opposition in the papers has done good, as it has helped to advertise the meeting The Lord overrules."

A Railway Accident Averted by Boys. An accident which might have been attende with disastrous consequences was averted March 3d, on the Great Western Railway in En land, by the thoughtful action of two boys. the passenger train from Malmesbury was pas ing through Somerford station on its way Dauntsey, before reaching the latter station t driver saw two boys standing across the met and holding their hands up. He stopped t train, and found that the bridge crossing the riv had given way. Thus by the thoughtful acti of these two boys an accident of an appalli character, in which many lives must have be lost, was prevented.

Seven Thousand Dollars, which were queathed to the Roman Catholic Church so time ago by an Australian merchant, have been paid by his executors. The money was to the Church "for the deliverance of his s from purgatory," and the executors refuse pay the money until proof is given that the tator's soul has been released. As this pr cannot be given, it is probable that the leg will never be received, and so the credulous m chant's foolish intentions be thwarted. It strange that men whose business sagacity is clear-sighted should allow themselves to be posed upon by crafty priests, who offer to g spiritual blessings for money. There is "one mediator between God and men, the m Christ Jesus" (1 Timothy 2:5), and to H every man has access.

The Torn Bibles in Italy.—An Incident very suggestive character came to light year. In 1871 a maritime exhibition was hel Naples, and a considerable distribution of Sc tures took place. It was feared that the dis bution was not very "discriminating," man the copies being immediately torn up. A porteur last year during his labors at Naples with an old acquaintance whom he had kn as a Roman Catholic and an irreligious man, united with the Methodist Church of Nap Explanation was eagerly asked and frankly en. He had seen in 1871 some lads tearing b in pieces. He had gathered up some fragme among them St. John 10 and 11. Illness an flection had been his commentators, and Holy Spirit had led him to the knowledge of Lord. All is not lost even when pearls prov have been cast before swine.

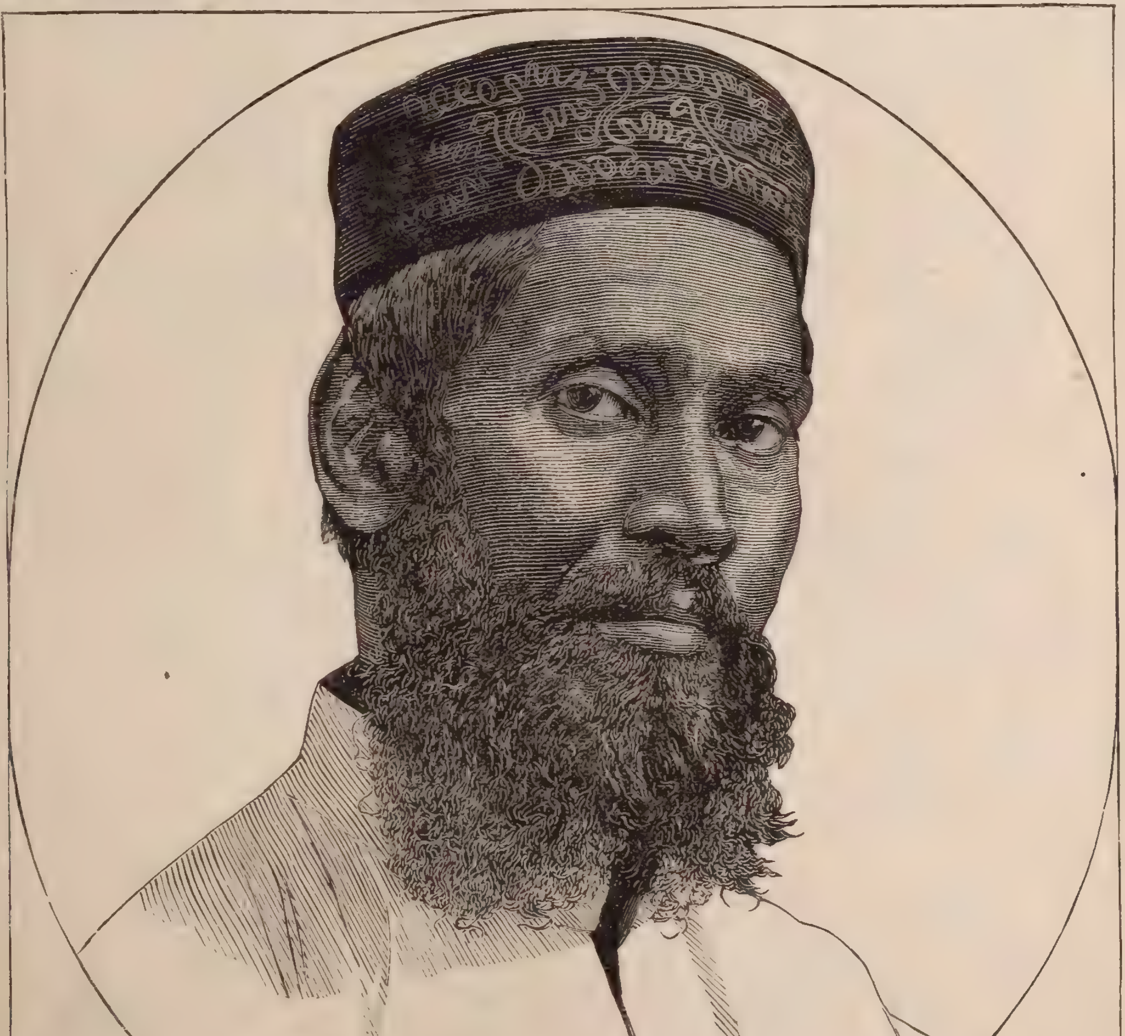
The First Railroad Engineer has just in England at the age of eighty-two. He in the employ of George Stephenson, and the engine of the first passenger train over Stockton and Darlington Railroad, on Sep ber 27th, 1825.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Single Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, JUNE 3, 1880. 14th Year. No. 23—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

ORTRAIT AND LIFE OF BABOO RAMCHUNDRA BOSE, the Delegate from Bengal to the Methodist Conference at Cincinnati.
ROTHERLY ADVICE. A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage—A Communion Service in a Cavern.
ED CASSIDY AND THE EAGLE'S NEST, by Henry Martin (Continued).
issionary Adventures among the Zulus.
HE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY'S MEETING IN LONDON: Interesting Anecdotes of its Work.
WHAT COMING WARS MAY WE EXPECT? by Rev. M. Baxter (Continued).
CURRENT EVENTS: The Chicago Convention—Congressional Notes—The Reading Failure—Suicide of a Wall St. Speculator—A School Two Centuries Old—The Californian Accident—The Increase of Female Drunkenness—A Boy Eleven Years old Dying Intoxicated—A Swearing Son Reclaimed—A Cincinnati Sunday Scholar—Are You a Fortune-Teller? etc.
REV. C. H. SPURGEON ON TRACT DISTRIBUTING—Striking Cases of Reformed Drunkards.
SENTENCE OF DEATH, The Death of Self-Trust. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
Dr. Bonar on British Politics.
A WEIGHT OF WEALTH (Continued).
AFTER THE RESURRECTION. S. S. Lesson by Mrs. M. Baxter.
FOREIGN TOPICS: Great Britain and Turkey—Prince Bismarck's Illness—The Real Head of the Bonapartes—Christian Work in Persia—Professor Nordenskjold on the Arctic Winters—The London Temperance Hospital, etc.



Mr. RAMCHUNDRA BOSE, a Native Christian from India.

BABOO RAMCHUNDRA BOSE.

A Guest from India—Costume of a "Baboo"—The Bose Family—Ramchundra's Boyhood—Hindoo Caste-Restrictions—Horror of Leather—Ramchundra Sent to School—The Great Scandal of Christendom—First Religious Impressions—A Serious Conversation—Hindoo Boys Studying the Bible—Mr. Bose's Baptism—Interprets for Bishop Thompson—His Fall and Restoration—The Ladies of the Zenana Mission—Licensed to Preach—Chosen Delegate to the General Conference—An Overwhelming Welcome—Work in Cincinnati.

THE Christian Church of America has this summer for its guest a converted Hindoo who has crossed two oceans and journeyed half round the world to represent the North India Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at the General Conference now nearly concluded in Cincinnati. Our readers will inspect his portrait with interest. The dress is a compromise with European fashion, such as has come much into use among the educated natives of India. We usually associate our ideas of oriental costume with a conspicuous turban ; but the fact is, that while the Arabs, the Persians, the Afghans, and the people of India generally, wear turbans, and indeed are not considered dressed without them, the "Baboos," like the ancient Jews, usually go bareheaded. Caps like the one shown in our portrait, are sometimes worn for convenience, but do not form a recognized article of the dress.

"Baboo" is not a name, but simply a title of courtesy, like Mister or Esquire, applied in the Province of Bengal to all Hindoos of the educated classes, except the priests and scribes, who are addressed as Pundeet. Mr. Bose is a member of the Kyasth or literary caste. There are but three surnames belonging to the members of this caste, the first being Bose, the second Ghose, and the third Mitter. Every Kyasth, whatever may be his own proper name, has one of these three for his surname. Indians call themselves by their first names, so there is little confusion from many of them having the same surname. Thus while we say Mr. Bose, the gentleman's own people call him Baboo Ramchundra. The following is a facsimile of Mr. Bose's signature in the Bengalee language:

শ্রীরামচন্দ্র বসু

Ramchundra Bose was born in 1836, in the village of Rajpoor, near Calcutta. His father was "Moonsiff," or subordinate judge, there, and all his family were connected with the legal profession. One of his uncles is a lawyer of note. The father was duly impressed with the necessity of keeping up the literary character of his family and giving his boy Ramchundra an education. But, as temple-service was to form no part of the lad's profession, he thought it unnecessary to trouble him with religious teaching. So Ramchundra grew up to his twelfth year without an idea of God or heaven. By reason of the force of European civilization in Calcutta, he also escaped many of the caste-restrictions which are rigidly imposed upon the mass of Hindoos in India.

For a Hindoo boy is carefully instructed how to preserve his caste pure from contamination ; and if he does any thing to violate his caste, he is banished from the society of every friend and associate he has, and his nearest relatives will have nothing to say to him ; nor is he allowed to enter even his father's house from fear of his polluting it.

He is taught never to take his meals without first bathing, and never to eat on a table, or even on a carpet or mat, or a wooden floor, but always on mother earth ; also never to taste food which has been cooked by any person but one of his own caste. He is instructed not to touch a dead body or a dead animal ; nor to handle any article of leather. His shoes are slipshod that he may put them off and on without touching them with his hands, and his books are bound in nothing stronger than cloth or palm-leaf. He dare not burn a tallow candle or anoint his head with bear's-grease ; and if he ride on horseback his saddle is of cotton and his bridle of rope. All the cold of Siberia would not induce him to sleep under a buffalo robe.

Mr. Bose was first sent to the school of his village, where he learned reading, writing, and arithmetic in his own language. Then, when he was eleven years of age, it became necessary to send him to a school where English was taught ; for there are small prospects in India before educated men unless their education embraces a considerable knowledge of the language of the ruling race. In the providence of God, young Ramchundra was sent, not to a government school, but to the school of

THE FAMOUS MISSIONARY

Dr. Duff, in Calcutta.

The full import of this will not be understood unless our readers are aware that the British Government has for a hundred years past put its ban upon the reading of the Bible in the public schools.

This is perhaps the greatest scandal in Christendom. The British Government has received from God the high trust of ruling India and raising its people to the civilization in which England itself has been so signally prospered. That civilization has been a Christian civilization. Yet the authorities in India, supported if not instigated by the Cabinet and Parliament at home, ignore the Disposer of kingdoms (Dan. 4 : 25), and, while they have covered the country with free schools, they absolutely prohibit the Bible to be taught or read, even as a textbook of the English language, in any of them. The rising generation of educated Hindoos is, in consequence, forsaking heathenism to embrace infidelity ; and the public official interdiction of their own Scriptures, by the professedly Christian rulers of India, is not the smallest obstacle to the labors of missionaries. Thus it was a blessed thing that the boy Ramchundra was sent, not to a government school, but to a school conducted by ministers of Christ.

The effect of daily instruction in the Bible upon Ramchundra's mind was to inspire him with affection for the Book, chiefly because of its associations with the kind and unselfish men who were his daily teachers. He conceived no regard for the mission cause ; but rather, in his boyish spirit of mischief, used to attend places where missionaries who were unacquainted with him engaged in open-air preaching, and, in company with other lads, attempt to draw the preachers into controversy. At the very time, however, that he made this sport, he was inwardly convinced that the Christian religion was true. Consequently he made a practice of attending religious lectures, and of reading works on the Christian evidences, and so he became logically confirmed in his conviction. There also grew in his soul a desire to live an upright life, although he had no sense of sin as a thing hateful to God, and no realization of his need of the Saviour.

THE FIRST TIME

he read the account of the sufferings and death of Jesus Christ, it was by himself in his own room. He was strongly moved, and made up his mind that those who crucified the Son of Man must have been murderers of the deepest dye. He now thinks that that was the time the Holy Ghost began the work of conversion in his heart. Some time after that, one dark night in Calcutta, he was returning home from a religious lecture with his cousin, who was more deeply convinced of the truth than himself, when the latter remarked, "It is of no use for us to attend on Christian instruction if we do not obey the precepts we are taught."

That remark led to a conversation, the result of which was that these two young men agreed to meet statedly for the purpose of considering the claims of Christianity. They were soon joined by other young Hindoos who had been inwardly stirred about their souls, and the well-known book, James's "Anxious Inquirer," was read and studied at their meetings. However, strange to say, these earnest young men neve prayed together ; they merely talked, and offere up prayers to God in secret afterward. Eventually Ramchundra and his cousin resolved upo a decided step, and leaving their home, too refuge in the Mission House of the Free Churc of Scotland.

Thither they were followed by their parent and relatives, who, however, did not resort t violence as the friends of young converts sometimes do in India and China ; but, after using good deal of persuasion and entreaty in vain gave up the young men and went home. A fe days afterward the two converts were by the Rev. Dr. Mackay, of the Free Church c Scotland. This occurred in 1851. But not withstanding his seeking and receiving baptism Ramchundra was not converted then ; but there reason to believe that his cousin was. The latt has lived a consistent Christian, and is now th principal of an important Mission School. H daughter was the first girl who passed th entrance examination of the Calcutta Universit Ramchundra was convinced of his need of Saviour and of the sufficiency of Christ's aton ment to save him, and he was impelled by strong desire after a better life ; but the Ho Ghost had not changed his heart. A sad ar grievous fall was to bring him to the feet of t Saviour.

BAPTIZED

On completing his studies he received an a pointment in the government service, and w transferred to Seetapoor, in the Province Oudh. There is an interesting allusion to hi at that period of his life in "Our Oriental M sions," by the author, Bishop Thompson; w visited India from this country in the end 1864. The bishop says : "We had an intere ing meeting here in Mr. G.'s parlor. The co gregation was partly of soldiers, partly of nat citizens. I opened with singing and pray and a discourse to the English, to whom I ministered the Lord's Supper. I then delive a discourse to the Hindoos, which, I am to was interpreted beautifully by the head teac of the Government College in this city, a nat who was converted under the ministry of Duff."

Mr. Bose was the interpreter referred to. It he did not long preserve his respectable sta ing. He contracted the habit of drink intoxicants, and indulged it to excess till became a drunkard and lost his character. H ing broken his caste by the step of becomin Christian, he was bound by none of its str restraints, but gave way to all the drunka vices and sank to a very low depth of degra tion. His Hindoo acquaintances, who had n seen a man of his respectability sink so l naturally attributed his fall to his having saken Hindooism, and one of them observed conversation with a friend, "Baboo Ramch dra is a good fellow : he would have bee first-rate man if he had not become a Christia

The unhappy man remained in this plight, hopeless slave of strong drink, till eight y ago ; and it will readily be believed that his was about as hard as the case of John B. Go h. But God rescued him through the agency of Methodist missionaries in Rohilkhund, of the North-west Provinces of India. T missionaries were the Rev. Messrs. Thob n, Cunningham, Craven, Knowles, and Messr the first two of whom have returned to his country as delegates, along with Mr. Bos to the General Conference. Dr. Thoburn and others found him and took him to the La Mission Home at Lucknow, the capital of O h.

There he attended a class-meeting and engaged in silent prayer for the first tim for years. He had previously held doubts as t the reality of sudden conversion ; but that nigh the case of the Apostle Paul was sent home t him with convincing power. He went home, and after lying in bed for a time got up in the middle of the night and pleaded long with G for mercy and forgiveness. When he rose fro his knees the invitation of Jesus in Matt. 11 : –30

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY'S MEETINGS IN LONDON.

r C. Reed's Dingy Tract—A Man Converted by is Son's Prize Bible—Tract Statistics—Benefited by an Alligator's Bite—A Buddhist and Tracts—Happy Death-bed Scenes Through Tracts.

THE Eighty-first Anniversary of this Society s held at Exeter Hall, London, on Friday ening, May 7th. Sir Charles Reed, M.P., cupied the chair.

The Chairman, in the course of an address in ich he spoke in the highest terms of the rk of the Society, held up a little dingy tract, ich was nearly eighty years old, and said : This dingy-looking religious tract of four ges which I have in my hand, badly printed on poor paper, sold in 1801 at the price of a thing, or twenty-pence a hundred. It is a tract itten and addressed to a little child, bearing every page of it the Gospel truth, and when I l you what the last verse of the hymn is upon e fourth page you will understand what I ean :

> " 'For all who early seek His face
> Shall surely taste his love ;
> Jesus shall guide them by His grace
> To dwell with him above.'

"That tract, preserved carefully by one who ved me much, was given to me when I was a ild, and the influence of that tract will be best derstood by you when I tell you that, poor it looks, it is so precious to me that I preserve among the treasured things of my household. is number 52, and from that poor beginning s grown and increased by thousands the esent long catalogue of the publications of e Religious Tract Society.

MAN CONVERTED BY HIS SON'S PRIZE BIBLE.

"In reference to the prizes offered by this ciety every year to 4,000 meritorious scholars ho have voluntarily presented themselves for amination, I have heard it said—but I do not lieve it, I am sorry to say—that in every house London you can find a Bible. That was hat George III. desired to see ; but none of us ve yet seen it. There are houses still destute of God's Word, and a reference in the eport enables me to tell you of one case of useilness resulting from the gift of this Bible. A an who was urged by a city missionary to go a mission-hall meeting said, after objecting go with the missionary, 'I don't think the ible can be true ; but still I will read it again, d see if it is true or not. My second son, seph, was taken to the Crystal Palace, and ad a Testament presented to him in the year 76. I will open that, and see if the Scriptures re true.' That man opened it and read it, and e truth of the passages of the Testament awned upon his mind, and he became quite ightened. He said, 'I could only read one or o verses at a time ; still, I could not resist oking into that Book. To my wife's surprise, told her one Sunday morning that I was going the mission-hall that night with her. She ould scarcely believe me. She said she always rayed that the time would come when we ight go together to the mission-hall, and we id go that night.' Now that is only one case ut of many which has came to my knowledge the value of giving these prize Bibles."

Rev. Dr. Manning presented an abstract of he Report, from which it appeared that during he past year 538 new publications, of which 125 ere tracts, had been issued. The total circulaion from the home depot, including books, racts, periodicals counted in numbers, cards, nd miscellaneous issues, had reached 65,616,690, f which 27,215,190 were tracts ; while the isues from foreign depots amounted to 12,000,000, naking a total circulation for the year of 77,616,90. The total amount received from sales, nissionary receipts, and all other sources, inluding last year's balance, was 172,595*l*.

BENEFITED BY AN ALLIGATOR'S BITE.

The Bishop of Rangoon, in his speech, narrated he following anecdotes of the good resulting from tracts : "Let me give an instance of the good one tract did to a man in Bassein, on a branch of the Irrawaddy. He had fallen into the river and was bitten by an alligator. The alligator had laid hold of the man's leg, but he was rescued. When he was taken to the hospital the surgeons found it necessary to amputate the limb. He was confined for a long time in bed in that hospital—an English hospital provided by the Government. A tract was given to him, and he read it with such avidity that he asked for more tracts, and he went on reading with such earnestness that his mind became convinced of the truth of the Gospel ; and once when he was asked by a missionary, 'Do you love Christ now?' he replied, 'I love Him as much as I love my life ;' and when he recovered from his wounds, and a false leg was put upon his thigh, he went out a free man, rejoicing in the liberty wherewith Christ had made him free. He was baptized, and is now a Christian.

"I will now give you an instance of a Buddhist who was laughed at, sneered and jeered at by some of his companions because he read Christian tracts. 'Do you suppose,' said he, 'that I do not read those Christian tracts? I have read as many as I can get hold of, and I mean to read a great many more.' That gives you a specimen of how eager the Burmese are to read tracts. He took out an old, worn tract from his pocket, and began to read aloud, and then he turned round and said, 'This God, spoken of in this tract, will conquer yet, and if you will only read for yourselves you will find it out, too.' I might multiply instances to the same effect. It has been my privilege to circulate these tracts with my own hand, and I can assure you, along the banks of the Irrawaddy, going with a missionary who could speak the Burmese language, I have given away, in towns of 5,000, 6,000, and 7,000 inhabitants where, scarce any mission work is being accomplished, immense numbers of tracts ; and they have been received with such eagerness that my store has been exhausted long before all the people were supplied. They will not only take them, but read them and study them, because they have very few books to read."

HAPPY DEATH-BED SCENES.

Rev. George Everard said : "Let me just take you to two or three scenes where the Tract Society has been working in quiet. I will take you first to a death-bed in Manchester. A hardened profane, erring unbeliever was lying on his bed of death. He would permit no clergyman, no minister, to speak to him. His Christian daughter came up to nurse her father. On Sunday night she said, 'Shall I read to you?' 'If you like you may,' he said, and she took up 'Little Dot.' She read to him that touching story. When she had finished he said, 'Read it again,' and she read it again and again, and that book led him to see his sin. He was in blank despair for many a day, but the prayer of 'Little Dot,' 'Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow,' led him to peace, and with his dying breath he prayed that prayer, rejoicing in the Saviour. When he was laid in his grave his daughter threw in a few daisies, for, she said, Little Dot threw in the daisies where the soul had been blessed, and it was Little Dot that converted my father, and I thought I ought to throw daisies, like she did, into his grave.

"Let me take you for a moment to another quiet scene, where a tract of this Society was blessed of God. A young lady of nineteen, a fair, beautiful girl, who had been in my Bible-class for many years, but had not found Christ, lay on her death-bed. There was read to her a tract. 'Only trust Him,' and she asked me again and again, many times over, to read that long prayer, and that tract was the means of leading her to her Saviour. I shall never forget that death scene. I never in my life before saw such joy and such sorrow strangely mingled together—joy, for she saw the gates of heaven open ; and sorrow, for she said, again and again, 'I have only a death-bed consecration to give Him ; I wish I had a life to give Him!' As she was dying she bade her Christian sister take the remains of the money in her desk, and give them for the purchase of copies of that tract, and 4,000 copies were scattered among the people with the money which that dying girl gave.

"Let me just mention another instance of the blessing which has come from the publications of your Society. I had a nephew, a young man. He was a brave, tall sailor boy, of six feet five inches. He went to sea as careless and thoughtless a lad as ever I knew. He never listened to his uncle's instructions ; he never listened to a word I could say to him ; but when far away in Chinese waters he went to the captain's chest and cleared it out, and he found an old book published by this Society—'Alleine's Alarm to the Unconverted.' The lad took it up, and he read it ; and it brought him to his Saviour. He died on the next voyage, and as he died his last words were, 'Farewell, mother—farewell England. Welcome Jesus—welcome eternity—welcome Heaven!' "

THE REV. C. H. SPURGEON

then gave the concluding address, the substance of which is printed on another page of this issue.

STRIKING CASES OF REFORMED DRUNKARDS.

AT the meeting of the Wesleyan Home Missionary Society, in London, the Rev. John Stephenson, Norwich district missionary, said, "Not far from one of our preaching places was a public-house called the 'White Horse ;' and I announced that I would run a horse against the publican's horse ; the news spread, and the farm men came in from a great distance. I preached on 'Death on the Pale Horse,' and one young man came down the aisle to the prayer-meeting, looking as though he heard the hoof of the pale horse after him. That young man found the Lord, and the character of that village was greatly changed. In my own district of Norwich and Lynn, God has converted some of the most abandoned sinners in the place. One evening I had impressed upon my mind as a text, 'He that being often reproved hardeneth his neck shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.' A man in the village—a backslider—had been going from public-house to public-house ridiculing religion and holding up that very passage to scorn and contempt. He attended God's house that night, heard that very text preached from, was struck with conviction, and found the blessing of God. A friend took that man home and said to his wife, "I have not brought you a new husband, but your own husband improved into a new man.'

"A man who had been very respectable was brought down through drink. He went home tipsy one Saturday night, but was induced to attend the Methodist chapel on the following evening ; he was struck with conviction, and found mercy. I got him taken back to the situation he had lost, and last Thursday night I saw him in his class-meeting happy in the Lord. If any person askes me what was the greatest barrier in carrying on his work, I would say, drink. Some years ago I visited a good man, whose wife was so tipsy that she could not pour out the tea. The man said he was covered with shame for me to see it, and told me he had poured the drink down the sink again and again, but all to no purpose. That woman's intemperance killed her husband, and when he was lying dead she took a sermon and sat down to read it as his body lay upon the bed. It is my custom when men are converted to God to try and induce them to sign the temperance pledge.

"After going into thousands of homes of the working-men in this country, and seeing so much discomfort, I have come to the conclusion that when the bread-winner comes home from the field or the factory, and finds no comfort, he goes to the public-house in order to find brighter lights and warmer fires. What is wanted is that the girls in day-schools should be taught to cultivate habits of tidiness, frugality, sobriety, and religion ; and then as wives they will be powerful auxiliaries in promoting the great temperance movement."

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50 per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to MR. BENJAMIN AITKEN, 63 Bible House, New York.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of back numbers to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

Persons requiring single or special copies can obtain them most conveniently through

NEWSDEALERS.

Any complaint that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer is promptly attended to if we are given the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, May 26th, at 12.15 P.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The National Republican Convention assembled at Chicago is the centre of political interest, and tidings of its action are eagerly anticipated. Louisiana sent eight Grant and eight Sherman delegates. The Colorado convention instructed its delegates for Grant, but passed a complimentary resolution on the Blaine candidature. It is estimated that the ex-President's supporters at Chicago number at least 315, or 64 short of a majority, and those politicians interested in his nomination claim for him a still higher number. If the unit rule is enforced, the chances of General Grant's nomination will be materially increased, as both New York and Pennsylvania will then be solid for him; but should the unit rule be set aside, and delegates allowed to vote according to their individual preferences, the recent declaration of delegates in both States shows that he will lose many votes which in the various estimates have been counted for him.

The Demand Made by Mr. Evarts on Great Britain for damages on account of the violation of treaty rights in the attack on the schooners in Fortune Bay, in January, 1878, was rejected somewhat haughtily by the Conservative administration, but the Gladstone ministry admits that America has ground for complaint, and has suggested that the matter be settled by arbitration.

The Senate passed Mr. Morgan's Joint Rule for the government of the electoral count, by a strictly party vote, on May 24th. The rule was energetically opposed by Senators Conkling, Edmunds, and other prominent members of the Republican party, on the ground that it placed in the hands of the party which happened to be in the majority in Congress, the power of thwarting the will of the people. It was also urged that the effect of the rule would be to make Congress practically a Returning Board, the functions of which would extend to the qualifications of individual electors. Mr. Thurman, in defending the action of the Democratic party, contended that the powers which had been criticised were similar to those conferred by the Electoral Commission Bill, which had been supported by Mr. Conkling and other Republican Senators.

The Morgan rule is one of four measures dealing with the election laws which have been presented to Congress by the Democratic party. The other three are: 1. The bill changing the mode of appointment of the special deputy marshals. 2. A bill prohibiting marshals from arresting without legal process; and 3. A law which prohibits marshals from arresting any election officer while in the performance of his duties on election day. It will be seen that, although dealing with different questions in connection with the subject, the same principle is involved in all the four measures.

A Business Failure of a Magnitude unequalled since the panic of 1873 gave a shock to commercial and financial circles last week. The suspension of the Reading Railroad Company, promptly followed by that of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, involves an aggregate capital of $188,000,000 besides a heavy mortgage debt. The two enterprises were practically one; the failure of the one necessarily brought down the other. The extent of the companies' operations may be gathered from the fact that they controlled 800 miles of road, 150 miles of canal, a line of iron steamers, and held more coal territory than any corporation in the world. The failure affected the financial markets in all the great cities, and depressed all American securities.

The Catastrophe in the Madison Square Garden has caused the Mayor of New York to move against the Superintendent of Buildings, whom he charges with incompetency, negligence, and corruption. The verdict of the coroner's jury in the case, reflected on the same official, and if the Mayor has substantial grounds for his accusations, the interests of the public demand that prompt measures be taken to prevent the recurrence of so terrible a calamity.

The Sudden and Excessive Heat which prevailed during the last few days of the past month produced considerable suffering and caused many deaths. The thermometer in New York for several consecutive days registered ninety-four degrees in the shade, the highest point the mercury is known to have reached in any month of May during this century. The average number of deaths per day in the city of New York during May is 68, but since the prevalence of the heat-wave they have been over 120. Many sad cases are reported of persons leaving their homes to go to their business in the morning in robust health, and being stricken down with the heat and dying before night. To those who are putting off all considerations of religion to a period of sickness, and who are neglecting to seek the Saviour in the present, these sudden deaths address a solemn warning (Prov. 27 : 1).

The American Missionary Association, at its annual meeting held at Boston on May 26, reported that it was just entering on its nineteenth year of work in the South, during which time it expended $4,800,000, $3,000,000 of which were employed in the education of the colored race. During the same period it sent into the South over 5300 missionaries and teachers. It has nineteen educational institutions in its jurisdiction, and sixty-five churches have grown up under its auspices. Over 15,000 pupils were taught by graduates from its institutions during the past year. Mr. Thomas Bicknell, in describing a recent tour in the South, said that there were no better schools in the country to-day than those in that part of it, and that the ruling sentiment was in favor of popular education.

Mr. Moody's Farewell to St. Louis.—On Tuesday, May 25th, Mr. Moody held a reception in the new building in St. Louis which by his efforts has been secured for the Young Men's Christian Association. The ladies of several churches, aided by the young men of the association, provided and served ice-cream and other refreshments. A very large number of people attended the reception, expecting to say "good-by" to Mr. Moody; but very few were able to do so, as most of his time was occupied at a little table in one corner of the lecture-room, writing "Compliments of D. L. Moody," on the margin of a tract on "Regeneration," written by a gentleman in England, the tracts being seized an carried off by eager hands as fast as they wer indorsed. Mr. Moody scarcely looked up o spoke to any one. At 8.30 in the evening visitors were invited to the main hall for prayers after which the writing on the margin of th tract was resumed. Mr. Moody and family lef for their Massachusetts home on Wednesday The fine building now owned and occupied b the Y. M. C. A. will remain a monument to hi energetic work for the association in St. Louis.

The General Assembly of the Presbyteria Church of the United States, convened at Mad son, Wisconsin, has passed the following resolution: "That we hereby express our gratitude t God for having furnished to the country and th world, through President and Mrs. Hayes, suc an example of practical regard for Christia principles, and that we especially recommend t the women of America the heroic stand whic has been taken by Mrs. Hayes in regard to Sal bath observance and total abstinence."

The Home for Inebriates in New York stil continues its beneficent work, although its managers grieve that, owing to a lack of funds, the are prevented doing so much good as they migh if they had larger premises to accommodate th many applicants waiting for admission. Th house can only lodge twenty-five men at on time, and there are one hundred persons desiro of sharing in the help it affords. At a rece meeting where the inmates related their exper ence, the following weighty testimony was give "Intemperance is not a disease, as some a sert. It is a sin: it promotes disease, as oth sins do. But the indulgence of the appetite f strong drink is sin, and to be cured by the blo of Christ, which cleanseth from all sin."

What Should be Done with Newspapers a periodicals after they have been read, may learned from an appeal by Dr. A. E. McDonal medical superintendent in charge of the asylu of the Department of Public Charities and C rection, who has written a letter bearing tes mony "to the very great value of the work do in supplying newspapers and periodicals to the mates of public hospitals and asylums." adds: "In the particular institutions under care the patients have derived inestimable be fit." Books, magazines, and illustrated weekl sent to the State Charities Aid Association, dropped into the boxes provided at the depo will be distributed in the hospitals and asylu Numbers of men who never attend a place worship or read religious works are, while on sick bed in a hospital, in a state mind whe tract or a Christian periodical might be means of awakening an interest in spiritual c cerns.

Henry Enders, a Scholar in the Bethel S day-school at Cincinnati, Ohio, the largest S day-school in the world, had his hand torn between the bumpers of a train on the Lit Miami Railroad last fall. He was very pati and gentle in his suffering, but lockjaw set and the day he died, having recovered power of speech, he called his mother and s to her: "Mother, come help me to sing Bethel Sunday-school hymn, 'Safe in the a of Jesus.'" With a clear, strong voice he joi her in singing, and as he closed the lines,

> "Hark, 'tis the voice of angels,
> Borne in a song to me;
> Over the fields of glory,
> Over the jasper sea,"

he fell asleep in death, and passed away to home of the soul beyond.

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchm (London) for May may be obtained at the of of the CHRISTIAN HERALD. Price six cents.

The Second Volume of the Christian Her comprising Nos. 37 to 62 (July to Dec. 18 may be had, elegantly bound in cloth, at No. Bible House, New York. Price $1.75.

The Debt on Dr. Talmage's Church: C tributions received during the week which en May 29, D. F. Morrow, Sugar Town La., Ephemia Morrow, $1; Mrs. P. S. Pratt, East C N. Y., $1. Total forwarded to Dr. Talmage, $3.

"Are You a Fortune-teller?"—A Bible-wo- an, working among the colored people in New rleans relates the following incident, which oc- irred a few weeks ago :

Passing along the street I noticed one man d four women standing at the door of a ouse and looking eagerly toward me. As I proached, one woman came up to me and quired, "Are you a fortune-teller?" I id, "Why do you ask?" She answered, Because you look like one." I told her I s not, but if they would all go into the room d listen to me I would read to them about fortune each of them might have—one that uld cost them nothing. I read to them the th chapter of Isaiah, and tried to tell them mething of the blessedness of religion. hile we were kneeling in prayer, the Holy irit convicted each of sin; four of them ex- essed desire for salvation, if it were not too e. As I was leaving they said, 'The Lord nt that fortune-teller here.'"

A Prosperous Year.—Dr. Murdock, Secretary the American Baptist Missionary Union, an- unces that the donations and legacies of the st month amount to $95,000, which sum ex- eds the receipts of the corresponding month the previous year by $35,000, and is the larg- sum ever received in one month. The total eipts for the year, from donations and lega- s, are $191,043, which amount will probably increased by at least $50,000 from other rces.

A Man who had been given up as a Hopeless nkard, but who has now been for some time pletely reformed, explained at a prayer-meet- on May 25th the only means which, in his nion, were efficacious in such cases as his. said: "I tried every means of deliverance, all in vain. I signed the pledge; I went to inebriate asylum; I knelt down and asked to take my life away if I ever tasted liquor in. But I did not want a correct life for the e of serving God, but only for my own sake, so the Lord did not answer my prayers. mother's prayers for my salvation were wered, and Jesus led me to Himself. In the rs which have followed, amid all the many uences for evil in the life of a large city, I e proved Jesus to be an all-sufficient Saviour. sent His word and healed me."

Wall Street Speculator Committed Suicide May 23d. He had realized a considerable une in trade, and had retired with the inten- of spending the rest of his life in quiet, but subsequently contracted a passion for spec- ing in shares. He was unsuccessful, and lost vily. The excitement and vexation over- ned his reason, and he shot himself. This is of many instances, constantly occurring in ch the pursuit of riches becomes a mania and rates to the injury of mind and body. The on is continually being taught that those devote their lives to the acquisition of lth "pierce themselves through with many ows" (1 Timothy 6 : 10).

School over Two Centuries Old.—The ool of the Collegiate Dutch Church in New k celebrated its two hundred and thirty-third iversary on May 27th. It was founded in 7 by nine men, chosen for the first time hat year by the Director and Council of New sterdam, under authority of the Dutch gov- ment, being a school in connection with the blished Dutch Church. For more than one dred years the school was kept in various es in the neighborhood of Bowling Green in d apartments. In 1759 it was removed to Street, and thereafter to other localities, il the present permanent school was built.

Terrible Railroad Accident Occurred to a day excursion train which left Big Trees on 23d for Santa Cruz, Cal., on the occasion he Independent Rifle Picnic. There were rly two hundred persons on the train. At a ve in the road the first car jumped the track he left and the second car to the right, a d remaining on the track. The people on first two cars were thrown into a confused mass toward the bank, the cars passing over those who were thrown across the track. Those unhurt immediately set to work to assist the wounded and look after the dying and dead. Fourteen dead bodies were extricated, and twenty-five wounded persons were removed, many of whom it is feared will not recover from their injuries.

The calamity is another warning against the sin of Sabbath breaking. It is a fearful thing to be hurried into eternity while in the act of violating the law of God.

The Increase of Female Drunkenness.—At a meeting of the Women's Christian Temperance Union in New York on May 24th, the managers stated in their report that the progress of their work had made them painfully aware of the increase of drunkenness among women, not only among the poor but among the rich and gifted, and the responsibility of work thus cast upon temperance workers was great. The Union was discouraged by the lack of interest shown by the churches, but had resolved to work for the establishment of a home for drunken women.

A Swearing Son was Reclaimed in Answer to prayer recently in Buffalo. He was the son of godly parents in Syracuse, and had left that place for Buffalo, where he found employment in a store. Shortly after a gentleman, resident at Syracuse, visited Buffalo, and, being in the store where the young man was engaged, heard him utter a terrible oath. On returning home he told the young man's parents that he had heard their son thus swear. They said nothing in reply, and the man expressed surprise that they were unconcerned when told that their son, so piously trained, should so deport himself. "You will never hear him swear again," said the father.

That son had come home bringing good news. The previous night he had been laid under deep conviction of sin, and could get no rest until he cried to God for mercy. "Were you not praying for me, father and mother?" he asked. They had been. While they were agonizing in prayer at home their son was brought to his Saviour.

A Boy Eleven Years of Age Died from Intoxication in New York on May 26th. He was employed in an office in Washington Street, and drank a quantity of whiskey given him by a man in the office. He became completely inebriated, and in his stupor fell from a window into a paved yard. It is satisfactory to learn that the coroner ordered the arrest of the man who gave the boy the spirit which caused his death. It is to be feared that there are also many persons having the control of children who are contributing to their moral and physical death by giving them small quantities of intoxicating liquor. Children acquire very easily an appetite for strong drink, and those who encourage such a propensity incur an appalling responsibility.

A Portrait and Life of the Rev. J. T. Inskip, editor of the Christian Standard and Home Journal, will (God willing) be given in next week's CHRISTIAN HERALD, together with some particulars of the great evangelizing tour round the world, upon which Mr. and Mrs. Inskip, with a party of other ladies and gentlemen, are to start on the 26th of June.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works.—We have much pleasure in announcing that another large consignment of volumes by this eminent author and preacher has been received. They are now on sale at the office of the CHRISTIAN HERALD, No. 63 Bible House, New York, and are offered at prices so low as to bring them within the reach of every one. Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with photograph of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Ploughman's Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth, 60 cents. The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volume of fifty sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, a homiletical exposition of the book of Psalms, five vols., as far as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon's Birthday-Book. This popular gift-book contains a suitable passage selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for every day in the year, with a blank space opposite for autographs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon appear at their respective birthdays. The book is elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cents. Remittances should accompany orders.

SENTENCE OF DEATH, THE DEATH OF SELF-TRUST.

A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"But we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead."—2 CORINTHIANS 1 : 9.

Encouraging Effect of Scripture Biographies—Paul's Heavy Trials—The Good Effect of such Affliction—I. The Disease, Trusting in Self—1. All Men Liable to it—2. Evil in All Men as it is Evil in an Apostle—3. It must be Evil, as God Interposed to Save Paul from it—4. It is Very Hard to Cure—II. The Treatment—Sentenced to Death—By the Conditions of Life—Echoed by Self-Consciousness—Produced a Sense of Helplessness—A Strong Man Drowning—Precautions in his Rescue—III. The Cure—Prevented Trusting in Self—Brought to Trust in God—The Spiritual Balance-Sheet—Self a Liability not an Asset—Danger of Life.

WE are justified, dear friends, in speaking about our own experience when the mention of it will be for the benefit of others. Especially is this the case with leaders in the church such as Paul; for their experience is rich and deep, and the rehearsal of it comes with great weight, and is peculiarly valuable. We are all the better when we are distressed for discovering that such an one as Paul was also subject to heaviness: we feel safe in following the line of conduct which was marked out by the great Apostle, and we are hopeful that if he came out of his troubles which were so great, we may also be delivered out of ours which are comparatively so little.

These footprints on the sand of time help us to take heart. By tracing the footsteps of the flock, we are helped to return to the fold and to the shepherd. It would have been a great calamity if such men as David and Paul had, through a fear of seeming egotistical, withheld from us a sight of their inner selves. God has been pleased to fill a large part of the Bible with biographies and histories of human actions, in order that we who are men ourselves may learn from them.

God grant us grace to make good use of the treasure of experience which is stored up for us in His word! How rich, how varied, how admirably selected! If one man can learn by the life of another, surely we ought to learn from such memorable lives as those immortalized in the Scriptures. Especially may we see ourselves as in a mirror while we steadily look into the heart of Paul.

The particular experience of which Paul speaks was a certain trial, or probably series of trials, which he endured in Asia. You know how he was stoned at Lystra, and how he was followed by his malicious countrymen from town to town wherever he went, that they might excite the mob against him. You recollect the uproar at Ephesus, and the constant danger to which Paul was exposed from perils of all kinds; but it must not be forgotten that he appears to have been suffering at the same time grievous sickness of body, and that the whole together caused very deep depression of mind. His tribulations abounded: without were fightings and within were fears.

I call to your notice the strong expressions which he uses in the eighth verse: "We were pressed," he says. The word is such as you would use if you were speaking of a cart loaded with sheaves till it could not bear up under the weight: it is overloaded, and threatens to break down and fall by the way. Or the word might be used if you spoke of a man who was weighted with too great a burden, under which he was ready to fall: or perhaps, better still, if you were speaking of a ship which had taken too much cargo, and sank nearly to the water's edge, looking as if it must sink altogether through excessive pressure. Paul says that this was his condition of mind when he was in Asia: "We were pressed."

To strengthen the language he adds, "out of measure." He was pressed out of measure; he could convey no idea of the degree of pressure put upon him—it seemed to be beyond the measure of his strength. Then he adds another word, "above strength," because a man may be pressed out of measure, and yet he may have such remarkable strength that he may bear up under all. Paul says that the pressure put upon him was beyond his strength ; he was quite unable to cope with it, and his spirits so failed him that he adds, "insomuch that we despaired even of life."

He gave himself up for a dead man, for no way of escape was visible to him. Into whatsoever town he entered he was followed by the Jews ; the fickle mob soon turned against him ; even the converts were not always faithful. He had been stoned and beaten with rods, and men had sworn to take his life. Perils of robbers beset him in lonely places, while tumult and assault befell him in the cities. Meanwhile, the thorn in his flesh worried him, afflictions and cares of all kinds weighed upon him, and altogether his mind was bowed down under the pressure which had come upon him. What a deep bass there is in this note, "We were pressed out of measure, above strength, insomuch that we despaired even of life!" May we be spared so grievous a condition, or, if that cannot be, may we be profited by it.

We shall in the sermon of this morning, as the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, may help us, endeavor to show the reason for such affliction, and the good effect of it. First, I shall direct your attention to the disease mentioned in the text as one to be prevented by the sentence of death—"that we should not trust in ourselves." Secondly, we shall dwell for a little upon the treatment, "we had the sentence of death in ourselves ;" and, thirdly, we will observe the cure, "we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead."

I. The first point is

THE DISEASE

—the tendency to trust in ourselves.

1. And we remark upon it, first, that this is a disease to which all men are liable, for even Paul was in danger of it. I do not say that Paul did trust in himself, but that he might have done so, and would have done so, if it had not been for the Lord's prudent dealings with him both in the matter of this great trial in Asia and in the incident of the thorn in the flesh. Where a sharp preventive is used it is clear that a strong liability exists.

My brethren, I should have thought that Paul was the last man to be in danger of trusting in himself : so singularly converted, so remarkably clear in his views of the gospel ; indeed, so thorough in his faith, so intense in his zeal, so eminent in his humility was Paul that all could see that his reliance was upon grace alone. No writer that ever lived has set in so clear a light the fact that all things are of God, and that we must walk by faith and depend alone upon God if we would find salvation and eternal life : and yet you see, my brethren, it was possible that the great teacher of grace should have trusted in himself.

It is plain, then, that no clearness of knowledge, no purity of intent, and no depth of experience can altogether kill in our corrupt nature the propensity to self-reliance. I have heard men say several times, and I have been ashamed as I have heard the boast, "I am sure there is no likelihood that I should ever trust in myself ; I know better." Brother, you are trusting in yourself when you say so : the subtle poison is in your veins even now. You do not know what folly you can commit. You are such a fool that even while you say, "I know my folly," you are probably even then betraying your self-conceit. What do we know? We know not what spirit we are of. We are capable of almost everything that the devil is capable of. Ay, and if the grace of God should leave us, though we had been exalted to stand like Paul and say, "I am not a whit behind the very chief of the apostles," yet should we fall, like Lucifer, and perish with pride. The silliest of the vices may overcome the wisest of saints.

Trust in self is one of the most foolish of sins, though the commonness of it hides its contemptible character. When we say, "I am surprised that I should have acted so unwisely," we betray our secret pride, and confess that we thought ourselves wonderfully wise. If, my brother, you knew yourself you would not be surprised at anything that you might do. If you had a proper estimate of yourself it would rather cause you surprise that you were ever right than that you were sadly wrong, for such is the natural weakness, folly, and vanity of our deceitful hearts, that when we err, even in the most foolish way, it may be said of us that we are only acting out our own selves, and we should do the same again, if not worse, were we left by the Spirit of God.

2. Notice, secondly, that trusting in self is evil in all men, since it was evil in an apostle. Paul speaks of it as a fault, which God in mercy prevented, "that we should not trust in ourselves." Why, beloved, if you or I were to trust in ourselves, we should be fit objects for ridicule and derision, for what is there in us that we can trust to? But as for Paul, in labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, laying himself out for the church of God with heroic zeal, and wearing himself out with self-denials, at first sight it seems that there was somewhat in him whereof he might glory.

If this be so : if his revelations from God, if his deep experience, if his intense consecration, if his remarkable wisdom, if his splendid education, if his logical mind and fervent spirit—if all these combined could not warrant him in trusting to himself, what folly would be ours if we became self-sufficient? If a lion's strength be insufficient, what can the dogs do? If the oak trembles, how can the brambles boast? If such poor things as we are dare to be self-confident, we deserve to smart for it.

3. We see, dear friends, in the next place, that it must be highly injurious to trust in ourselves, since God himself interposed to prevent his dear servant from falling into it. The Lord warded off the evil by sending Paul a great trouble when he was in Asia : thus doth our all-wise and almighty God arrange providence to prevent His servants from falling into self-trust.

Peradventure, our heavenly Father is at this present time afflicting some of you, denying you your heart's desire, or taking from you the delight of your eyes, placing you in circumstances where you are puzzled and bewildered, and do not know what to do at all ; and all for this reason, that you may become sick of yourself and fond of Christ ; that you may know your own folly, and may trust yourself with purpose of heart to the divine wisdom : for, rest assured, nothing can happen to you that is much worse than to trust yourselves.

Let me, then, think most solemnly of the fact that if I am relying upon myself for acceptance with God, or for power to serve him, I am cursed. I am so, and I must be so, because trusting in myself means idolatry, and idolatry is a cursed thing. The self-truster puts himself into God's place, for God alone is to be relied upon. "Trust in him at all times ; ye people, pour out your heart before him." Trusting in yourself, you lift yourself into the throne where God alone may sit, and so you become a traitor. To trust yourself is the result of a gross falsehood, and it also imputes falsehood to the God of truth ; for you do, as it were, deny that God can be believed, and you assert that you can be trusted ; whereas, the Lord declares that no man is the proper object of trust. "He that trusteth in his own heart," saith he, "is a fool ;" but you will not have it so, and therefore you give God the lie.

4. Yet, brethren, this fourth remark must be made, that this evil is for it seems that to prevent it in Paul it was necessary for the Great Physician to go the length of making him feel the sentence of death in himself ; nothing short of this could cure the tendency. On another occasion it is written, "Lest I should be exalted above measure, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me." In the case mentioned in our text the buffeting of Satan does not seem to have sufficed ; but God in his providence and love saw it necessary to cause the sentence of death to ring out its knell in the apostle's heart.

VERY HARD TO CURE ;

A sentence of death ! Can you conceive the feeling of a man who has just seen the judge put on the black cap and pronounce sentence o death. The condemned cell, the iron bars, the prison fare, the grim warders, these are nothing but sentence of death—sentence of death ! Thi is terrible. Paul must feel that woe. A shar knife was needful to cut out the cancer of self trust even from such an one as Paul. This bit ter potion, bitter as gall, he must drink even t the dregs. The sentence must not only be i his ear, but be in his very self. "We had th sentence of death in ourselves." Nothing shor of this could prevent his being polluted wit self-trust ; for if less suffering would have suf ficed, the Lord would have spared him so drea a sorrow.

As stones fall toward the earth, so do w gravitate toward self. If we are zealous, sel trust says, "What a zealous man you are, yc can certainly carry everything before you."
we grow diffident, then this same pride whi pers, "What a humble, modest person you are you are not conceited or rash, you can well l trusted. If God grants us a little success working for him we blow the trumpets that men may be aware of it. Our Lord can scarce send us on the commonest errand witho danger of our becoming like Jack-in-office, t proud to be borne with. The Lord cannot allc us a little sweet communion with Christ b what we say, "Oh, what joy I have had. Wl delights at his table ! What a precious seas of private prayer ! I am somebody."

Yes, we are prone to sacrifice before this bas of idols—I say the basest of idols, for sur there is no idolatry so utterly degrading as worship of one's self. Alas, we cannot get of the flavor of the Egyptian leeks and onio self clings to us as a foul odor not to be got of our unclean flesh. Does the Lord teach much of His word? Then we grow proud knowledge. Does the Lord help us to com His people? Then we set up at once for so thing wonderful in the Church. Does Ch reveal Himself to us as he does not to the wo Ah, then our heads are ready to smite the st we are so great. God save us from this su malady, this spiritual leprosy. I think I add, even if nothing else but the sentenc death in ourselves can stop us from trustin ourselves, then let even this remedy be used

II. But now I invite you for a few minute look at

THE TREATMENT

ordained for the apostle's cure : "We hac he sentence of death in ourselves," which me s, first, that he seemed to hear the verdict of a th passed upon him by the conditions which surro d-ed him. So continually hounded by his licious countrymen, he felt certain that one ay or other they would compass his destruc n, so frequently subject to popular violenc he felt that his life was not worth a moment's r-chase ; and, withal, so sick in body and s depressed in spirit he felt that he might a ny moment expire.

The original conveys the idea, not only f a verdict from without, but of an answer of a ent from within. There was an echo in his cons us- ness, an inward dread, a sort of present ent that he was soon to die. The world threa ned him with death, and he felt that one of ese days the threat would be carried out, and hat very speedily. And yet it was not so ; h survived all the designs of the foe. My bre ren, we often feel a thousand deaths in fearin one.
We die before we die, and find ourselves a e to die again. Death seems certain, and y the bird escapes even out of the fowler's hand Just when he was about to wring its neck flew aloft. Hark, how it sings, far above his ach.

"Unto God the Lord belong the issues from death." A witty saying puts it, "Let us never say die till we are dead;" but then we shall most truly say we live for ever and ever. Let us postpone despair till the evil comes.

Into a low state of spirit was Paul brought: death appeared imminent, and his eye of faith gazed into the eternities, and this prevented his trusting in himself. The man who feels that he is about to die is no longer able to trust in himself. After this manner the remedy works our health. What earthly thing can help us when we are about to die? Paul needed not to ay, "My riches will not help me," for he had no wealth. He had no need to say, "My lands nd broad acres cannot comfort me now," for he had no foot of land to call his own: his whole state lay in a few needles, with which he made nd mended tents. His trade implements and manuscript book or two were all his store.

He says, in effect, "Nothing on earth can elp me now. My tongue, with which I preach-d, cannot plead with death, whose deaf ear no ratory can charm. My epistles and my power f writing cannot stand me in any stead, for no en can arrest the death-warrant: it is written, nd I must die. Friends cannot help me. Titus, imothy, none of these can come to my aid. either Barnabas nor Silas can pass through he death-stream with me: I must ford the tor-ent alone." He felt as every man must who is a ue Christian, and is about to die, that he must ommit his spirit unto Christ, and watch for his ppearing. He determined, whether he did die live, that he would spend and be spent for he Lord Jesus.

What was more, I think Paul means here that e sentence of death which he heard outside rought within his soul a sense of entire helpless-ss. He was striving to fight for the kingdom nd gospel of Christ, but he saw that he must baffled if he had nothing to rely upon but mself; he was hampered and hemmed in on ery side by the opposing Jews, who would not rmit him to go about his work in peace. He spaired even of his life.

He was not able to get at his work, for these rsons were always about him, howling at him, tering falsehoods against him, and hindering m. He became so worried and wearied that was pressed and oppressed, immeasurably aded and brought into such a state of mind at all inward comfort failed him, and he was liged to look above for succor. His faculties re cramped as with a mortal rigor, his reason gued against him, and his imagination rather eated terrors than expectations. He knew the perience so poetically described by Kirke hite in his hymn upon the star of Bethlehem:

"Deep horror then my vitals froze; Death-struck, I ceased the tide to stem."

nd he also knew the joy of the other two lines the verse—

"When suddenly a star arose:
It was the star of Bethlehem."

ul's mind was so struck with death within nself that he could not stem the torrent, and uld have drifted to despair had he not given nself up into the hands of grace divine, and oved the loving power of God.

Ah, there are times with some of us when we pear to lose all power to think aright, when set ourselves to a subject, and our brain will t exercise itself upon it; when we wish to do ht, and cannot tell which of two courses is proper one. At times we cannot make out way; we kneel to pray, and find that we nnot pray as we were wont to do, the whole rgy and force of our spirit seems to be shriv-ed up as though the simoom had blown over meadow of our soul, and left every blade of ss and floweret dead beneath its burning ath. Such things do happen unto men, and en they happen this is God's severe but effect- treatment, whereby he prevents their trust- in themselves.

think I need not say any more about this edy, except to notice that the Lord uses the same treatment in dealing with men who as yet are not saved. Why is it that one of the first works of grace on a man is to take away all his comfort and hope? I will soon tell you.

Suppose that a poor man had fallen into such a state of mind that he could not bear the sun, but lived in perpetual candle-light. He dreamed that no light could equal his poor tapers, and he despised the sun—candles for him, he hated daylight. By the way, I am not wild in this supposition, for there are people who cannot worship God without candles, even in the daylight, and yet they are not said to be insane. But to return to the imaginary case: our poor, weak-minded friend is prejudiced against the sun, and we aim to bring him into brightness. How shall we proceed? I think we had better blow out his candles, and leave him in the dark, and then, perhaps, he will be willing to try the light of heaven. Then I would take him out of doors and let him see the sun; and, after he had once beheld its superior light, he would never be able to praise his poor candles again. The first thing is to blow his candles out; and the first thing to bring a man to Christ, the divine light, is to put out his own feeble tapers of self-trust.

I have heard of one who fell into the water and sank, and a strong swimmer standing on the shore did not at the same instant plunge in, though fully resolved to rescue him. The man went down the second time, and then he who would rescue him was in the water swimming near him, but not too near, waiting very cautiously till his time came. He who was drowning was a strong, energetic man, and the other was too prudent to expose himself to the risk of being dragged under by his struggles. He let the man go down for the third time, and then he knew that his strength was quite exhausted, and swimming to him he grasped him and drew him to shore. If he had seized him at first, while the drowning man had strength, they would have gone down together.

The first part of human salvation is the sentence of death upon all human power and merit. When all hope in self is quite gone, Christ comes in, and with his infinite grace rescues the soul from destruction. As long as you think you can swim you will kick, and struggle, and drown; but when you see the futility of all your own efforts, and perceive that you are without strength, you will leave yourselves with Jesus, and be saved. The eternal power will come in when your power goes out. The sentence of death in yourselves will prevent your trusting in yourselves; death recorded and death confessed to be a just penalty will expel all vain hope, and grace will be welcomed, and the heart will believe with a true faith wrought in it by the Spirit of God.

III. Thirdly, let us think of

THE CURE.

It was sharp medicine, but it worked well with Paul, for we find first that Paul's self-trust was prevented: any rising token of it was effectually removed. He says, "We had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves." Under this influence he preached as though he ne'er might preach again, a dying man to dying men. To bring death very near to the mind is a solemn, searching, sanctifying exercise.

Remember, this was only half the result in Paul's case, for he does not only say that by this sentence of death he was delivered from trusting in himself, but he was led to trust "in God which raiseth the dead." Now, my brethren, we have come out of the gloom of the sepulchre into the glory of the resurrection. "God which raiseth the dead" is our hope. The doctrine of the resurrection is essential to the Christian system, and Paul takes it for granted. When he was delivered from trusting in himself, because of the sentence of death, the first thing he did was to trust in the God and Father of his risen Lord.

For first he argued thus: If I die, what matters it? God can raise me from the dead. If they stone me, if they smite me with the sword, if they fling me headlong into the sea, I shall rise again.

He inferred, also, that if God could raise him from the dead He could preserve him from a violent death. He that could restore him if he were dead and rotten in the tomb could certainly keep him from dying till all his life-work was accomplished. This inference is true.

"Plagues and deaths around me fly,
Till he bids I cannot die;
Not a single shaft can hit Till the God of love thinks fit."

Immortal is every believer till his work is done. Paul felt this and was comforted.

Brethren, we need to get away more and more from ourselves, and we shall never do it till we write this down in our books, that self is dead, —we must make a corpse of it. We sometimes hear that in setting forth the balance-sheet of a banking establishment a mistake was committed by putting down a doubtful asset at too high a value; we must keep clear of such a blunder in making up our spiritual balances. There is no fear of undue depreciation if you say of anything which belongs to self, "It is good for nothing: set it down as worthless." If, then, you have written yourself down at twenty shillings in the pound, my dear brother, I warn you that you will never realize it. But you say, "I never thought to get more than half-a-crown in the pound out of self"—you will never get that in good money. "Well, I will put it down at a farthing in the pound." You will never realize even that; it will cost you more to get it than it is worth: it is a deception altogether.

He that trusts in himself not only gets not a farthing in the pound out of what he trusted in, but he is a loser by his foolish confidence. I should not like to realize myself; it would be an awful loss, and leave a great gap in my exchequer; for what am I but a mass of wounds, a bag of necessities, a mountain of weakness, a world of infirmities, and nothing else worth mentioning? Do not put yourself down in your spiritual assets at all except as a debt, a liability, and an incumbrance. Say, "Self is dead," and you will be happy if you find that he is dead, for the most of your trouble will come from his being too much alive. That old corrupt nature —ah, the vagabond, if he were indeed dead, and would never struggle again, what a mercy! But there is life in the old dog yet, life of a troublesome sort, full of mischief. Wisdom reckons self as a dead and worthless thing, to be mortified, but never to be trusted. Folly talks otherwise, and bids you think well of yourself, but do not listen to its dotings. He says, "You are getting an old man now; those gray hairs have brought experience and wisdom.

No; but there is no fool like an old fool; mind you do not become another example of that old saying. Do not say to yourself, "Ah! now you are a man of wide experience, you are; you are not like those narrow-minded people who never went beyond their cottage or the hedges of their little farm. You have had a splendidly wide experience." Ah! but no blunder is so great as the blunder of a great man: no man is capable of doing so much mischief as the man who has capacity for doing great good.

"Oh, but," says another, "I am so careful, so guarded, that there can be no fear of me." Yet no one is so likely to sleep as the watchman who flatters himself that he does not even doze. So it used to be in the old days; and you watchful people are sure to go wrong if you are proud of being watchful. If, on the other hand, you feel that you are not as watchful as you ought to be, and pray to be made more so, you will be kept right. Trust in ourselves is a kind of mania which will breed worms and stink, and it will make our house unbearable and ourselves sick. Sweep it out! Oh, for a state of weakness that is strong in the divine strength. Oh, to be nothing, to be nothing, that God may be all in all! Amen and amen. So let it be.

[Portion of Scripture read before Sermon—
2 Corinthians i.]

WHAT COMING WARS MAY WE EXPECT?*

By Rev. M. Baxter.

(Continued from page 349.)

The Sixth Headship—Conditions of the Seventh fulfilled in Napoleon—The Revival of the Dynasty Predicted—Are you for the Lamb?

THE REV. W. MEYNELL WHITTEMORE, D.D., Rector of St. James, London, wrote as follows in a discourse, published in 1853, upon "Napoleon, the Seventh Head:"

"The seven-headed wild beast of Revelation represents the political Roman Empire; and its sixth governmental head, that was in actual power in St. John's time, A.D. 97, was the Roman emperorship, which was continued by a succession of emperors until it was abdicated by the Emperor Francis of Austria, in 1806, and thus became extinct. At this period, then, we are to look for the rise of the seventh Roman head or sovereignty.

"We find the conditions or qualifications of this new Seventh Head furnished in Napoleon Bonaparte's

FRENCH EMPERORSHIP.

"First. In 1805 Napoleon I. became King of Italy; and after the above-mentioned abdication of Francis, it was decreed that the Roman States held by the Pope should be united to the French Empire, and that the French Imperial Prince (Napoleon II.) should be called the King of Rome; and that the French emperors should be crowned at St. Peter's in Rome, as well as at Notre Dame in Paris. The power of Napoleon I. rapidly extended over the western Latin empire. This Seventh Head was distinct in its official designation from the preceding Six Heads. Its decree affirmed that the city of Rome should be called the second city of the empire, thus depriving it of its metropolitan dignity, although claiming its possession. It was a Roman Head. Its special military ensign was the Roman eagle; its representative attempted the revival in himself of the characteristics of Augustus Cæsar, Justinian, and Charlemagne; its manners and pretensions were assimilated to those of ancient Rome; the descent of Bonaparte was traced to some of the Paleologi, who had taken refuge in Corsica; and the seven-hilled city of Rome was not only actually in his possession, but was officially annexed to his dominions. As the Seventh Head he towered majestically and terribly over the Latin Empire.

"2. Then the Emperor Bonaparte 'continued only a short space.' His formidable dominion ended at Waterloo, in June, 1815, after a brief existence of eleven years (Rev. 18 : 10).

"3. And it was destroyed by the stroke of a foreign sword. It seemed a mortal wound. Who that saw the fallen emperor pacing, like a shackled tiger, the prison-ground of St. Helena, could have conjectured the restoration of his dynasty? The empire seemed broken up forever (wounded to death by a sword) (Rev. 13 : 3–14).

"But it was conjectured. In 1828, the Rev. G. S. Faber published his 'Sacred Calendar,' in which he plainly asserted the revival of the French emperorship, as demanded by prophecy. He then wrote these words: 'It cannot but follow, from the very terms of the prophecy, that in the person of some or other successful adventurer, the Francic emperorship will be revived while the reanimated wild beast is emerging from the agitated abyss of some tremendous political revolution.'

"This is a remarkable instance of clear penetration into the meaning of prophecy. At the time Mr. Faber wrote there was no probability of a restoration of the French emperorship. Yet prophecy said that the slain head would revive, and so this sagacious student of the apocalypse asserted the revival of that political power which had expired at Waterloo.

"We believe that awfully important events are to be transacted subsequently to the reappearance of the seventh head of the wild beast; because when vitality is restored to the deceased Roman Empire, and to its slain seventh head, that empire—as the mystic wild beast—is to originate a gigantic confederacy against the Gospel of Christ, and is to ally Infidelity, Despotism, and Popery against the true disciples of Jesus. For when the sixth vial is poured out (Rev. 16 : 13), three unclean spirits issue from the mouths of the Dragon, the wild beast, and the false prophet, and moving among the kings, excite them to an unholy alliance and to an impious war. Their success is exhibited in the gathering of the kings to 'the battle of the great day of God Almighty.' In other words, in conjunction with the Papacy, and under the influence of Satan, will employ such demon-like influences in continental kingdoms that a fierce war will arise, directed against the Church of Christ. This will be the final struggle between the wild beast and the Lamb.

THE RENOVATED ROMAN EMPIRE,

"The coming struggle will be most emphatically a war of opinion. The battle may be political, but its spirit will be theological. The unclean spirits will animate the crusaders against Protestantism. It will be the battle of the Reformation on a larger scale, with more virulent animosities, and involving more tremendous interests.

"When will these events happen? Probably soon. We are, as it appears, living under the effusion of the (year-day) Sixth Vial. We may presently, therefore, expect the complete overthrow of the Ottoman Empire, signified by the drying up of the Euphrates.

"In a few years, then, we may expect to witness extraordinary occurrences. The Papacy, in a new inebriation of blood, will prepare for her final, insane, and furious assault on the saints of the Most High. Is she not even now, by a return to her persecuting policy, skirmishing, as the prelude to the great war? Despotism, banding the continental nations in a league against freedom, will lend its aid to the coercion of thought and the enslaving of conscience. Infidelity—the spirit of Satan—will be sure to work vigorously where Popery and Despotism rule.

"But when at last the Seventh Vial sheds its portion of wrath, there will be political confusions, general anarchy, an irruption from Russia, the destruction of Papal Rome, the overthrow of the Roman Empire, the battle of Armageddon, the conversion of the Jews, and the complete and supernatural discomfiture of the enemies of Christ.

"The question will be asked before long, Who are on the Lord's side? who? May it not be wise therefore now to ask yourselves that question, and to decide how your conduct is to be shaped should you live to take part in the great things which will soon begin to come to pass?

"ARE YOU FOR THE LAMB?

"Have you realized your need of His atoning blood? Have you looked in faith to Him, as the sacrifice for sins? have you placed your reliance on His perpetual intercession? And have you yielded yourselves—body, soul, and spirit—to his service, and for his glory? Is your life actuated by love to Jesus? Is your soul the temple of His presence? Are your energies employed in the advancement of His kingdom?

"Are you for the Lamb avowedly? Is it a fact patent to the world? Can men take knowledge of you that you are with Jesus? Are you living epistles, on whose open page you have inscribed these words, 'FOR THE LAMB'? Is there no shrinking from the confession of His name? Is there no following of your Saviour afar off?

"Are you for the Lamb exclusively? Are you for nothing else in comparison? Has He all your heart, soul, and strength? Can you abandon the world, self, ease, wealth, health, renown, happiness—all that is endeared and precious—in order to take your station in the ranks of the soldiers of the Cross?

"For the Lamb! What a privilege! To contend earnestly for His cause, to receive His approval, and to share His triumph? It is only thus that you can calmly anticipate the future, which looms terribly with its awful visions.

"But, perhaps, you are against the Lamb. Look to it. You may be mistaken without knowing it. You may think that neutrality is not enmity. But you are in error. Could you be neutral, it would be a sin. But, in fact, it is impossible to be neutral.

"If you are unconverted, you are under Satan's control, who works in the children of disobedience; you are practically leagued with the 'false prophet.' Every man, says an old author, is born with a pope in his heart. You must have something to rest upon, as a hope for eternity; and if this be not Christ, it is something which is akin to the delusions of Rome. You are depending, it may be, upon your good works, upon your prayers, your tears, your vows, your renunciation of some evil practices, your religious ceremonies, your participation in sacraments, or upon your interest in the prayers of others. If you are in such way, deriving comfort in the prospect of eternity—and most probably you are doing so, if you are not a subject of converting grace—you are, in principle, if not in name, a thorough Papist!

"Will you not be for the Lamb? If you have been undecided, be decided now. If you have not thought seriously about these things, think seriously about them now. Surrender yourself to Christ. Determine to be His forever. Resolve that, though other Lords have had dominion over you, yet henceforth you will be called by His name, and make mention of his righteousness only. Do this in dependence upon that Holy Spirit who will strengthen you with all might in the inner man.

"Let us exert ourselves for the wider diffusion of the Gospel. Let us not neglect to send it t the lands of heathenism; but let us remembe how much the Continent of Europe needs th light of its truth and the leaven of its grace Let us not quietly surrender the millions o Europe to the idolatrous thraldom of spiritua abominations. We cannot hope to evangeliz the empire, nor to convert the false prophet—they are doomed to perdition; but we ma hope to convert some of the subjects of thei kingdoms; we may save individuals. Let fresh augmented, persevering efforts be made, to cove the whole extent of the 'wild beast's' territo with the knowledge of Christ. Let us take ca and send Bibles everywhere.

"Every living person is included in the promis Him that cometh to me, I will in no wise ca out.' 'God so loved the world that He ga His only begotten Son, that whosoever believet in Him should not perish, but have everlasti life. For God sent not His Son into the wor to condemn the world, but that the wor through Him might be saved. He that believe on Him is not condemned; but he that b lieveth not is condemned already, because hath not believed in the name of the only beg ten Son of God. He that believeth on the S hath everlasting life, and he that believeth n the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of G abideth on him.' 'The Son of Man came not be ministered unto, but to minister, and to gi His life a ransom for many.'

"Let us preach the Gospel everywhere, palaces and in hovels, in the market-place a under hedges, on the highway and at the fi side. Let the word of God have free cour Let an evangelical ministry be secured eve where, at any cost. Let new lay enterprises undertaken, so as to bring the Gospel to bea where its influence is especially needed—up the multitudes of the ungodly poor which crowded in innumerable courts and alleys.

"Let the true nature of Popery be plainly forth. Let it be clearly shown how Popery hi or falsifies the Bible; prefers her saint's-day God's Sabbath; makes the Christian minist despotism over consciences; supplants, by the intercession of Mary, the mediation of Christ; converts prayer into vain repetitions; teaches the expiatory power of penances—creates a justifying righteousness out of human merits; deifies sacraments, and sends the trembling penitent for pardon to an absolving priest!

---

* Extracted from "Coming Wars," by Rev. M. Baxter, in two pamphlets—five cents each by mail. First pamphlet contains "Ten Signs of the End, and Description of Approaching Events," with two maps and four large diagrams. Second pamphlet contains valuable quotations from Forty Expositors on these events. Address, 63 Bible House, New York.

"Let us work, and hope, and wait. Work, for the night cometh; hope, for the morning of millennial joy and glory shall succeed; and wait that we may mark, amid the revolutions of empires and the distresses of nations, the wonderful accuracy of the divine prescience, the Lord's care of His people, and at last the triumph over Satan, and the conquest of the kingdoms of this world for our God and His Christ" (Rev. 9:15).

MR. SPURGEON ON THE DUTY OF DISTRIBUTING TRACTS.

At the Religious Tract Society meeting in Exeter Hall, London, the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon made the following among other remarks:

What are tracts very often but sermons which have been used as sermons, and peradventure will be used again? I heard of one who said, "They can never say that our minister preaches without heart: he has a heart, and gets his sermons by it." I have no doubt some tracts and some books that have been issued by the Tract Society and by others have been used, and so actually grow into living sermons again. If we cannot do it with our own voices, we must spread the Gospel, and the way to do it is by a tract. Do not give up the speaking for Christ. Do not believe in giving away a tract and holding your tongue. But not only speak when you have opportunity, but also give away books and tracts, and so get at more than you might be able to reach with your own voice.

How many hundreds, and even thousands, owe their conversion distinctly not to what they have heard, but to what they have read? Therefore, what God hath owned, let us continually use. Scatter tracts and books thick as the leaves of autumn. Let them fly on every wind, and fall into every home throughout all the world, for who can tell but in every case where they go, God may bless them. Let us expect great things of God.

I thank God for this Tract Society, because it works by the way of tracts. I am glad it has never given up tracts because they are not very fashionable things, and sometimes in some places heir form is very much against them. People know what a tract is, and they are on their guard gainst it. But the Tract Society is always dapting the form and matter to modern times.

I should like to ask whether each one of you is rying to do something to serve God. The tract s especially precious in my eye, because it does offer an opportunity to the weakest and the eeblest to be doing something to serve God. Set to work, and you can do this if you can do othing else—distribute tracts. It is a sorrowful hing for a man to have done nothing whatsoever or his God. I have heard of a man in the olden imes who used to say to his wife on Sunday morning, "Mary, there is a church-bell ringing, ou go to church and pray for us both." So she id; for years she went to church and prayed for hem both. One night he had a dream, and he reamed—partly superstition mixed with the ream—that he and his wife wanted to go to eaven, and they came to the gates, and Peter ame out to ascertain who they were, and when hey both hoped to enter, Peter said to the wife, You go in for both." Wherever the dream ame from, it contained a great truth. We cannot shake off our personal responsibility, and if e attempt to do so we shall lose for ourselves he eternal personal privilege. Do not give sleep o your eyes nor slumber to your eyelids till you ave trusted your Saviour and begun to serve im.

I have felt grateful to the Tract Society for eeting by new publications different sceptical ews which have sprung up. Certainly it is not every error that needs to be met by controversy. The Greek king listened to an oration in defence of Hercules, and when the orator had done he said, "It was a very fine oration, but I never heard anybody find fault with Hercules in my life." I have seen books in defence of things that nobody ever doubted, except perhaps a few obscure people, and the books in defence of the truth have rather contributed to spread doubt than to be of any service. But the Tract Society has done wise, good service in this matter. It has shown the world that if a learned man errs there is another learned man to set him right, and in whatever field it may be, whether the field of criticism or the field of science, Christianity has its champions, and can hold its own. I do not at all share in the fears of some people about the dreadful books that come out. I believe it is the people that cry out against a dreadful book that sell it generally. People buy it to see what it is.

I am also grateful to this Society for books about common secular subjects, into which godly sentiment and holy, practical precepts are interwoven, but which are not distinctly and immediately religious, because at times everybody wants to read something secular. Often a poison is insinuated into the soul in connection with the secular reading, and as all the public won't read Dr. John Owen and John Howe, they must and will at times read something that is lighter, and I am glad the Society takes care that something is provided which is really good. It may be asked, Are these good books? Well, what do you mean by "good?" Good for my grandmother who used to sit by the fireside and read the Bible? No, bless her heart! she would have said to me, "Boy, I cannot give up my Bible for all your pretty books: they will do for the children."

They may not be good books for us sober divines; but there is a servant-girl yonder, and she has got a novel: see how she is taken up with it; see the tears in her eyes—some young fellow, who will get married, after all—something dreadful, an awful murder happened, and it finishes up beautifully. [Laughter.] I say if I can get that book away and give her "Jessica's First Prayer" I shall be doing her good. I do not say that I am going to read all these books on a Sunday, or yet preach them from the pulpit; but everything in its place and order. A handsaw is an uncommonly bad thing to shave with, but it is an admirable thing if you want to get through a hard bone. So some of this literature is adapted only to its own ends, and ought never righteously to be looked upon and judged apart from the end for which it is destined.

I also feel very thankful to the Tract Society for its books for the young, and for the great work it does abroad. The needs of some of the countries on the Continent are urgent beyond expression. A Christian literature is needed for those countries which have just been emancipated from Catholicism. If it were not for this Society, some of those places would be without Protestant literature at all. Help it, then, dear friends—help it with all your hearts.

Remember the story of the man who had a band of musicians, and he wanted them to play a piece very loudly, and he said to them, "Blow!" and they blew until their cheeks were ready to burst. He said, "Louder!" and they blew again. When he said "Louder!" the next time, they replied, "It is all very well for you to say 'Louder,' but where is the wind to come from?" So you should not only cheer me in the sentiment, but help to raise the wind for this Society. You are the very people to help this one. You have heard of the Irish people that met in the vestry to consider which of the two windmills in their parish should be stopped because there was not enough wind to turn the two of them. They were exactly like those people who think they must stop giving to one or two societies because they give to so many. No; as you give, you will be prospered; as you serve the Lord you shall be enabled to serve Him.

I was noticing to-day in the "Summa" of Thomas Aquinas there is a picture of him, and Jesus Christ meeting him. Jesus says, "Thomas, thou hast served me well. With what shall I reward thee?" And Thomas answers, "With Thyself, my Lord." Oh, but that should be the very thought that should be, and will be, in every loving, earnest heart—"My Lord, I would serve Thee; and if Thou wilt accept me, and ask me what my reward shall be, I will reply, 'Thyself, my Lord. Oh, show me more of Thyself!'" Go and give tracts away, and talk about Jesus, and you shall see Him. Shut yourself up and do nothing, and you shall not behold Him.

Dr. Horatius Bonar, the Eminent Student of prophecy, in replying to a friend who had written to him during the parliamentary struggle in Great Britain, said: "The views which Scripture gives us of the condition of the world and the Church in 'the last days' are of great importance, and help us in the solution of many political problems. Departures not only from the faith, but departures from all faith, are to be expected, and revelation will ere-long cease to be recognized as our teacher. God, it is said, will not think the worse of a man for not believing the Bible; nor ought the question of faith or unbelief to be entertained by us in judging a man's character. His agreement with us in politics is to override all that. This last state of the world is now unfolding itself and developing its leaven of negativism and agnosticism in many forms. A universal solvent is at work, ejecting divine truth from all the great questions of the day. This disintegration must, ere-long, level all barriers and landmarks, leaving human self-will the master of the world. This individual self-will having assumed the noble name of liberality, is now revealing itself, and will continue to do so till it ripens into him who is to do 'according to his will'—the lawless one of the Apostle Paul. The withdrawal of the Christian element from social and political questions must not only lead to failure in their solution, but issue in results of the most disastrous kind. The exercise of that essential element must sooner or later undermine law and subvert government. It may still leave room for political Christians, but none for Christian politicians. I need not say how widely these two classes differ."

A Communion Service was held in a Cavern in Syria lately by Dr. Jessup. In a recent letter to The Observer, Dr. Jessup describes the interesting service. While visiting at Shmeir he was invited to administer the ordinance of the Lord's Supper in a house on a mountain, where a blind Christian woman lay at the point of death. A number of the members of the church at Shmeir accompanied him. Dr. Jessup says: "The house is in a cave, and the adjoining room is packed full of snow for the Beirut market next summer, and here lay the poor woman, suffering from pneumonia and rheumatic fever, and the water was dropping from the roof of the rock on one side. As there was no window in the room, the door stood open, to give us light enough to conduct the service, and the snow came drifting in. I found this poor, blind, sick woman to be Jeleely, formerly a pupil of Sidon Seminary. She insisted upon sitting up in her pallet-bed spread on a mat on the floor, while we went on with the service.

"It seemed to me a very solemn occasion, as much so as if it had been in some grand church and with a great congregation. The roaring of the tempest among the rocks outside gave us organ music on a scale not often equalled, and the dark recesses of the cave within gave a 'religious light' dim enough to awaken solemn thought, were such accessories needed at such an hour.

"The bread and the wine were passed around. Seven of us united with Jeleely in the communion, and the suffering sister again thanked us all, and, after a few verses of 'My faith looks up to Thee,' in Arabic, we bade her farewell. I shall not soon forget that communion in a cavern, on that stormy Sabbath-day."

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 351.)

Ernest and Ruth Married.

Ernest felt in every fibre of his being that Rose was sick both in body and mind, though she made vain attempts to be the shadow of the merry, light-hearted girl she had been a year ago.

He had called in a physician, who told him she was suffering from nostalgia, which he could remember as attacking himself in all its subtle force whenever he was absent as a boy from Clifford. But Rose would not listen for a moment to any mention of going back to Clifford Grange. She laughed at the idea of homesickness, and assured her father he was troubling himself for nothing. But nevertheless Ernest was troubled.

What could he do if she steadily set her face against Ruth. He could hardly breathe as he thought of it. It would be dooming his delicate little Rose to death to force her into any conflict like this. If it should prove a fresh grief to her after all the storm of trouble that had been beating against her, what must he do? If Rose had been about to marry Robert Fortescue, how timely this last event of Squire Symons' marriage would have been. That cruel blow was the true secret of Rose's illness.

It was near the close of the year, a December night, frosty and clear, with the stars glittering, and the hoar-frost pencilling out every leaf and every blade of grass. He paced to and fro under the bare chestnut trees, looking up to the lighted windows of the little room where she was waiting for him, and wondering what kept him away so late. At length, weary of his own wavering, he rang the bell and rushed quickly upstairs, so quickly that Rose was not quite prepared for him. She was leaning back languidly in her easy-chair, with her eyes closed, but as he entered she sprang up with forced gayety.

"I have some news for you, my darling," he said.

"Good news?" murmured Rose, her color going and coming, and her heart beating fast under his arm. She had only one idea of good news. Had he seen Robert? Was it all going to be right again? She believed that if he and her father could only see one another, all must come right.

"I hope so; nay, I am sure it is good news," he answered; "you are not going to be left alone much longer. I have found a companion for you."

"Is Jenny coming?" asked Rose.

"No, not Jenny; Ruth," he said, afraid to look into his daughter's face.

"Ruth!" she repeated, clasping her hands; "oh! father, I am so glad. She will help me to be good. I've not been very good lately, I know. Did you really say Ruth?"

"Yes, my darling," he said delightedly. "Ruth, our Ruth! Do you love her?'

"Oh yes!" she answered with fervor; "I love her next to you, only a very, very long way below you, father. Almost next to you," she said, her pale face growing red again as she remembered her love to Robert. "How soon will she come?" she asked after a while, with her hands on his shoulders and her shining eyes looking eagerly into his. "Is she coming directly?"

"Directly," he repeated, in a tone of unconscious gladness. "My darling," he added caressingly, "I should have married Ruth years ago, when you were almost a baby, if she would have left her father. But she would never leave him to sink into lower degradation, though I could have shielded her from every sorrow. I can shield you both from trouble, or at least I can share trouble with you. You will not be one whit less dear to me, Rose, when Ruth is my wife."

"Do you love her very much?" asked Rose.

"More than words could tell," he answered. "Ruth will be your mother, my darling. You will take her for your mother? my only fear is for you."

"Don't be afraid for me," she answered. "I love her very, very dearly; only a long, long way below you, father."

She could not grudge her father his happiness, yet it made her own lot more blank. It seemed another element in the strangeness that surrounded her. How was she to behave when he was no longer simply her father. She cried herself to sleep that night. Her heart was restless, and even this once stable love was growing an uncertain resting-place for it.

There was no reason for delay, and Ernest and Ruth were married during January in Clifford church. The marriage was kept so close a secret that no one but old Dunnit was admitted to witness the ceremony. Ruth's father gave her away with many misgivings as to the exchange he had made in taking Julia Rush in her place, and Julia herself was present at Ruth's own request. It was an intense satisfaction to her to sign her name as witness in the parish register, Julia Symons, it was the first time she had had occasion to write it, and her fingers could hardly hold the pen. Dunnit signed his name in large, crabbed characters, and clasped his hard knotty hands over the book, as he was used to do over his Bible.

"Now, the Lord love them and bless them!" he said; "surely, it's a great mystery! Ay! it's an unspeakable mystery that men like us, wi' our angers and tempers and sins, should stand in the place of our Lord to His church! Yet it's true! we live and toil for the wives at home, and life and labor 'ud be unbearable if we hadn't them to think of.

"And the Lord's life of toil and sufferin', what would that have been if He hadn't borne it for His people that He loves? It would have broken His heart long before He came to Calvary and the cross. There's only two women here," he continued, looking round at Ruth and Julia, with a smile lighting up his wrinkled face; "but let every one of us in particular so love his wife even as himself."

"That is what I have always done, and shall continue to do," said Squire Symons, turning to Ernest. "Ruth has always been a good daughter, and I trust to you to make her a good husband. We will bid you farewell here, and wish you all happiness. You are going up to the Grange to inform Mrs. Clifford of this event?"

"Yes," answered Ernest, "we must not leave without seeing my mother."

But there was no pleasure in the fulfilment of this duty. The secret had been kept from her, or otherwise it would have been no secret; but they knew what reproaches they would have to meet. As yet it had not oozed out even in the village, and by going at once to Clifford Grange they would prevent it reaching her through any other means. The house seemed quiet and desolate as they drove into the old court-yard and alighted at the ancient doorway.

Charles was away from home, and the place was empty of guests; even Jenny Britton was not allowed, on any pretext, to visit at Clifford Grange; though a desirable situation had not yet been found for her. Ernest led Ruth through the place, no longer his own, to the sitting-room, where he had heard old Charles Clifford's will read; and there sat his mother disconsolately reading an old novel, and surrounded by unbroken stillness.

"Good gracious, Ernest!" she ejaculated, as they entered; "Ernest and Ruth Symons," she added; but words failed her, as her elder son, after kissing her smooth cheek, introduced Ruth to her as his wife.

"Your wife!" she repeated, gasping with amazement and incredulity.

"We were married this morning," Ernest hastened to explain, "and are just come from the church to tell you before any one else knew. Ruth promised to be my wife eleven years ago; and now her father has married again, she felt herself free to keep her promise. Mother, we have loved each other dearly these eleven years."

"Well! well!" exclaimed Mrs. Clifford ungraciously, but kissing Ruth's offered cheek; "I always thought there was something in the background. You've been very close about it, though it will not make much difference to me as it is; and I wish you joy. Oh, yes, I wish you joy. Though how you are to live on such an income as you have, Ernest, is quite a mystery to me.

"Rose, too. I wonder how Rose will like it. Now you'll learn how unreasonable children are in setting their faces against second marriages. You never liked me marrying again; and you're going to have the same trouble I had. However, it is your own affair; and I congratulate you with all my heart, I'm sure."

She tossed back her lace lappets and stroked her hair with her white hand as she was wont to do. Except for an additional line or two on her smooth, round forehead, she looked precisely as she had done since her husband's death.

"I should have liked to have known you were going to be married," she said again peevishly; "it is disagreeable to be taken by surprise in this way. My own son, too! There is so little stirring just at present, it would have been quite a diversion to decorate the church, and get up a breakfast. Some of the county people would have some on Ruth's account. I dare say Sir John Fortescue might have been prevailed upon. But you never did ask my opinion, Ernest, or you would never have taken the estate, and then given it up again, as you did. I never knew anybody make such blunders as you do."

"I have made no blunder to-day," he said joyously. His mother's peevishness had no power to touch his happiness.

"That remains to be proved," she resumed. "'When poverty comes in at the door, love flies out at the window.' You might have been such a comfort to me! Charles invites all the riff-raff of the country here; racing men, and blacklegs, and mountebanks of every description; and then he tells me I'm too old to mix with his friends—they are not used to old women! Those are his very words, I assure you. He says my place is to look after the maids and the cooking; as if I was only his housekeeper. And, Ernest, I can't get him to pay me my income, and there are two quarters passed, and he owes me £150—one hundred and fifty pounds—and he says he has not a penny to spare. And now you have married again; and I have no comfort in either of my sons."

She melted into tears at the recital of her ow griefs. There was a dim misgiving in her min that Ernest would expect some handsome wedding-present from her; and she was feeling miserably poor as well as lonely. Charles was no paying her allowance, and he was squanderin money away on frivolous and unworthy objects The prosperity of Clifford, so carefully built u by Ernest, was already in danger of being d stroyed by Charles' extravagance.

"I will write to Charles," he said.

"I don't believe he will ever do any good, moaned his mother. "Twenty times a day I' wishing you and Rose were back again. I w mistress then; and I will say that for Ros that she never flew in my face, though yo spoiled her so. Poor Rose! she is going pay for her happy times now, with a stepmothe Don't interrupt me, Ernest. Of course she all perfection in your eyes; and I dare say s is perfect; but all the same Rose will not li it. Ruth will pardon a grieved and disa pointed mother for speaking out plainly."

"Rose and I know each other well, and lo each other dearly," said Ruth gently.

"Oh, yes!" she answered, shaking her hea "but nobody ever did love a stepmother, y know. I don't know what would have be done if Ernest had brought you here. I cou not have given up the position my poor de husband left me; and there could not ha been two mistresses of Clifford Grange."

"What will you do if Charles marries asked Ernest. "Mr. Clifford's will only ga you a right to a home in the house; it did make you absolute mistress of it. You m not expect that Charles's wife will not be s mistress here."

"In that case I should go," cried Mrs. Clifford, bursting into tears again. "My sons would drive me out of house and home. O, Ruth! pray that you may have no children to make your old age bitter. You would set your wife over me, Ernest!"

"I should certainly make my wife mistress of my home," he replied almost angrily; "but do not let that imaginary grievance vex you now, mother. We can stay no longer, for we must catch the train at twelve; but we thought it right to come up to see you before leaving."

"It would have been very odd," she answered, "if my own son was married, and I was the last person to know of it. I wish you joy; and more dutiful children than I have. Charles ran away on the sly; and you are married on the sly! What did I ever do to have such sons? But I forgive you, Ernest. May you never experience the bitterness of a lonely old age!"

They left her in tears, after receiving from her a chilly kiss and a sobbing good-by. As they passed along the familiar passages and hall to the door, both looked grave and troubled; but Ernest catching Ruth's eye lifted furtively to his face, smiled down on her with a tender though deprecating smile.

"My mother!" he ejaculated, in an apologetic tone.

"And my father!" she said, an answering smile breaking upon her clouded face. "We must bear with them both. We are happy enough to bear with them all, and with one another. We are to bear one another's burdens."

"I will bear yours, now you belong to me," he said fondly, as he wrapped her up carefully from the winter's cold. "Mine at last!" he added. "I'm happy enough now to bear a heavy burden."

(To be continued.)

AFTER THE RESURRECTION.

S.S. Lesson for June 13th, Matt. 28 : 8-20. Golden Text, verse 20. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

"JESUS and the resurrection" was ever the theme of those witnesses whom He sent into all the world to "preach the gospel to every creature" (Mark 16 : 15). In Acts 2 : 31, 32, alluding to David, Peter says, "He, seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that His soul was not left in hell, neither His flesh did see corruption. This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses." Again (3 : 15): ye "killed the Prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead; whereof we are witnesses." Again, in Acts 4 : 1, 2, we read, "the captain of the temple and the Sadducees, came upon them, being grieved that they taught the people, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead." Peter declared (verse 10) that the impotent man stood before them whole by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, "whom God raised from the dead," and in the same chapter, when the disciples were a second time filled with the Holy Ghost, "with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus." And we find also that Stephen (Acts 6 : 56) and Paul (Acts 13 : 30-37; 17 : 31; 23 : 6; 24 : 21; 26 : 23) preached as much as Peter did, the blessed doctrine of Jesus and the resurrection.

But why should so much stress be laid upon the resurrection? Is it not by the death of Jesus that we are saved from our sins? Let God's Word be the answer. Rom. 4 : 25 reads, in the original, "Who was delivered because of our offences, and was raised again because of our justification." That is, had not his propitiatory death procured our justification, Christ could not have been raised; God could not have put away sin except the sacrifice was perfect. Thus, "if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins." God's wrath against sin, when it was laid upon our blessed Lord as the sin-bearer, was as real as though he were guilty of the world's sin. And except his death had been a just atonement, he could not stand now before the throne.

But because Christ is raised, we know that His death justifies us. Sinful, unworthy, meriting nothing but God's wrath in ourselves, yet, as represented in Him, we are justified, the sentence is passed upon our sins and executed in the person of Christ, and His resurrection is a standing witness that it is accomplished.

Our subject for to-day begins with the return of the women from the sepulchre. Mary Magdalene was the first to whom He appeared (John 20 : 14; Mark 16 : 9). She went to bring His disciples word, but it seemed as though she could not keep long away, and we found her again coming to the sepulchre in company with Mary the mother of James, and Salome (Matt. 28 : 1), "and other women which were with them" (Luke 24 : 10). They had seen an angel who "descended from heaven and came and rolled back the stone from the door and sat upon it." To the women the angel said, "Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here, for He is risen as He said." They who seek Jesus risen have nothing to fear.

But the chief priests, the Pharisees, and the keepers of the sepulchre fear; they are cast into consternation. The chief priests seem to have had a misgiving; they implored that the sepulchre should be sealed and made sure unto the third day, because Jesus had said, "After three days I will rise again." These enemies of the Lord had seen such proof of the power of His words that they would make sure against their fulfilment. Their pretext was, "His disciples will come by night and steal Him away." Probably in the depth of their hearts they feared more than this. When the earthquake took place, and the angel descended, the keepers saw "Him; His countenance was like lightning, and His raiment white as snow: And for fear of Him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men." They who know not Jesus risen have everything to fear. When they shewed unto the chief priests all the things which were done, they assembled the elders, and took counsel how to save their reputation and get out of the dilemma.

Oh, had they gone to God and humbled themselves, had they come openly forward and acknowledged their sin and their error, it might have been well with them. But they bribed the soldiers with "large money" to say what must have condemned themselves and the soldiers too, that the disciples stole Him away while they slept. A sleeping guard in the Roman army was guilty of death. But there are those who practically disallow the resurrection of Jesus Christ in our day. Many who preach the doctrine of justification, but when the power of a risen Christ begins to manifest itself in their midst, when souls are saved and pass from death unto life, they try to hush it up and explain it away. They will have a dead Christ in a sealed grave well watched and guarded, but a living Christ, with all power both in heaven and earth, they are not prepared for.

The women "departed quickly from the sepulchre, with fear and great joy, and did run to bring His disciples word. And as they went to tell His disciples, behold, Jesus met them, saying, All hail. And they came and held Him by the feet, and worshipped Him." Only Mary Magadalene, the last at the cross, and the first at the sepulchre, must not touch Him (John 20 : 17). "Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father: but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father and your Father; and to my God, and your God." Jesus was not yet ascended when the women held Him by the feet. But these had stood afar off when Jesus was on the cross, and the Lord shows them special tenderness. Mary was close by His cross, and He treats her with special confidence. She must have no personal gratification, but she, who understood His death and His resurrection, must be the first messenger of His ascension to the very apostles themselves. For some reason the disciples seem to have tarried in Jerusalem another week before they went into Galilee (John 20 : 26-29). There, it would seem, He gave "commandments unto the apostles whom He had chosen: to whom He shewed Himself alive after His passion, by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God"

The great burden which lay upon the Master's heart in these days in which He lingered on earth after His resurrection, was that of the perishing souls for which he died. All the four evangelists bear testimony to this fact. In our subject, St. Matthew records that He said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore and teach (Gr., make disciples of) all nations," etc. St. Mark records (16 : 15, 16). "He said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth, not shall be damned." St. Luke records (24 : 46-48), He "said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. And ye (the eleven and they that were with them. Verse 33, comp. Acts 1 : 13-15), are witnesses of these things." John, in recording the Lord's question to Peter, which was three times repeated, tells us also how He enjoined him, "Feed my sheep; feed my lambs (John 21 : 15-17).

Thus the commission to win souls is clear and unmistakable. Luke 24 : 33, 46-48, compared with Acts 1 : 13-15, shows us that it is incumbent on laymen and on women as well as those who are called to the office of the ministry. Mark 16 : 15 shows us that we are not to limit God's grace; He sends us to every creature, however sunk in sin or however self-righteous, however hardened or however indifferent, however sceptical or however superstitious. Now if millions of heathen have never heard of Christ, and if thousands and tens of thousands in Catholic and Protestant lands have never received a personal call to come and receive free grace through Jesus Christ, who is in fault? Jesus sent one hundred and twenty persons to preach the Gospel to every creature. If He thought them capable of doing this work, surely, now that there are thousands of believers, we ought to be able among us to bring such light to bear upon every living human creature that each one should be brought into a position of responsibility about his own soul.

Many may make excuses and say, I have not the time, I have not the means, I have not the gift, I can speak no foreign tongue. First, What are we doing where we are? Are we missionaries in the houses where we live, in the shops where we deal? Are souls precious to us? Is the fire of love to souls kindled within us, and are all earthly considerations of rank, comfort, honor, utter dust and ashes to us, in comparison to the value of souls for which Christ died. Were it so, no want of gift or of language would hinder us, no want of means hold us back. We would go forth in the mighty strength of that warrant from the Master. "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore." If the silver and the gold are His, then He has enough for me; if the power to speak with new tongues is in Him, then He will give me what I need: He will never send me a warfare on my own charges; He bears all the charges, blessed be His name.

But let us not forget that one part of our commission is, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Unless we ourselves observe in our lives that which the Lord has commanded us, how shall we teach others? Oh, it is blessed to win souls, but how many who are won sink back into a life of religious selfishness, making themselves, instead of God, the centre of their being. Is it not because the soul-winners are not themselves conformed to the image of God's Son (Rom. 8 : 29)? St. Luke tells us that the Lord commanded the disciples to tarry in the city of Jerusalem until they should be "endued with power from on high;" Let us learn from this the need of God's power with which to work, and then go forward, because He is with us always, "unto the end of the world."

FOREIGN TOPICS.

The British Government is Seeking to Promote a union among the European Powers to enforce on Turkey the fulfillment of her treaty obligations. A circular note has been issued by Lord Granville, drawing the attention of the powers to the points of the Berlin Treaty not yet executed. Lord Granville expresses the wish of the English Government to see the Berlin Treaty promptly enforced, and he particularly refers to the Greek frontier question and the cession of territory to Montenegro as being matters which are still unsolved. He invites the powers conjointly to ask Turkey at what time she proposes to acquit herself of the obligations imposed upon and accepted by her. Prince Bismarck is said to have signified his intention to communicate with Austria before gving a reply. According to a telegram to the London Standard, France and Italy have already intimated their intention to adopt the English proposal; Russia alone is reserved. It is expected that Turkey will protest her extreme willingness to carry out the treaty, and as usual make promises of amendment.

An Effort to Procure the Recall of Sir Bartle Frere from his post in South Africa has been made by a number of members of the Liberal party in the British Parliament, and a memorial urging the step on the Premier has received over a hundred signatures. In his reply to the demand Mr. Gladstone spoke in the highest terms of Sir Bartle Frere's personal character and abilities. He declared that his recall would derange all the proceedings which have been taken with a view of colonial confederation; that when the question of confederation was settled it would be the duty of the government to consider Sir Bartle Frere's position with regard to general questions of colonial policy, and whether the government could continue to be responsible for him.

Prince Bismarck, who is Probably the most powerful statesman in Europe, is described by the correspondent of a daily journal as suffering from serious physical prostration. He writes: "The weariness which Prince Bismarck manifested in his recent speech in the Reichstag was noticeable also in his whole demeanor, which in its lassitude was a marked contrast to his activity in past days. He walked into the House with difficulty, heavily supporting himself on his stick. Toward the end of his speech his words became almost inaudible. His friends affirm that he suffered intensely from the mental and physical effects of his speech in public, and was obliged to retire to bed immediately on his return home. The Chancellor's nervous irritability is said to exceed all bounds. Any trifle is sufficient to arouse his anger and make him lose all self-command."

Mass in the Tower of London.—For the First time since the reign of Henry VIII., a military mass is now celebrated in the Tower for the benefit of the Roman Catholic officers and men of the Guards stationed there. This result has been mainly brought about by the efforts of the Rev. Father Bowden, who was formerly an officer in the household brigade.

Christian Work in Persia is receiving the blessing of God. A letter was read at a public meeting in New York last week from a lady in Persia who conducts a school for girls, containing thirty-eight daughters of the Nestorians, some of whom are nominal Christians, and many others very real Christians. There are also fourteen Mohammedan girls in the school. One of the latter was lately taken sick, and thought she was going to die. She felt that she was unprepared for death. In great mercy the Lord spared her, and she resolved to seek the Saviour. She sought her teacher's presence again and again, asking the teacher to pray for her. Then one Sunday afternoon she came to the teacher to tell her that she knew now she was a Christian. "How do you know?" was asked. "I know my heart was cold last Sunday; now it is warm; I love Jesus, I know that Jesus loves me, and has forgiven me my sins." There was evidence which her teacher considered justified the belief that this scholar had inded experienced a change of heart. Her father, too, has become impressed that he is a sinner before God, and prayers are being offered that he may find peace in believing.

The Temperance Hospital in London is a complete success. The report at the recent sixth annual meeting greatly encouraged those who are undertaking this reform in medical treatment. With the 140 in-patients and 1177 out-patients under the care of the hospital, alcohol has not been used in a single instance, and the death-rate had been only four per cent, which is much lower than in the general hospitals, where the cost of beer alone sometimes exceeds that of bread. This hospital will do a good work for humanity if it continues to furnish practical proof that even as a medicine alcohol is unnecessary and often mischievous in its effects.

Professor Nordenskjold, the Arctic Explorer, in an interview with a newspaper correspondent, has stated some curious things about the climate in regions of perpetual snow: "The cold is by no means so insupportable as is supposed. We passed from a heated cabin at 30 degrees above zero to 47 degrees below zero in the open air without inconvenience. At 15 degrees below zero a steam, as if from a boiling kettle, rises from the water. At once frozen by the wind it falls in a fine powder. At 40 degrees the snow and human bodies also smoke, which smoke changes at once into millions of tiny particles, like needles of ice, which fill the air and make a light, continuous noise, like the rustle of a stiff silk. At this temperature the trunks of trees burst with a loud report, the rocks break up, and the earth opens and vomits smoking water. Knives break in cutting butter. Cigars go out by coming in contact with ice on the beard. To talk is fatiguing. At night the eyelids are covered with a crust of ice, which must be carefully removed before one can open them."

Nonconformity in the British Parliament is now of considerable strength. The Congregationalists number twenty five members—a larger number than in any other Parliament since the Commonwealth—all of whom belong to the Liberal party. The Baptists have five; the Wesleyans, nine; the Society of Friends, sixteen; the Unitarians, nineteen, and the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, three. There are five Jews returned, one of whom is a Conservative. The Scotch Presbyterians number twenty-nine, the Irish Roman Catholics forty-eight.

A Montreal Rumseller's Stock thrown away.—At one of the revival meetings in Montreal a rumseller related his experience. He said: "I was a wholesale and retail liquor-seller. I scoffed at revivals, hated evangelists; but out of curiosity attended the meetings in St. James Street Church, where the Spirit of God brought home the truth to me. I then realized my lost condition, and after a struggle of a few days I accepted Christ. I then rolled my barrels of whiskey, gin, and rum into the streets, and knocked the heads in." Next night his friends were with him, holding a prayer-meeting until one o'clock in the morning, in the very room where for years gambling and carousing had often aroused the attention of the police; the singing attracted the attention of these city officials, and they came up the stairs and bolted into the room, expecting to arrest a lot of drunken gamblers; but to their surprise they found a few Christians singing praises to Him who had redeemed them with His own blood. That man is now leading a consistent Christian life.

The Real Head of the House of Bonaparte.—Prince Louis Lucien Bonaparte has written a letter concerning his family to an English friend, in which he says: "Of the four brothers of Napoleon I., Lucien, my father, and Jerome are the only two who are represented by living descendants. Cardinal Bonaparte being Charles Lucien's eldest son's son, and Lucien being Jerome's eldest brother, the Cardinal is incontrovertibly, whatever may be pretended to the contrary, the sole and the real chief of the Bonaparte family the ordinary sense of the word. Prince Napol Jerome, and after him his two sons, thank Napoleon III., and according to the constitu of the Second Empire, was undoubtedly the mediate heir of the emperor, and after his de and before his adhesion to the new rule the c of the imperial dynasty. But the Cardina the true chief of the family."

A Chinese Military Mandarin was Conve in an English hospital some time ago. He commanded a war-junk in Formosa, where was wounded in a fight with some pirates. suffered great agony from his wound, and Chinese doctors could not cure him, nor relieve his sufferings. He was induced to e the Foreign Hospital at Amoy, where an Eng surgeon performed an operation on him w wrought a cure.

While in the hospital he heard one of missionaries preaching in Chinese. The was, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures earth," etc. This roused his attention, an became a zealous convert to Christianity. rejoining the military service he began to pr his new faith, and in consequence had to ch between giving up his rank in the army o religion. He chose to give up everythin his faith, and after some time he qualified for became a teacher at the chapel at Polam, w he zealously performed his duty and lived o small salary.

The Czar and the Pope.—The latest taken by Russia in its treatment of the Ro Catholics within its dominions has greatly tled the Vatican. A decree has been issu the effect that all persons born of Roman olic parents since 1836 and themselves pro ing that faith, shall be considered to belor the Russian Greek Church, and that it sh illegal for them to continue to believe in the trines of Romanism. The Pope has se strongly worded protest against the decree.

Mrs. M. Baxter writes: "In Wesel God pleased to give much blessing to His V There were also some precious tokens tha tracts, which we give away by thousands doing a good work. One day we went i village, by invitation, to hold an evening ing. C. walked to a second village to away tracts. I went into the woods to be with God, and on my return heard the stra noise; it was about a hundred childr wooden shoes following C., who had been s ing to them in the churchyard. We h meeting for children in the afternoon, women at night; some found peace. This we are at Mulheim on the Ruhr, and have meetings. The Lord is 'confirming the with signs following.'"

A Salvation Army Mission to Irela commenced by General Booth. A meetin held at the "headquarters," in Londo Monday, May 3d, for the purpose of prese colors to "officers" about to proceed o evangelistic work. The hall was crowde at the meeting after tea the General inti that the idea was entertained of sending s missions to France, Germany, and Ho Quarters, it was announced, had been secu both Belfast and Londonderry, where the ations will be carried on. Mrs. Reynolds "captain," and Miss Strong is the "li ant," and they will be accompanied on th paign by four other young women, all of have rallied to the standard of the through Mrs. Reynolds's exertions in N ham and elsewhere.

The Death of Rev. John Curwen, name is well known in connection with the to which many of our Sunday-school hym sung, is announced. He was a Congrega ist minister in England until 1867, wh health broke down, and he established a p and publishing business. Among his p tions was "The Child's Own Hymn- which commanded an extensive sale. H born at Heckmondwike, Yorkshire, in 18

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

blished at 63 Bible House, New York City, and 2 Ivy Lane, London. Edited in London by the Rev. M. Baxter, in New York by Mr. B. Aitken.

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. LMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also occasionally a Sermon by the Rev. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL.D., the celebrated Methodist Minister, Rev. W. M. Y AITKEN, or some other Eminent Preacher; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

ingle Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, JUNE 10, 1880. 14th Year. No. 24—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

RTRAIT AND LIFE OF REV. J. S. INSKIP—he Round Lake Camp-Meeting.

ILEE. A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage.—The eception of Four Hundred and Sixteen Souls into e Church at the Tabernacle.

'CASSIDY AND THE EAGLE'S NEST, by enry Martin (Continued).

version of a Blind Chinese Septuagenarian.

MISSIONARY ANECDOTES: An Opium Smoker Tied to a Bed—An Extraordinary Welcome, etc.

CURRENT EVENTS: The Republican Nomination—The Irish Famine Relief Fund—A Member of the Tweed Ring Dead—A Saint's Bones Seized in the Custom-House—A Scorpion in a Package of Newspapers—Remarkable Verification of a Dream, etc.

WHAT COMING WARS MAY WE EXPECT? by Rev. M. Baxter (Continued).

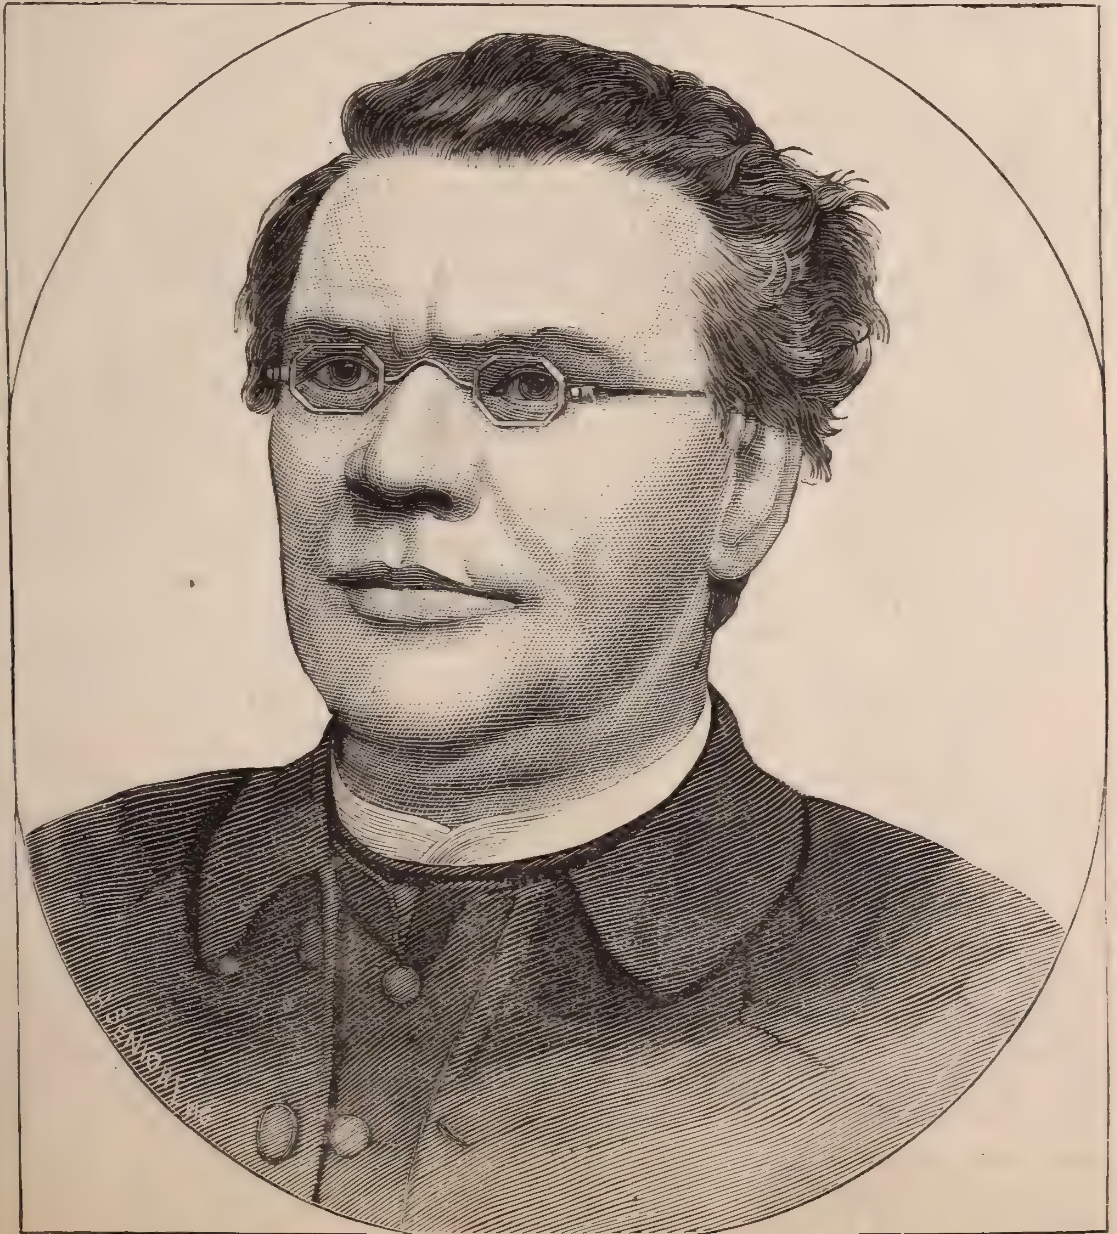
SAMUEL: AN EXAMPLE OF INTERCESSION. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF MR. G. S. RAILTON, Leader of the Salvation Army in America.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH (Continued).

Ministry of Jesus, S. S. Lesson by Mrs. M. Baxter.

FOREIGN TOPICS: Death of the Empress of Russia—A French Duel—Great Britain and Turkey—Mr. Gladstone's One Sleepless Night, etc.



Rev. JOHN S. INSKIP, President of the National Camp-Meeting Association.

REV. JOHN S. INSKIP.

Born in England—Immigration to America—Converted under Bishop Scott—Turned out of his Father's House—His Father Relents and is Converted—Enters the Methodist Ministry—"What a Man to Raise a Mob!"—Entire Sanctification—Receives that Grace in a Strange Manner—Great Results—Mrs. Amanda Smith—First Holiness Camp-meeting—The National Camp-meeting Association—Becomes a Preacher of Holiness—Travels to the Pacific Coast—Withdraws from Pastoral Work—Holiness Journals—Life and Character—Coming Tour Round the World, and the Round Lake Camp-meeting.

THE subject of this sketch is an Englishman by birth, but an American by education and life. He was born in Huntington, England, the birthplace of Oliver Cromwell, on the 10th of August, 1816. When he was five years of age, his parents immigrated to America and settled, first in Wilmington, Del., and afterward in Chester County, Pa., where he was converted on the 2d of April, 1832, under the ministry of the Rev. Levi Scott, now the senior bishop of the M. E. Church.

Mr. Scott preached on the words, "They began with one consent to make excuse" (Luke 14 : 18), and looking down casually at John Inskip, said, "That lad will say he is too young." The young man had imbibed infidel views from his father, who was a sceptic, and had never been in a church, but the preacher's direct remarks went home to his conscience. Old Mr. Inskip was very angry at his son's conversion, and, after trying in vain to make him renounce his faith in Christ, turned him out of his house.

The lad of sixteen went forth homeless, carrying his possessions in a bundle, vexed at heart but strong in faith, cheering himself with the song:

"Oh! how happy are they
Who their Saviour obey,
And have laid up their treasure above!"

His father saw him go out of the house, not knowing whither, and was so affected that he went after him and brought him back, and himself believed in Jesus and lived and died a faithful Christian man. As the time drew on for the son to make a plan for life, he chose the ministry for a profession, and in 1836 he was received into the Philadelphia Conference of the Methodist Church. He continued there for about nine years, and was then transferred to the Ohio, or what is now the Cincinnati, Conference; and in other seven years he was transferred to the New York East Conference; then to the New York Conference; from thence to that of Baltimore; and finally, back to New York East, of which Conference he is still a member.

Mr. Inskip was four years President of the Preachers' Meeting at New York, and while stationed at Baltimore, he became prominent as a preacher and pastor. It is related that on one occasion, when he was addressing a large audience with remarkable power, a politician of note put his head in at the door, and after looking on a little while, said, "What a man to raise a mob!" So struck was the man, in his own standpoint of a platform orator, by Mr. Inskip's power of influencing an assembly. Having thus laid the foundations of a reputation, Mr. Inskip, accompanied by his wife, paid a short visit to Europe in 1859 or 1860.

But it is as one of the foremost exponents of the higher life of

ENTIRE SANCTIFICATION

that Mr. Inskip is best known, and any history of the man would be absurd which did not exhibit him most conspicuously in that character. The following account of the process by which his mind became fully awakened to this subject is from the pen of his close friend, the Rev. W. McDonald:

"The subject of entire sanctification early attracted his attention; and he became profoundly interested therein at the time of his ordination, when the bishop asked him the solemn and heart-searching questions, 'Do you expect to be made perfect in love in this life?' 'Are you groaning after it?' etc. At that moment he came very near to this great salvation. A little encouragement from any one familiar with the deep things of God [1 Cor. 2 : 10] would have been of infinite benefit to him, and might have so modified his subsequent experiences as to have greatly increased his power with God and man.

"Often a similar crisis occurred in his life, but, alas! was allowed to pass away unimproved. In two or three instances the land of Beulah was clearly in view, and with the aid of a devout guide he could have entered in and possessed the rest of faith.

"Various influences combined to change his views of the doctrine, and more especially of the experience, of Christian perfection. His mind, it is true, adhered to the doctrine as a peculiarity of his creed. He was supported in his adherence by a kind of denominational tenacity which led him to contend for the doctrine while discarding the experience. The doctrine he found in all our standard authorities; and, knowing it as a 'specialty' among Methodistic ideas, he was constrained to protect and advocate it on all suitable occasions.

"Notwithstanding this, he became exceedingly hostile to a profession of the experience. His hostility assumed a more reprehensible form than doubt or scepticism. It became, in fact, a deep-seated and unyielding prejudice, and sometimes developed in the most uncharitable criticisms upon those who professed the blessing and the methods which were adopted to promulgate it. His remembrance of this fact is often occasion of great humiliation before God and his brethren. . . .

"For nearly two years prior to the time it pleased God to bestow this grace upon him, he had been living a more devout life than at any former period of his history. His personal religious state had been more prominently in view, and excited a larger measure of attention and effort than usual. This was not, however, with any special reference to the attainment of the definite blessing of purity. He was seeking 'a closer walk with God,' and frequently was conscious of extraordinary power in the pulpit and divine communion in the closet. His religious experience during this period was of an improving character. He was under the control of the sentiment expressed in the line,

"Nearer, my God, to thee; nearer to thee!"

Yet the idea of seeking entire sanctification as a definite blessing did not enter his mind."

This was Mr. Inskip's state of mind, when at the Sing Sing camp-meeting, on August 19th, 1864, his wife, sought and found the blessing of perfect sanctification. She had been deeply interested in the subject before setting out for the camp-meeting, and had been present at most of the meetings in which the subject of holiness was specially presented. Her entire time had been given to the great matter, and all the energies of her soul had been aroused and drawn toward it.

MRS. INSKIP,

At length, on the morning of the last day of the meeting, the Lord heard and answered her cry. The question was suggested to her mind, "Will you be willing to acknowledge this blessing to your husband and others?" She said within herself, "Yes;" and, looking to Jesus by faith, she felt the all-cleansing blood applied and knew that she was every whit whole. "In an instant," says a narrator, "the great transaction was done." Upon returning home, Mrs. Inskip took the first opportunity to testify in the church of what God had done for her, and immediately a number of persons came forward to the altar seeking a similar blessing.

The impression made on Mr. Inskip's mind was such that it led him to call to God for a larger measure of the influence of "the Spirit of truth" (John 14 : 17; 15 : 26; 16 : 13), that he might be a more efficient laborer in the vineyard. He was wonderfully enlivened, and his whole soul was stirred within him. Yet he di not at once determine to seek definitely th blessing of holiness.

He was at that time pastor of South Thir
Street M. E. Church, in Brooklyn, and on th Sunday morning after Mrs. Inskip's public con fession (August 28th), he preached on Heb 12 : 1, and while pressing the point of the tex upon his audience, he frankly acknowledge that he was himself no better than a seeker aft an even walk with God. His appeals wer nevertheless, very urgent and direct. He crie out in a vehement manner, "Brethren, lay asic every weight. Do it now. You can do it now and therefore you should. It is your privileg and therefore it is your duty, at this moment make a consecration of your all to God, and d clare you will henceforth be wholly and forev the Lord's." He repeated these and simil words several times with increasing force a earnestness, when all at once

A VOICE

seemed to say to him, "Do yourself what y wish the people to do."

He saw the inconsistency of his own positi in a moment, and, throwing off his backwar ness, he put forth strong faith and exclaime "Come, brethren, follow your pastor. I am termined to lay aside every weight. I c heaven and earth to witness that I now decl
I will be henceforth wholly and forever t Lord's." Then he cried out with his eyes ward heaven, "I am, O Lord, wholly and f ever thine!"

"In this act of commingled consecration a faith," writes the Rev. W. McDonald, " wondrous work was done, and he was at o divinely assured of its consummation. T bliss, the peace, the triumph of that hour never be forgotten. Then, indeed, he felt joy of the Lord was his strength. A new ph of spiritual life seemed to be revealed unto h and he went forward in the path of duty w such alacrity and vigor as he had never kno before.

"The effect upon his congregation was tr amazing. Up to this time there had been marked indications of any revival interest am the people. But in the evening of the day ferred to the altar was filled with penitents, eight souls were happily converted to God.
work went on with wondrous success and pov Over three hundred persons were converted a large number were sanctified wholly durir series of protracted meetings held in the chu and a week-day meeting for the promotio holiness being afterward held weekly in the sonage, some scores of others received the s grace."

It will be of interest to mention here, some years subsequently, when Mr. Inskip pastor of Greene Street M. E. Church in York, the colored evangelist, Mrs. Ama Smith, received the blessing of entire sancti tion at one of his services.

A year or two after these events the Rev.
B. Osborn, now a presiding elder in the S India Conference of the M. E. Church, sug ed to Mr. Inskip that a camp-meeting shou held specially for the promotion of holi
The idea was taken hold of and a call was is to all persons favorable to holding such a n ing to assemble in Philadelphia to make rangements for it. A number of brethre sponded to the call, among whom was the Rev. Dr. Roberts, of Baltimore, who pre on the occasion. Vineland, N. J., was upon as a suitable place, and there, in due the camp-meeting was held to the glory of and the mighty strengthening of the churc

It was a time of great prayer. We are that all the business of the meeting was t acted by the brethren on their knees. T mented Rev. Alfred Cookman was there, a voked God's presence and blessing with usual fervor. And thus, in these hallowe cumstances, was formed the

NATIONAL CAMP-MEETING ASSOCIATIO

which has spread over all the land. Mr. I sen President, and the Rev. W. McDon- -President of the Association.

that time the prominent members of the ion received calls to hold special ser- d holiness meetings in various parts of itry, and in the spring of 1871. Mr. In- invited by Bishop Ames to accompany is conferences in the West. He accepted tation and did good service in leading s and people into the enjoyment of per- , after which he joined a party of Asso- nembers at Omaha, and went with them acific coast. These brethren had a large -tent with them, and they held meet- acramento, Santa Clara, and San Fran- nd on their way back they held a meet- lt Lake City. Immediately after their hey joined a larger body of their mem- held services at Round Lake and at where Mr. Inskip was temporarily pros- sunstroke.

ccess of these and other such labors led ip to retire from the work of the pas- nd ask to be placed on the supernu- st of the Methodist ministry.

llowing is an abridgment of his own ex- of the step, which he made and printed ne: "For many years past the convic- my mind that the Lord called me to a ld of operation than that furnished by ar pastorate has been increasing in clear- strength. Many of my most devoted iding friends, both of the clergy and ve frequently urged that I ought to on a line of evangelistic effort, insisting ould serve the cause of the Redeemer that way than any other.

demand upon my time and energies the National Camp-meeting arrange- been full as much as I could endure on to the labors of a heavy pastoral The recent invitation to the Pacific d a call from the other side of the At- d numerous other urgent solicitations al service, presented to the members tional Association a state of facts which d all that some of us were divinely called he emergency. Upon looking candidly rfully into the peculiar qualifications, nces, and surroundings of each, all o be perfectly agreed that the under- ught to give himself to this special " Mr. Inskip's friend, Mr. McDonald, ned his pastoral work at the same time milar reasons. Since that time these men have been able to give their whole reaching the Gospel of salvation and eetings for the promotion of holiness. st now turn to the subject of Mr. In-ocate of Christian Holiness, a well- ly conducted, excellently printed, and resting monthly magazine, was started ational Camp-meeting Association at July, 1870, not to record the proceed- e Association, nor to further its in- ut to further its object. The Vice- of the Association, Mr. McDonald, nted its editor. The journal was well d, and its size was increased from six- s to twenty pages in the second year of ation. Communications from Mr. en have been frequent in its columns. her journal of the Association, of . Inskip himself is the editor, is the Standard and Home Journal, publish- e Rev. Andrew Cather, at 921 Arch hiladelphia. This is a weekly paper, age broad sheet, which succeeded the Home Journal formerly published by Mr. Wallace, editor of the Ocean Grove These two organs of the Association a circulation of about 18,000. They t in able hands during the absence of s on their great tour round the world, t of which is given farther on in this le.

LITERARY CONNECTIONS.

ject of this short sketch, apart from the special graces bestowed on him by the Spirit, is a man of unusual mental abilities and of peculiar energy and individuality of character. His industry is great, his conscientiousness in fulfilling engagements is remarkable, and he is methodical in all his habits. His manner is genial and his kindness is great, his character being modelled and controlled by his heavenly Master. Indeed, the conspicuous feature of his daily life is loyalty to God: he seeks to know God's will and to do it. On this principle, he, some years ago, broke off the habit of smoking. He enjoys excellent health and has much power of endurance. During a tour through some of the Southern States, in the winter just past, he preached ten or twelve times a week, besides frequently making short addresses, from the beginning of November to the end of March, with only two intervals of a few days each.

He is very sociable and conversational with his friends, and he makes friends of all the Lord's people. He holds all he possesses at God's service, and gives largely out of his slender means. In all his work for God he is aided and supported by his excellent wife, who is a ready and impressive speaker at meetings, and to whom he has been married above forty years. He had an only son, but lost him about twenty years ago.

THE ROUND LAKE CAMP-MEETING.

THE Rev. W. B. Osborn, who was the first to suggest a camp-meeting for the promotion of holiness, about two years ago, just before he went to India, proposed to Mr. Inskip that he and a party of members of the Association should make with the view of stirring up the churches to an earnest endeavor after the high standard of Scriptural holiness. The guidance of the Holy Spirit was sought in prayer, and the idea was deemed to be practicable. It was submitted to all friends and well-wishers of the Association, and funds sufficient to warrant preparations for the long journey were received.

A TOUR ROUND THE WORLD

These preparations have been completed, and (God willing) the party, consisting of the Revs. Mr. Inskip, W. McDonald, and J. A. Wood, and their wives, will sail in the National line steamship, The Queen, on June 23d. Other ladies and gentlemen will accompany them of their own choice, and paying their own expenses, but the friends of the Association are responsible for the six persons we have indicated, who will, however, receive no remuneration for their mission.

After working some time in the United Kingdom, the party will proceed directly to India, to which they have been cordially invited by the Methodist Conferences, and which will be the principal field of their testimony and labor. We intend shortly to give the portrait and life of a distinguished Indian missionary, and we shall then say something about the great field that lies open in India waiting for the Lord's harvesters. From India the plan of the party is to go to Australia and so to make their way home. The time of their absence may be about eighteen months. Copious reports of their progress and their meetings will be given every week in the Christian Standard.

We need scarcely say that the missionaries will be followed by the prayers of thousands of the Lord's people, both for their personal safety and for the design of their journey, which, if the movement be indeed of God's doing, will produce a growth visible in the churches of Europe, Asia, and Australia. The tour has been specially endorsed by the New York East and New England Conferences of the M. E. Church, and by several eminent servants of God, one of whom, Bishop Simpson, has given Mr. Inskip the following letter of commendation:

"It gives me pleasure to say that Rev. John S. Inskip is a minister of good standing, as well as of age and experience, in the New York East Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. I have known him well for many years as an active, devoted, and efficient laborer in the Lord's vineyard. In his visit to foreign countries he is accompanied by Mrs. Inskip, who is also well-known to the Church as an earnest and successful Christian lady who has been of great service in assisting in protracted and revival services. They are both commended to the courtesy of Christian friends, and the blessing of God is invoked upon them.

"M. SIMPSON, Bishop M. E. Church."

The departure of this Christian band is to be celebrated by a camp-meeting of extraordinary interest at Round Lake, which begins the day after to-morrow (12th inst.), under the presidency of Mr. Inskip. May that be a time of exceptional manifestation of the Holy Spirit and of divine grace to those who come together there, and a time of special encouragement to the time-honored servants of God who have to travel twenty-four thousand miles of sea and land before they set feet on their native shores again.

Mr. Inskip's hair is more gray than it was when the portrait from which our cut is made was taken, but in other respects the likeness will be recognized as a faithful one. The portrait and this sketch may be an acceptable memento to his many friends till it please the Lord to let them see his face once more.

A BLIND CHINESE SEPTUAGENARIAN.

The following incident is related by Rev. J. R. Wolfe, an English Missionary in China:

About seven years ago I visited Chak Tu, a large city in the northern part of the province. We opened a chapel there, and it was a great day in the town, because the foreign man had come there and opened a Religion Hall. The people came in crowds to listen, and as they went through the principal street they made a great noise and commotion. They met a blind man, seventy-five years of age, who inquired what all the noise was about. They said, "Don't you know that we are going to hear the foreign man who has opened a Religion Hall?"

Then the blind man said, "I will go too." They took him by the hand and led him down the street, and brought him to the Church Missionary chapel. The missionary got up at the other end of the chapel and read this text: "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Then the blind man jumped upon his feet and clapped his hands, and said, "Thank you, sir, very much, that is just what I have been longing for and praying for for many years." The people said, "He is mad; turn him out." He answered, "No, I am not mad, but I know what I want, and what I have been praying for for many years." Six months after that I went to the same place, and seven men were brought to me for baptism. Among them was the dear old blind man. This was the old man's story:

"When I was twenty-five years of age I came to the conclusion like many others, that idolatry was vain. In despair one morning, as I was walking behind my house in a field, I saw a glorious ball of fire jump up out of the East, and I fell down and worshipped the rising sun, saying, 'Oh, Sun, take away the load from my heart.' Again, as I was walking in the fields, I said to myself, 'Perhaps the moon can save me,' and I prayed to the moon for twelve long months. But no peace came to me either from the sun or from the moon. Next I turned to the glittering stars, and for a year I worshipped them.

"But they brought me no comfort. One day I threw myself on the ground and said, 'If there be a Ruler above the stars, reveal Thyself to me.' But no voice came from the Ruler above, and I went on my weary course in the world till I became a blind old man, bearing a burden in my heart, when I heard a commotion in the street, and asked what it was all about. I went to hear the foreign man preach. I heard him describe the great God above, and then he went on speaking of His love to man. I could stand it no longer, and jumping on my feet, I exclaimed, 'That is just what I want.' (Applause.) Now, to-night, here I am, standing at this font, about to be received into the Church of Jesus Christ."

JUBILEE.

A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage, preached on Sunday Morning, June 6, 1880.

AT THE RECEPTION OF FOUR HUNDRED AND SIXTEEN SOULS.

"This day shall be unto you for a memorial."—Exodus 12 : 14.

The Passover Scene—Scottish Covenanters Saved by a Deluge of Rain--This Day Memorable through Eternity on many Accounts—I. We Rehearse a Death Scene—Death always Impressive—The Death of Christ Singularly Sad—Dying among Enemies—Dying to Save the World —II. A Reunion—A Grand Family-Circle—The Communion Table Widens to Receive the Church Universal—III. It Arouses many Gracious Memories--The Fathers Gone Before—IV. It is a Confessional—V. It is Anticipative.

[Before commencing his sermon, Dr. Talmage, who was accompanied on the platform by Rev. Mr. Harrison (the boy preacher), the Rev. Drs. Drake, Gilbert, Evans, Gray, See, and Davidson, the Rev. Mr. Hastings, the Rev. Alfred Taylor, and "Father" Pierson, looking on the upturned faces of the congregation, which crowded the Tabernacle in every part, said: "This is a stupendous scene on the glorious first Sabbath in June—our Pentecost. I ask the entire congregation to join us in singing, 'Ho! my comrades, see the signal!'" Then he read that famous Moody and Sankey hymn, and it was sung with thrilling effect.

Then Dr. Talmage said: "I will now read the muster-roll of the Lord's army, of persons recently received by letter and on profession of faith, and to-day made members of our church." Then he read a list of 416 names. They embrace three of the pastor's own children; of one of the converts, as he read her name, Dr. Talmage said: "She died after her conversion; she joins this church militant to-day, but has already joined the church triumphant in heaven." After he had concluded the list of new accessions to the Tabernacle Church, he said that the total membership was now 2061.

"I am in great perplexity," said Dr. Talmage. "This work of grace has been going on for six weeks, and constantly deepening and widening. On Friday evening last the Tabernacle could not seat all who came. I had given notice that on that evening the Rev. Mr. Harrison would terminate his work with us. And yet how can we close? I never was in greater perplexity. I put the question to this congregation, not to church-members alone, but to men of the world as well, whether in this outpouring it is best to stop now? What shall we do? I cannot take the responsibility. Brother Harrison can tarry with us a day or two longer. I ask all those whose common-sense tells them it is better to go on for two or three evenings to arise in their seats." All the five thousand arose. Dr. Talmage next expressed his unqualified approval of the boy evangelist's work, and said that he would continue for several evenings longer.]

THE word "passover" was a very significant word. It described a scene when the destroying angel, with one stroke of his wing, left one dead in each Egyptian household; but the door-posts of the houses of the Israelites being sprinkled with the blood of the lamb, the destroying angel passed over. And so to-day we celebrate a grander passover, all peril fleeing from our heart because the door-posts of our souls are sprinkled with the blood of the Lamb of God. Christ, our Passover, sacrificed for us. "This day shall be unto you for a memorial."

The sacramental Sabbath, whether in American church, or English chapel, or Scotch kirk, is more impressive than other Sabbaths. The light is holier, calmer, sweeter. The voices are more tender. Its touch is softer. Its memories are more chastened. Christian graces suddenly ripen like orchards on the hill fronting the south. The wine, juice pressed from grapes of the celestial vineyard, and the bread broken to drop from the hand of Him who fed the five thousand.

We walked to church this morning with more thoughtfulness. There is more tremulousness in the hymn, and when we give each other Christian salutation at the close of the service we feel thrilling, through body, mind, and soul, the great doctrines of Christian brotherhood.

Our mind goes back to the time when our fathers among the Highlands of Scotland celebrated the sacrament among the mountains, their enemies pursuing them, they drinking the wine from rough-hewn bowls, wooden bowls, and dipping the water for the baptism from the rocks, until once they heard the voices of the enemy coming up the hill, and the pastor cried, "O Lord, the Shepherd, save Thy sheep!" and suddenly a cloud burst and a deluge came, and swept down in torrents over the mountain-side, whelming the persecutors into destruction, and saving the Covenanters. So, O Lord, let the cloud of Thy mercy burst to-day, that our sins may be whelmed and our soul saved ("Amen!").

Amid the ten thousand million ages of eternity you will remember this first Sabbath in June, 1880. This is the amethyst of days, it is the pearl of days, it is the diamond of days, it is the day of days. This day shall be forever, and forever, and forever a memorial. There are three or four things that make this occasion all-absorbing in interest.

I. The first is,

WE REHEARSE A DEATH SCENE.

That is always touching and arousing. Though you be in a hotel, and a stranger is dying, how softly you walk around the room, and if you come to his dying couch you come with head uncovered. Even the joker ceases his jests, and if you close the eyes of that stranger you do it with deep emotion.

But I tell you of One who died among his enemies and among strangers. When we die we die for ourselves, and we die amid all kindnesses. Bathings of the hand, bathings of the head, bathings of the feet, some one to hold our hand in the last agony, some one to give us the farewell kiss. Not so with Christ. He died among enemies, and He died among strangers, and He died in torment, and he died for others.

He might have walked a king among the gardens that sloped to the sea. Instead of the unwashed rabble that followed Him, He might have thrilled sanhedrims and universities with His eloquence. Instead of crossing Genesareth in a fishing-boat, He might have waited until the waters were calm, and smoothly He might have crossed that sea. But no, He must suffer, He must be hounded, He must die. The kind for the cruel, the good for the bad, the divine for the human.

Oh, how obligated we feel to anybody who saved our physical life! If you sink in the flood, and a man with strong oar pulls out toward you and brings you to the land, you never can forget this kindness. If you are in battle, and a horseman rides by, intercepting the assault of the enemy, why, you never can forget that kindness. Here I tell you to-day of a conqueror, Jesus Christ, on the white horse, who, in the very moment of His victorious charge, fell, as the lances of death struck Him.

> "Was it for crimes that I had done,
> He groaned upon the tree?
> Amazing pity, grace unknown,
> And love beyond degree!"

II. But this is further an absorbing occasion because it is

A REUNION.

I knew what was meant when that woman, seated beside a young man, made no answer to my question. "This is your son?" I said to her. She made no reply, but burst into tears. I knew all the story. It was a prodigal got home again. It was the dead alive, the lost found.

Oh, how many reunions of families to-day! A little while ago, husband and wife were divided by the religious choice. Now, to-day, under the cross, they are remarried for eternity. One on earth, one in Heaven. Reunion of all God's people.

Other days we go our own way. You move in one circle of society, you move in another; you travel in one path, and you travel in another; but on a day like this we come on the same platform, gazing upon the same death anguish, clinging to the same cross. This does not seem like a church to me to-day; it seems like a great family circle, where we all join hands around the cross. One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one cross, one Christ, one doxology, one Heaven.

And this table, which seems to be onl or eight feet long by three or four fee widens until all the Christians of our o nomination may sit at it, and widens and until all Christians of all denominati Christians may sit at it, and widens and until it bridges the sea, and transa Christians sit at it, and widens and wider the redeemed of Heaven mingle in th munion, church militant, church triumph

> "One army of the living God,
> To whose command we bow;
> Part of the host have crossed the flo
> And part are crossing now."

And ye ministers of religion from all den tions of Christians [addressing the com clergymen seated on the platform], it is for our souls to-day. Many of you have long in the Lord's harvest field. I gi congratulation to-day, I bid you welcome With some of you the work is nearly do the Lord will soon call you home. Go that those of us who stand in the pulpit ing Christ may be as faithful as thos preceded us.

And when some of you are gone, we our hand on your cold brow and say father, my father, the chariots of Israel horsemen thereof!" and then and there swear new allegiance to that Christ for you toiled. Reunion! Reunion!

III. Another thought makes this a v pressive scene—a very impressive and ab scene—and that is,

IT AROUSES MANY GRACIOUS MEMOR

There is not a person in the house bro under such circumstances but his min back to childhood days—long before yo the meaning of the bread and the wine sacrament, and you sat in the gallery, side pew while your parents or older b and sisters partook of the elements, or, in the same pew, you remember how yo your mother's dress and said, "What d mean? what do you do that for? what in the cup? what is that on the plate?"

You remember how more tender you was on sacramental day; and you re your mother, how she stood in silence an ed at you, not saying a word, but her ey with tears. Dear old souls! they are go but until our dying day we shall associa with this glorious ordinance, and when o work on earth is done, we will go up an side them in the Heavenly Church, as our childhood we sat beside them in the church.

> "Blest are the saints beloved of God,
> Washed are their robes in Jesus' bloo > Brighter than angels, lo! they shine,
> Their glories splendid and sublime."

IV. There is another thought, givin tenderness to this occasion, and that is,

A CONFESSIONAL.

There were times, perhaps, when if a m said there was any imperfection in our ch we would have felt insulted, and we wou said, "You don't understand who you a ing to: do you doubt my honor?" Th are children of God have passed that fe sensitiveness. In the presence of the sac the Son of God, we think of what we ha and what we have neglected to do, and o melts within us; and instead of boasting like crying, "God be merciful to me ner!" There is not a man on the platf morning but can pray that prayer.

Oh, yes! with His dying lips Christ a our service, but what a poor service rendered! Of this short life we have be God even a fragment. Some of us have old age, and have not begun to serve Hi this is a confessional. Brethren in th try and brethren out of the ministry, Christian people, let it be a confessional.
be one place more humble than another, to take it. If there be one prayer more i nate than another, we ought to offer it.

confession more bitter than another, we gh to weep it out.

"Well might the sun in darkness hide,
And shut his glories in,
When Christ, the mighty Maker, died
For man, the creature's sin."

nce more I remark, that this scene is lly tender and impressive because

IT IS ANTICIPATIVE.

re not to stay here much longer. Our h wants us home. The Church on earth is e vestibule of a grander Church on high. ne will soon come when our names will sed off the earthly books, and there will thing in the margin to indicate that we ne up to join a higher communion. s not going to let His children lie in the The grave is no place for us to stay in. ord shall descend with a shout, and the the archangel, and all the dead in Christ se." The white robe in which they put ur last slumber must get whiter. We se: we must rise. "Behold He cometh uds, and every eye shall see Him." God pe away all tears from their eyes, and hall be no sighing, and God shall be the ing home of our immortal spirit. must pause. We enter upon a scene f equalled, has never been surpassed in any since the Day of Pentecost. A great le this morning start on in the Kingdom st, publicy avowing themselves on the ide. "And when the day of Pentecost come, they were all with one accord in ce, and suddenly there came a sound aven as of a rushing mighty wind, and re tongues of fire."

e conclusion of the sermon Dr. Talmage right hand of fellowship to the new , and baptized by sprinkling 165 of They were of all ages, from a child of ears to a gray-haired man of 82].

EMPERANCE ANECDOTES.

ional Temperance League Meeting in —Bishop How and a Cabinet Minister ipwreck—A Notable Answer—A Minis all—The American Aquatic—Mr. An a Teetotaller for Forty-six Years—Sam k giving up Tobacco.

nual meeting of the National Temper gue of Great Britain was held in Exeter don, on Monday, May 3d.

nual report was read by the secretary, and stated that the number of men in is about 60,000 and of these upward re registered abstainers; and of the s in training-ships more than one-half ed the pledge, and 58 officers have also About 20,000 out of Britain's 120,000 re believed to be abstainers. The total income of the National Temperance as been about £7000.

shop of Bedford, Dr. How, in the his speech, said: I am myself a total If one can do something by one's ex interfere with the drinking habits of f one can break through in some little e trammels of custom which make it unpleasant sometimes not to take a ine when everybody else does so, it is g a very high price for the thing which king to accomplish. Self-denial is al olesome and good thing. member n was not supposed to lose his char respectability—a "gentleman" I he was called—if he now and then the drawing-room slightly intoxicated er. Nowadays that is all gone. Such not tolerated anywhere, and if a man a friend's drawing-room after dinner for wine I do not think he would be ain very soon. It was not so once. I g a day or two with the late Mayor of the summer before last, and he was day going to open the thirty-second cocoa-house in Liverpool, and he told me that the thirty-one were answering. That was a very happy piece of news.

WHEN I WAS A BOY,

I was sitting the other day by the side of one of our eminent Cabinet Ministers. We were talking about total abstinence, and he said, "I will tell you what total abstinence will do (you can understand he was not a member of this League); it will foster and encourage all sorts of sins which lie beneath the surface, and which it will help to excuse and palliate, because it makes drunkenness the only sin in the world." I was obliged to laugh at that, as I told him the story of the monk who was given his choice by the Evil One which of the three sins he would commit. Drunkenness was one of the three, and the other two I will not mention. He thought drunkenness so much the less sinful that he chose that, and under its influence committed the other two. I don't believe there is a grain of truth in that gentleman's argument. (Cheers.)

The Rev. Dr. Grosart, in the course of his speech, said: "Over in the great Republic of the United States and in Canada, and to a large extent in Australia, you will scarcely find, among the thousands and tens of thousands there, a minister of the Gospel or Sunday-school teacher who is not a personal total abstainer.

One dark and tempestuous night

A SINKING SHIP

was slowly but surely settling down into the deep. Through the black dark night the Three Bells, of Glasgow heard the guns pealing pleadingly, and returned this answer: "Ship ahoy! the Three Bells, of Glasgow, will lay by you till daylight." It lay fast through the watches of the night. Gun answered gun, and still nearer came the Three Bells, of Glasgow, and at last, just when the wreck was lurching, all the souls on board were saved. Now, to the wives, the mothers, the husbands, the young men, and the maidens, the boys and the girls, to one and all who have been trampled upon and stained by our social habits and customs in regard to strong drink, I would sound out, "We are lying by you; we do not mean to forsake you; we ministers of the Gospel, we Sunday-school teachers, we Christian men and women, we, by the strength of Jesus Christ, do not mean to forsake you, but to work on, and on, and on, aye, and until the kingdom of the devil shall be destroyed, and the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ shall be established."

A NOTABLE ANSWER.

Mr. Kegan Paul, in his speech, said: At a teetotal meeting in a town in Somersetshire, a gentleman was sitting in the front row who for many years had subscribed to the teetotal society, though he never became a total abstainer. He applauded the speakers with all his might, and at the end the chairman appealed to him, and said, "Our friend So-and-so has been here for many years. He has subscribed to our society; he has applauded our speakers, he has done everything that he possibly could for us, and now will he have the goodness to come on the platform and say why he doesn't join us altogether?" This gentleman accepted the challenge, and he advanced the only argument that I have never been able to answer against total abstinence, and which I have never heard anybody else answer. He said, "You have convinced me of the evil that this drink is doing; you have convinced me of the large number of persons who ought to support your movement, but you have not convinced me of one thing—you have not convinced me that I don't like it." There I believe is the one sole argument against our cause.

The Rev. J. R. Wood said: I was once the victim of what has been called "the huge delusion" of modern society, that I could not do my work without a little wine. I thought it was necessary to my health and efficiency, and I conscientiously took it. But at a meeting in this hall four years ago, some admirable speeches were made, and among them an address by Sir Henry Thompson. Now, that address opened my eyes. I saw that a little wine was not only unnecessary, but that my health would be better without it, and also my working power. Long I had desired to do something in the cause of temperance, but I had been debarred by the consideration I have just mentioned. As soon as I saw that I was the victim of a delusion, I did what any wise man ought to do—I immediately abstained.

A MINISTER'S FALL.

Not so long ago, in a northern city, there was borne to the tomb in the midst of lamentations indicating great love and respect, the venerable form of a minister of that body to which I belong. That minister had held a high and honorable position in that city for upward of forty years. He had a son, who also became a Nonconformist minister, treading in the steps of his father—but not entirely. Presently that young man became the victim of drink. Disgraced in our ministry, he obtained admission into another, but disgraced himself repeatedly, and finally he was found drinking the sacramental wine in the house of God, and now, for aught I know, that man, in the very city where his father lived and toiled, haunts a common lodging-house, and is thankful for a cup of cocoa and a cheap bed.

Mr. John Andrew said: When I was in my teens I came across the autobiography of Dr. Franklin. There is an incident in his life which made a strong impression upon my mind. Dr. Franklin had a strong desire to visit the old country, as young men across the Atlantic have felt since. He came to this metropolis and obtained employment in a large printing establishment. He was a water-drinker, and in derision was called but he could do what no other man in the establishment could do. His muscular power was greater than that of any of them. He tried to persuade his fellow-pressman that he was making a great mistake to drink, and to show him that the nourishment in it was just the quantity of barley that was in it, and that was precious litttle.

THE AMERICAN AQUATIC,

Last January I completed forty-six years of teetotalism. I have five children who have never tasted these liquors. My partner in life has been a teetotaller nearly as long as myself, and known to some upon this platform, and I have never had occasion to regret the step which I took in January, 1834. The late Canon Stowell, in a sermon, says to all, especially to young men, "Make a rule of this sort—not to bet for a single farthing." Now, if there are strong reasons for such advice, there are reasons ten times stronger for resolving never to take intoxicating liquors as an article of diet. I think in that sermon Canon Stowell relates this fact, that Cook, the victim of Palmer, said one day to two youths who were going to the races, "Now, my young men, don't bet at all." This was a man addicted to betting himself for many years. And I would say to young men—make the same rule against taking intoxicating liquors.

I once heard Sammy Hick, the Village Blacksmith, at a missionary meeting, and I shall never forget it. In one part of his life he was and one day a poor woman asked him for some relief. Sammy gave sixpence, for he was a generous man, and he saw that this small gift gave great joy to this poor woman, so he began to think, "How many sixpences have I blown away in smoking?"—and he resolved that he would give up the pipe. A short time afterward Sammy was very poorly, and people told him it was because he had given up the use of tobacco, and that he should return to it. A medical man was called in. I don't know whether he did it to try Sammy's firmness or not, but he said he had better begin smoking again, or he would not be answerable for the consequences. Sammy said, "I told the Lord, my divine Master, I would never smoke again, whatever might be the consequence, and if death should come—why I'm prepared for it." Sammy soon afterward got better, but never resumed the pipe again.

A SMOKER,

NED CASSIDY AND THE EAGLE'S NEST.

By Henry Martin.

(Continued from page 358.)

Foley's Foolhardy Climb to the Eagle's Nest—Attacked by the Eagles, he cries for Help—Dan Foley's Perilous Position—Ned Cassidy's Courageous Adventure to Rescue Him.

On re-embarking to proceed up the channel to the Upper Lake, after a little, Ned, who had marked with pleasure the delight which the echoes afforded us, said, "Once on a time, sir, when I used to hear these echoes, and that was often (yet I never tired of listening to them), I used to think of fairies and spirits, and in imagination gave them the credit of the delicious music.

"But of late, sir, I never hear those echoes but I think of that night when the angels sang the birth of the blessed Saviour Jesus Christ on the plains of Bethlehem, or of the visions of heaven in the Book of the Revelation (or Apocalypse), where they sing forever, joined by the 'harpers harping on their harps,' in music sweeter than this world can afford."

"Ned," I rejoined, "the same thoughts came to me also as I heard those sounds just now, surpassing human skill. And there is a verse of a great English poet which I must repeat for you, which is a wonderful description of the angels' hymn on earth when Christ was born.

"'When such music sweet
Their hearts and ears did greet,
As never was by mortal fingers strook,
Divinely-warbled voice
Answering the stringèd noise,
As all their souls in blissful rapture took:
The air such pleasure loth to lose,
With thousand echoes still prolongs each heavenly close.'"

"That is fine poetry and no mistake, sir," exclaimed Alick Flannagan, "and I believe the man that made it (an Englishman, I think you said, must have been to the lakes before he wrote those words, for the last line describes to the life the echoes of Killarney. Is it long since he was in these parts, sir?"

"Alick," I replied, "he never was in Ireland that I know of, though he took great interest, from peculiar circumstances, in this country, and he died long, long ago; but you are right as to the poetry—John Milton, who wrote it, was the greatest poet, perhaps, the world has seen."

The men having rowed a considerable distance along a natural canal which is about three miles long, the boat at last passed into a narrow channel, so narrow indeed that soon there was scarce room for our men to ply their task; before, however, it became so contracted, our boatmen gave several long and strong pulls at the oars; then shipping them, the boat drove on from the impetus, and passing through Coleman's Leap (so called from a tradition that a man thus named had once sprung across the channel here, though twenty-five feet wide) we rode out upon the waters of the Upper Lake.

It is an expanse studded with tree-covered islands, and is encompassed on every hand with lofty mountains, one peak, Carran Tual, rising to the height of 3410 feet. The lake is so embosomed by these great eminences that, looking round, and back to the spot where you had entered, there appears no place of egress, and you seem to be totally excluded from the outer world.

But in our narrative we must return to the Eagle's Nest or pyramidal rock, near which we left Dan Foley and the party to which he was guide. After we passed them and had left the rock with its echoes, Dan and his party reached it. There were some ladies in the boat, but the gentlemen and boatmen and guide—as too often, alas! happens in modern society—had been making too free with "the bottle" that does not "cheer," but inebriates. Talking of the eagles and their nest, one of the ladies, little thinking of what would follow, expressed a wonder whether there were eaglets in the nest, or eggs, and, if the latter, what sort of eggs it was that eagles laid, their size and color.

"That's a thing," said Dan Foley, who was close by, "that I have often wished to know, and the thought has often come over me to climb the rock and try; but as it is not allowed us to disturb the birds, and as the rock is high and steep, I have never to this hour attempted the feat;" and then he added, with an oath, "I'll not let this day pass, however, without trying it."

"Never, Dan!" replied his comrades. "You're not going to be a fool like that! It would only get us into trouble, and risk your own neck into the bargain, for to climb safely more than a thousand feet to that nest is impossible."

"Well, you'll see," muttered Dan, "before the day is out, whether it's a break-neck job or not, for I have made up my mind to risk it."

The party dined at the side of the channel on which the rock stands. Here of course addition was made to the morning's indulgence, until more than one or two of the company had passed some way beyond the bounds of sobriety, and in the midst of their merry-making Dan Foley was missed. Whither he had gone none of his comrades could tell; he left in silence, with hint to none, and all were so intent upon the liquids and viands before them that his departure was unnoticed. What could have become of him? After a while curiosity was changed to anxiety.

A voice, however, half way up the great triangular rock which overhung them soon put an end to all uncertainty as to what had become of Dan. His shout, feeble from the height, informed them that he was off for the eagle's nest, jokingly asking them to wait for an eagle's egg for supper.

"Let us follow him," said his comrades, with one voice, "and force him back. To reach the place he has got to is easy enough, but if he attempts the upper part of the rock, his life, fool that he is, with the drink he has got, isn't worth an hour's purchase."

Dan, perceiving in a few moments that he was pursued, with increased energy sought to scale the rock, resolved not to be frustrated in his purpose. The progress he made, considering the steepness of the cliff, was marvellous, and yet at each success the danger and the difficulty were augmented. Higher and still higher he climbed, clinging to long grass, shrub, rock-plant, or fern, until at last he neared the hollow beneath the shelving rock on which the nest of the eagle was built, and he could hear the young ones cry.

The foolhardy attempt of the invader had not been unnoticed by the parent birds; with a sharp scream they rushed through the air from afar, and then, when close to the rock, afraid to attack the foe who had dared to molest their home, with outstretched necks and beating wings they flew round and round the rock which formed the apex of the pyramidal mass, and at each time they came to the rock's side where Dan was they swept on furiously, wheeling close to his head, making more loud their screams of fear and anger.

Only twelve or fifteen feet of the rock were now above him; but, nearly steep as a wall, it was the most difficult part of the ascent. Just beneath the nest the shelf of rock sharply jutted out, forming a natural starting place and landing stage for the eagles in their daily flights. If Dan could only reach that point with his hands he believed he could draw himself up and accomplish his enterprise; but how could the sharp projecting ledge be laid hold of? it was so far above his head, and he had brought no rope to aid him.

Examining his position, however, a little more closely, he came to the conclusion that, by working from the corner of the rock where, weather-worn, it had formed rude steps and footholds, he could reach an elevation from which he might throw himself to the jutting ledge and master the difficulty. Rapidly forming his plan, he sought to put it into execution.

With hands and feet, at the outer ledge of the great block of stone, some yards in elevation, he upraised himself, and thus gaining the height that was necessary, with a mad and desperate spring he threw himself toward the point he wished to reach, and, wonderful to tell, s ed in gaining it. Grasping it hard wi hands he hung from it, and then endeav he had purposed, to draw up his body shelf of rock the nest rested on, strivin his efforts by pressing his feet forcibly u inequalities in the face of the precipice:
had made a false calculation: the rock spot was smooth and slippery, and, press as he would, he could find no foothold.

He then tried to draw himself up by h alone, but he found that to do so was q practicable; and there the wretched ma his whole weight on his arms, from the ledge, with a thousand-feet wall of ro broken here and there by a ledge or less beneath him.

The eagles, seeing his jeopardy and h ness from having both arms engaged, n hesitated to assail him boldly, and it w by keeping his head down, and close as to the rock, that he could preserve his eyes from their rage and violence; as blood flowed from many a scar on his n shoulders. He cried and screamed f
The comrades he had fled from with pa entreaty he now called to his assistance.

Fortunately help was at hand to res from his perilous position. Andy O'T Ned Cassidy, with other comrades, an the base of the great cliff in our boat s Dan Foley had discovered himself and design, hastened to his assistance.

Their arrival on the narrow stony p from which Foley had clambered in the of his ascent to his present perilous scared the eagles from their attack, w far was a relief to him, though still t birds wheeled in rapid circles around uttering fierce cries.

But the question was, how were panions to save Foley from destructi was a strong man, and his arms, accus
the oar, were muscular, for he had of as boatman as well as guide; but he hang by his hands from the rock for yet there seemed no way of getting him the narrow ledge on which his comrade

One of them, Mick O'Hagan, a Foley's, declared he would not take a pounds to climb where Dan was; an was he above them, and so contracted standing-place, that to propose to cat his fall, if he would let go his hold, madness—his weight would most certa come and overbalance them, and so in fellows in his own destruction.

The miserable man's entreaties were he feared to die, and especially the a that menaced him. "Is there none o save me?" he cried; "none of you to helping hand? none of you to keep me horrible death that threatens me?"
name of humanity—in the name of th Virgin—in the name of God and His besought their aid; but every cry was Not a comrade dared to get nea seemed indeed impossible, and two o gan to return down the rock unwillin the despairing cries of the wretched witness the last moment of his agony must let go, and be shattered to destr

Observing his failing strength, and t thing were to be done to save life i done quickly, Ned Cassidy, as if he co no longer the vain cry of a fellow-ma said to Andy, who stood next him, can't stand this; if these comrades do nothing, I will in God's name t him; and may He give me the needed

"What," replied Andy, "will yo life for the man who has hated you?
would have taken your own life if d law had not hindered him? To do friend would be a tremendous sacrif an enemy, why, it's not natural. A ber the wife and little ones at home sides, to save Foley is, I believe,
The power of man can't do it. He h mself into this terrible fix. and must now be ft to bear the consequences."

Leaning toward him Ned whispered, "The ook, Andy, says, 'Love your enemies; do ood to them that hate you.' 'If thine enemy nger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink,' d 'Overcome evil with good.' If it be a duty give an enemy common things, as meat and ink, how much stronger, Andy, must be the ligation to save his life? Besides, Dan, I ar, is not in a fit state to die, and what then uld become of his precious soul? So don't to hinder me, for to seek to rescue him I'm solved, and I think to succeed is possible. Now re goes for an attempt which I quite believe ll be successful."

(To be Continued.)

MISSIONARY ANECDOTES.

The Work in China.

Great City—The Commencement of the Enterprise in 1850—An Extraordinary Welcome to a Missionary—An Opium Smoker Tied to a Bed —Suicide of an Inquirer.

HE EARL OF CHICHESTER presided at the eigh first annual meeting of the Church Missionary ciety of Great Britain on May 4th, and Lord rns, who until a few weeks ago held the office Lord High Chancellor of the kingdom, took t in the proceedings.

An interesting narrative of the progress of sion work in China was given by the Rev. J. Wolfe, who has been laboring in that vast d for many years. He said: I cannot speak day about the vast empire of China, with its .000,000 of inhabitants, but I must speak ply of one small spot in that great empire, ere I myself have been permitted to labor for last eighteen years, namely, the province of kien and the city of Foo Chow. It is just ut thirty years since a Church missionary was t to that great city. The province of Fukien the smallest of the eighteen provinces of na proper, and contains a population of about 000,000. It contains eighty-five or ninety ed cities, for every city in China is surnded by a high wall. There are also in the vince a great number of large towns and ages. The great city of Foo Chow contains hin it, according to Chinese estimate, 600,000 ple. Outside its walls there are 500,000 re, while in the beautiful vale of Min there is ther million, so that altogether in the city the vale there are upward of 2,000,000 ple.

ere the Church Missionary Society has been oring for the last thirty years. During their t eleven years, from 1850 to 1861, in the great of Foo Chow not a single soul had been brought Christ. The missionaries had labored there eleven long years. They had toiled and wept prayed, and some of them had died there, at the end of eleven years not a soul had been ught to Christ. There was not a sign or low of any influence produced upon the ple. It was then that the Church Missionary iety at home determined to give up the sion. They said, "We have labored here eleven years and no results have been proed; now we must give up the Mission." But man was there whose name should never be gotten. I refer to the Rev. George Smith. said: "I will not give up the Mission; I determined to hold on." He accordingly ded with the Society not to give up the Mission, and he was permitted to remain there.

wo or three months afterward God allowed to reap the first sheaf of the great harvest ch has since been gathered at Foo Chow. in a wonderful and mysterious Providence, w months after reaping that first sheaf that brother was himself called to his rest in ven. But his successor resolved to hold on the Mission amidst great difficulties and ls, which were very great indeed. The result that in 1861, in Foo Chow, three or four verts had been gathered in. In 1879, there e more than three thousand native Christians, and over one hundred churches and chapels, and there were one hundred stations and one hundred and twenty native catechists and teachers scattered all over the province of Fukien. These results have not been brought about without great difficulties and persecution and trial.

I will give you some idea of how this work has been carried on. About fourteen or fifteen years ago I first made a long journey into the province of Fukien, and I came back determined that, by the grace of God, I would not rest satisfied until I saw a catechist and a teacher in every one of those towns and villages. (Cheers.) And I have been permitted to see a great deal of it carried out. In over one hundred towns and cities and villages there is now a native catechist preaching the Gospel. I will endeavor to give you an idea of one of those stations.

A VISIT TO A CHINESE TOWN AND EXTRAORDINARY WELCOME.

I remember going about fourteen years ago into a large town which contained about 10,000 inhabitants. It was night-time when we came to the place, and it was very dark and wet. We wanted a lodging, but we could not find one. The people were afraid of the foreigner. My catechist and servant said, "We cannot get a lodging here to-night." I said, "We must have a lodging. It is raining very hard, and we cannot stand out in the cold." A man then came forward and said, "Foreign man, I will give you my house to-night. I will give you a room in my place." Well, we got into this room. It was a sort of loft over a shop, and we made ourselves as comfortable as we could. As we were sitting quietly my native catechist came to me and said, "You cannot stop here to-night, for this is an opium-seller's. If you remain here to-night you cannot preach to-morrow, for the people will not listen to you because they hate the opium." I said, "Oh, very well; if that is so, certainly we must go into the streets."

So we packed up our bag and baggage and walked into the street. A man said, "Why, here is the foreign ghost in the street again! How is that?" Said another, "I heard him say that he would not stop there to-night because So-and-so is an opium dealer." Thereupon twenty voices together cried out, "I will give you my house." Of course we could not accept the twenty houses, but we accepted one of them.

We came to a large house. The Chinese have no lights or proper sanitary arrangements in their cities and towns, which are consequently very dark and very filthy. Well, we got into a large house, and the owner said, "You are to have this place as long as you remain here, and you can do just what you please."

We went into the house, and commenced at once to preach the blessed Gospel of peace which had brought us all the way from England. We preached for over an hour and a half, and then I sat down on a chair and went fast to sleep. A man caught me by the collar and said, "Foreign man, rise up and tell us more about that. We do not hear a foreign man every night." I said, "No; I am very tired, and must go to bed." The man then said, "Let him go to bed. The foreign man can speak reason; let him go to bed."

I then retired to my room, and they went to my servant and said, "What does the foreign man, your master, eat?" I mention this in order to show that wherever we go, all over the province of Fukien, the people receive us with kindness, and give us everything we want. I say that the Chinese want the Gospel, and that it is only from the literary class and the Government authorities that we receive opposition.

Well, the question was asked as to what I was accustomed to eat. My servant's reply was, "Beef at breakfast, beef at dinner, and beef at supper. Beef all the day long." The people thought this was very remarkable. My servant added, "He has fresh eggs too for breakfast; for he will not eat rotten eggs." Rotten eggs, I may remark, are eaten with great relish by the Chinese themselves.

Next morning I found on my breakfast-table fresh eggs and also a basin of milk. The Chinese never drink milk themselves, but my host went overnight to a farmer and said to him, "You must keep the calves from the cows to-night, and bring down the milk to my house in the morning, in order that the foreign man may have it for breakfast." The Chinese themselves never eat beef, but they went that night and killed a cow in order that I might have beef for breakfast, for dinner, and for supper. As long as I remained in that place I was fed like a prince. I stayed a week there preaching and talking about Jesus. What has been the result? I was the first missionary ever seen in that village. Now, after fourteen years' labor, there are 3,000 or 4,000 Christians in that place and in the country round about. All these Christians do not, however, belong to the Church Missionary Society. I was the first missionary to go there, but our dear, zealous Wesleyan brethren went there too, and opened churches and chapels, and God blessed them wonderfully. We rejoice, yea, and we will rejoice, that the blessed Gospel has been preached by the Wesleyans, and that God has blessed it to the salvation of thousands of souls. The native Christians have provided their own churches, chapels, and teachers, without any help whatever from the Church Missionary Society.

AN OPIUM-SMOKER TIED TO THE LEG OF A BED.

Then there is the great city of Ku Tieng. Fourteen years ago no missionary of Christ had ever been there. A poor man came to me and said, "I am an opium smoker, and all my family smoke opium. What am I to do?" I replied, "You must break off that habit before you can become a Christian." He then for three or four months placed himself under instruction, but he could not give up the opium. Again I informed him that he never could be admitted into the Church until he gave up the opium. He attempted to give it up, and I never can forget the struggle of that poor man. When the time for smoking the opium came round he said, "I must have the opium!" and it was given to him.

Then he said, "When the time comes round again tie me to the leg of the bed so that I cannot get the opium." They did so, and he thus overcame that inveterate habit. He was received into the Church of Christ, and died a few months ago an earnest and a triumphant Christian.

SUICIDE OF A CHINESE ENQUIRER.

There is a growing desire on the part of the people of Fukien for the Gospel of Jesus Christ and the blessed message of salvation. About three months before I left China last year a man knocked at my study door. I said to him, "What do you want?" He replied, "I have come from such and such a place, and I want you to send a catechist to my village to teach us about the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ." I said that in consequence of pecuniary and other difficulties we were unable to do so. Again he begged me to send a catechist, but we sent him back with this answer, "No." In the course of a fortnight he returned, with three other men, and repeated the request. I consulted my colleagues, and we came to the conclusion that we could not send a catechist.

At the end of three weeks the man came back, with four or five others, and again asked for a catechist; but the answer was the same, "We cannot send you a catechist, but we advise you to go home and pray together." Three days after that they came back, and the next news was that the man had committed suicide because we could not send him a catechist to teach him about Jesus. No one but a missionary who looks into the dark abyss can fully understand the scene that this sad incident brings before him. Let us determine that there shall be no more suicides among the Chinese because we will not send them the news of the Lord Jesus Christ.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50
per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to MR. BENJAMIN AITKEN, 63 Bible House, New York.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of back numbers to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

Persons requiring single or special copies can obtain them most conveniently through

NEWSDEALERS.

Any complaint that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer is promptly attended to if we are given the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, June 2d, at 1.35 P.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The National Republican Convention at Chicago performed a work which may be useful to leaders of both parties, if they have sufficient sagacity to benefit by it. There has of late been apparent a disposition on the part of prominent men to map out a programme and present it to their party as an instrument as binding as the order of a general in the field to his soldiers. Any objection to the scheme has been denounced as mutiny. Such a spirit of domination is inconsistent with the theory of republican institutions, and the Convention has acted wisely in administering a rebuke to those who manifested it. Senator Cameron, at the opening of the proceedings, refused, as Chairman of the National Committee, to put certain resolutions to the vote, or to allow an appeal from his decision. This high-handed procedure was summarily overcome by a resolve on the part of certain members of the Committee to remove him from the chairmanship, upon which Mr. Cameron gave way. The unit rule adopted by many State Conventions was also denounced at Chicago, and the irksome yoke which would have forced delegates to vote against their own convictions and those of their districts was promptly taken off. The line where discipline ends and despotism begins cannot be too closely watched by the people.

Gen. Garfield has been selected as the Presidential candidate of the Republican party. This issue was reached on Tuesday, June 8th, the sixth day the Convention had been in session, and after thirty-six ballots. The first ballot was taken at 10.40 A.M. on Monday, with the following results: Grant 304, Blaine 284, Sherman 93, Edmunds 34, Washburne 30, Windom 10. Twenty-seven ballots followed without any material change in the position, but on Tuesday, after eight ballots had been taken, Gen. Garfield was nominated.

The Irish Famine Relief Fund.—From a statement just published, it appears that the Herald Relief Fund is being expended in a manner that fully justifies the magnificent confidence which the benevolent public placed in the well-known and influential men who formed the relief committee. The statement accounts for £35,748, 2s., 1d., or about $178,000 of the money subscribed, and of that sum not more than £205, 18s., or about $1000, was consumed by the expenses of disbursement. Every penny of the remainder was given for actual relief.

The Duke of Edinburgh, who is Prince Alfred of England, and who has worked with zeal to help and relieve the famine-stricken, made a speech in London on June 1st, in the course of which he said: "We have also to thank the citizens of America for the great and generous help they have sent to Ireland. (Cheers.) It was my good fortune to be able to be at Queenstown to assist in the distribution of that magnificent cargo which was sent from America. (Cheers.) I must say that the distress is not over yet, nor will it be over for at least two months and a half, when the first crop—the potato crop—will be gathered and is followed by the general harvest.

"Until then, in many cases, actual relief by feeding the population in some portions of the west of Ireland, including the islands, must be continued. Otherwise the starvation which would have occurred in the first instance but for such relief will occur; yet I hope all those who are here this evening will bear in mind, and tell others who are charitably inclined, that the time has not yet passed when much good may be done by sending subscriptions to those great funds which have already done so much to relieve the distress."

The Death of Richard B. Conolly at Marseilles, in France, on Mav 30th, removes from the world a man once unenviably conspicuous in New York affairs. He held the office of Comptroller during the dominance of the Tweed Ring in 1860-70. Of the fifty millions of which the city is believed to have been robbed, Conolly was stated, in the civil suits against him, to have secured eight for himself. He had invested it in personal property, and was thus able, when the crash came, to carry it into exile with him. For ten years he has been a wanderer on the earth generally choosing for his sojourn countries with which the United States has no extradition treaty. The obloquy he endured is stated by persons who knew him to have crushed his spirit, and to have rendered him thoroughly miserable (Job 18:11-15).

Mr. Moody recently visited the Indian Territory, and in an interview with a reporter of the New York Tribune expressed his opinions on the troublesome Indian question. He said, "the invasion of the territory by miners is a shameful thing. There are gold and silver enough elsewhere without interfering with the rights of the Indians to get them. God will punish this government if it allows the Indian Territory to be invaded. I was much encouraged from what I saw among the Indians. I think Mr. Schurz's plan for their management is the correct one. He is on the right track. But this disregard which is beginning to be shown for their rights is a terrible wrong.

"Before coming East I spent a few days in the Indian Territory for the purpose of getting girls for my new seminary in Northfield. I secured the promise of twelve, whom we shall educate to be missionaries to their people. They are to come here next fall. They belong to different tribes and are all anxious to come. This is the only way to settle the Indian question—educate and convert to Christianity the children; for the Indians have a strong love for their children, whose influence over their parents may be made of much avail."

Rev. Rufus Anderson, D.D., LL.D., whose name has been for fifty-eight years identified with the American Board of Foreign Missions, died on Sunday, May 3th, in his eighty-fourth year. The son of an eminent Congregational minister, he gave his heart to God in early life, and resolved to devote his life to missionary service. His health, however, was found to be too delicate to permit of his working in foreign climates, and his talents were of that order which enabled him to serve the cause he loved with usefulness in his own country.

As early as 1822, when Dr. Anderson was only twenty-six years of age, he performed the duties of Secretary of the Board during the illness Mr. Evarts, and two years later was appoint Assistant Secretary. In 1832 he took charge the Foreign Department as Corresponding Secr tary, a position he held until his resignation 1866, when he was elected a member of t Prudential Committee, and during nine yea longer regularly attended the weekly meetin of that body. He was the author of several va uable works on missionary topics, and for sever years was chief editor of the Missionary Heral

Mr. Moody preached at Cooper Union, Ne York, on Sunday evening, May 30th, a deep impressive sermon on "the five things" nece sary to salvation. The hall was crowded every part by people anxious to hear the em nent evangelist, who spoke with his accustom earnestness and power. At the close twenty-tw persons rose for prayers. During the evenin Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan sang several duet the pathos of which thrilled the entire audien and moved many to tears.

The Union Congregational Church, Brookly was destroyed by fire on June 3d. A strawber festival had been held in the building on t previous day, and the meeting had not broke up until a late hour. It was thought that t lights had all been carefully extinguished, b about two hours afterward the church was foun to be on fire. The flames had obtained secure a hold that, notwithstanding the vigoro efforts of the fire companies, the building w burned. The loss is estimated at $50,000 again which there are insurances to the amount $30,000. The valuable library belonging to D Wild, the pastor of the church, was in a buil ing adjoining the church, and was almost whol destroyed.

The Revival Services at Dr. Talmage's Ta ernacle were brought to a close on Frid evening, June 4th. Mr. Harrison, "the bo preacher," assisted by Dr. Talmage, has he services every evening except Saturdays for s weeks, and as a result over four hundred pe sons have been received into the church at t Tabernacle. On Sunday, Wednesday, and Fr day, last week, Dr. Talmage administered t rite of baptism by immersion to those among t converts who had expressed a preference for th form of baptism, and last Sunday over a hu dred others were baptized by sprinkling.

Drew Theological Seminary.—The Visiti Committee of this institution has issued ninth annual report, which is of a very grati ing character. Although this seminary is on in the thirteenth year of its age, it has a bo of alumni numbering two hundred and twent five, occupying positions of usefulness in t church in various parts of the United Stat The endowment fund, which was swept away the failure of Mr. Drew, has, by the exertions Dr. Hurst and other members of the facult now reached the sum of $300,000.

The library has during the past year been au mented by the valuable collection of Dr. C born, of Richmond, England, purchased a presented to Drew Seminary by one of the tru tees. Among other treasures in the collecti are a volume of Wesley's private diary and grandfather's Bible, together with MSS. of W Thompson and John Haime, and the letters John Nelson and Samuel Taylor.

"The Broken Net."—A Subscriber offers f dollars toward printing for free distribution second edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD May 13th, which contained Dr. Talmage's markable sermon on revivals, entitled "T Broken Net." If several other persons will j in this action, we will get a new edition of t paper printed on the scale of one thousa copies to every $20 paid, and will bear the c of sending the papers by express either to t parties who subscribe the money or to suita persons in different parts of the United Sta and Canada, who will distribute them consci tiously. There should be no delay in respondi to this proposition, for we shall not be able, af ordering a certain number of copies, to mak new order and increase the number.

The Governor of Georgia on Sunday-Schools. -It is as true now as in Christ's day that ie world hates the godly man (John 15 : 19), nd the Christian Governor of Georgia is no exeption to the rule. Charges have been made gainst him, which he was able successfully to ebut at a public meeting held at Atlanta, May 3th. Among the charges was one that he had eglected official duties for Sunday-school work. n his reply Governor Colquitt said he believed Sunday-schools, in the religion that established them, and in the statesmanship that aches that it is better to educate forty young en to lives of virtue and religion than train he boy for the gallows. He was charged, too, th attending "nigger meetings." For thirty ars he had attended Sabbath-schools and urches, and he did not believe that his being overnor made him too great to meet the mblest of his fellow-men at worship. No sition was so high, and to which he might atn, that it could make him forget his duty and sponsibility to his God.

A Scorpion was found in a Package of Newspers sent from New York to New London, nn., on June 1st. The New London Telegram tes that a newsdealer, on opening his parcel t morning, was startled to find among the pers a young scorpion. Considerable alarm s felt at first, but by deft manipulation the eature was pinned to a board, and he soon after ng himself to death. The bundle in which was found came up on the New York boat, as it was near some bunches of bananas ile in transit, the presumption is that he left hiding-place among the bananas and made way into the parcel.

o unusual a circumstance suggests the wish t the moral scorpions concealed in the pages o many periodicals excited as much fear, and e as promptly destroyed as this real scorpion.

. Remarkable Verification of a Dream urred in New York on June 3d. Mrs. Marsh, dy living in Twelfth Street, called at the oners' office to make inquiries as to her her, of whom she had heard nothing for some s. She said she had come there to inquire use she had had a dream which gave her the ression he had died a violent death, and a r had been sent to her by another brother in and that morning, saying that he had dreamt milar dream. The clerk, on searching the rds of the office, discovered an entry of the dental death of a man of the name inquired and further inquiries proved conclusively the entry related to Mrs. Marsh's brother.

Living on Borrowed Time" is the Descripti Dr. Van Santvoord of New Baltimore, N.Y., s of his life. He is a minister of the Rormed Protestant Church, and celebrated his tieth birthday on June 3d. He is the oldest g alumnus of Union College, and as a g man was known for scholarly attainmes. He still maintains to a wonderful degree his ntellectual vigor, conversing with intellie upon the religious topics of the day with argument and a keen appreciation. His misterial career was a very successful one, and he as the means of winning many souls for his Saour. He has always regarded his time as no his own, but having passed the allotted three sc years and ten, he calls his present life a life on orrowed time.

Saint's Bones Seized for Duty in the New Yo Custom House.—A case containing a wax fig arrived at New York last week from Ro. It was seized by the Custom House offirs, who were about to break it open to ascain the quantity of wax on which to charge dut when appeal was made to the Collector, and the following facts were made known :

e box was a reliquary, or shrine, containing the figy of "Saint" Discolius, martyr. The bones saint were discovered in 1802. They have articulated and covered with wax, so as to repduce the form of the original, who appears to ve been a very young man, with long, fair hai nd almost feminine features. The imitated fles is semi-transparent, showing the outlines of the bones beneath. On the forehead is a cut or scar, designed to show the manner of death. The body is richly clothed in silk of various colors, magnificently embroidered with gold. Near the head is a glass bottle set in brass, and supposed to contain some of the blood of the martyr. The case is consigned to a nunnery at Cincinnati. Superstition doubtless sets a high value on such a relic, and when it reaches Cincinnati it will probably be deeply venerated, but to those who worship God in spirit and in truth the relic partakes of the character of the brazen serpent which Hezekiah broke up because the people burned incense to it (2 Kings 18 : 4).

An Ox with Gold in its Stomach.—A Montana butcher on dressing the carcase of an ox he had slaughtered, a few weeks ago, found in its stomach, mixed with fine sand, gold of the value of five dollars which the animal had swallowed with the roots of the grass it had torn up. Considerable excitement was caused among the man's neighbors at Fort Macleod, who were anxious to ascertain where the ox had been feeding that they might acquire possession of the rich soil. Doubtless vigorous and persevering search will be made for the treasure. Worldly riches never fail to attract people, though eternal riches "laid up in heaven which fail not," and are offered freely, without money and without price, lie unsought by the multitude, and those who describe them, and proclaim the way to secure them, often speak to unheeding ears.

A Widow's timely Discovery.—Prayer was solicited recently at the Fulton Street Prayer Meeting for a widow in sore pecuniary straits who was in urgent need of forty-six dollars which she was under obligation to pay on a day then close at hand. Almost the only property left her by her husband was a box of legal documents, which having been examined by a New York lawyer and pronounced worthless, she commenced destroying. But a suit was in progress in a Western court in which the documents in the widow's chest formed valuable evidence and were the object of search. On their production by the widow she was paid $250 for them, and on May 31 she sent a statement of the facts to the prayer meeting where her petition had been presented, desiring that thanks might be offered for her timely rescue from her pressing difficulty.

No Criminals in the Prison and no Poor in the poor-house is the gratifying condition of Potter County, Pennsylvania. At the last term of the Quarter Sessions Court the district attorney stated that he had no indictment to present to the grand jury; the sheriff said he had no criminals in the prison, and the directors of the poor reported that no paupers were being supported at the expense of the people. The fact was so remarkable that the editor of the Observer wrote to the prothonotary of the county for confirmation. The reply of that functionary furnished not only confirmation but explanation also, for he wrote: "Potter county has had no licenses to sell liquor for nearly thirty years. Therefore our jail is empty about ten months in the year."

"My Father broke many Women's Hearts," said a daughter of Brigham Young to some officials of the Mormon body who recently called on her to induce her to return to "the church" she had quitted. "A religion which breaks women's hearts," she continued, "and ruins them is of the devil. That's what Mormonism does." It is a pity that the deluded creatures in Europe whom Mormon missionaries are inducing to come to Salt Lake are not made aware of the convictions thus forced on one who saw so much of this scandalous system, which is profanely called a "religion."

An Illustrated Paper of an immoral Character is being offered for sale on the Southern lines of railroad, and the statement is made that it is under the patronage of the Young Men's Christian Association. This is one of Satan's methods of endeavoring to bring institutions he hates into disrepute. The Y. M. C. A. has nothing to do with the paper in question.

SAMUEL: AN EXAMPLE OF INTERCESSION.

A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"Moreover as for me, God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you; but I will teach you the good and the right way."—1 Samuel, 12 : 23.

The Privilege of Praying for Others—The Unspeakable Value of such Prayers—Samuel in the Forefront of Intercessors—I. His Habit of Intercession—The Significance of his Name—The Success of his Prayers—II. His Provocation to Cease from Intercession—The Slight the People put on him—Their Rejection of his Solemn Protest—III. His Persevering Intercession—He Prayed for Saul until God checked him—The Sin of Neglecting Intercessory Prayer—IV. His Sincerity—He Showed it by Following Prayer with Teaching and Warning—A New York Christian Reproved by his Child—The Service of Strangers.

It is a very great privilege to be permitted to pray for our fellow-men. Prayer in each man's case must necessarily begin with personal petitions, for until the man is himself accepted with God he cannot act as an intercessor for others; and herein lies part of the excellence of intercessory prayer, for it is to the man who exercises it aright a mark of inward grace, and a token for good from the Lord. Thou mayest be sure that thy King loves thee when He will permit thee to speak a word to Him on behalf of thy friend.

Moreover, it shows an enlarged heart, a participation in the spirit of love, and a growing likeness to Christ. Earnest longings for the good of those around us show that we are beginning to take our right position toward our fellow-men, and are no longer living as if we were ourselves the sole end and aim of our own existence.

Such prayers are often of unspeakable value to those for whom they are offered. Many of us trace our conversion, if we go to the root of it, to the prayers of certain godly persons. In innumerable instances the prayers of parents have availed to bring young people to Christ. Many more will have to bless God for praying teachers, praying friends, praying pastors. Obscure persons confined to their beds are often the means of saving hundreds by their continual pleadings with God. The book of remembrance will reveal the value of these hidden ones, of whom so little is thought by the mass of Christians.

I commend, therefore, to you, my brethren and sisters in Christ, the abundant resources of intercessory prayer; use them without stint. My friend, hast thou nothing to ask for thyself? Then thou art indeed very rich; but if thou hast ever come to such a height of happiness as that, now use thy power in prayer for the church and for the world.

What if, like Abraham, thou art thyself secure, yet pray for the cities of the plain which are soon to be overwhelmed with destruction. If, like Esther, thou dwellest in the king's palace, art thou not come to the kingdom for such a time as this? Therefore, seek an audience of His Royal Majesty, and pray for those of thy race who are in jeopardy. If, like Nehemiah, you hold a high position in the royal courts, turn it to account for the banished ones, and when you next wait upon the King, present to him a petition for your brethren.

It is to incite you to earnest intercession that I have selected this text. I would have you stirred up to diligent supplication by who is worthy to be placed in the very forefront of intercessors.

THE EXAMPLE OF SAMUEL,

I. Let us first dwell upon his habit of intercession, for it was most manifest in Samuel. We gather this from the text. He says, "God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you." It is clear therefore, that he had been in the continual habit and practice of praying for Israel; he could not speak of ceasing to pray if he had not hitherto continued in prayer. Samuel had become so rooted in the habit of prayer for the people that he seems to start at the very thought of bringing his intercession to an end.

The people, measuring the prophet by themselves, half suspected that he would be irritated with them, and would, therefore, deny them his prayers ; therefore in the nineteenth verse we read, " All the people said unto Samuel, Pray for thy servants unto the Lord thy God, that we die not." They greatly valued his prayers, and felt as if their national life, and perhaps their personal lives, depended upon his pleadings ; therefore they urged him as men who plead for their lives that he would not cease to pray for them, and he replied, " God forbid that I should."

The denial of his prayers does not seem to have entered his thoughts. To my mind the words represent him as astonished at the idea, horrified and half indignant at the suggestion — What I, Samuel, I who have been your servant from my childhood since the day when I put on the little ephod, and waited for you in the house of the Lord ; I that have lived for you and have loved you, and was willing to have died in your service, shall I ever cease to pray for you ?" He says, " God forbid." It is the strongest expression that one can well imagine, and this, together with his evident surprise, shows that the prophet's habit of intercession was rooted, constant, fixed, abiding, a part and parcel of himself.

If you will read his life you will see how truly this was the case. Samuel was born of prayer. A woman of a sorrowful spirit received him from God, and joyfully exclaimed, " For this child I prayed." He was named in prayer, for his name Samuel signifies " asked of God." Well did he carry out his name and prove its prophetic accuracy, for having commenced life by being himself asked of God, he continued asking of God, and all his knowledge, wisdom, justice, and power to rule were things which came to him because " asked of God."

He was nurtured by a woman of prayer at the first, and when he left her it was to dwell in the house of prayer all the days of his life. His earliest days were honored by a divine visitation, and he showed even then that waiting, watchful spirit which is the very knee of prayer. " Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth " is the cry of a simple, sincere heart, such as the Lord ever accepts. As to read his life, and you will find that he wrought great deliverances for the people. In the seventh chapter of this book we find that the Philistines grievously oppressed Israel, and Samuel bravely called the people together to consider their condition, and bade them turn from idolatry, and worship the only true God, and promised them his prayers as a boon which they greatly valued. These are his words : " Gather all Israel to Mizpeh, and I will pray for you unto the Lord." He then took a lamb, and offered it up for a burnt-offering wholly unto the Lord, " and Samuel cried unto the Lord for Israel, and the Lord heard him." This is one of the grand events of his life, and yet it is fairly descriptive of his whole career. He cried, and the Lord heard.

THE SUCCESS OF SAMUEL'S PRAYERS,

Samuel's prayers were so prevalent that the very elements were controlled by him. Oh, the power of prayer ! It has been ridiculed ; it has been represented as an unscientific and an unpractical thing, but we who daily try it know that its power cannot be exaggerated, and do not feel even a shadow of doubt concerning it. There is such power in prayer that it " moves the arm that moves the world." We have but to know how to pray, and the thunder shall lift up its voice in answer to our cry, and Jehovah's arrows shall be scattered abroad to the overthrowing of his adversaries.

When in his old age the people began to turn against Samuel, and to express dissatisfaction with his unworthy sons, it is beautiful to notice how Samuel at once resorted to prayer. Look at the eighth chapter, the fifth verse : the people said unto him, " Behold, thou art old, and thy sons walk not in thy ways : now make us a king to judge us."

The old man was sorely grieved ; it was natural that he should be. But look at the next words. Did Samuel scold the people ? Did he send them home in a huff ? No. It is written, " And Samuel prayed unto the Lord." He told his Master about them, and his Master said to him, " Hearken unto the voice of the people in all that they say unto thee , for they have not rejected thee "—do not lay it to heart as if it were a personal affront to thee—" but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them." This slight upon God's servant was a rejection of God Himself, and He would not have Samuel lay to heart their ingratitude to Him, but think of their wicked conduct to the Lord their God.

Instead of going about and telling one and another of the opprobrious things that have been said about us, it were well to go straight away to our closet and rehearse them in the ears of the Lord. Samuel was thus, you see, throughout his whole official life, a man mighty in prayer, and when the people left him and followed after their new-made king, our text shows that he did not cease to intercede for them. He says, " God forbid that I should cease to pray to God for you."

Nor was this all, when Saul had turned aside and become a traitor to his divine Lord, Samuel made intercession for him. One whole night he spent in earnest entreaty, though it was all in vain ; and many a time and oft did he sigh for the rejected prince. The old man had been, from his youth up, an intercessor, and he never ceased from the holy exercise till his lips were closed in death.

You cannot discharge your responsibilities as relatives, as citizens, as neighbors, nay, as Christian men, unless you often make supplication for all ranks and conditions. To pray for others must become to you a habit from which you would not cease even if they provoked you to the utmost degree ; for you would only cry out, God forbid that I should cease to pray for you, for it would be a great sin in the sight of the Most High.

II. Now, secondly, I call you to notice in Samuel's case to cease from intercession, which provocation he patiently endured.

HIS PROVOCATION

The first provocation was the slight which they put upon himself. The grand old man who had all the year round made his circuit from place to place to do justice had never looked at a bribe. He had done everything for them without fee or reward. Though he had a right to his stipend, yet he did not take it ; in the generosity of his spirit, he did everything gratuitously, like Nehemiah, in after days, who said, " The former governors that had been before me were chargeable unto the people, and had taken of them bread and wine, beside forty shekels of silver ; yea, even their servants bare rule over the people ; but so did not I, because of the fear of God."

Samuel throughout a long life had kept the land in peace, and innumerable blessings had come to Israel through his leadership ; but now he was getting old and somewhat infirm, though he was far from being worn out, and they seized on this excuse for setting up a king. The old man felt that there was life and work in him yet ; but they clamored for a king, and therefore their aged friend must give up his office and come down from his high position. It displeases him when he first hears their demand, but after a little time spent in prayer he resigns his position very pleasantly, and all his anxiety is to find the right man for the throne.

When the man is found he is full of care that the Lord's anointed shall be guided aright in the kingdom ; and without a thought about himself he rejoices at the sight of one whose opening days promised so well. His deposition was a hard thing, mark you, an unkind, ungenerous thing ; but he did not pray one atom the less for the people because of it ; probably he prayed much more ; for as his mother prayed most when the sorrow of her heart was greatest so was it with him. You can see the son in th mother in many respects, and in this point i particular that he prays most when he is mos grieved. As the sandal-wood tree perfumes th axe which smites it, so his bleeding heart poure out petitions for those who grieved him.

Beyond the provocation which came from their slight upon himself, he felt wounded b their utter rejection of his solemn protest. H stood before them and reasoned with them i the clearest possible manner : " What do yo want a king for?" he seemed to say. " Th will be the manner of the king that shall reig over you ; he will take your sons and appoin them for himself, for his chariots, and to be h horsemen ; and some shall run before his cha iots. He will take your daughters to be confe tionaries, and to be cooks, and to be bakers and he will take your fields, and your vineyard and your oliveyards, even the best of them, an give them to his servants. He will take th tenth of your seed, and of your vineyards, an give to his officers and to his servants : and h will take your men-servants, and your maid-se vants, and your goodliest young men, and you asses, and put them to his work. He will tak the tenth of your sheep ; and ye shall be his se vants ; and ye shall cry out in that day becau of your king which ye shall have chosen you and the Lord will not hear you in that day."

There was sound common-sense in all thes and every word turned out to be true in fact b fore long, and yet they would not listen. Th said " Nay, but we will have a king over u that we also may be like all the nations ; a that our king may judge us and fight our ba tles." Despite the venerable man did not grow testy. It sometimes the infirmity of wise men of yea and weight, that when they have presented clear case, presented it earnestly in all simp city of heart, and the thing looks as plain as th twice two make four, then if their hearers deli erately persist in defying their warning th grow peevish, or perhaps it is more fair to s they exhibit a justifiable indignation.

THEIR REJECTION OF HIS WARNING,

Some aged men would have said, " Well, the I will have nothing further to do with you shall go somewhere else. I shall leave Ram and journey to some other land where, perhap they may hear the word of the Lord." Not he is always hopeful, and if they will not do t best thing possible, he will try to lead them do the second best. If they will not ab under the direct rule of the Lord, as their ki he hopes that they will do well under a hum king who shall be a viceroy under God, and he continues hopefully to pray for them, and make the best he can of them.

At last it came to this, that the nation m have a king, and their king must be crown They must go to Gilgal to settle the kingdo and then Samuel stood up and in the wo which I read to you just now he declared h he had dealt with them, how he had never frauded nor oppressed, nor taken anything fr them, and he told them that their choice king was to some extent a rejection of God, t they were putting aside the best of rules and most honorable of governments to go dow the level of the nations. Still, they rejected last appeal, and it is beautiful to my mind to how calmly he drops the question when he given his last address, and made his most emn appeal to heaven. Their obstinate herence to their whim did not cause him to strain prayer on their behalf. " God forb saith he " that I should cease to pray for yo

The practical lesson of this is that when are tempted to cease from pleading for cer persons you must not yield to the suggest They have ridiculed your prayers ; they tell that they do not want them ; they have made a taunt and a jest of your pious wishe their behalf. Never mind. Retaliate by greater love. Do not cease to wrestle with for them. It may be you have been very much disappointed in them ; your heart breaks to see how they have gone aside, yet go with your deep anxieties to the mercy-seat, and cry out again for them. What will become of them if you leave them to themselves? Do you not leave off interceding, my dear friends, though you are provoked to do so in ten thousand ways. In addition to this, you see that, after clearly putting the case in the earnestness of your soul before them, they reject the right, and they choose the evil ; but let not that daunt you. Never let a sinner master you, and he will have done so if by his sin he drives you to neglect prayer.

Perhaps you have sometimes been tempted to wish you could pray for the dead ; let that vain wish stimulate you to be in earnest for the living. Agonize in prayer while your entreaties can be heard. Your husband, good woman, what if he does grow more drunken and more profane, pray for him still ; for God who can draw out leviathan as with a hook, can yet take this great sinner and make a saint of him. What if your son does seem to be more profligate than ever, follow him with many entreaties, and weep before God about him still. Loving mother and gracious father, join your fervent cries day and night at the mercy-seat and you shall yet obtain your desire. Let nothing quench the flame upon the altar, nor the hope in your souls.

As I have already said, Samuel prayed all the more because of the trouble that came upon him : let it be so with you. Samuel never could separate himself from the people ; he never tried to disentangle himself from being one with them, but he laid their case upon his breast. He was the very heart of Israel, vitally united to the whole body, and he could not be torn away from his beloved people. Herein lies the secret of intense intercession. Do, I pray you, try to make the interests of others your own interests. Do not think it is enough that you are saved. Do not sit down and fold your arms, and make a pillow for an idle head out of the sovereignty of God.

A heathen philosopher once said, "I am a man, and everything that concerns man interests me;" how much more should the Christian say this, since he should be like his Lord and Master, who was the standard of a generous-hearted, self-sacrificing man. The Son of Man was one of our Lord's favorite titles to denote that he linked his life with our manhood. Be you also true sons of men, brothers to all mankind. I charge you, if you know how to pray for yourselves, exercise the sacred privilege of intercession for others.

III. I come, in the third place, briefly to notice Samuel in

HIS PERSEVERING INTERCESSION.

Though the people thus provoked him, he did not cease from prayer for them ; for, first, there and then, he offered fresh supplication for them, and that cry was heard, and Saul was dowried with a rich measure of favor to start with. Samuel did not cease his prayer for Saul when Saul had gone far astray, for we find this passage : "Then came the word of the Lord to Samuel, saying, It repenteth me that I have set up Saul to be king, for he has turned back from following me, and hath not performed my commandment ; and it grieved Samuel, and he cried unto the Lord all night."

"All night!" I think I see the old man in an agony for Saul, whom he loved. Old men need sleep, but the prophet forsook his bed, and in the night-watches poured out his soul unto the Lord. Though he received no cheering answer, he still continued to cry ; for we read a little farther on that the Lord said to him, "How long wilt thou mourn for Saul?" He was pushing the case as far as ever he could push it, till the Lord gave him warning that there was no use in it.

It is to be admired in Samuel, that, even though Saul may have committed the sin which is unto death, and Samuel had some fear that his fate was fixed, yet he prayed on in desperate hope. The apostle John puts the case thus : "If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. There is a sin unto death : I do not say that he shall pray for it." He does not in such a case forbid our prayers, neither does he encourage them, but I take it that he gives us a permit to pray on. We do not know for certain that the most guilty person has indeed passed the bound of mercy, and therefore we may intercede with hope. If we have a horrible dread upon us that possibly our erring relative is beyond hope, if we are not commanded to pray, we are certainly not forbidden, and it is always best to err on the safe side, if it be erring at all. We may still go to God, even with a forlorn hope, and cry to him in the extremity of our distress.

When the prophet knew that Saul was hopelessly rejected he did not cease to pray for the nation, but went down to Bethlehem and anointed David, and when David was pursued by the malice of Saul we find him harboring David at Ramah, and exhibiting the power of prayer in his own house and in the holy place ; for when Saul came down thinking to seize David, even in the seer's house, there was a prayer-meeting being held, and Saul was so struck with it that he took to prophesying himself, and lay down all night among them disrobed and humbled. Men exclaimed, "Is Saul also among the prophets?"

The malicious king could not venture to touch Samuel. The prophet was a gentle, mild, loving man ; and yet the black-hearted Saul always had an awe of him, so that he took hold of his skirts for protection, and after he was dead wickedly sought to his supposed spirit for guidance. The man of God had evidently impressed the tall reprobate with the weight of his holy character. It is written that God was with him, and did let none of his words fall to the ground ; and this was because he was a praying man.

I pray you, therefore, dear friends, still persevere in supplication, and be supported in your perseverance by the knowledge that it would be a sin to cease to pray for those who have been the subjects of your petitions. Samuel confesses that it would have been sinful on his part to abstain from intercession. How so? Why, if he ceased to pray for that people, he would be neglecting his office, for God had made him a prophet to the nation, and he must intercede for them or neglect his duty. It would show a want of love to the Lord's chosen people if he did not pray for them. How could he teach them if he was not himself taught of God? How could he possibly hope to sway them if he had not enough affection for them to cry to God on their behalf?

Now, brethren and sisters, it will be sin on your part if you neglect the mercy-seat. You will grieve the Holy Spirit, you will rob Christ of His glory, you will be cruel to souls dead in sin, and you will be false and traitorous to the Spirit of grace, and to your sacred calling. You are kings and priests unto God, and what are you to offer as priests if you do not present before the Lord prayers and supplications for the children of men? Therefore, stay not your intercession lest the Lord be grieved with you.

IV. Our last point is that Samuel showed in intercession by corresponding action, for he says in the words of the text, "God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you ; but I will teach you the good and the right way." So far from leaving off praying, he would be doubly diligent to teach them ; and he did so.

HIS SINCERITY

If I knew where gold was to be had for the picking up, and I wanted my neighbor to be rich, I would tell him of the precious deposit, and ask him to come and gather some of the treasure with me. But many never think of inviting a neighbor or a friend who is a Sabbath-breaker to go with them to the house of God ; and there are thousands in London who only want an invitation and they would be sure to come, once, at any rate, and who can tell but that once might lead to their conversion?

If I desire the salvation of any one I ought to tell him as best I can what his condition is, and what the way of salvation is, and how he may find rest. All men are approachable at some time or in some way. It is very imprudent to rush at everybody as soon as you see them, without thought or ordinary prudence, for you may disgust those whom you wish to win ; but those who earnestly plead for others, and bestir themselves to seek them, are generally taught of God, and so they are made wise as to time, manner, and subject.

A man who wishes to shoot birds will, after a while, become expert in the sport, because he will give his mind to it : he will, after a little practice become a noted marksman and know all about guns and dogs. A man who wants to catch salmon has his heart set upon his angling, and becomes absorbed in the pursuit. He soon learns how to use his rod and how to manage his fish. So he who longs to win souls, and puts his heart into it, finds out the knack of it by some means, and the Lord gives him success. I could not teach it to you, you must practise in order to find it out ; but this I will say, no man is clear of his fellow's blood simply because he has prayed to be so.

I have heard of one who prayed in New York for a certain number of very poor families that he had visited, and he asked the Lord that they might be fed and clothed. His little son said, "Father, if I were God, I should tell you to answer your own prayer, for you have plenty of money." Thus the Lord might well say to us when we have been interceding, "Go and answer your own prayer by telling your friends of my Son."

There is a power in your gifts ; there is a power in your speech ; use these powers. If you cannot personally do much, you can do a great deal by helping another to preach Christ ; but chief and first you ought to do somewhat by your own hand, heart, and tongue. Go and teach the good and right way, and then shall your prayers be heard.

And finally, to come to a point that lies much upon my heart, I wish this evening so to speak to the crowd of strangers who will come and hear me that many may be turned unto the Lord.* Many of these people will not come because they want to hear the gospel, but because they have heard that I am an odd man, and they are curious to hear and see so eccentric a person. Never mind, they will hear the truth ; for it shall be my earnest endeavor to preach Christ crucified, and Him alone. I beseech you, every one of you, to pray for a blessing.

I charge you by everything that is kind to myself, by everything that is benevolent to your fellow-men, by everything that is grateful to my Lord, do pray that there may be a blessing upon the word that shall be spoken. Who knows how many may be brought to the Saviour's feet? They will not be hearers of the same kind as certain of you, who have grown hardened by hearing the gospel : many of them will be quite fresh people to whom everything will be new.

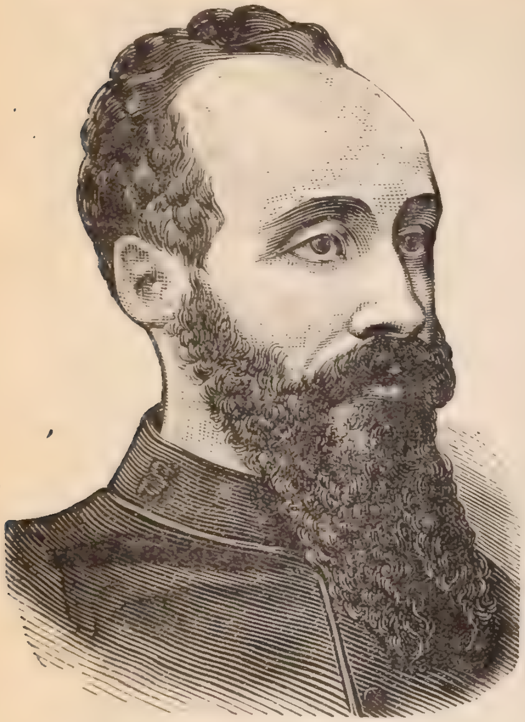
In all departments of work let the workers cry unto God that He will this night save souls and get glory to Himself. I shall be deeply thankful to you, and my Lord will bless you ; therefore, do it, I pray you, for His sake. Amen.

[Portion of Scripture read before Sermon
1 Samuel 12 : 1—23.]

[The prayers of the readers of this Journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors in America and England, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it ; and for its weekly circulation of more than 175,000 copies to be blessed by the Holy Spirit to the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Talmage especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors]

---

* A night when the regular congregation absented themselves from the Tabernacle at Mr. Spurgeon's request, in order that strangers might have an opportunity of attending.



GEORGE SCOTT RAILTON.

Leader of the Salvation Army in America.

Early Advantages—Death of his Parents almost together—The Day and Means of his Conversion—His Work for Christ when at School—His union with the Salvation Army—Invasion of America.

SOME men are born leaders among their fellows, and, however they may be repressed by their surroundings, they will eventually rise to the position for which they are fitted by nature. Such a man, undoubtedly, is Mr. Railton, of whose life we herewith present a brief sketch, and of whose work in this country we have already given some accounts.

He is a native of Scotland, and was born in Arbroath, on July 6th, 1849. His father was a Wesleyan minister and missionary, who was blessed with a true help-meet in his amiable and devout wife. Under her pious care the children, of whom there were several, were drawn by loving influence and earnest solicitude to the Saviour. The early training of Mr. Railton was thus passed in a home regulated by the strictest rules of Puritanism in its better aspects. Add to such influences, and the fervent and effectual prayers of such parents, his conversion by the Spirit to Christ, and we have what has unmistakably revealed itself—an earnest soldier of the cross, who is willing to be or to do anything that he may win souls for his Great Commander.

Mr. Railton places the date of his conversion in the year 1860, when he was about eleven years of age, four years before he was bereft of both his parents, who died within twenty-hours of each other, in 1864. He says that on the Sabbath on which his conversion took place he was, by his own desire, left alone at home. After the rest of the family had gone to the chapel, his spirit being oppressed by reason of a deep sense of sin, he locked the door, and so assuring himself of the impossibility of interruption, he read and prayed, meditated and sang, and it was during these exercises that he entered into the glorious liberty of the children of God. The particular hymn used by the Spirit was "Depth of Mercy," which he sang to the tune of the German Hymn, desiring to realize deeply his guilt in the sight of God. With each verse his conviction became deeper until his power to sing utterly ceased at the verse :

> "Whence to me this waste of love?
> Ask my Advocate above ;
> See the cause in Jesu's face"

And then he talked to himself about the Saviour's love till with rising faith, he was enabled to cast all the burden of guilt upon the sin-bearer and to rejoice in the knowledge of sins forgiven. But it was not till three years later that he made the surrender of all he was and had or ever would have to the service of his Deliverer, a resolution which only they who know him best know how faithfully he has kept ever since. While at Woodhouse Grove Academy, for the sons of Wesleyan ministers, he was consumed with the desire for the conversion of the whole school ; and ministers in the Wesleyan Church to-day owe under God their conversion at that period to his fervent spirit and dauntless zeal for his Master's cause while he himself was only a junior pupil. It was his parents' privilege to know of this usefulness of their son ere they entered into their rest.

When the great work of the Salvation Army was started in London, Mr. Railton was engaged in commercial pursuits, and never became acquainted with what was then only a small East End mission. He was earnestly striving, however, to save souls, and, having but slender means or influence to bring to the work, he redeemed his former vow by putting his knowledge of several of the European languages out to interest for his Lord. He recognized in the foreign seamen who frequented the London docks possible jewels for that Master's crown, to gather whom beneath his banner, he with a few other kindred spirits, labored hard.

While immersed in this work he conceived the project of invading Africa single-handed for the Lord ; indeed, he went even farther than that, for he included the whole world in his programme of aggression. So far as he was concerned he was prepared to enter the "Dark Continent" by way of the Congo, and bury himself in order to disseminate Gospel truth among the inhabitants of the interior.

But it was while he was engaged in the battle against sin among the teeming thousands in the North of England that a copy of Mr. Booth's Christian Mission Magazine, with its yellow cover, fell into his hands. A brief perusal of this soon convinced him that in the work which this magazine represented was the special place for which the Lord, by His education, had fitted him. He was a candidate for the Wesleyan ministry at this very time, but had determined that if received he would follow in the track of the early Methodists, and would strive to bring back the church to its original system and life.

The discovery of a people who were actually carrying out the ideas and plans of John Wesley was a delightful surprise to him, and he did not hesitate for a moment to abandon the prospect he had in connection with one of the largest religious denominations in the world, and to throw in his lot with the even then small and almost unnoticed Christian Mission. Into this work, therefore, he threw himself, and has stood by Mr. Booth and his fellow-helpers amid reproaches, afflictions, and persecution, and even personal suffering, never wanting by day or night.

Passionately military in all his tastes, he always scorned any approach to effeminacy in dress or manners, and has striven to inure himself to "hardness," as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. He rejoices in the acquired ability to enjoy a hearty meal of dry bread and to sleep soundly on bare boards or on the ground whenever necessary. So earnest was his devotion that he would accept no fixed salary for his really invaluable services ; but whatever he conceived he really had need of, which was not more than would starve an ordinary mortal, that only would he accept.

This is the man, who, with the noble band of sisters, has come to America to spread the knowledge of the God who rejoices to give salvation to those who ask Him. The Spirit helping him, what can withstand the influence of such a pioneer? But he is even now looking with longing eyes across the Atlantic on fresh aggressions on benighted Germany and awakening France. Emigrants from those and other lands on the Continent are being saved around him, and he longs for the day when he shall head them, and invade their native lands for the Lord. In his last letter to the general, he says, "If you race me into France, I will race you into Germany."

It cannot be charged upon Mr. Railton that his consuming zeal is unaccompanied by knowledge, for his language in public and extensive writings amply disprove such an insinuation. Doubtless he is not so weak as to be cast down by a little untoward worldly criticism, and we know that he thanks God for the past and expects a still more glorious future.

WHAT COMING WARS MAY WE EXPECT?[*]

By Rev. M. Baxter.

(Continued from page 365.)

Extract from Dr. Duffield's works—Five signs marking the Time of the End—Rev. E. Irving on the Victory over the World—The Second Coming of Christ a time of Manifestation—The Glory conferred on the Saints.

THE Rev. Dr. G. Duffield, the eminent pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in Lansing, Michigan, published in 1842 his learned "Dissertations on the Prophecies relative to the Second Coming of Jesus Christ" (434 pages), in which he said :

"Ever since the French Revolution, in A.D. 1793–8, when very probably the seventy-five years, for the Time of the End, commenced[†]

THE PECULIAR SIGNS,

both moral and political, which are predicted to mark the Time of the End, have been developing.

"1. The general preaching of the Gospel throughout the world is announced by our Saviour Himself to be an event which shall give notice of the end of this present dispensation (Matthew 24 : 14) ; and already the Gospel has been preached in nearly every nation ; and the Bible has been translated into upward of two hundred languages.

"2. Another sign anterior to Christ's coming is the wasting of the Ottoman Empire, or drying up of the Euphrates under the sixth vial, during which He utters the note of warning, 'Behold I come as a thief.' The European powers endeavor with united effort to uphold Turkey in its integrity, for they dread its partition, as the signal for a general war. Yet it has already lost Greece, Egypt, Servia, Moldavia, Wallachia, and Algeria, and is destined still further to be weakened.

"3. A further sign is the progress toward the resuscitation of the ancient Oriental kingdoms of Greece, Egypt, and Syria. The king of the north (Syria) and the king of the south (Egypt)—relatively north and south in regard to Jerusalem—are predicted in Daniel 11 : 40–45 to be finally revived as independent sovereignties, and to act their part in the last scenes of the great tragedy. Already Greece and Egypt are virtually independent states, and indications are clear and decisive that in the future decline of the Turkish Empire, or on its ruins, Syria is destined to revive as a new political sovereignty ; and the return and re-establishmnt of the Jews in Palestine to take place.

---

[*] Extracted from "Coming Wars," by Rev. M. Baxter, in two pamphlets—five cents each by ia ma First pamphlet contains "Ten Signs of the EndDnap description of Approaching Events," with two ms, l and four large diagrams. Second pamphlet contains valuable quotations from Forty Expositors on these events. Address, 63 Bible House, New York.

[†] [Note by Editor.] These 75 years are the prolongation of the 1335 years beyond the 1260 years (Dan. 12 : 12 ; Rev. 11 : 3 ; 12 : 6). The primary 1260 years of Papal power date from A.D. 533–47, when Justinian's Code of Laws was promulgated, and end in 1793–1806, the era of the French Revolution and of Napoleon's Code of Laws. The 1335 years date from A.D. 533–47 to 1868–82. The secondary 1260 years of Mahomedan and Papal tyranny date from 606–22 to 1866–82.

"4. Another sign of the coming of Christ, and which there are reasons to believe we are approaching, is the rise of some great military power, the last form of Antichrist, whose temporary triumph shall be marked with violent persecution, and by the slaughter of the Witnesses (during three and a half years).—Rev. 17 : 7-12.

"These events have not yet occurred. Many expositors believe Antichrist will be the last head of the political Roman Empire—a politico-ecclesiastical power—and will receive, through the influence of the Pope, the temporary support of the Ten Kings, the antichristian nations of Europe, and will make Syria and Palestine the centre of his dominion, and probably Jerusalem his capital ; and for a season terribly persecute the people of God, and suppress the profession of Christianity.

"There may yet be an embodiment of all that is corrupt in Popery, Mahomedanism, and Judaism, developed in some new antichristian apostasy in Palestine among the Jews. Certain it is that the eye of Napoleon Bonaparte was turned to that part of the world and that he entertained the design to establish there an independent maritime power, whose alliance might be useful to France in her movements in the Mediterranean, and in her jealousy of British commerce.

"France thirsts for military glory : and this project may be realized by some schemes of warlike enterprise which she may excogitate, affecting Syria, Palestine, and Egypt. Prophecy teaches us that these three countries will be the theatre where the last form of Antichrist will develop his apostasy persecutions, and idolatry, and where afterward in the subsequent Millennium the cause and kingdom of Jesus Christ shall have their most illustrious honors. The expositor Fraser considers that the Papal power will ultimately be transferred from Rome to Judea, and extend its influence in Asia, and flourish on the ruins of Islamism (Isaiah 19 : 25).

"In Revelation 17 the apostle describes a woman arrayed in scarlet, and sitting on a scarlet-colored wild beast, having seven heads and ten horns. The wild beast signifies the political Roman Empire ; and the woman, Papal Rome. In all probability the wild-beast's seventh and last head or form of sovereignty, which was predicted to exist only a short time but afterward to be resuscitated prior to the destruction of the wild-beast itself, and the woman (Rev. 17 : 10, 11) was the military empire of France which reached its greatest power and glory under Napoleon Bonaparte, and which continued but a short time from 1806 to 1815, and was killed by the sword of the allied sovereigns at Waterloo in 1815 (Rev. 13 : 3, 14) ; but which will revive in an ascendant political and military dynasty, in the formation and development of which France is destined to act a conspicuous part ; and by means of which the way will be prepared for the exhibition of the last and infidel phase of Popery at the epoch of her destruction.

"5. A further sign heralding the coming of Christ, is the spread and prevalence of the spirits of Infidelity, of Despotism, and of Popery among he nations of the earth ; thus preparing the way for the last convulsive scenes of revolution and of the conspiracies among kings and their armies against the peace and happiness of the world and the cause of Jesus Christ. These are he three unclean spirits of demons, the symolic frog, which come out of the mouths of he dragon, and of the wild-beast and of the alse prophet to prepare the way of far great commotions, and to lead on and gather 'the kings f the earth and of the whole world to the war of hat great day of God Almighty' (Rev. 16 : 13). The Lord's coming in the clouds of heaven is presignified by all these things, and is even at he doors. Meanwhile He is sealing His people, ouring out His Spirit and gathering in His elect. Verily, we must be blind indeed, if we cannot iscern the signs of the times."

The following passage from the works of the

REV. E. IRVING

ill in this connection be read with interest :

"Our victory over the world and the flesh, over sin and Satan, over evil angels and wicked men, over death and the grave, can only be accomplished by the salvation of Jesus Christ, and by fervent faith and prayer to Him for succor and assistance, and by the mighty power of God working in us both to will and to do of His good pleasure, and not by any natural strength or power resident in us. You cannot in your own strength withstand Satan's assaults, or rise superior to the dominion of sin, or disease, or death. Can you say to disease, Depart ? or unto pain, Gnaw my vitals no more ? or to sorrow, No longer poison my peace or consume my life ? Can you say to the clay-cold lips, Breathe upon me once more ? or to the death-bound tongue, Speak to me again that my soul may be comforted, and my hopes revived ? or can you say to the grave, Give me back my dead, thou devourer ? or to corruption, Feed not on my darling ?

"Canst thou, O man ! abrogate or reverse any one of these bitter stings which trouble thy soul's condition from the cradle to the tomb ? Canst thou strike a covenant with conscience that it shall not bite or sting ? or with sin, that it shall not be masterful and oppressive ? or with the tongue, that it shall not be false ? or with the eye that it shall not be covetous ? or with the flesh that it shall not be lustful and voluptuous ? or with life, that it shall not be full of pride ? or with any thing beneath the sun, that it shall not be full of vanity and vexation of spirit ? Unless thou comest to Christ for salvation and forgiveness, thou art unprepared to meet death, or the issues of judgment, which are more terrible than death.

"Our recovery from a fallen and sinful condition can only be effected by the Almighty operation of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit. The gift of Christ from the bosom of the Father, to die upon the cross, in our stead, to atone for our sins, was an act of unspeakable love ; whence it is written, 'God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life' (John 3 : 16). And again : 'Greater love hath no man than this, that a man should lay down his life for his friends (John 15 : 13) : but herein is the love of God manifested, that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us' (Rom. 5 : 8). And, oh ! who can measure the greatness of that love of God to us, which yielded up His well-beloved Son to such shame and sufferings for our sakes. Who can contain the knowledge of it, except the Eternal Fountain of love from whom all that is blessed and lovely doth proceed. And as the love of the Father was transcendent in permitting His Son to come forth to save the fallen sons of men, so also was the love of the Son, in willingly coming to save us. For He was not a creature, or of finite power, that He could be compelled to obey. And at

"THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST

we shall behold Him, 'whom not having seen, we love : we shall see Him as He is : in whom, though now we see Him not, yet believing, we rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory' (1 Peter 1 : 8 ; 1 John 3 : 2). We shall see all the glorious attributes of his Godhead manifested in His Manhood : the Son of Mary glorified into the Son of God : and clothed with the all-sustaining-power of God—not in humiliation, as formerly, but travelling in the greatness of His strength : not as a servant, but as a sovereign, uniting in Himself all the tender intercessions of the Priest, and the powerful majesty of the King —a Priest upon his throne forever (Hebrews 8 : 1). And we shall see the prison doors of death unbarred and the grave yield up her dead, and then shall come to pass the saying, Death shall be swallowed up in victory (Isaiah 25 : 8).

"We shall then be gathered with all the saints of God, who in their flesh shall see Him, and shall stand in their lot in that latter day, the patriarchs, the prophets, the apostles, the glorious army of martyrs, the general assembly of the First-born, whose names are written in Heaven, the Church of the living God, the whole host of the redeemed, whom Christ shall bring with Him, and we who remain alive till His coming shall be caught up with Him into the air, and so shall be forever with the Lord (1 Thess. 4 : 16, 17 ; Heb. 12 : 23). This is not a cheerless parting, like death, but a joyful meeting and eternal union of those who are spiritually dear to one another. For natural affection will then be no more, and spiritual affections alone will remain. Then our brother and sister and mother will be they who have fulfilled the will of our Heavenly Father (Matt. 12 : 50).

"In the next place, this body of sin and death shall be exchanged for the likeness of Christ's glorious body, for sinful flesh and blood shall not inherit that kingdom, nor corruption inherit incorruption ; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body ; 'it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory ; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power.'

"In the next place, we shall be forever with the Lord, partakers of His throne, partakers of His crown, and partakers of His government ; His assessors in judgment, His deputies in power, ruling over the cities of His dominion, and judging the tribes of the sojourners upon the earth. We shall be like the Lord, who ascended up from the earth, as easily as He descended : and who in His resurrection-body passed to and fro without let or impediment of matter, and governed the elements with a sovereign control. And so shall we in the exercise of that government and sovereignty over the earth, with which we shall then be endowed, be like Adam, a king in his majesty, whom the elements of nature and all the living, moving creatures harmed not, but delighted to obey.

"And we shall behold all enemies subdued under the feet of Christ the Second Adam, and the accuser of the brethren of Satan cast into the bottomless pit for a thousand years, and with him all his evil angels, which are now dwelling in the natural man and ruling the earth. Finally, we shall behold the earth and all its sojourners, living in peace and blessedness under the government of the Lord Jesus Christ (Dan. 7 : 13, 14 ; Zech. 14 : 9 ; Rev. 20) ; nature re-possessed of all its original beauty, and society of all its proper blessedness : with peace, gentleness, and meekness restored on every hand, all men blessed in Jesus, and calling Him blessed : nothing to hurt or destroy, in all God's holy mountain : and the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the channels of the deep."

(To be continued.)

The Roll-Call Unanswered.—A private soldier, by his general good conduct and willingness to be of kindly service to all his comrades, had won the affection of his regiment and the esteem of his commanding officer. He was always to be depended upon, and was never found in those scenes in which so many of his comrades took delight. He was, of course, called "a Methodist," and jeered at on account of attending religious meetings whenever he had the opportunity. The young soldier, however, took no notice of these petty persecutions, and when beset more sharply than usual, might sometimes be seen taking from his breast a printed leaf, which he would look at for a moment and then return to his pocket. It happened that his regiment was ordered into action, and after bravely doing his best, on a most disastrous day, the young soldier fell mortally wounded. In the excitement of the contest this was unnoticed, but by and by, at the close of the attack, when the roll-call was read, it was found he did not answer to his name. His officer was deeply touched, and did not think it beneath him to join the search party sent out to pick up the wounded. It was not long before they arrived at the place where the young man had fallen. A placid smile was on his face, and his hand clasped in death the leaf he had so often been seen looking at. On it was found these words : "The blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin."

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 367.)

Mrs. Symons.

No one had been more surprised at old Squire Symons's second marriage than Charles Clifford, but it had been also a source of considerable amusement to him. Julia's efforts to be quite a lady continued to afford him constant entertainment; and when the check of Ruth's presence was removed, he visited Rockwood more frequently. He thought Ernest a lucky fellow to have won Ruth in spite of his poverty and his downfall in the world; but he had indulged no hope of winning her himself, and there was no insincerity in the hearty though somewhat melancholy congratulations he sent to them. Ernest was having the best of it again, he thought to himself.

As he crossed to and fro along the cliffs from Clifford to Rockwood he often stood on the point from which he could see the greater portion of his lands, looking at them with a dissatisfied heart. He knew he was extravagant; but he could not be so reckless as he had been when his sudden spurts of good fortune put him in possession of funds, which were as lightly lost as they had been lightly won.

To lose now was to lose the property, for which a long line of ancestors had toiled and schemed; and he had natural feeling enough to grudge that loss. He hated to feel that the acres would slip through his fingers as surely as the coins had done before; yet he could not deny himself, or turn his nature into another channel. He must have a merry life at any cost.

In the mean time he tried to gain as much merriment as sufficed for him at Rockwood, where Julia always made him welcome. She took good care that her husband should not sink into any excess that might endanger his life and her own position; but she could not find it in her heart to refuse Charles anything she could get for him. Though Ruth had shared her little fortune with her father, still allowing him half her yearly income, Julia did not find it any easy task to be the lady of Rockwood on two hundred pounds a year.

It was not very pleasant to be a lady on means so small, and with all the neighborhood, even her own old friends, turning the cold shoulder upon her. She found herself left very much alone, and she could not help welcoming every visit from the handsome scapegrace whom she had helped back to his estates, and for whom she still felt a lurking fondness. Squire Symons himself urged him to come often, almost with tears in his eyes.

Mrs. Clifford had suffered many hardships during her life, but she had never suffered one so cruel as to be compelled to invite Julia Rush to Clifford Grange. Old Martha Rush had been goose-girl, and Julia herself, in her girlhood, had tended the geese upon the cliffs. It was an unheard-of degradation to entertain her as a guest. But Charles was inexorable, and Julia enjoyed nothing so greatly as visiting at Clifford Grange. There was a close relationship between her and Mrs. Clifford, since her step-daughter, Miss Ruth, had become Mrs. Clifford's daughter-in-law; and she never failed to communicate the contents of Ruth's letters to her father.

She almost drove Mrs. Clifford to distraction by speaking of her sons as Ernest and Charlie; though Charles only laughed good-temperedly when she complained to him about it. It was in vain that Mrs. Clifford assumed her most distant and haughty manners; Julia had a native confidence which was quite a match for any fine ladylike-airs. She was strong in the consciousness that she was Mrs. Symons of Rockwood; and if her dress was not so costly or so tasteful as the elder lady's, it was much more gaudy, and, in Julia's own eyes, much grander.

Mrs. Britton, humble as she felt it her duty to be, fully shared Mrs. Clifford's indignation and disdain of Mrs. Symons. She seldom failed to obey any summons from her dear old friend, though Jenny was not permitted by her father to set a foot within the doors of Clifford Grange. Charles respected his clergyman, and avoided him.

But he had readily guessed the secret of Jenny's exclusion, if his mother's petulant complaints had not revealed her suspicions of Mrs. Britton's ambitious hopes, and for sheer want of amusement he made the pursuit of little Jenny Britton his favorite pastime. It cost Mr. Britton many a sleepless hour; but never did mother rejoice more in secret over the success of her tactics; while Mrs. Clifford was terrified beyond measure at the idea of Charles bringing a wife to Clifford Grange, and that wife being Jenny Britton.

The new position to which she had climbed was by no means sweet to Julia. The bondage, borne so patiently by Ruth, was a very real burden. Now that she was left to the sole companionship and management of her old husband, the confinement became close and the work hard. She had looked on, and thought that Ruth had little to do but amuse herself; but she found that she had fulfilled a circle of daily duties which now fell upon her.

There were no more long hours in which she could safely leave Squire Symons under a careful guardianship and walk over to Clifford to visit her infirm and grumbling mother or her aunt Dunnit. Faithfulness was the groundwork of poor Julia's character; it was natural and instinctive to her. She had satisfied her ambition; but she could not endure the thought of seeming to forsake her friends. Her mother was almost a disgrace to her; yet she could not, without much pain, refrain from paying her frequent visits.

She had besides harder work to do—drudging toil and labor which tested her physical strength severely. For Julia was no slattern, and she did not like to see dust gathering upon the furniture, which would be hers at least as long as Squire Symons lived. The young maid-servant had been dismissed, and Julia had double duty to do. There were nights of wakefulness and watchfulness, and days of toil and care. The whole responsibility of keeping her husband free from excesses, which would have proved fatal to him, fell upon her.

She began to lose bulk and color, partly to her alarm and partly to her gratification. The long and narrow old-fashioned mirrors reflected to her scrutinizing eyes a face growing paler and more careworn, and a frame visibly lessening. She fancied that she was getting more like Miss Ruth, with her clear, colorless complexion, and her air of patrician refinement. But she could not help feeling, in spite of all, that she was paying a higher price than she had reckoned on for the object of her ambition.

At last, one morning in May, she ventured to leave Rockwood to go over to Clifford, and spend the day with her mother. She had not been able to stay long with her since the day of Ruth's marriage, and many a querulous message had reached her. It was by no means a pleasant duty to face the old woman and sit listening to her complaints. Now her daughter was a lady she could not understand why she had not money enough to provide lavishly for all her wants and fancies, and Julia had not the heart to tell her that she had scarcely a shilling she could use as she pleased. At last she grew weary of sitting in the dark little cottage, listening to her mother's grumblings, and as the afternoon wore on she announced her intention of going to have tea with her aunt Dunnit.

It seemed a strange thing to Julia to walk down the village street again, nodding to one old neighbor after another, who stood and watched her enviously from the cottage doors, but gave her no very cordial greeting. The children rushing noisily out of school and climbing the hedgerows or scampering down to the beach, and the mothers calling to them to come in to tea, struck a deep and melancholy chord within her.

There would never more be any life like this for her, full of innocent pleasures and work that was no drudgery, done always for love and not for wages. To keep home for a husband and four children dear to her, to labor for them because she loved them, would not be her lot. She had had her choice, and had chosen foolishly.

Julia hardly put her vague and forlorn feeling into words, but it was none the less there. Rockwood, with its large, old empty rooms, and its lonely silence, was on her mind as she stepped into her aunt Dunnit's spotless and shining kitchen, with its door opening upon the garden and the sunshine glistening on its shelves of crockery and the burnished brass candlesticks on the high mantle-piece. She sank down wearied into the arm-chair on the hearth, with its well-stuffed cushions, soft with the feathers of her aunt's famous poultry, and covered with many-colored patchwork put together by her aunt's fingers.

This was a very palace of homely comfort, and one like it had always been within Julia's reach. Mrs. Dunnit busied herself in getting tea, and while Julia looked on with her black eyes glittering through tears she made ready the little round table and watched the kettle for the first symptoms of boiling, to secure the earliest bubbling of the water to make her old man's tea, and to prevent any drops splashing her clean hearth. Julia breathed a heavy and very bitter sigh.

"Look out and see if Uncle's comin', my dear," said Mrs. Dunnit, hearing the sigh, but passing it over as not to be talked about; and give him a call if you see him."

Julia stood for a few moments on the door-sill, shading her eyes with her hand, and looking out on a scene as old as her earliest childhood to her. There was nothing new in the little garden, or the green meadow beyond, or the peep of the sea in a fork of the cliffs. The cluck of the hens calling their chickens, and the blissful grunting of the pig basking in the sunshine, were as old to her. But she had never stood at the cottage door, with tear-dimmed eyes and a failing heart, as now.

Why had she not been content with the chance of such a home as this? She might have married some one who had loved her, and who would have grown old with her, as her uncle and aunt had done. But she belonged neither to her own folks nor to gentlefolks, as it was; and no husband or child would go on into old age with her and brighten up those chilly days. It was a terrible mistake that she had made.

Mrs. Dunnit was inclined to make more of Julia, seeing her in such low spirits. She broiled some rashers of bacon, and poached some of her famous eggs for tea. How delicious the food tasted to Julia in the pleasant cottage-kitchen, with the kettle singing a tune upon the hob, and the spring breezes blowing in through the open door, salt and fresh from the sea!

Squire Symons was particular about his meals, and she was obliged to prepare richer and less simple food at Rockwood for him, and they were eaten in larger rooms; but then she felt compelled to sit up straight and stiff, and take care lest she brought down some cutting reproof from her husband, who had been accustomed to see Ruth at the head of his table. Oh, how foolish she had been!

"Master Charlie came back from London last night," remarked Old Dunnit, as they sat at tea. "He's been seein' Master Ernest, thank the Lord! There shouldn't be no enmity betwixt them, for they're all but brothers. He says our Miss Rose's as white as a lily, and her little hands are like egg-shells. She's pinin' away, he's afraid, and she won't hear of comin' back to Clifford."

"O Elijah!" cried his wife; "can't nothin' be done? Miss Rose's like our own child, poor little motherless blossom! It'll be a sore grief to every one of us if anything mischances Miss Rose. It's likely she'll pine, leavin' Clifford for London, where there's no good air, no good victuals, nor good milk and eggs. Couldn't she come home again?"

'Master Charlie's been talkin' to me," re- ed old Dunnit "He's not all bad, is Master Charlie, and maybe he'll turn to the Lord ne day. He says he'll go clear away for the nmer, and leave Clifford Grange for Master nest, if he'll come to it for three or four nths. It 'ud be like old times again."

It can't ever be like old times again," said s. Dunnit sadly.

Did he say anythin' about my daughter— s Ruth?" inquired Julia. It was one of the ets of her elevation to dwell upon the close nection she had with Ruth, who was always d to her, and treated her as her father's wife.

Of course he'd see Mrs. Ernest Clifford," her aunt severely; "but I never heard of daughter of yours, Julia. To marry a nken old noodle does not make you the her of a lady like Miss Ruth, Julia Rush."

Come, come," interposed old Dunnit, ng from the tea-table, "let bygones be by- es. Julia can't unwed herself, if she wished er so. We must reap as we sow, but don't us hurry on the harvest. Julia, you come g wi' me to the Lantern Hill."

(To be continued.)

MINISTRY OF JESUS.

S. . Lesson for June 20th.—Heb. 2. Golden Text, Luke 9:35. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

UR subject for to-day commences with the d "Therefore," showing us that it is con- ed with the preceding chapter. "God, at sundry times and in divers manners e in time past unto the fathers by the proph- hath in these last days spoken unto us by Son, whom He hath appointed heir of all gs, etc.;" therefore we ought to give the earnest heed to the things which we have d, lest at any time we should let them slip, the word spoken by angels (or messengers; llos means both angel and messenger) was lfast, and every transgression and disobedi- received a just recompense of reward; how we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" that ye refuse not Him that speaketh. if they escaped not who refused Him that e on earth, much more shall not we escape turn away from Him that speaketh from en" (Heb. 12 : 25).

hat then does this Scripture say of Christ's salvation? He hath "by Himself purged sins" (ch. 1 : 3), He hath made "reconcilia- for the sins of the people" (ch. 2 : 17), by race of God He hath tasted death for every (2 : 9), "He is able to succor them that empted" (2 : 18), He hath put the world to in subjection under man (comp. 2 : 5, with . and through death He hath destroyed that hath the power of death, that is, the " (2 : 14). If we are not rejoicing that our re purged, if we are not standing as recon- to God, if we do not see our sins punished e death which Jesus tasted, if we are not red in temptation and delivered from the f death, it is because through our unbelief ndifference we have neglected this great ion. No man has a right to retain his sins the Son of God has borne and purged It is as much a wrong to the Lord as to lf if he remains under condemnation and the power of sin. The very largeness of grace intensifies our responsibility.

man who has heard the gospel of the grace d can remain longer in his sins without g contempt upon the sacrifice of Christ. sin committed by him who has heard of gracious deliverance, is as much a denial r Deliverer as was Peter's denial of his ; if He "hath delivered us from the power rkness" (Col. 1 : 13), then darkness in has no power over us, and to yield to it is n Satan in giving the lie to the work of . More and deeper issues are at stake in se of every sin of every sinner, than merely n salvation, Christ's word and honor and ork are at stake. Because He has purged ns as a whole, we ought every one of us to rged individually, and we wrong our Lord if we are not so, for we are despising His Word. God holds us responsible, not for our feelings which we cannot always control, but for the way in which we treat His Word. "He that rejecteth Me," said our Lord, "and receiveth not My words, hath one that judgeth him: the word which I have spoken the same shall judge him at the last day" (John 12 : 48).

We read (ver. 16) "Verily, He took not on Him the nature of angels, but He took on Him the seed of Abraham." Thus He took on Him the nature of a fallen race that He might stand on the same ground as man stands, and fight over again the battle with the enemy in which our first parents fell. All which they lost He has regained, and regained for us. But as He became one with us in order to regain it, we also must become one with Him in order to possess the fruits of His conquest. Just as death was impossible to the living God, just as, in order to suffer for sin, He must needs live a life out of Himself and in man, so must we by faith in Him live a life out of ourselves in Christ, in order to possess His victory. While we are occupied with our sins, our feelings, our desires, our hope, or our will, we are not occupied with Christ.

How then do we stand with regard to Christ's great salvation? "He gave Himself for our sins that He might deliver us from this present evil world (or age) according to the will of God and our Father" (Gal. 1 : 4). Is the end for which He gave Himself attained in us? Are we influenced by this present evil age? Do we partake of its spirit? Are we moved by the opinion of others? Does the ruling spirit, "all seek their own," affect us, and are we doing anything for selfish ends, for our own comfort, honor, prosperity, health, etc., without first considering God's interests and His will? If it is so, Christ's great salvation, which is competent to deliver us, has not effected its purpose. Why? We have neglected it, and God asks us how we shall escape. How can we escape the responsibility, how answer for our neglect?

Again the Apostle Peter tells us, "Ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ, etc." (1 Pet. 1 : 18, 19). Here again we learn that we are redeemed by the blood of Christ, from all which is aimless, fruitless, empty, in our manner of life. It is no excuse for us that we say, "My father always did so and so, and thus it cannot be wrong:" we are redeemed from the vain manner of life which we have received from our fathers. "Every one of us must give account of himself to God." We are not responsible for our fathers, but for ourselves. Every generation will be judged undoubtedly according to the light and knowledge with which God has blest it; and if, in any generation, some part of God's truth may have been hidden, it is perfectly conceivable that God may not hold such a generation responsible as He would another, in which a greater fulness of light had been vouchsafed. But how sinful must it be in His eyes, that men who live in the fulness of Gospel light justify worldliness, prevarication, selfishness, etc., on the ground that society demands it, or the position in society demands it, etc. O, let us know no demands but those to which Jesus signs His name, and which are consistent with those who by His blood are redeemed from such obligations.

But how then are we redeemed from this present evil world by His blood? If we have indeed taken our position in Christ, then we see condemned, not our sins only, but ourselves, we see all which the world has admired in us to be worthy of death, and we judge it to be so by believing in Jesus in whom we were condemned. All which can justify the world, all which makes things present to be of importance, all which exalts man, is condemned and crucified in Jesus. Thus "the world knew Him not," the world had no attractions for Him. He had no attractions for the world. By believing in Him we renounce ourselves, put off our old man, and we put on Christ. Henceforth it is not we personally who are to be considered, but Christ who liveth in us. Henceforth it is His will, His interests, His honor which rule us, and not our own, and therefore "the world knoweth us not, because it knew Him not" (1 John 3 : 1); by the cross of Christ the world is crucified to us and we unto the world (Gal. 6 : 14). Every motive henceforth is directly counter to the world's motives, and the prince of this world can have nothing in us because he has nothing in Christ (John 14 : 30).

Our beloved Lord saves us from our own nature by imparting to us His nature, which "seeketh not her own" (1 Cor. 13 : 5) which pleaseth not itself (Rom. 15 : 3), which does not its own will (John 5 : 30, 6 : 38). He brings us out from this present evil age that He may teach us to breathe the air of eternity, and fit us to reign with Him in the future. "For unto angels hath He not put in subjection the world to come" (i.e., probably the world in the time of the Millenium), but with regard to man it is written, "Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. This is our inheritance in Christ Jesus, but not yet possessed, for it is added, "But now we see not yet all things put under Him." Alford translates thus the following verse, "But Him that is made a little lower than the angels, even Jesus, we behold on account of His suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor; in order that He by the grace of God should taste death for every man. Thus we see that it is only through death that man can regain his lost inheritance, and Jesus died that death."

But there was yet more to be done. He must not only pay the ransom, but also regenerate the nature which He had taken. Thus it follows (ver. 10) "For it became Him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. It is thought and even spoken by some believers that, because Christ has suffered for us, we are not to suffer. This is the most fatal error. "The disciple is not above his Master: but every one shall be perfected as his Master" (Luke 6 : 40, margin). And this is confirmed in many other passages, especially (1 Pet. 4 : 12, 13), "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you, but rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings." Inasmuch as, or in proportion as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; there are sufferings in which we have no fellowship with Him, in which He cannot partake; He can have compassion for us when we suffer chastisement through inattention to His voice, but as it is a path which He never trod, there can be no fellowship; that is reserved for the suffering which is for His sake. "For both He that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one: for which cause He is not ashamed to call them brethren." To sanctify means to set apart or reserve to a holy use. Jesus for our sakes sanctified Himself, that we also might be sanctified, through the truth, He set Himself apart as man for God's use, that it might be possible to set us apart also through His redemption work for God's use.

Now, can we answer the great question of our subject, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" There is a possibility of our hearing God's truths and yet letting them slip (ver. 1), and even of receiving "the grace of God in vain" (2 Cor. 6 : 1). The apostle argues (ver. 2, 3) "If the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation? If no sin or disobedience could escape the all-seeing eye of God, or evade His perfect justice, even though no man could keep the law (John 7 : 19), how then can we escape condemnation if we neglect a salvation which places obedience and holiness within our reach? God teach us by His Holy Spirit our immense responsibility.

FOREIGN TOPICS.

The Death of the Empress of Russia, which has been considered imminent for several months, occurred on June 3d. She was fifty-six years of age, and her illness had been a long and painful one. She was married to the Czar, then only heir-apparent to the throne, in 1841. The later years of her life were embittered by the estrangement which had arisen between herself and her husband, and by the vicious life he led. She had given herself up to the guidance of the priests of the Greek Church, and under their influence occasionally advocated measures which, had they been effected, would have been disastrous to the country. Personally she was distinguished for her kindly and charitable disposition, and among the poor she was known as "the good Empress."

The New British Ministry is being Fiercely assailed in the press, although it has not yet had time to fully manifest its intentions. The appointment of the Roman Catholic Viceroy of India is severely condemned. One of the leading journals says: "The explanation of the appointment evidently is that the Prime Minister wished to conciliate those Roman Catholics whom he had offended by his impulsive attack on the Papacy. He apparently forgot that the Charybdis of Protestantism was very near the Scylla of Roman Catholicism. And after all the Roman Catholics have not been conciliated, for there is no class which has been more deeply offended by Mr. Gladstone's literary articles."

The Chilians achieved a Decisive Victory over the allied forces of Peru and Bolivia on May 30th, at Tacna. The allies had all their available strength in the field, and as they were thoroughly routed, there is hope that this protracted struggle is now nearing a conclusion. The bombardment of Callao was commenced according to the notification of the Chilian admiral on April 22d. The fleet, armed with long-range rifled guns, threw shot and shell into the town with impunity, being just beyond range of the guns in the shore batteries. Only a few of the inhabitants were injured—none seriously. The buildings of the town and the shipping in the harbor suffered severely, the railroad station being almost destroyed by shells which crashed through the roof and tore up the flooring.

Mr. Goschen, the Special Minister sent by Great Britain to Turkey, had an interview with the Sultan on June 3d. He explained that his first duty was to fulfil his mission to the Queen's satisfaction; at the same time the friendly relations subsisting between England and Turkey inspired him with the desire to be of service to the Sultan and his people. He concluded as follows: "I am convinced of your Majesty's ardent desire to ameliorate the position and assure the prosperity of your subjects, without distinction as to race or religion. I shall be happy if my efforts may contribute to the desired result." Mr. Goschen appears to entertain more hopeful views of the Sultan's "ardent desires" than European statesmen generally do, and recent events suggest a doubt whether he has valid grounds for his conviction on the subject.

Lord Beaconsfield in a Recent Speech to his political friends said that had the elections resulted in a victory for his party, he should probably have retired from the leadership, but as the party was in a minority, he conceived that his duty was not to desert his followers in the hour of their defeat. This decision is exactly opposite to that taken by his rival, Mr. Gladstone, who resigned when his party was vanquished and assumed the leadership when it was victorious.

A Duel between M. Henri Rochefort, a Leading Parisian journalist, and M. Koechlin, the brother-in-law of the Chief of Police, took place on June 3d, and has caused a profound sensation in Paris. The quarrel arose out of charges made in an article by Rochefort imputing dishonorable conduct to the Chief of Police and his relative. A challenge was given and accepted, and the duellists fought with swords near the Lake of Geneva. M. Rochefort was wounded in the breast, one telegram says dangerously, but other telegrams say only slightly. The fact that the wicked practice of duelling still exists in France is not a hopeful sign of the progress of that country, either in a moral or religious sense of the word.

Mr. Gladstone's One Sleepless Night.—Dr. Theodore Cuyler relates a conversation he had with the British Premier when in London. He says: "When I congratulated Mr. Gladstone on his vigorous health and power of achievement, he told me that he owed his good health to two or three rules well carried out. He carefully avoided the sins of the table, he took a great deal of muscular exercise with his axe, and he never allowed anything to rob him of his sleep. 'When I shut my chamber-door at night,' said he, 'I lock out all cares of state and of everything else.' He said that only one thing had ever kept him awake, and that was one evening when at Lord Lyttleton's place he had begun to cut a tree down, and darkness and a storm came on. He laid awake in some anxiety lest that tree should blow down!"

The Nucleus of a Second Kingdom of Israel.—The London correspondent of a daily journal writes that it is rumored in well-informed circles that among the projects which Mr. Goschen is to recommend for the Sultan's acceptance is that of forming into a united Jewish colony the districts of Gilead and Moab, which are at present inhabited only by a few nomad tribes. The Ottoman Government would retain its suzerain rights over this territory, and would receive in return for its concession a number of millions from certain capitalists, who have undertaken that they shall be forthcoming. Sir Moses Montefiore and several other wealthy Israelites favor this plan. The new colony would be subjected to the authority of a Prince of Jewish race and religion, and would serve as the nucleus of a second Kingdom of Israel.

A Raft Surrounded with floating Corpses.—The captain of a vessel which has arrived at Queenstown from Demerara reports that on the 30th of April he passed a raft which had apparently been made on board of a man-of-war or a first-class steamer, as it was bolted together, not lashed, and that afterward he saw several corpses dressed in white. The newspapers are inclined to connect the raft with the missing training-ship Atalanta. A telegram says that another vessel saw the same raft and two corpses dressed as seamen in the navy. Calculations as to location made by other authorities are thought to prove that the raft cannot have belonged to the Atalanta, although its construction appears to indicate that it was made on a similar ship.

The Egyptian Slave Trade.—Colonel Gordon, the British officer who is known in the East as Gordon Pacha, in a pamphlet issued by the Anti-Slavery Society, says: "The Khedive of Egypt and his subordinates have permitted the resuscitation of the slave trade in Central Equatorial Africa, and every order which I gave concerning the suppression of this abomination has been cancelled. It is time we should cease to accept the evasions and excuses of the Egyptian authorities. A decided message upon this point, delivered by the English and French governments, would have great effect. The slave trade will never be put down by the voluntary action of Egypt under its present ruler."

An Office Boy's Son Becoming Lord Mayor of London.—The Right Hon. the Lord Mayor of London, Alderman Truscott, mentioned at a public meeting on behalf of the Printers' Asylum recently that his father had made his fortune, and he hoped his own children would make theirs, in the printing trade. His father, some seventy years ago, in a town in the west of England, then a lad of nine years of age, through family misfortune, was compelled to take a situation involving the sweeping out of a printing-office. For three years he continued in that position, and was then bound apprentice. At nineteen years of age he married, and soon after came to London, having to borrow to pay his passage. He was at once employed by good firm, from whom he changed to the of of the King'sprinters, where he became forem After continuing there for a time he resolved go into business on his own account, and lived to compete successfully with his old m ters for the government work, and he left son in a position which resulted in his bec ing Lord Mayor of London. He died twen one years ago, and his last utterances w "Place over my grave the simple words, ' the memory of James Truscott, printer.'"

Condy's Fluid Instead of Wine.—Sacril met a fitting punishment in the case of a cha thief lately, who, bursting into a vestry in L don, tried the wine, as he thought, and foun "poisonous." It is now found that he dr several ounces of Condy's Disinfecting Fluid un the impression that it was raw spirits. He been caught, and is to be tried, but he a that no amount of imprisonment can equal punishment which his disinfecting dose infli on him.

A similar disagreeable surprise was exp enced by some thieves at Stepney, Lond some time ago. They had broken into the ernacle of the Rev. Archibald Brown, who a student at Mr. Spurgeon's College, and is pastor of one of the largest churches in Lond They effected an entrance a few hours after ordinance of baptism had been administe and the water not having been run off, but in the baptistery, the marauders, on their wa the vestry in search of booty, suddenly fel and received a thorough saturation, in addi to a fright, which they are not likely to forg

Mrs. M. Baxter Writes from Mulheim Rhein: "Our meetings at Mulheim an Ruhr were large and much blest. A Luthe pastor was present every evening. He is a g man. The Lord has given us much encour ment by the circumstance of our meeting several in this neighborhood who found p two years ago, in a young ladies' school in S zerland when I was there. They have held their faith, sometimes amid much difficulty. place, Mulheim am Rhein, and the other heim are both manufacturing places. We everywhere real hunger for the simple Gos Tracts are well received by the people. We prayer on behalf of our work."

Eleven Nihilists have been tried at Petersburg and convicted. Two of them condemned to death, and the others to per of hard labor varying from twenty years to years. Four of the prisoners were female

The Debt on Dr. Talmage's Church.— have received one dollar from Mrs. J. Laird, Mil Bay, New York.

Irish Famine Relief Fund.—Contribut received up to Saturday, June 5th:

A Friend, Chili, Ill. . . . .$
Previously acknowledged. . . . .

Forwarded to New York Herald. . . . . $

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watch (London) for May may be obtained at the office CHRISTIAN HERALD. Price six cents.

The Second Volume of the Christian He comprising Nos. 37 to 62 (July to Dec., 1879), be procured, elegantly bound in cloth, at this o Price $1.75.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works are on at the office of the CHRISTIAN HERALD, at pric low as to bring them within the reach of every Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with photog of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Plough Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth, 60 c The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volume o sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, a hom cal exposition of the book of Psalms, five vols., as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon's Birthday- This popular gift-book contains a suitable pa selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for ever in the year, with a blank space opposite for graphs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. Spur appear at their respective birthdays. The bo elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cents. R tances should accompany orders.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

blished at 63 Bible House, New York City, and 2 Ivy Lane, London. Edited in London by the Rev. M. Baxter, in New York by Mr. B. Aitken.

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. LMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also occasionally a Sermon by the Rev. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL.D., the celebrated Methodist Minister, Rev. W. M Y AITKEN, or some other Eminent Preacher; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

ingle Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, JUNE 17, 1880. 14th Year. No. 25—New Series.

ONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

RTRAIT OF MR. GEORGE SMITH, he English Philanthropist, and Sketch his Life.

E SINKING OF THE NARRAGANSETT. A New Sermon by Dr. almage.

) CASSIDY AND THE EAGLE'S EST, by Henry Martin (Concluded).

RENT EVENTS: Congress—The publican Nomination—The Steamat Disaster—The Newark Bank ilure—The Cost of Swearing—A dge who Saved a Life—The New ssionary Seminary—A Minister's vice Turned against Himself—A ristian Woman's Struggle, etc.

TER GORDON'S RESOLUTION.

DIVINE SURPRISES. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

A BRITISH OFFICER ON TEMPERANCE.

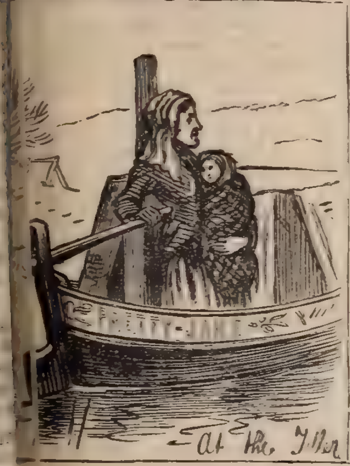
The Gospel Among Canadian Indians—Mission Work in Central Africa.

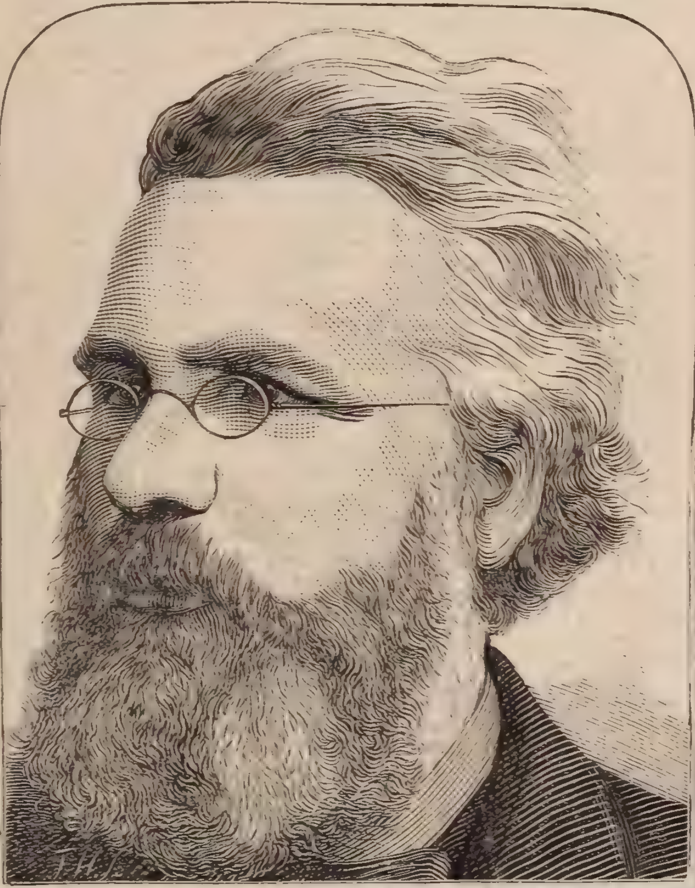
WHAT COMING WARS MAY WE EXPECT? by Rev. M. Baxter (Continued).

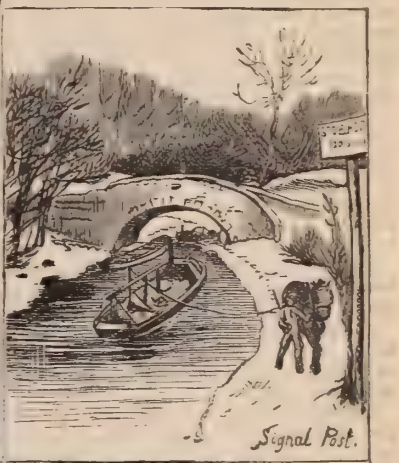
A WEIGHT OF WEALTH (Continued).

Review of the Quarter's S. S. Lessons, by Mrs. M. Baxter.

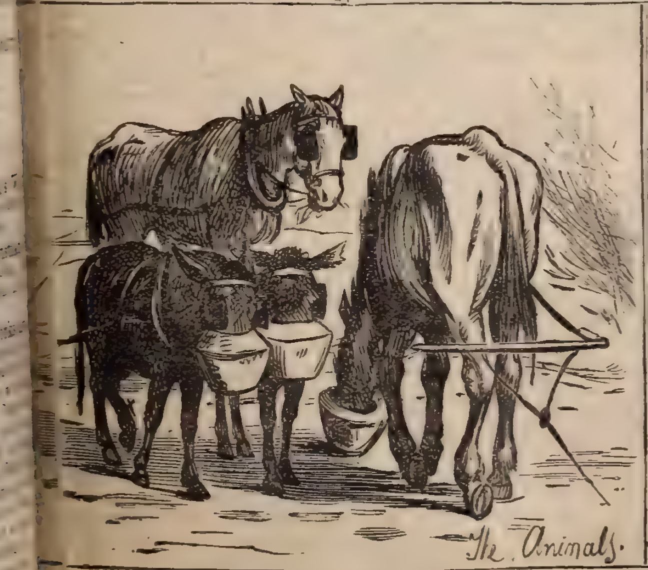
FOREIGN TOPICS: Mr. Gladstone's Financial Scheme—The Break-up of Turkey—Mr. Spurgeon on the Roman Catholic Viceroy—Mr. Morehouse's Bible Carriage—A Novelist's Complaint—A Tract Distributer Fined, etc.



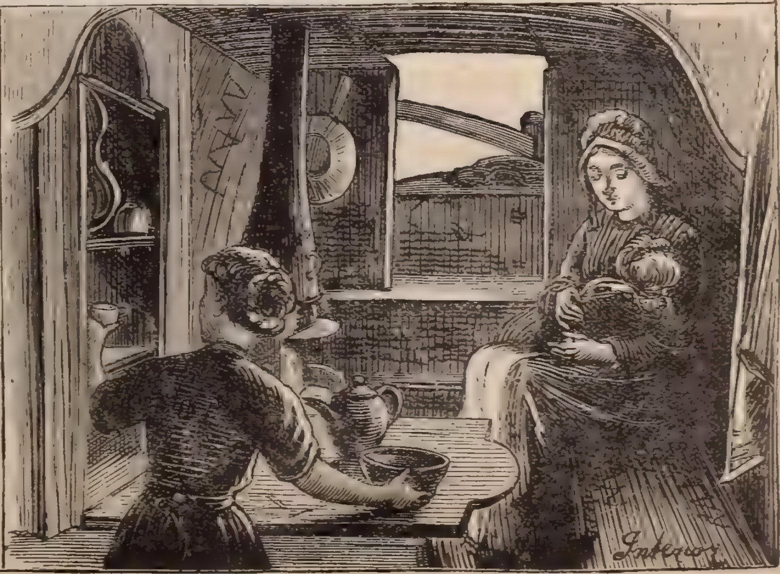




Signal Post.



The Animals.



Mr. GEORGE SMITH, the Friend of the Oppressed Classes in England.

MR. GEORGE SMITH, OF COALVILLE, ENGLAND.

Who is George Smith?—His Birth and Parentage—Deborah Smith and her Husband—George's early Taste of Toil in a Brickyard—His Attempt at Self-Help—His Appeal to the Home Secretary on behalf of the Brickyard Children—He meets with Opposition from Masters and Men—Sympathy from the Queen—His First Legislative Victory—He goes on to Help the Canal-boat Workers—A Boatwoman's Opinion—He succeeds with the Canal-boat Act—He is Saved by a Dog—Jane Garner's Letter—He begins Work among the Gypsies—Pictures from Gypsy Life—"Moses" and "Deliverance"—His great Self-sacrifice.

THIS gentleman represents, by name, at least, a very large family, but he has won for himself considerable distinction among the "Smiths" for his unparalleled efforts to ameliorate the wretched condition of the "boaters" on the English canals, the women and children working in the brickyards, and the gypsy children.

He was born at Clayhills, Staffordshire, England, on February 16th, 1831. As nearly the whole of his life has been passed in the Potteries and at Coalville, he has a claim to be heard upon the works of philanthropy which he has espoused with such noble earnestness. His father, William Smith, was a brick and tile maker, which calling the subject of our sketch followed, working at every branch of the business. For centuries his ancestors occupied one of three workmen's cottages at Tunstall which were constructed out of an old farm-house known by the high-sounding name of "Canal Hall." A name thus associated with George Smith had a suggestive reference to the great work of his after life.

His grandmother, Deborah, was a notable woman; she came of an old Cheshire family, and had rare gifts which she exercised for the good of her fellow-creatures. She was village doctor, village nurse, and village missionary. Besides these, she filled other important niches in the fabric of village life, for which her superior tact and knowledge eminently fitted her. A grateful fragrance yet lingers round the memory of this good woman, and to be in any way connected with Deborah Smith is still a sure passport to favor in the neighborhood where she exercised her healing and consoling arts.

The grandfather of George, who was the husband of this notable lady, came of a good family. With him Deborah was certainly not "unequally yoked," for he seemed to possess the same acquirements in which she excelled, and to which was added more resolution than his wife possessed.

George Smith's earliest instructor was a Primitive Methodist "dame," who attended to his culture from his third to his seventh birthday. From her educational manipulation he passed to the brickyard.

He thus relates

HIS LABORS AT NINE YEARS OF AGE:

"I had continually to carry about forty pounds of clay upon my head from the clay heap to the table on which the bricks were made. When there was no clay I had to carry the same weight of bricks. This labor had to be performed, almost without intermission, for thirteen hours daily. Sometimes my labors were increased by my having to work all night at the kilns. The result of the prolonged and severe labor to which I was subjected, combined with the cruel treatment experienced by me at the hands of the adult laborers, are shown in marks which are borne by me to this day. For all this labor I received sixpence (twelve cents) a day!"

It is doubtless the memory of the intense suffering which he endured at this period which moves him to the utterance of the passionate pleadings with which he is wont to move the audiences to which he addresses his appeals in behalf of the little slaves under worse than Egyptian bondage.

His case was by no means an isolated one, and illustrates in his own experience the severity of the work to which the wretched children are subjected in the brick-fields. He further says, "On one occasion I had to perform a very heavy task. After my customary day's work I had to carry 1200 nine-inch bricks from the maker to the floors on which they were placed to harden. The total distance walked by me that night was not less than fourteen miles, seven of which I traversed with eleven pounds' weight of clay in my arms, besides lifting the unmade clay and carrying it some distance to the maker. The total quantity of clay thus carried was five and a half tons."

When about eleven years of age he set his heart with stern determination to add to his scanty education. For two years he had to sit up all night twice a week to watch the ovens—this, too, after the customary day's work of carrying forty pounds of clay about the yard for thirteen hours. For this extra labor he received a shilling. This sum formed his "educational endowment;" and when we consider how money "burns in a child's pocket," and how many temptations must have passed before the overworked and neglected child, we perceive in his self-denial the early dawn of the energy and perseverance which he has developed to such a conspicuous degree in after life. The weekly shilling was equally divided between night-school fees and books. With these slender acquirements, well-improved, he slowly but surely made his way, step by step, up the ladder of his business. That his services were valued is evident, for he was fourteen years in the service of one firm. He has also the merit of being an inventor, his production being a pretty ornamental brick, now in general use in the "Queen Anne" style of houses.

With this preface we proceed to notice Mr. Smith's which have so distinguished him. In 1864 he took the first step in his attempt to mitigate the hardships of the boys and girls who labor in the brick-fields. He laid their case before the Secretary of State, and his advocacy was of a practical nature. He closed his case with these words: "I aim at telling simply a dark chapter in the annals of the poor. Throughout I speak that I do know." It needed little eloquence to show, as Mr. Smith essayed to do to the Social Science Congress, how great was the degradation which prevailed in English brick-fields, and the urgent need there was for legislative interference. He showed that there were from 20,000 to 30,000 children of both sexes, between the ages of three and seventeen, engaged in this demoralizing labor, herding together almost from infancy in a manner tending to the grossest immorality and impurity. Young girls between the ages of nine and thirteen were allotted the task of removing a mass of clay, weighing in the aggregate twenty-eight tons, to a distance of seven yards, their wages varying from eightpence to tenpence a day.

PUBLIC LABORS,

Soon after his letter to the Home Secretary Mr. Smith commenced in earnest his agitation to obtain the application of the principles of the Factory Acts to this business. The masters were quickly on the alert and combined for resistance to Mr. Smith's humane efforts. Even the laborers, from the same principle of self-interest, equally reprobated his steps, and, indeed, went so far as to burn his effigy in his native village. But Mr. Smith was not to be daunted, and was not without encouragement. He received letters of sympathy from such exalted personages as Queen Victoria, the Kings of Belgium and Holland, and from the Presidents of the United States and France. In 1872 the labor of many years was brought to a successful close by the passing of an Act of Parliament in the January of that year. The 25th of July, 1877, when the Act came into operation, must have been a proud day for poor brick-yard children no less than for George Smith, who on that day saw his victory registered in the hearts of the rising generation of clay-workers as well as in the archives of the country. The working of the Act during the subsequent two years has proved that no such serious interference w the brick business has resulted as was ant pated by the masters, and the cost of the bri has not been affected even to the extent o a penny per thousand.

His great energy forbade him now to sit d and fold his arms with complacent satisfacti On the contrary, he had in the struggle, wh had thus ended in victory, gathered a mas facts, with which he went forth on a fresh c paign against ignorance, distress, and imm ality, the people for whom he pleaded this t being the miserable creatures employed in ENGLISH CANAL BOATS.

In October, 1873, he published his first let upon this matter in London and provir papers. In these he estimated the "floa gypsies," as he termed the "bargees," or boat at 100,000, the majority of whom were born live all their days in the filthy holes dignifie the name of cabins. One woman on boa barge at Paddington said to Mr. Smith, rel to the status of women in barges, "The boat who first put a woman into a boat c deserved hanging."

In his endeavors to raise the 70,000 wo living on and working in connection with ba he saw but two means of remedy—the Law the Gospel. As an earnest Sunday-school s intendent, Mr. Smith clearly discerned how latter was to be applied; but he strove to s the application of sanitary laws first as an u necessity, which was perhaps all that was practicable at that period. Failing to obtai insertion of a clause in Mr. Plimsoll's Mer Shipping Act, he at last secured the ear Royal Commission, and related stern facts were as surprising to the members of it as were novel. An Act was passed which p every barge afloat under some local san authority, and the children under the su sion of the School Board of the district which the barge hailed. This Act receive royal assent on August 14th, 1877.

But when the Act was passed Mr. Smith's was not done. It appeared evident to hin the Government intended that the Act s fall through; but Mr. Smith was not the m stand by and see his work of enfranchisem the thousands of helpless ones become a de ter. Consequently, on January 1st of this y started from Coalville in order to walk to L along the banks of the canal, to see for h whether the Act which came into operati that day was being carried out. The mo had at the time in his pocket was worth a dollars, the greater portion of which w hausted by the time he reached Rugby by start on his pedestrian tour. The weather very severe, the snow deep, and the frozen, he was able to inspect each boat.

But if favored in one respect, he was at advantage in others. The heavy sno obliterated all the ordinary tracks. Whe ing Willowby, a village on his route, he th to take a near cut to his next point, a called Braunstone. For this purpose he l canal side. Crossing a bridge, he ent stubble-field. Failing to find his way, an ness coming on, he attempted to retra steps, but he was confronted by a fierce dog, to whom he gave the name of " The animal would not allow him to p and forced Mr. Smith to alter his cours subsequently reached Willowby, where that night at the Four Crosses Inn, wh served Dean Swift as a night refuge in a venture while on his journey from Lon Liverpool, by the mail-coach, about 1740.

The next morning, on surveying the the battle between himself and "Sport," clearly that the animal was a messenger sent by the Almighty to save him from for the direction in which he was walkin have led him into the river where the broken, at a lonely spot where no one w all probability, have heard any cries for

In connection with Braunstone, the a town, Mr. Smith records the only answe his letters that he has ever received from a t-woman, as not one in a hundred is able to d or write. The woman had an addition of ee little babies to her family, and had re- ved the £3 which the queen usually gives on such occasions. We give the letter as a iosity :

" JOHN GARNER.

Sir Master smith I am very much a blige to y sir fer beeing so kind to us sir: i did not e your Letter till 15 Janury 1878. Sir mister ith so have have Lost to 2 of our Babeys the oyes sir. I send my Best respects to you si

'JANE GARNER.

e bered one Janoury think we shall Rayer one sir. Sir smith we gone up to Paddington when your kind Let-lid Came to Braunstone.

"I thank your

"SIR SMITH."

reaching Paddington Canal basin Mr. h found that not a single boat had been tered nor an inspector appointed. He ly resorted to his usual means to compel nwilling Government to do its duty—the c press. Now the eighty-five canals are ought under the operations of the Act.

MR. SMITH'S WORK AMONG GYPSIES.

. Smith, having secured a second victory in ission of mercy, now looked around for ext oppressed class upon which to turn his itable energy for their relief. He found he sought in the gypsies. To prove that arge class needs legislative interference, we t one case which he cites. It is that of a nown gypsy woman who has for years tted" in the neighborhood of Wormwood s, in the suburbs of London :

e had six brothers and one sister, the family born in tents, and only one of the could read a little. She has had nine en born in a tent, four of whom are alive, ly one could read and write a little. She venteen grandchildren, and only two of can read and write a little, and thinks this average of other gypsy children. She tells t she got a good living for more than twenty by telling fortunes to servant-girls, old and young men, mostly out of a book of she could not read a sentence or tell a let- he said she had heard that I had taken cause of the poor gypsy children to get educated, and, with hands uplifted and n her eyes, which left no doubt of her g, said, 'I do hope from the bottom of rt that God will bless and prosper you in rk till a law is passed, and the poor gypsy n are brought under the School Board, eir parents compelled to send them to as other people are. The poor gypsy are poor ignorant things, I can assure She also said, 'Does the queen wish all r gypsy children to be educated?' I told t the queen took special interest in the of the working classes, and was always to hear of their welfare. Again, with ickling down her face, she said, 'I do he Lord for such a good queen and for noble-hearted woman. I do bless her. u, Lord, bless her!'

er some further conversation and taking vith her in her humble way in the van, she hoped I would not be insulted if she ne, as from a poor gypsy woman, a shil- help me in the work of getting a law o compel the gypsies to send their chil- school."

GYPSIES ON WANDSWORTH COMMON.

esent another case "in evidence" which th has collected, which shows clearly the object at which he aims: "A few e I wended my way to a large number es located in tents, huts, and vans near orth Common, to behold the pitiable of some sixty half-naked poor gypsy and thirty gypsy men and women living escribable state of ignorance, dirt, filth, and misery, mostly squatting upon the ground, or otherwise making their beds upon peg shavings and straw. Not more than four of these poor creatures could read a sentence or write a letter.

"In creeping almost upon 'all fours' into one of the tents, I came across a real antiquated but a good kind of gypsy woman, named Brittannia Lee, who boasted that she was a Lee of the fourth generation; and in sitting down upon a seat that brought my knees upon a level with my chin, I entered into a long conversation with the family about the object of my inquiries—of which they said they had heard, viz., to get all the gypsy tents, vans, and other movable habitations in the country registered and under proper sanitary arrangements, and the children compelled to attend school wherever they may be temporarily located, and to receive an education which will in some degree help to get them out of the low, heartrending condition into which they have been allowed to sink.

"Although Mrs. Lee was ill and poor, her face beamed with gladness to find that I was trying, to do the gypsy children good, and she said she should be pleased to show her deep interest in my work, and asked me if I would accept all the money she had in the world, viz., one penny and two farthings. With much persuasion and hesitation, and under fear of offending her, I accepted them, which I propose keeping as a token of a woman's desire to do something to improve her 'kith and kin.' With many expressions of 'God bless you in your work among the children; you will be rewarded some day,' we parted."

Mr. Smith finds heartfelt sympathy everywhere among the gypsies themselves. He records that he visited the gypsy camp on Mitcham Common, and heard that a gypsy woman was ill in one of the tents. He entered and sat down to converse with her and the attendant. He found that she had recently been confined, and had no food in the tent. Mr. Smith gave her a shilling, all that he had, and with which he purposed getting something to eat after his walk from Croydon. The woman's sense of gratitude was stirred, and said, "What can I do to show my gratitude? My child is not named, and I will name it whatever you please." After considering awhile this unexpected proposition, he suggested that the name should be "Deliverance." He subsequently discovered that her previous child was named "Moses," a curious coincidence.

We might present pages of narratives similar in character to those we have culled from the published records of Mr. Smith's labor; but so great has that work been, that his deeds of faith and labors of love will never be adequately known except by Him in whom he believes and on whom he trusts in his efforts to relieve the suffering, to guide the erring, and to put to shame the open sinner by the pure light of the Gospel. The great aim of Mr. Smith's operations is to bring the brickmaker, the boater, and the gypsy to Christ. Mr. Smith's earnest purpose is shown by the fact that he had paid out of his own pocket more than 2,000*l.* to get the Bills passed, and has sacrificed an appointment as brick and tile engineer of 450*l.* a year to see that they were carried out, and to assist other necessitous classes.

He is, therefore, a poor man to-day. This has been recognized, and a committee has been formed, with Lord Aberdare for its chairman, the Earls of Derby, Shaftesbury, and Aberdeen, and several members of Parliament in its membership, to raise a fund to provide for his wants in order that he may devote the remainder of his life to philanthropic works without the anxiety caused by a struggle for daily bread.

The Portrait and Life of Rev. Thomas Harrison, "the boy preacher" whose work at Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and other places, and now at Dr. Talmage's Tabernacle has been so signally blessed by God, will appear (God willing) in our next Number.

A BRITISH OFFICER ON TEMPERANCE.

At a Temperance Meeting recently held in London, Colonel Anderson said: For many years I served in India, among the Hindoos, the most temperate races in the world. I hold in my hand the last monthly return of the "Soldiers' Total Abstinence Association" in India, from which it appears there is a total of 8,249 names registered by that association alone, and so encouraging a state of affairs has been greatly brought about by the blessing of God on the exertions of my valued friend, the Rev. Mr. Gregson, who is and not merely a temperance orator, but also an evangelist, whose great powers for usefulness found a vent last December in ministering to the sick and wounded in the British entrenched position at Sherpore, near Cabul, and I rejoice to think he is now ministering to the Mussoorie and Landour congregation in the Himalayas.

THE JOHN GOUGH OF INDIA,

Missionaries tell us that the drunken habits of so many Europeans in India are a very great hindrance to the advancement of the Redeemer's cause in the East, and it used to be said before the days of railways and canals, that had the British been turned out of India all they would have left behind would have been pyramids of empty bottles! Depend upon it, there would be fewer cases of heat apoplexy in the East if pure filtered water and the ever-welcome tea were drunk instead of the wine, the spirits, and the beer, when the thermometer is perhaps 157 degrees outside in the sunshine, for no mortal constitution can stand many years' perpetual soaking in heating, intoxicating drinks, morning, noon, and night, in any climate, but especially in the tropics, where drink, like oil, simply feeds the flame.

In my younger days, about two-thirds of the time that I served with a native regiment—I was adjutant—I never saw a drunken sepoy, but it is, I am sorry to say, well known that of late years many of the wealthy natives, who have thrown off the restraints of caste, have at the same time given way to drink; and here I may mention that many regret that canteens were ever sanctioned for any section of Her Majesty's native Indian forces.

It is a very sad sight in England to see the many well-dressed, respectable-looking young women who unblushingly go into public houses in broad daylight, while I must say it grates on my ears, after a long absence abroad, to hear these public-houses quoted as familiar landmarks, and patronizingly spoken of as the Green Man, the Angel, the Sun in the Sands, the Red Lion, and so on. Further, is it not that in no other country in the world are such enormous sums selfishly and criminally expended in drink; and hence death, suffering, poverty, and sorrow indescribable has been the portion of vast numbers in this realm of Britain? I believe however that with God's blessing, example will do wonders. In numberless instances abstaining has not been merely a change of living, but it has led up to a saving change, and although there is but one way of salvation, and one name given among men whereby we can be saved, yet let us urge Christians at any rate to abstain, that they may be able to say, "Don't do as I tell you, but do as I practise!"

A NATIONAL DISGRACE

Since the Word of God condemns drunkenness, gives examples of its disgraceful effects, tells us that it leads to other vices, as also to poverty, to sickness, and assures mankind that no drunkard can inherit the kingdom of heaven, let me ask every Christian man and woman in this audience, be they rich or poor, young or old, to henceforth avow herself and himself an abstainer for example's sake. Example is better than precept, and may the good Lord induce His people to deny themselves the indulgence in what is a dubious, because an unnecessary, luxury, and one which is undoubtedly a fruitful source of misery and wretchedness to such untold multitudes at home and abroad.

THE SINKING OF THE NARRAGANSETT.

A new Sermon by Dr. Talmage, preached on Sunday Morning, June 13, 1880.

"A night and a day have I been in the deep."—2 Corinthians 11 : 25.

Ancient and Modern perils of Navigation—The calamity which stuns the Nation to-day—God only saw what was coming—That terrible scene—"Save my child"—Some very practical lessons—I. The responsibility of those who have the care of life and property—Awful blame somewhere—The Pastor's responsiblity—II. Brilliant surroundings no Security against Death—III. When the disaster came all prayed—Prayer not so much of a farce after all—IV. The danger of dense fogs—Fishermen's lives lost through the fog—Spiritual fogs—The Herbert Spencer fog—"Our dear Grandfathers the gorillas"—V. The importance of being ready for sudden transition—Death generally sudden—The cemetery of dead ships.

[Before commencing his sermon, Dr. Talmage read another long roll of the names of persons received into membership at the Brooklyn Tabernacle, making 530 during the present Revival, so that now the Tabernacle has 2,150 members, this being the largest Presbyterian membership in the world.]

WHETHER Paul's ship had been broken to pieces by a storm, or whether it had collided with another vessel, I know not; but here we find him floating on a plank in the Mediterranean Sea, and for twenty-four hours. "A night and a day have I been in the deep."

The perils of ancient navigation were very great, among other things because the sea was so solitary. If a ship were disabled, it might move over the waters day after day, and week after week, and month after month, and not sight a sail. But I think that in our day, notwithstanding all our lighthouses, and all our compasses, and our sextants, and our ironclads, there is just as much danger, now coming not from the solitariness of the sea, but from the multiplicity of crafts. Any one who has noticed the great fleet of ships going in and out the Narrows, or up and down Long Island Sound, has been amazed at the fact that there are so few casualties.

The nation is to-day stunned and staggered with calamity. When those two floating palaces were ploughing through the waters of Long Island Sound and nearing each other on Friday night, only the eye of God saw that they were coming into collision. We are at the season of the year when parts of families make hegira into the country. Many of the schools have come to vacation, and the young people were impatient to be away. There is nothing more beautiful than the disposition of heads of families to send their households to the mountains and the springs and the farms, while the men must stay and toil in the sweltering city and fight out the battle for bread. How glad they are if their families can be in a cooler and better atmosphere.

God only saw what was coming. The fog stooped upon the Sound, and the steamers slowed up, and the whistles blew, and the bells rang, yet nevertheless at a quarter to twelve o'clock on Friday night, the Stonington crashed into the Narragansett, and perhaps fifty and perhaps a hundred, after struggling first with the flames and then with the waters, surrendered their immortal spirits to God who gave them.

I will not rehearse that scene; there was in it a pathos and when that aged woman cried out, "Never mind me, save the young people!" when that mother cried out, "Never mind me, save my boy!" when those young men, frenzied with the appalling scene, took their own lives.

A TRAGEDY ALL INDESCRIBABLE,

Alas! alas! alas! While they are searching the waters for the dead, and while the telegraph offices are thronged with the pale-cheeked and the agonized, waiting for intelligence, it is becoming that we bow our hearts before God this morning, in sympathetic prayer for all the bereft while we mourn for the loss of some of the most valued of society, some who to-day but for that calamity, would have been preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and that we learn for our own souls.

SOME VERY PRACTICAL LESSONS

I. In the first place, this calamity of last Friday night on Long Island Sound impresses me with the responsibility of those who hold the lives, the bodies, the property, or the souls of people in their care.

I will not at this early point in the history of that disaster pretend to say who was to blame. Some say it was the captain, some say it was the company, some say the blame was on the Stonington, some say the blame was on the Narragansett. I will not attempt to decide. I invoke the law of the land with severe scrutiny to find out who was to blame and bring chastisement upon those who have hurled hundreds of families into awful bereavement. The fact is that this whole country has already been empanelled on the coroner's jury and has rendered a verdict saying:

THERE IS AWFUL BLAME SOMEWHERE.

Captains of steamships, conductors of railtrains, engineers of locomotives, architects of buildings, pilots of steamboats, have great responsibilities.

Yet ministers of the Gospel and Christian workers who have under their care the spiritual interests of the people—they also are to keep ringing the alarm bells, they are to stand on the outlook, they are to obey the injunction, "What I say unto you I say unto all—watch." I tell you I would rather be captain of a steamship driving a hundred human lives into destruction than a minister of religion, or a religious worker, with a defective theology driving thousands and tens of thousands of immortal souls into everlasting shipwreck. "When I say unto the wicked, thou shalt surely die, and thou givest him not warning, the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at thine hand."

"'Tis not a cause of small import,
The pastor's care demands;
But what might fill an angel's heart,
And filled the Saviour's hands."

Oh! my friends, whatever be your responsibility, if you have under your keeping the bodies, the minds, the property, the souls of men, beware how you discharge that responsibility. Remember the Narragansett.

II. Again, that disaster Friday night, on Long Island Sound, impresses me with the fact that are no security against the last enemy. You and I perhaps have been on that Narragansett. It was a beautiful ship. The furniture exquisite, the pictures, the upholstery, all the appointments, just what you would like to have had them, and yet, notwithstanding the passengers were so brilliantly surrounded, they were called away.

BRILLIANT SURROUNDINGS

The fact is, Death has just as much regard for the Nantucket whaler as he has for the splendid Narragansett. Belshazzar at the banqueting hall; Napoleon III. in the mansion at Chiselhurst; Charles Dickens in his beautiful home at Gad's Hill; the Prince Consort in Windsor Castle, summoned away.

An armed sentinel stands at the gate of every palace, and when some one approaches, the sentinel cries, "Halt!" and whoever the dignitary may be, he must halt or be pierced through; but Death comes up to the gate of the palace, and he captures both the sentinel and the gate.

On that Narragansett, there were those who could have given their $50,000 for another day's existence; $100,000 for another day of existence, $200,000 for another day; but Death will not receive a bribe. He comes in with muddy feet from walking amid the upturned earth of the new-made grave, and blunders across the tapestry, and sets his spade against the head-board of the rosewood bedstead. "They that possess themselves in the multitude of their riches, none of them can redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom that he should not see corruption." "The wise men die, likewise the fool and brutish person perish, and leave their wealt others."

Oh! do not let us be deluded with the idea cause we may have brilliant home, brill equipage, brilliant companionship, brilliant roundings, that therefore there is any safety.

III. The disaster of last Friday night on L Island Sound further shows me the fact there are many people who have not yet persuaded of the nonsense of prayer. I do suppose there was a person on board that ve but had heard argument used against Ch tianity. There was not a person on that ve but had heard prayer scoffed at and derided, yet all the reports say that when the disa came

THEY ALL PRAYED.

The prayer was heard from the Narragan to the Stonington. Those who were on the ragansett and escaped say there were scores hundreds of people in the water all prayi "God, save my wife! God, save my child! save me!" Hundreds of people, scores of ple crying: "O God! O God!"

Yes, they prayed; and if Tyndall had there, if the sceptics of this day had been th they would have all prayed. That would been the prayer-test. Oh! we may scoff at Cl tianity, and we may deride supplication be God, and we may say the creature cannot a the Creator, and it is absurd for one to k down and pray unto nothingness, expectin get an answer. We may do all that surrou with pleasant circumstances, but in the da calamity and darkness we will pray.

It is not so much of a farce after all, is it is not so absurd after all, is it? They prayed. Oh, my friends, ye who have sins pardoned, ye who have wounds to be heale who have burdens to be lifted, ye who hav mortal souls to be saved, why not now in day of your prosperity learn this art, this art?

"Restraining prayer we cease to fight,
Prayer makes the Christian's armor brig
And Satan trembles when he sees,
The weakest saint upon his knees.
Were half the breath that's vainly spent
To Heaven in supplication sent
Our cheerful song would oftener be,
Hear what the Lord has done for me."

Yes, they all prayed, they all prayed.

DENSE FOGS.

IV. Again: I am impressed by the di of Friday night on Long Island Sound, the danger there is in a dense fog. Ther no cyclone that night. Sometimes the k of the lighthouses neglect their duty and a will drive on the rocks; but all the lighth on the coast of Long Island Sound were their duty that night. A dense fog came and that was the cause of the disaster. was what brought the Arctic and the Ve gether in that great calamity that some remember.

When I was going to Liverpool and our was ploughing on near Newfoundland coa ing a fog, I remember I heard the poor men in their fishing smacks blowing thei horns. They were afraid of being run do some steamer, and many of the poor perish every year in the fog. No one knows they perish. They simply do not come ho

Well, it is not only ruin for the body, bu ruin for the soul. Do you know that is all the trouble in spiritual matters? N would drive directly on the rocks if he co them. It is because men are cheated, they are mystified, because they are befog

Here is the Herbert Spencer fog, whi that life is a combination of heterog changes, both simultaneous and succes correspondences with external coexistenc sequences. Yes, that is what life is here is the Huxley fog about protoplasm here is the Darwinian fog about the o the species, and our dear grandfathers, th las and the chimpanzees!

And there is the fog of Pantheism, and the fog of Rationalism, and the fog of Materialism, and the fog which Strauss and Schenckel and Renan have thrown around about the head of Christ. Anything but believe that God made the worlds, and that the Bible is plenarily inspired, and that Christ, the Son of God, came to save sinners. Anything but that.

Why, there are wiseacres abroad who would be glad to be pall-bearers and grave-diggers at the same time at one decease, and that at the decease and the burial of the Lord God Almighty. They think there is not room enough for God and them in the same world. They want to push Him off the edges of the universe, and they fill the world with their fog, and the scores of people who went down in Long Island Sound during the fog are very few as compared with the thousands and millions who in this favoring of scepticism have crashed into immortal shipwreck.

Sometimes a strong breeze will very suddenly clear away a fog. So I wish a gale from Heaven might sweep away all this fog of scepticism. When I see so many people around me drenched and soaked, and floundering in the dense fog of unbelief, I fall deeper in love with the old-fashioned religion of Jesus Christ. Oh! these wiseacres would only come and believe the Gospel, how much perturbation they would escape. How happy they would be if they could but just learn the first three questions and the first three answers of the shorter catechism:

> "Who made you? God.
> Who redeemed you? Christ.
> Who sanctifies you? The Holy Ghost."

Oh! Sun of Righteousness, scatter the fog. Remember the Narragansett!

Once more: This disaster of Friday night impresses me with the importance of being ready for sudden transition. Some of the papers say that there were only TWENTY MINUTES between the collision and the time when the vessel sank. Some say that in ten minutes many of them had perished. I suppose that in five minutes many had gone down. Just think of it. Twenty minutes! What a short time, if any of them were not ready for the eternal world?

Twenty minutes! Fifteen of them would be used in the effort to get ashore. Fifteen of them in the expectation that the lifeboat might come. Fifteen in the hope that some strong swimmer might take them ashore. Fifteen gone only five left, and the five minutes split into two parts, the one half to look back upon life, the other half to look forward to a great eternity. Twenty minutes! Fifteen minutes! Five minutes! Oh! does not that show every common-sense man that he ought to be ready for sudden transition?

"Oh!" say some men, "I won't go on shipboard. If I go to Boston, I'll take the railroad. I'll never risk my life on the Sound, nor by any steamer." You cannot escape in that way. When you leave this world in all probability you will leave suddenly. Has not that been the history of most of your friends? It has certainly been the truth in regard to most of your own friends who have gone. They may have been sick for months or for years, but when they went, they went suddenly. It was a surprise to all of us; so it was to you with your friends.

When the Avondale Mine exploded, how long did those poor miners have to prepare for the next world? Not half a second. When the "draw" was off at Norwalk, when the bridge broke at Ashtabula, how long did the passengers have to prepare for eternity? Five minutes? No. Three minutes? No. Two minutes? No. One minute? No. The twinkling of an eye. "In such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh." Oh! ought we not to be ready for sudden transition?

Can you imagine that beautiful steamer gone? The furnaces are out. The pulsating of that great machinery has all ceased. It is a dead steamer, and it is buried. It is buried in THE CEMETERY OF DEAD SHIPS, that great cemetery of dead ships, the Arctic, the Cambria, the North Fleet, the Atalanta, the City of Boston; but the time will come when all the dead of Long Island Sound and all the dead of the Atlantic will rise. The trumpet will sound through all the caverns of the deep as well as through all the valleys and the mountains. Day of light. Day of darkness. Day of joy. Day of sorrow. Day of victory. Day of defeat. Day of resurrection.

A voice comes from that dead steamer this morning, saying: "What thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might, for there is neither wisdom nor device in the grave whither we are all hastening. A man is stupid beyond all reclamation who cannot learn that lesson from this awful calamity. Oh, we want to be housed in God, we want this morning to be so encased by divine mercy that nothing can harm us.

Do you suppose that calamity did any harm to God's children on board that steamer? No harm. Sudden death was to them sudden glory. The angels of God hovered over the burning Narragansett and those who died in Christ went straight to the bosom of Jesus. Oh! do you not want that refuge? Do you not want to fly to that fortress this morning?

I believe there were three or four Eddystone Lighthouses. Henry Winstanley built a lighthouse. It was of very fantastic shape—Eddystone Lighthouse on the coast of England—and the people said "that lighthouse will not stand the storm." "It will," said Henry Winstanley, "and I hope I may be in it when the first and worst storm comes down." The lighthouse was completed and there was a heavy storm gathering Perhaps it was time for the equinoctial, and Henry Winstanley, with some of his workmen, went into the lighthouse to spend the night.

Oh, it was an awful storm that swept down the coast of England. Next morning the people went down to find the lighthouse. It was gone. Not so much as a fragment of a wall left. Only two twisted iron bolts.

So men get themselves up into the lighthouse of their scepticism; so men get themselves up into the fortress of their egotism; so men get themselves up into a state of defiance against God, and they say, "We are secure; we are not afraid; let all the storms of death come, let the cyclone of the judgment come, we dare all danger, we despise all threat." Suddenly God breathes on them and they are gone. Only two things left: a grave and a lost soul. Remember the Narragansett!

[The prayers of the readers of this Journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors in America and England, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and for its weekly circulation of more than 175,000 copies to be blessed by the Holy Spirit to the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Talmage especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors]

THE ROSE AND SIGHTLESS BABE.

A TOUCHING scene in a railway carriage was witnessed recently. A little girl, four or five years old, was accompanied by her mother. The child now and then turning her face, full of childish love, up to her mother, muttered some almost unintelligible words of affection. Opposite to mother and child sat a young lady, who often smelled a fresh rose which she held. The innocent little one before her attracted her attention, and the natural kindliness of the sympathetic woman's heart prompted her to offer at once the fragrant flower to the little budding lily opposite. So she leaned a bit forward and spoke,

"Baby want the posy?"

But the child seemed not to hear. Perhaps it was the noise of the moving train that prevented. Then she spoke a little louder, and held the flower forward temptingly.

"Baby may have the posy."

The mother heard, for she looked toward the other lady and smiled—and, oh, such a look of heart-felt gratitude, of motherly love, yet heavily saddened with such an expressive tinge of sorrow as is seldom seen. And still the lady of the rose pressed upon the little one's acceptance of the flower.

"Baby, take the rose," holding it almost to the child's hands. And now it seemed she was heard, for the blue eyes turned full upon her would-be patron, and then in a moment she strangely drew back and turned her eyes appealingly toward her mother's face. The lady with the flower showed her bewilderment in her look, while a pained expression flitted across the face of the mother, who leaned forward and whispered just a word,

"My darling is blind!"

Then the whole sunless, darkened life of the fair little being—fair as the flower which had been offered to her—came up before the mind. All beauty shut out from her forever! For her no foliage-strewn, flower-studded scene to follow the bleakness of winter. No looking with awe into the mysterious depths of the night sky, sparkling with glittering, twinkling star-gems, for over those blue eyes the Creator, in the mystery of His designs, had hung the impenetrable veil. No expectant gaze toward the mother's face for the gentlest smile that ever soothes a childish trouble; only the blind passage of the little hand over and over those features, for one moment of which that growing little one will often and often willingly offer years of existence. For her the birds will sing, but loveliness of form and feather are not. For her, while the babbling stream may make mysterious music, its dimpled waves and winding reaches do not exist.

How bitterly vivid all this, as the lady opened the little hand and shut within it the thornless stem of the rose, now bearing a tear on its petals!

OLD ZACK'S SUNDAY LEG.

DR. S. H. TYNG, JR., relates the following incident in a recent number of the Youths' Companion:

Old Zack lived in Virginia. He was a veteran of the last war, and supported himself by doing "chores" for the neighborhood. In one of his many battles he lost a leg, and limped around on a wooden substitute. It was not one of the new patent legs, but a right old-fashioned broom-handle stick, fitted with leather straps to the stump of flesh.

Old Zack was well known by his "walk and conversation" among all the townspeople. In cabins, and by the wayside, it was not an unusual thing to see a group around this lame leader, listening to his stories of the battle-field.

And everybody liked Old Zack. The good people of the town watched the wear of the old wooden leg, and thinking it dangerous for Zack to use it any longer, sent to Richmond and bought for him a brand-new one, with springs and joints and toes. It had all the modern improvements.

Zack was apparently delighted with his present. He wore it one day, but seemed to be conscience-stricken over the extravagance. The next day he appeared on the streets with the old broom-handle buckled on his stump. The first of his friends who met him with remonstrance received for reply,

"De ole leg will do berry well for de weekdays, but de new leg shall be presarved for de Sundays."

Who has not heard of Sunday clothes, Sunday faces, and Sunday manners? But Sunday legs are a novelty. Perhaps so in name, but not in fact. We all know people who hobble round, week after week and year after year, on a poor week-day principle, that may without warning break and give its owner a serious fall. Don't do it any longer, reader. Use the strong Sunday legs every day if you would be safe. Carry the words of the good Book into the week; then "shall the lame man leap like a hart."

NED CASSIDY AND THE EAGLE'S NEST.

By Henry Martin.

(Continued from page 375.)

A Hazardous Climb—Dan Foley's Deliverance and Gratitude to Cassidy—The Sail Home—Shooting the Arch—The Best Pilot—The Safe Return.

LOOKING up, and raising his voice to the place where Foley still clung, Ned cried out, "Dan, hold on, my boy ; never let go. I'll do my best to save you, and may the blessed Lord Jesus give me strength !"

Moving to the corner of the rock by which Foley had climbed, Ned, employing the same method he had used, clambered hand over hand, and reached the height from which the foolish man had made his spring to the projection from which he now .hung. Instead, however, of following his mad example, Ned clambered on, higher still. The ascent was most difficult, but, his head clear and his nerves steady, by care and skill he mastered it, and at last reached the apex of the rock, and then carefully stepped to a spot right over the shelf of rock on which the eagle's nest rested.

The shelf was six or seven feet beneath where he stood, but lowering himself, hanging by his arms, he landed safely upon it. Kneeling down he then with one hand firmly grasped a jutting stone fast in the rock behind him, and with the other hand laying hold of Foley with desperate effort he dragged him up and on to the place on which he himself rested. Dan, when he felt his feet on a firm foundation once more and knew that his life was snatched from the jaws of death, flung his arms round his preserver's neck, and then fainted. It was long before he recovered, but, tended by Ned, he gradually returned to strength and consciousness.

Their descent to the boat was slow and perilous, but, aided by the comrades of both, the bank of the river was reached in safety.

The conduct and bearing of Dan Foley to Ned Cassidy during the remainder of the day was a very interesting study. Both arrived at the boats in quite an exhausted state, so that their services as guides could scarcely be asked for longer by either party of tourists. Ned remained with us, for, finding us more in sympathy in all respects with his character and feelings, he would not think of leaving us, and Dan made an urgent request to the gentlemen and ladies to whom he had engaged himself in the morning to be allowed to enter the boat in which his deliverer was, and when it was granted he took his seat beside him.

"Ned, I'm ashamed of myself," he said after a while, "and of all the evil things I have done and said against you. From this hour I shall never look at you without hating and despising myself. Because you differed from me on some religious points, I dared to think myself a better man than you ; but this day you have proved to me that I was woefully mistaken. Had it been you that hung from the rock to-day instead of me, and that I had been in your place looking on, I might have shuddered at your coming doom, but not a hand would I have put forth to save you.

"God help me ! I fear a kind of satisfaction would have been in my heart to see you dashed to atoms, and I would have counted it a just judgment from Heaven upon you ;" and then, the tears rushing to his eyes, he cried, "Oh, Ned, will you, can you ever forgive me ?"

"Don't vex yourself, Dan, my dear fellow," responded Cassidy, "about sayings and doings that I hope now are things past and gone forever ; but let me tell you, Dan, it was what I learned from 'the Book,' which you despised and hated me for reading and believing, that enabled me to do for you what I did to-day. As I saw you cling in death's agony to the rock, there was a voice within me which said, 'Let him perish, he has been your wrong-doer ;' and there was a time when only that voice would have spoken in my bosom ; but to-day another voice drowned within me the natural cry for revenge.

"It was the voice of the blessed Book, Dan, and it bid me remember how the holy martyr St. Stephen prayed for his very murderers—and above all how your Saviour and mine, when dying on the cross, said to His Father in heaven, for those who mocked and crucified Him, 'Father, forgive them ; for they know not what they do.' Oh, Dan, if you and all my countrymen would but devoutly read the Book and drink in its spirit, and live it, what a blessed time would be seen in old Ireland ! There would be no longer strife and hatred and bloodshed in the land, but loving each other, and helping each other, we'd have about us peace and prosperity ; in place of the nations of the world scorning us, they'd admire and envy us, and we shouldn't see the thousands on thousands leave the land which now every year fly from it."

The return home was, if anything, more enjoyable than the morning excursion. In the natural canal between the Upper Lake and the Lower, we had the stream now with us, rendering any effort of the boatmen unnecessary ; and the smoothness of the water, the stillness of the air, the windings of the river, giving us each minute a new prospect of rock and wood and towering mountain, afforded continually new pleasure to the eye and the heart.

The old Weir Bridge spans the channel by two arches, not very far from Dennis Island. One of the arches is not navigable, for the water in foam dashes over the rocks within it ; but the other arch is passable for boats, although the flood rushes with a considerable descent through it. "Keep your seats steadily," cried out Martin O'Rorke, our coxswain, "and there is no danger. I have shot this boat through here a thousand times without a mishap, and my eye and hand ain't now going to fail me."

We did as directed—sat quietly and silently, glancing now at Martin and again at the smooth rush of waters before us. He skilfully brought the boat to the middle of the current ; the men who had been gently rowing just to keep her straight with the flood then shipped their oars ; the sweeping waters caught her ; we felt an accelerated motion, which quickened each moment ; we were in the shadow of the arch, then under it, and again, quick as thought, we flashed as it were into the open heaven beyond.

"I have sometimes thought," said Ned, addressing himself to me, "that is something like dying. It is the changing of one region for another, under a momentary shadow and darkness, and borne on by a flood that is irresistible ; and then how important it is to come to die in a right manner, just as it is for the boat to take the right position in the stream. Were she to come to the arch awry, with her beam on, once in the strong current it would be next to impossible to right her, and the flood, which otherwise would have been but a swift passage to light and safety, would have proved destruction.

SHOOTING THAT ARCH

"And is it not thus with dying ? I don't say, sir, that the God of all grace cannot save a man in the last hour—the dying thief was saved on the cross—but it strikes me it's a terrible risk to run, and no man that values his soul should venture it."

"It's a fine thing, anyhow," joined in Andy O'Toole, "to have a good pilot, either for this world or the next. When Martin, there, has his hand on the tiller, not an ace do I fear the old Weir Bridge arch—aye, when the flood is twice as strong as it is this evening, for I know his skill and pluck will beat it ; and so with the dark arch of death that Ned has talked about, with the help of good Father Mulcahy, my parish priest, I don't fear it."

"It is, indeed, a good thing," my friend here remarked, "to have a wise and faithful friend to cheer and help us in our last hour. But I think that Ned could tell you of a far better pilot than Father Mulcahy ever could make."

"The pilot he means, Andy," said Ned, "is the blessed Lord Jesus Himself, who came deliver them who through fear of death were their lifetime subject to bondage' (Heb. 2 : 1 David said, In the dark 'valley of the shadow death' He is with me (Ps. 23 : 4). And own promise is, 'When thou passest through waters, I will be with thee ; and through rivers, they shall not overflow thee' (Isa. 43 :

"I respect Father Mulcahy," added N
"perhaps as much as you do. I believe he t to do what he thinks is his duty ; but thou he has been at many a deathbed, he yet does know, from his own self, what dying is. B Andy, it is not so with our blessed Lord.
strange and wonderful to tell, He, though G has passed through all the experience—kn from what He Himself has felt what it is to for He thirsted, fainted, agonized, expired on cross, and committed His spirit to the hand
His Father in heaven.

"If Martin here had never himself steere boat all through the arch, on to the other s however good-hearted a pilot he might be, yo fear to trust him. It is the man who has actu done the thing you'd prefer to look to, especi if he was always at hand, willing and ready the work. And thus it is with the great Savi Andy ; He has, as I have said, gone Him through the whole experience of death, an ever near to guide those who love and trust H through 'the dark flood.'

"Is it, then, wise—is it gracious—to look a from Him, and put the safety of your preci soul in the hands of even the best and kindes fellow mortals ? The blessed St. Paul says, w looking to Christ alone, 'O death, where is sting ? O grave, where is thy victory ? . .
Thanks be to God, who giveth us the vict through our Lord Jesus Christ.' "

"Aye, but the Lord Jesus Christ can't seen," spoke out Alick Flannagan. "He's l ago gone to heaven ; but Father Mulcah always to the 'fore,' and that makes a h difference."

"Well, I don't know all about that," answ Andy, after a moment's pause ; "when my sister was dying, for hours before she pa away her eyes were glazed and dim, and w his reverence came I don't think she had least knowledge of his presence. Even her h ing was gone, for when we spoke she didn all mind us, not even her mother."

"I have known of many similar cases," marked my friend, "and yet I have no d that your beloved sister was perfectly consc of the spiritual world."

"Might it not have been with her," a Ned, "as it was with the blessed St. Step His enemies could see nothing : but he, loo up, the Book says, saw 'the heavens opened, the Son of man standing on the right har God.' It is plain to me, that the eye of body is not the only means of sight. Fai the eye of the soul, Andy, and to those really believe in Him Jesus the Lord is al near."

"True for you, Ned," I rejoined ; "and many a dying Christian, unconscious of friends around, as a faint smile of recogn has passed over the features, the last words the lips have been, 'Lord Jesus,' proving was near them, and that they saw and Him."

Thus conversing, our hearts and thou fully engaged, time flew swiftly past, an were almost unconscious of the progress our boat was making.

On nearing the shores of Ross Island, ever, from which we had started in the mor
we were roused from our reverie.

"Take the gentlemen round to the nort of the island," shouted our bugleman, Fagan, "till I give them a concluding spec of the magic of the Lakes." Choosing a f position, once more his bugle rang out awakened the Killarney echoes. We wil attempt to describe them ; we have tried task already, and are conscious we have to give a due conception of their wonders.

ll only add that, charmed and instructed by scenes we had witnessed, we were rowed to landing-stage near the ruined castle, and s was brought to a close a day's excursion, remembrance of which will long remain aded in our memories.

our next Number we hope to publish first chapter of a new serial story en- ed "Rochester Tower," by the popular horess Miss M. A. Paull.

TE GOSPEL AMONG THE INDIANS OF CANADA.

T a missionary meeting in London, Arch- con Kirby, who has been preaching the Gos- to the Indians in the North-western dis- ts of Canada, gave an account of his work. said :

et me mention three things that we are doing North-West America—education, transla- , and the preaching of the Gospel. We are ating the young in the principles of God's d and in devotion to Christ. The first mis- ary of the Society went out to North Amer- n 1820, and in 1821 an institution was form- or the education of native youth. But be- that institution was formed the work of ed- ion had already begun. The first missionary ng founded a mission at York Factory, took little boys a journey of three hundred miles, when he started with them he taught them prayer, "O Lord, give me Thy Holy Spirit Jesus Christ's sake." God answered that er. Those two boys became first assistants he school then native catechists, then or- ed clergymen. One of them died full of ors, fruitful in good and holy works, a few s ago ; the other is still a veteran mission- n the mission field in North America.

SPOGAN GARRY'S CAREER.

ne governor of the colony at that time, Sir rge Simpson, brought a native boy to the ionary and asked that he might be edu- d. He was educated and ultimately was ized. After a time he expressed a desire to ack to his own tribe ; he was a good boy, name being Spogan Garry, but was rather ond of being on horseback. Some one said ne missionary, "You will never do any good that boy ;" but the missionary, old Arch- on Cochrane, replied, "Ah, you don't know prayer and faith will do." At last he away, and nothing more was heard of him long time. Many years after an American ionary found in the Rocky Mountains, e gold had been discovered, a native village e everything was well ordered, and where head man, who spoke English, made the le to observe the Sabbath day, and on his iring what was the name of the head man, rned out to be Spogan Garry.

nd then Bishop Anderson for sixteen years, a zeal and devotion which never tired, de- d himself very largely to the work of instruc- in that land. Then his mantle fell on his e successor, the present Bishop of Rupert's l ; than he a more devoted laborer there is n the mission-field, and he, too, devotes his gth and energy to St. John's College, h he has made a power for good in the land. n I went to North-West America, in 1828, a school of one hundred native children. of those children is now the Prime Minister anitoba, and during the last election, on be- taunted with his humble origin, he said, hat I am, thank God, I owe to the Church ionary Society."

hen I went among the Esquimaux, a little e ago, I wished to bring back with me a h to be instructed. The natives would have 1 me any number of girls, but I wanted a At last I found a child whose mother con- d that although it was dressed as a boy it in reality a girl. She had, it appeared, ed God would give her a son, and, having a instead, had dressed her up as a boy, the next best thing to having a boy being, she said, to dress the child up like a boy.

SPECTACLES FOR PRINCESS LOUISE.

I had another boy from Chesterfield Inlet, and the Princess Louise having recently inquired in Canada where she could get something to prevent snow-blindness, she was supplied with a pair of spectacles, which she fell in love with at once, that were made by my little Esquimaux protégé. Archdeacon Macdonald was brought up in the school, and there is no man whose labors have been more successful or more blessed by God in the whole mission field. There is in this great city of London a gentleman who was educated in the mission-school at Red River, who has for twenty-five years been the master of the Stationers' School, and who now lives in Bolt Court, and in the very house which Dr. Johnson once occupied there.

It is most important that natives who have not the preaching of the Gospel should at all events be taught to read the Word of God and be supplied with that Word. On one occasion I visited a mission station, and I found that when the very first service was performed there, one hundred and fifty Indians, having the Word of God and the prayer-book in their hands, were able to join intelligently in that service. We have in North-West America but one message for dying men, the message of "Christ, and Him crucified."

INDIANS' POCKETS CONVERTED.

John Wesley used to say that he never believed in a man's conversion until his pocket was converted. Our people will bear this test. Talk about giving ; they give with princely munificence ! At our annual missionary gathering they always give me forty or fifty pounds a year for the Church Missionary Society. Two or three times an Indian has brought to me as his contribution the skin of a black fox—the most valuable of all skins—feeling that he ought to give his best to Him who had done so much for his soul. A native has given in that form what was worth 2*l.* 10*s.*, even in Canada, and would be worth 5*l.* in England. I plead on behalf of the Indians of North-West America. If they are destined as a race to pass away, if they must recede before the advancing wave of civilization, then, in God's name, let us give them a name and a place in that kingdom which shall never pass away.

MISSION WORK IN CENTRAL AFRICA.

REV. C. T. WILSON, who has been laboring for Christ at Uganda, addressed a large meeting in London on May 4th. He was accompanied by the following chiefs : of Uganda, Namkadde, Kateriaba, and Sawadu, who have come from King Mtesa's kingdom in Central Africa, which was discovered by Mr. H. M. Stanley. These chiefs were of coal-black complexion, and were dressed in white garments. King Mtesa has sent them to ascertain positively, whether there is really such a place as England has been described to be by the missionaries, as he has considerable doubts on the subject.

Mr. Wilson said : My tale is one of sowing, or, rather of preparing the ground for the seed. It is only three years since Lieutenant Smith and myself set foot on the shores of Uganda. The people there are not inclined to receive the Word. They do not care about it. The idea of too many in this country of a missionary in Africa seems to be that of a man standing under a tree with a Bible in his hands and preaching to an attentive African audience, but I never saw this picture realized in Africa. The people don't want our mission ; they don't take an interest in it. You have to arouse interest ; you have to stir up their hearts in order to induce them to listen to the message of the Gospel.

Then again their language is exceedingly difficult. Before we went to Uganda no European ever studied the language ; the people have no literature, no printing, no books of any sort. Our first work was to reduce the language to writing, and that was a work of no small difficulty and no small responsibility. We had to consider carefully what characters would best express the sounds. Well, we have not been idle in that respect. I have brought from Uganda a vocabulary of five thousand words, and a number of native stories, songs, and tales, and have an outline of a grammar. This may seem little for three years' work ; but still a foundation is laid, and, after a time, we may be able to give the people the Bible in their own tongue.

But, besides the difficulty of writing the language, there is the difficulty that the people have no words to express our Christian ideas. How are we to teach a man that God is a God of holiness and that He hates sin, when there are no words in his language to express either God, or holiness, or sin ? But we have succeeded in teaching people to read, and I must say that the result of this educational work has been exceedingly good. The natives are remarkably quick-witted, and learn to read with very great ease and with great rapidity. But there is another thing that we have been able to do. We have been able to hold some sort of religious services. During the two years that I was there we were constantly preaching to an ever-varying audience the truths of God's holy Word.

Wherever there is a good work going on, Satan is sure to stir up opposition, and he has done so at Uganda. Many of you have perhaps heard of the French Jesuit Mission which was sent to Uganda some time since. The French missionaries brought with them such presents as they knew would be most acceptable to King Mtesa, artillery and ammunition. For a time they may possibly succeed in turning our missionaries out ; but I hope they will not, and if they do, their success will, I think, not be permanent. If our missionaries take their stand, as they will do, on the simple Word of God, the Jesuits will not be able to oust them for good ; they must prevail in the end, because the Jesuits will not deny that the Bible is the Word of God. Uganda is not the only place round the Victoria Nyanza which the mission has reached. All round that beautiful lake, where "every prospect pleases, and only man is vile," there is a teeming population waiting to receive the Gospel of Christ. There is plenty of work to be done. Give us fifty men to-day and before to-morrow we could find a station for every one of them. We want you also to establish a chain of mission stations on the south coast. We have two or three already ; we want to have more. See what you can do to advance the great work of carrying the Gospel to Central Africa. There is much need of prayer for us, and I would say to you, "Brethren, pray for us." Pray for us that God may raise up men to take up this great cause. We have been three years on the Victoria Nyanza without gaining a convert, but we feel sure that God will give us souls.

I would also beseech your prayers on behalf of our black guests (the three Uganda chiefs present on the platform). Pray that what they see in England may give them a desire to learn of Jesus, and pray that the story which they take back to their king when they return may lead him to become a subject of the King of heaven. I believe that the visit of these men to this country is likely to conduce to the civilization of Central Africa. We should never have brought them to this country if we had not believed that. We brought them here from no political motive, but in the hope that their visit, and the report which they were likely to make after returning home, would be instrumental in opening up that part of the world to the missionary, to the Gospel, and to civilization.

The Persian Famine.—A Telegram referring to the famine in Kurdistan, Armenia, and Western Persia, states that 40,000 persons must be fed for two months if they are to be kept alive. The telegram implores for money to purchase the grain which is still in store at Mousul. One hundred and thirty-eight persons have died of starvation at Bashkaleh. Twenty-six villages are utterly destitute. One hundred and seven persons have died of starvation at Alashgerd.

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50 per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to THE MANAGER, CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of back numbers to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

Persons requiring single or special copies can obtain them most conveniently through

NEWSDEALERS.

Any complaint that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer is promptly attended to if we are given the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, June 9th, at 1.05 P.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

In Congress the Interest taken in the Chicago Convention has interfered with the progress of business, during the week. On Monday, June 7th, however, the Senate bill ratifying the agreement on the Ute question which has been so long delayed was passed by the House, and we may now hope that some definite statement will soon appear as to the land to be allotted to the Indian tribe. They have relinquished their large possessions on the understanding that each man shall have a plot of ground guaranteed to him by law from which he may gain a living for himself and his family. This promise should be carried out in the spirit as well as in the letter, and the land allotted ought to be adequate in extent and in character for the purpose.

The Bayard Deputy Marshals Bill passed in the House, and the General Deficiency Bill has at length passed the Senate and the House.

The Republican Press and the Party generally have accepted the nomination of General James A. Garfield for President, with satisfaction. The feeling expressed on all hands being, that if the particular candidate desired could not be nominated, General Garfield was the next best selection that could have been made. A large number rejoice over it for the sole reason that it is a decisive rejection of the third term movement, which they regarded as antagonistic to the principles of Republican government. The nomination of General Grant, it was urged, was objectionable also for other and personal reasons, among which was the one most frequently pressed, that, although he had proved beyond question his capacity as a successful general, he had failed in his first and second terms to appoint to responsible offices men of honor and integrity, and had suffered mere politicians, in whom the country had no confidence, to administer its affairs. The manner in which his nomination had been pressed in the State conventions was regarded as somewhat dictatorial, and contributed to his defeat in the convention.

General Garfield increased at Chicago the popularity he had previously acquired by his moderation and courtesy, and though his nomination was unexpected it was received with general enthusiasm by all sections except that of the third term, the adherents of which held firmly together to the last.

The nomination of General Chester A. Arthur, of New York, for Vice-President, was made on the first ballot. The convention having passed early in its sittings a resolution approving the administration of President Hayes, who removed General Arthur from office, the Vice-Presidential nomination has occasioned some surprise in the country.

A Serious Bank Failure has Occurred at Newark, N. J. On Friday June 11th, the First National Bank of that city was compelled to close its doors. The crisis was produced by the refusal of the Third National Bank of New York to honor the paper of the Newark Bank which was presented the previous day to the extent of $40,000. A meeting of the directors was immediately called, and a consultation was held with other banks in the city who proffered assistance if valid security were given. It was then discovered that every available security the bank held was already pledged, and the capital stated at $300,000 had been reduced to $75,000. In this state of affairs no resource was left, and the bank closed. Painful rumors of dishonesty are in circulation, but as the cashier is absent on account of ill-health nothing definite is yet known. It is believed that bill-holders and depositors will eventually be paid in full.

A Tank of Petroleum was Struck by Lightning on June 11th at Titusville, Pa., and produced a scene of devastation rarely witnessed in that locality. The tank contained 20,000 barrels of oil, and when struck it exploded with terrible force, blowing the roof of the tank into fragments and breaking the windows of houses for some distance away. The oil took fire, and pouring like lava down the hill set fire to two other oil tanks, each containing 30,000 barrels. The torrent thus augmented flowed toward the city, and was not arrested by the waters of a stream in its path. In a short time the southern portion of Titusville was enveloped in flames. Aid was telegraphed for to other cities and was promptly rendered, but the flames were not subdued until a large number of houses, an iron bridge, and several factories were destroyed.

A Shocking Disaster, resulting in Serious loss of life occurred, a little before midnight on June 11th. Two steamers of the Stonington line, the Narragansett bound for Stonington, and the Stonington bound for New York, collided in Long Island Sound, near the mouth of the Connecticut River, and the Narragansett was sunk. A heavy fog rested on the water at the time, preventing the vessels sighting each other until the disaster was inevitable. The bow of the Stonington crashed in the side of her sister vessel, cleaving it almost to the wheel. The water rushed in through the chasm and the terrified passengers, numbering about 350, rushed on deck. There a fresh horror awaited them. The blow had upset the boiler and furnaces, and the vessel was on fire.

The scene is described as one of terror such as will never be forgotten by any one who witnessed it. The vessel rapidly sinking, the flames enveloping the decks and revealing the frightened passengers clad in their night clothes rushing up and down, screaming in distraction. A few men who had retained their presence of mind were at work trying to get out the boats and rafts. But the davits were rusty and would not work; eventually, however, a boat was floated; but it was found to be without plugs, and it sank. Then corks were hastily cut from life preservers and fitted into the other boats and they were floated, but no oars could be found, and the men had to use pieces of board instead of oars. This lasted but a few minutes, and then the steamer sank, leaving the water black with drowning passengers. Providentially the steamer City of New York was near the scene, and promptly lowered her boats and life rafts, as did the Stonington, and it is believed that over two hundred and fifty persons were rescued, and taken on board the two vessels.

The passengers of the Stonington were transferred to the City of New York, and both vess remained near the scene of the disaster until da break, in the hope of picking up any passenge who might be floating on portions of the wrec
Some of those rescued then returned to Stonin ton on the Stonington, and the others we brought on to New York by the City of N York. Nearly all of them had escaped witho any clothing except what they wore in their slee ing berths which was soaked with water.
both cities accommodation was offered by t hotels to the rescued passengers, irrespective their pecuniary condition and gifts of clothi were promptly sent by the citizens.

Among the Twelve Corpses already recover from the wreck of the Narragansett is that the Rev. E. B. Lockwood, pastor of the Six Eighth Street Methodist Episcopal Church, w was on his way to Westerley, R. I., where had promised to preach last Sunday. Bef the disaster he had sat in his stateroom readi Paine's "Age of Reason." On the flyleaf wrote: "If I were to go down with this boat night, I should be ashamed to have this bo found with me were it not that I read it to ref its doctrines." Mr. Lockwood was alive wh taken from the water, but died of exhausti after his removal to the Stonington.

A List of Delegates to the Sunday School Ce tenary, to be held in England June 28th to J 3d, has been issued by the New York Sund School Association. It embraces the names ministers and laymen from nearly every State the Union, and from many Canadian provinc
The meetings will be of a most interesting ch acter, and we are glad that the New World w be well represented on the occasion.

The National Temperance Society, 58 Rea Street, New York, publishes a "Temperar Lesson Leaf" for the last Sunday in each qu ter, much in the style of the "Internatio Sunday School Lessons." This "Leaf" c tains text, outline, home readings, questio explanations, illustrations, hymns, respons readings, and primary lessons. It is carefu prepared by committees from the National Te perance Society, and the Woman's Natio Christian Temperance Union, contains four la octavo pages, and will be furnished at the l price of 50 cents per hundred. Specimens s free on application.

The General Synod of the Reformed Chur assembled last week in Brooklyn. The grea portion of its sittings was occupied by a disc sion on Freemasonry, many of the brethren siring to follow the example of the Rom Catholic Church and exclude Freemasons fr the pale of the church. Several eminent min ters who are Freemasons protested against t speeches made on the subject, and said that t principles and ceremonies of the order had be misrepresented by those who opposed it. Th did not impute wilful misrepresentation, b believed that owing to the secrecy connect with the order, the brethren had in the abse of reliable information been misled in their c ceptions of it. After discussing the questi during three sittings, the Synod on June 1 rejected the motion condemning Freemasonry

Mr. Charles W. Sawyer, whose Work in t cause of Christian temperance in New York h been so successful, is suffering from ill-heal brought on by overwork, and has been advis to desist and seek rest for a time. This he w now do, but meantime the good work will on. Mr. M. L. Hallenbeck, who was convert under Mr. Sawyer's preaching some years ag will conduct the services in the hall of t
Cooper Union, during Mr. Sawyer's absen
He asks for the prayers of Christians for a ble ing on his labors.

A Donation of Five Dollars to the Funds the Home for Inebriates in New York, has be sent to us by L. E. We have had much pleasu in forwarding it to that institution. An increa in the income of the Home would enable its ma agers to receive many applicants whose cases of a hopeful character, but whom a want funds has compelled them reluctantly to refus

The Testimony of the Reformed Presbyterian nod of America, during its session in Phila- lphia, on a matter which students of prophecy ive observed, is as follows: " Never was infi- dity more bold or blatant. Newspapers are blished professedly in the cause of infidelity. w books are written and old books reprinted, d lecturers go from city to city and town to wn in the interests of the same unholy cause. d when an infidel lecturer of note appears in of our cities, large audiences, paying high ces for admission, crowd the halls and hail h applause the most profane and blasphe- us utterances of the speaker. Closely allied h infidelity, and manifesting itself with no boldness, both in this nation and those of rope, is Communism. Here it declares war inst capital and seeks to put fetters upon la- ." The Synod advised fasting and prayer ler these ominous circumstances.

Gambler as Juryman.—During the Calling new panel of the petit jury in a court in Colo- recently, several men asked to be excused n service. Among them was Newton Adams. hy?" asked the Judge. " I am a gambler." ou are a common gambler, are you?" asked Judge. "Yes, sir," said Adams. "Well, are excused." Then, turning to the Sheriff, ake this man into custody." A look of blank nishment settled on Adams' face. He went with the court officers, and returned in a few rs with Alexander Lewis as his bondsman. identity of the bondsman had to be estab- d, and it was shown that he also was a bler so, he too was arrested, and six writs dictments for gambling found by the grand were immediately served upon him.

Fine of Sixty-seven Cents per Oath has been cted by the Justices of the Peace on a citizen ennsylvania for profanity in the public ts. The total fine amounted to $16.08. An al to a higher court revealed a technical in- ality in the proceedings, and the sentence reversed, but Judge Pershing, in giving his ion, said that the action was good in law, observed:

The general prevalence of profane swearing ates that the statute under which this ndant was convicted has long been buried of sight. Perhaps its resurrection in this may accomplish some good, by showing who have no regard for the law of God the law of the land imposes on them a lty of from forty to sixty-seven cents, to be wed by imprisonment, accompanied with a of bread and water, on refusal to pay, for and every time they pollute the atmo- e with their profanity."

o Brothers reunited in New York last week a separation of thirty-two years, adopted olish practice of celebrating their meeting ge potations of liquor. One was a shoe- r and the other a sailor, and they had not each other since 1848 when as young men separated in Ireland, the one to emigrate s country, and the other to sail around the . They were sincerely attached to each , and their joy at meeting after so long a ation was excessive. But before they had wenty-four hours in each other's company liquor they imbibed transformed them uman fiends; they quarrelled and fought, ow one of them lies in an hospital in a l condition, and the other is in prison ng trial for assaulting his brother.

udge who Saved a Life.—An Incident in reer of Judge Charles J. Folger, whom nor Cornell has nominated as successor to te Chief Judge Sanford E. Church, is relat- the Watertown Dispatch, which illustrates cisive and intrepid character of the judge. years ago a train, while standing at the at Geneva, was run into from behind by r train. One gentleman was killed and l badly injured. The indignation of the at the station was so intense that an at- was made to lynch the offending engineer nd there. They had dragged him from his , and were about to take his life, when Judge Charles J. Folger, who was travelling by the train, plunged into the crowd, and, throwing the rioters right and left, took the engineer under his personal charge and protected him from violence. The judge's fearless conduct seemed to have awed the crowd, and they allowed the engineer to be removed by his protector. The incident suggests the thought to the Christian that he owes his own escape from eternal death to the Great Judge who, though at the last He shall judge the world, yet has laid down His life a ransom for men.

The New Missionary Seminary at Northfield Mass., which Mr. Moody hopes to organize during this year is intended for the special education of poor girls for missionary work and teaching. It will accommodate about 100, and will be arranged much like Mount Holyoke Seminary. Mr. Moody has $50,000 already raised for it, and after finishing it he intends to build a school of much the same description there for boys. Mr. Moody has arranged to pass the summer at this work, personally supervising the building of the seminary, and holding religious services only in the immediate neighborhood.

A Minister's Advice followed. At the recent pastoral reception of the Rev. Dr. Anderson at the Baptist church, South Boston, Rev. Dr. Eddy related an amusing incident which occurred during the early years of his ministry. Among his congregation was an old lady of a rather querulous disposition who complained to him of the speeches made at religious meetings by the deacons. She considered them foolish and irrelevant. The doctor half humorously advised her instead of complaining to sing from a well-known hymn, the words:

> " Were half the breath thus vainly spent
> To heaven in supplication sent," etc.

At the next meeting the doctor delivered an address and sat down with a feeling of perfect satisfaction, when instantly the old lady astonished him by singing in an audible voice, the words he had suggested to her as a reproof for the deacons.

An Earnest Christian Statesman has been selected by Gov. Colquitt to represent Georgia in the United States Senate. When General Gordon resigned his seat a few weeks ago, it became the duty of the governor to appoint his successor. True to the religious principles which have characterized his career, he has conferred the appointment on Ex-Governor Joseph E. Brown, a gentleman distinguished as much for his piety as for his munificence in all efforts for the advancement of religion. He is an energetic member of the Baptist Church, and frequently preaches both at outdoor services and in the chapels in the State. He recently gave $50,000 toward the endowment of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky. It would be well for the nation if many more of such men were selected for the honorable and responsible position of legislators.

The Achievements of a Devout Christian woman, now over ninety years of age, a native of Wellfleet, Mass., show how the consolations of religion enable its possessor not only to bear adversity, but to struggle under it and to overcome the difficulties of life. Mrs. Drusilla Laha, at the age of twenty-four, found herself almost penniless with two children, one four and the other two years old. Her husband, who was a sea-captain, had been wrecked and rendered, by the exposure he had endured, a helpless invalid for life. Some women would have regarded such a position as hopeless, but this woman, trusting in God for strength, set herself the task of supporting her husband and children. She commenced business in a very small way, but by her attention and careful management it increased, and she had the satisfaction of providing for her husband, educating her boys, and starting them in business. With her prosperity her heart was opened toward the poor, and she adopted, clothed, and provided for twenty orphan boys and girls, who are now doing well in various positions. So God honors and blesses those who trust in him (Psa. 34 : 17–19).

DIVINE SURPRISES.

A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

" When thou didst terrible things which we looked not for, thou camest down, the mountains flowed down at thy presence."—Isaiah 64 : 3.

God's Immutability a ground for hope.—I. The Divine Presence the one hope of the People of God—The rent veil of the Temple—God's presence with the Israelites—The hope in our day—In the person of Jesus—In His Life and Second Coming.—II. It creates Great Surprises—Jacob's Experience—In Works of Grace—"What a Wardrobe"—Conversion of an English Clergyman—Billy Bray, the Cornish Methodist.—III. It dissolves difficulties.—IV. The same Results to be expected in our day—The Promises the same as of old.

THE people of God were in a very sad state when this chapter described them. Isaiah pictures them as brought into the lowest degree of fear and sorrow. He pleads with God to return to His chosen people, and restore their former peace and prosperity. He makes use of the past as an argument for the future, and recites the wonderful acts of God in days gone by as an encouragement to expect that He would do the like again.

If it were not that God is unchangeable, no inference could be drawn from His past behavior toward us; but inasmuch as He is immutably the same, yesterday, to-day, and forever, we may safely infer that what He has done He will do again. They say that history repeats itself: it were more true to say that God abides the same, that His ways are everlasting, and His mercy endureth forever. Therefore it is good and sound pleading to say, Thou hast done this and that, therefore again make bare thine arm, and once more let thy people rejoice in thy faithfulness and thy power."

While we may all do this on behalf of the Church of God, and find a rich store of arguments in her past history, we may also do it for ourselves. Some of us are now getting into years, and we have known the Saviour for thirty years or more: we ought to be well supplied with reasons for trusting Him, and I am sure we are so. Let us look back on the past, and remember how He has forgiven our transgressions, how He has recovered our backslidings, how He has relieved our necessities, how He has cheered our despondencies, and strengthened our weaknesses: He that is our God is still the God of salvation, and he will continue still to bless us, even to the end.

Because the Lord is my shepherd, and now maketh me to lie down in green pastures, therefore I conclude that surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I shall dwell in the house of the Lord forever." At the back of whatever I shall have to say this morning will lie this grand principle—that as the past is, so we may expect the future to be in reference to God's dealings with us.

Let us come more closely to our point. From the text, and from its connection, I gather, first, that the presence of God is the one hope of his people. In this text the prophet speaks of God's doing terrible things when He came down among his people. We shall next notice that the presence of God creates surprises: He did "things which we looked not for:" we shall observe, thirdly, that the presence of God achieves wonders—"the mountains flowed down at thy presence:" and then, lastly, we shall come back to where we started, and reflect that we may expect the like results from the divine presence if we are privileged to enjoy it.

I. First let us meditate upon the fact that is the one hope of the people of God. The prophet shows that he believed this, for he commences the chapter by a most ardent cry to God that he would come into the midst of His people: " Oh that thou wouldest rend the heavens, that thou wouldest come down." A little before this (in the fifteenth verse of the previous chapter), he had prayed, " Look down from heaven;" but it is the characteristic of true prayer that it grows as it proceeds: he begins by asking God to look down; but he gathers intensity of desire and confidence of faith, and here he cries, "Come down."

THE DIVINE PRESENCE

When our divine Lord opened the way by which God could come to us poor guilty men, he did not lift the curtain nor fold it up: but the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, and so the door was left wide open forever; for none can ever fix the veil in its place again. It was through the open heavens that Christ went in where He now stands to plead for us, and by that open heaven the sacred Spirit descended to rest upon the Church. The impetuous character of the simile here used shows that the prophet looked upon the divine visitation as the one thing needful for Israel.

The desire of the prophet in the present instance is abundantly justified by the history of God's people in all times: for when the tribes were in Egypt what could set them free from the iron bondage?--what but the presence of God? The whole of the story of Israel proves the same truth. God's presence was Israel's glory. When they grieved Him and provoked Him, then the feeblest of the nations round about them tyrannized over them. They were an insignificant and defenceless nation of themselves; but when God shone upon them they were great among the nations, and the sceptre of Israel was stretched from sea to sea. "God with us," when written on Israel's banner, secured them honor and conquest; but without God they could do nothing.

Dear friends, this truth which is thus borne out in the history of God's ancient people, is certainly true with us. The favor of God is the hope of all His people. First, we see this in the person of the Lord Jesus Christ. Oh, when did you and I ever obtain comfort, or receive hope of acceptance, until we saw God with us in our flesh? The world must have perished if God had not come down to it in the person of His dear Son. At Bethlehem the wondrous mystery was seen: the Godhead veiled beneath the form of a babe. This was the birth of hope.

So, too, when the Lord Jesus comes to any one of us by His Spirit our hope begins. We see Him as our Immanuel, and we are comforted. Dr. Watts most sweetly sings:

"Till God in human flesh I see,
My thoughts no comfort find;
The holy, just, and sacred Three
Are terrors to my mind.

"But if Immanuel's face appear,
My hope, my joy begins;
His name forbids my slavish fear,
His grace removes my sins."

God saves us by coming to us in Christ with an atonement in His hands, wherewith to put away our sin.

Yes, and our hope of the perfection of our salvation still lies in the coming of Christ to us. We expect that when He cometh in the latter day, though our bodies may have seen corruption, and the worm may have devoured them, yet in our flesh we shall see God. When Christ shall come a second time the Archangel's trump shall sound, and then shall we receive the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body, for which we now hopefully wait. Because He lives we shall live also, and because He shall come to be revealed, we also shall be manifested.

Our Lord's first coming in our flesh hath given us eternal salvation; His coming to us by His Spirit hath wrought in us a living faith, and His second coming by and by is the grand object of our hope. That day and hour no man knoweth, for the Father keepeth it in His own power; but the consummation of all our hopes is wrapped up in it, and therefore do we cry, "Come quickly; even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly. Amen." So, you see, brethren, it is the presence of God with us in Christ which is the ground of all our hope.

UNTIL OUR LORD'S GLORIOUS ADVENT,

the presence of the Holy Spirit in the Church is our only dependence for success in all that we attempt. If we meet for prayer, it must be praying in the Holy Ghost, for we know not what we should pray for as we ought till He instructs us. It is hard praying to an absent God: the Lord's presence is the life of a prayer-meeting. If the Lord be not there to inspire the prayer, He is not there to hear the prayer. When we preach it is poor testifying if we have not the Lord's anointing resting upon us, and His presence all around us. If the Spirit of God be not with the preacher, a silent tongue might be as efficient as the most eloquent speech. So is it with our missionary enterprise: it must be a failure unless the Lord be in it from first to last. Every missionary might fitly say, "If thy Spirit go not with me, carry me not up hence." Vain will it be to organize societies, enlist subscribers, and enter upon actual effort, and to spend money and zeal thereon, if the Lord be not there. "Without me ye can do nothing," said our Lord of old, and the same is true unto this day.

Even in heaven itself the presence of God is the source of joy and perfection. Up yonder they need no candle, neither light of the sun, because the Lord God giveth them light: if He were not among them it would be dark as death-shade. The blessed ones drink from the river of His pleasures; no other stream makes glad the city of God. Their life is His life: their bliss is His own divine pleasure; they enter into Christ's glory, and they are filled with Christ's joy. Is it not clear enough that our most essential need is the nearness of God to our souls?

II. The second point I wish to bring before you is, when the Lord comes

HIS PRESENCE CREATES GREAT SURPRISES.

"When thou didst terrible things that we looked not for, thou camest down."

It has always been so. Whenever God has come to men he has always surprised them. Even the most expectant among men have found their expectations far exceeded; while those who have been depressed, and have prophesied dark things, have been altogether taken aback to see the goodness of the Lord.

God came to Jacob's house, and his favorite son was sold for a slave—the Ishmaelites took him down into Egypt. "Ah," said Jacob when he thought on this and his other trials, "all these things are against me. He could not make out that there could be any good intended of the Lord when he cried, "Joseph is not, and Simeon is not, and ye would take Benjamin away."" And yet God was doing great things for him which he looked not for; for Joseph was set upon the throne of Egypt that he might provide a refuge for his old father and his brethren in the days when there should be a famine over all the earth. God was doing for the trembling patriarch "things which he looked not for."

I shall not stop to give instances in the history of God's people because they will occur to your own minds. Often did they cry out, "Thou art the God that doeth wonders! Who is like unto thee?"

It has been even more so in the works of grace. See what God has done for us in matchless mercy. When He stood at the gates of Eden and talked with Adam, and cursed the ground for man's sake, could any onlooking angel have imagined that in all this God intended to display the greatness of his mercy, so that where sin abounded grace should much more abound? Did any man, did any angel, did any seraph, ever imagine that the Son of God would come down to be born into this rebel race? Did it ever enter into their conception that he would die, the just for the unjust, to bring men to God? Do you not think it a most amazing thing that sinful men should be born again, and adopted into the family of God?

"Behold what wondrous grace
The Father hath bestow'd
On sinners of a mortal race,
To call them sons of God!"

This was an honor that we looked not fo Moreover, God having made us to be His chi dren, did we ever look that He would make His heirs? Yet he saith, "If children, the heirs; heirs of God, joint-heirs with Christ. Did it ever enter into man's heart to concei that the Church should be married to Chris wedded to Him in bands of everlasting lov This is wonderful.

How is it that we continue to be surprised what God does? I answer, first, because o largest conceptions of God fall short of t truth. The man who has, like Enoch, walk with Him for years, yet knows little of Hi Ah, my brother, you do not know the heigh and depths, the lengths and breadths of wondrous liberality yet. God is infinite. are as a tiny shell on the beach, we cannot h the ocean, and therefore the measureless ma must always be a marvel to us.

Besides that, I am sorry to say our faith shamefully weak, and does not look out for gr things. We have never had such faith in G as He deserves at our hands. We have ne believed Him for more than twopence, when ought to have believed in Him for all the g of Ophir. He is worthy of a trust boundless the sea, and we have scarcely relied upon H beyond the mere drop of a bucket. By doi "exceeding abundantly above what we ask, even think," the Lord puts us into an ama state. It will always be so. Even in heaven shall still be astonished, as the poet puts it—

"Then let me mount and soar away
To the bright world of endless day;
And sing with rapture and surprise,
His loving-kindness in the skies."

It is a most blessed thing it is so. I am glad that God does those "things which looked not for;" because, first, it keeps our fresh and sweet, and puts far from us monot and routine. You people who have no must find a threadbare tale; one week must very like another, and one year as another you; but some of us can sing—

"Still has my life new wonders seen."

Novels! I assure you that no novel can equa interest the unvarnished facts of Christian perience, especially in the case of those who much tried. Facts surpass fictions in t power to surprise. The makers of roma may rub their foreheads as long as they like, they cannot invent stories at all comparabl those which happen to us in our ordinary li We do not get tired of living, because the something new every morning in the good of the Lord; fresh revelations are brought by the trials we are called to endure.

Thus He increases our knowledge. When and I enter upon a new trouble, we ought t on our knees and thank God that He is abo elevate us to a higher grade of disciple Sanctified afflictions are spiritual promoti When He puts me to greater pain my thinks me in a fit state to be introduced int inner chamber. The Christian's experi is like that of the man who is conducted an outer court into inner rooms, unti reaches the innermost of all.

I do not know how many rooms there are within another in the place of heavenly wis but this I know, that whenever the Lo about to introduce His servants into a still secret chamber where they shall be nea Himself, He generally sends them a new tri test them and to discover whether they can a fresh instalment of His revelations of Bless the Lord for trials, for they prov Lord's faithfulness, and endear him to hearts.

Surprising mercies tend to rouse our tude. Have we not marvelled at the goo of the Lord? "Bless the Lord," we have "I never dreamed of such love. This wa of my difficulties is excellent, but it is one I could not have foreseen. I am glad brought into straits that I might see ho Lord could bring me out of them." I a sh I had been with Shadrach, Meshach, and bednego, in the fiery furnace. It must have en a fine thing to walk unhurt among those owing coals, and to come out, and be able to y of all your garments, to your children and ur children's children, "These have passed rough the fire. See the hose and the hat which vore amid the flames; there is not a smell of e upon them." What a wardrobe to pass on your children's children, to show what the rd had done! Some of us can do this spiritu- y, for our hearts are stored with grateful emories.

Dear friends, I know that some of you can tell instances in which the presence of God has ought great surprises for you, and I can join in doing so. If you have had rich experi- es be sure to tell them to others.

Perhaps you remember that a fortnight ago, the Sabbath morning, I preached of Paul's experience, and I said that the experiences the saints were a treasure, of which they were trustees, for the benefit of others.* A well- own and beloved brother in Christ was here t morning—I refer to Mr. W. Haslam, a gyman of the Church of England—and he so y agreed with the remark that he carried it by sending me a book, in which he has writ- out the story of the first twenty years of his istry. I have much enjoyed the reading of narrative, and to carry out the principle, I now give you in brief the story of n instance of "things which we looked not ." You have all heard of Billy Bray, the nish Methodist, who was so mighty in prayer. re was a certain hill that Billy was accus- ed to pass, for which he prayed with all his ht, till he believed that his heavenly Father given him that mountain, so that all the s that lived on it should be saved.

MR. HASLAM'S CONVERSION,

e visited all the houses, and obtained a bless- for the inhabitants, but as there were only e houses on the hill he prayed in his own le way that more might be built. It seemed dd prayer, and the neighbors did not think it wise one, but nevertheless it was fulfilled. e time after when he visited that place he d that Mr. Haslam had built a church and ools there, and his joy was great until he red the church. At the sight of the sur- d choir and the ritualistic performance Bray was greatly downcast, and said that it nothing but an "old Pusey." Billy went e and set himself to pray again for that hill, the fact was quite unknown to those who the objects of his petitions.

on the Lord hearkened to the cry of His ant, and it came to pass that the Lord ed Mr. Haslam. His gardener fell sick, and he time of his illness his churchmanship d to comfort him; a Methodist brother ed him and was the means of his conver- . When the man told Mr. Haslam that he converted he was very grieved and disap- ted; he felt that he could never make Cor- men into Churchmen; they were confirmed matics. His favorite and most promising chman had become a Dissenter, and was ally praying that his master might become same. What was to be done?

. Haslam had occasion to visit Rev. W. Aitken, and told him the defection of the ener. "Why," said Mr. Aitken, "you are onverted yourself; I am sure of it, or you d not have come here to complain of your ener." Conviction came into Haslam's , his former hopes vanished, and in sadness ought the Lord. Mr. Aitken said, "The thing you can do is to shut the church up, ell your people you will never preach again ou are converted."

could not do that, but on the Sunday ing he went, ill and sad, to read the ers, determined to send the people home as as they were finished. Instead of that his eye lighted on the text, "What think ye of Christ?" and he thought he would make a few observations upon that question before dismissing the congregation.

For the rest I will quote his own words, lest I should seem to color the incident by telling it in my own language. "As I went on to explain the passage, I saw that the Pharisees and Scribes did not know that Christ was the Son of God, or that He was come to save them. They were looking for a king, the son of David, to reign over them as they were. Something was telling me, all the time, 'You are no better than the Pharisees yourself—you do not believe that He is the Son of God, and that He is come to save you, any more than they did.' I do not remember all I said, but I felt a wonderful light and joy coming into my soul, and I was beginning to see what the Pharisees did not.

"Whether it was something in my words, or my manner, or my look, I know not; but all of a sudden a local preacher, who happened to be in the congregation, stood up, and putting up his arms, shouted out in Cornish manner, the parson is converted! Hallelujah!' and in another moment his voice was lost in the shouts and praises of three or four hundred of the congregation. Instead of rebuking this extraordinary 'brawling,' as I should have done in a former time, I joined in the outburst of praise; and to make it more orderly, I gave out the Doxology—'Praise God, from whom all blessings flow'—and the people sang it with heart and voice over and over again. When this subsided, I found at least twenty people crying for mercy, whose voices had not been heard in the excitement and noise of thanksgiving. They all professed to find peace and joy in believing. Among this number there were three from my own house; and we returned home praising God."

'THE PARSON IS CONVERTED!

This is a memorable illustration of the statement that when God comes down among a people he does things we looked not for. You may hope that the divine Spirit will still display His power over the most unlikely persons to the glory of His grace. He can save the most obstinate, and bring opposers to the feet of Jesus. Plead with Him to do so.

IT DISSOLVES DIFFICULTIES.

III. Thirdly, the presence of God dissolves difficulties. I would bring you back to the text again; for perhaps you are beginning to forget it. "When thou didst terrible things which we looked not for, thou camest down, the mountains flowed down at thy presence." This is a blessed sentence, "The mountains flowed down at thy presence." Israel had enemies which were strong and powerful, nations and kings towered above them like great mountains, but whenever God came to help them the kingdoms dissolved, the people were conquered, and the mountains and hills were laid low.

At this present time great systems of error oppose the Gospel of Jesus Christ; I need not mention them, for they are before us, and seem to rise like giant Alps, overtopping our faith. Blessed be God, the Church only needs the divine presence in the midst of her, and all the systems of error will flow down at His feet like glaciers which dissolve in the summer's sun.

Many hearts are hard as granite rocks: you may pray for them, talk to them, preach to them, but all in vain. What is required is the presence of God, and then hearts of stone are turned to flesh, dead souls feel the beating of spiritual life, and corruption is overcome of resurrection power. Do not be afraid, brother. No heart can stand out against the grace of God, when it comes in all its power.

Within our own selves also we may see mountains of difficulty, but if we go to Christ, and so obtain God's help, every mountain shall sink and every rock melt.

"Thy mercy is more than a match for my heart,
Which wonders to feel its own hardness depart;
Dissolved by thy mercy, I fall to the ground,
And weep to the praise of the mercy I've found."

There is nothing in you, there is nothing round about you, there is nothing on earth, there is nothing in hell, that can stand against you if you have God on your side, and you have God on your side when you put your trust in Jesus Christ. Between here and the eternal glories of heaven nothing shall ever stand against you if you do but trust in Jesus.

IV. Lastly, we may expect to see the same results from

THE DIVINE PRESENCE TO-DAY,

and to-morrow, and as long as we live. God is the same.

As to spiritual wonders, people think that Pentecost was with us once, but never can return; but Pentecost was only the Feast of First Fruits, and first fruits predict the harvest. God will do greater things in the latter days than He did at Jerusalem at Pentecost. He says to us, "Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it." We do not believe in Him. "If the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" There is such a microscopic quantity of it that no eyes but His which are like a flame of fire could spy it out. Yet I say, God is the same, and as worthy to be trusted.

And, brethren, we are the same. "No," you say, "we are not, we are not such good men as those who lived in the olden times." I answer that they had the same passions and infirmities as we have now. There was not a morsel of good in the apostles, martyrs, and confessors but what God put there. One earthen vessel is of the same clay as another, and the same God may put the same treasure into one as well as into another. He can bless you and me as he did Peter, James, and John. Human nature is human nature still, both in its degradation and in its possibilities.

Brethren, the promises are the same. "Oh," say you, "how is that? Are not some of them out of date?" No; the covenant is made up of abiding promises, suitable for all ages, and all of them are yea and amen in Christ Jesus. We have the sure mercies of David: they stand fast for ever and ever.

Mark you, there are things to be done yet by God which will astonish us beyond measure. We shall cry out against ourselves for our drooping and desponding thoughts; for by and by, perhaps ere some of us see death, we shall behold greater things than our fathers saw, and shall clap our hands for very joy. Read the chapter which follows our text, and see what God is going to do. "I am sought of them that asked not for me; I am found of them that sought me not: I said, Behold me, behold me, unto a nation that was not called by my name."

Israel is also to be gathered—"I will bring forth a seed out of Jacob, and out of Judah an inheritor of my mountains: and mine elect shall inherit it, and my servants shall dwell there." O blessed hour, when the Jew shall worship the Christ whom he crucified! That is not all. There is coming yet—who knoweth how soon?—a new creation. "Behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind."

There will come a time in which the shortening of life after the deluge shall be remedied. "There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old. As the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands." Yes, and there comes a time of universal peace. "The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock: and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord." Verily, verily, I say unto you, this text is true. When God shall do terrible things which we looked not for, He shall come down among us, and the mountains shall flow at His presence. Amen and amen.

[Portion of Scripture read before Sermon—
Isaiah 63; 15-19; 64.]

---

*ee "Sentence of Death, the Death of Self- ." Christian Herald, June 3d.

WALTER GORDON'S RESOLUTION, AND WHAT CAME OF IT.

A Temperance Story.

A Growing Habit—The Sofa Claimed—The Publican's Purpose—An overheard Conversation followed by Happy Results—Walter's Vow—A Friend in Need—Mrs. Gordon's Surprise—Three Years afterward.

STEP by step Walter Gordon had sunk from a position of respectability to that of a confirmed inebriate. When he first commenced visiting the tavern, he did so with a feeling of shame, which led him to go at times when he was likely to meet but few persons. But as the habit grew upon him he became more reckless of public opinion. Gradually his income from his business—he was a carpenter—diminished; people began to be afraid to trust him with commissions, for they would probably have to wait a longer time than was convenient.

Walter was a married man. At the age of twenty-five he had united himself to an estimable woman, who, though she brought him little in the way of worldly goods, proved an excellent wife. They had now been married ten years, and had one child, a boy of six.

Of course their worldly circumstances had been sensibly affected by Mr. Gordon's course. Their little hoard in the savings bank had dwindled away. Next commenced the diminution of their domestic comforts. It cost Mrs. Gordon a long fit of weeping when one day the landlord of the village tavern, a rough man, with neither principle nor refinement, drove up to the door, and, on her opening it, announced that he would take the sofa.

"The sofa!" exclaimed Mrs. Gordon, in amazement.

"Certainly! Hasn't your husband told you of it?"

"Why should he tell me?" inquired the wife, not yet suspecting the truth.

"He sold it to me," said the landlord, looking shame-faced, in spite of his brazen effrontery.

"And without saying a word to me about it?"

"That's his affair, not mine."

"What induced him to sell it? How much did you give him for it?"

"He was owing me a debt—a matter of two or three pounds," muttered the landlord.

"And this debt was for drink, I suppose," said Mrs. Gordon, bending her eyes searchingly upon the landlord like an accusing spirit.

"Well, and suppose it was? I suppose it's a debt for all that."

"You can take the sofa," said Mrs. Gordon. "It is in that room. But I warn you, John Glover, that the riches you are fast accumulating will bring you no happiness. Ruining your fellow-men is a great price to pay for wealth."

"When I want to hear preaching I can go to church," muttered the landlord.

A month afterward the Gordons moved from this comfortable house which they had hitherto occupied to a miserable old building which had not been tenanted for a long time, and ought to have been pulled down. But it had fallen into the hands of John Glover, the tavern-keeper before referred to, and he had persuaded his victim to hire it.

Sad days succeeded the removal. All that was good had gone the same way as the sofa. Walter Gordon was seldom at home. It had long since lost its attractions for him, and he was generally to be found in the barroom, where the landlord was gracious, and his drunken hilarity and jests were appreciated by the company. It was not quite time for the landlord to break him. That he would defer until his victim was completely ruined, and there was no prospect of getting any more money from him.

One cold night Walter Gordon had remained in the barroom longer than usual. He had remained until all his companions had slipped off one by one, and he was left alone. He, too, would have gone had he not fallen into a drunken stupor, which left him half insensible to what was going on.

At this time a stranger entered the room, and wished to speak to the landlord alone.

"I have no fire elsewhere," said the landlord. "You can speak freely here."

"But—" expostulated the stranger, pointing over his shoulder at Walter Gordon, who was reclining on a seat.

"Oh, that will make no difference. He's a poor drunken fellow, and will not comprehend anything that is going on."

"Nonsense!" said the other? "I shouldn't think you would harbor such miserable fellows as he."

"I shan't much longer," said the landlord, carelessly; "I've most cleaned him out, and when I have I shall order him off."

The landlord supposed Walter Gordon was too intoxicated to hear what he said. Walter Gordon did hear the last words that were spoken, being, as has been said, only half unsconcious. He had still manhood enough left to feel them acutely. He had never before felt the full measure of his degradation. Now it was presented to him in a very humiliating way.

"So I'm a poor drunken fellow!" thought he to himself. "That's what the landlord says, and he ought to know, for he made me what I am. And yet, no, I cannot say that, for if I had not given my consent his efforts would have been powerless." These thoughts ran through Walter's mind.

This declaration filled him with secret indignation, and yet it was only what he might have known before. But the landlord's manner had been so smooth and polite that he had never suspected the opinion which he entertained of him. His first impulse was to leave the room, but something restrained him. Without appearing, therefore, to have heard what had been said, he continued to lie quiet for a few moments, then, yawning naturally, he staggered slowly to his feet.

"Going?" inquired the landlord, in his usual smooth tone, and with his hypocritical smile.

"Yes, it's getting late," said Walter.

"You won't take another glass—for a night-cap, you know?"

"No, I won't take any more to-night," and Walter slowly walked out of the room. He did not hear the landlord's sneer,

"The first time I ever knew Gordon to decline drinking. He must have had an overdose to-night."

Out in the fresh air a new spirit seemed to possess Walter Gordon. Reflection had completely sobered him. He looked back at the building from which he had just emerged, and exclaimed, in a resolute voice,

"I will never drink another glass of liquor in that room, or any other place, so help me God!"

It did him good to make that resolution. He felt instantly, he knew not how, a conviction that God would surely help him; and in spite of his ragged clothes, his destitute family, and miserable prospects, he was cheered by the hope of better things.

His wife was awaiting him with an air of depression that pained him to witness. He wanted to tell her of his new resolution, but decided not to do so till he could give her some decided proof that it would be carried into practice.

The next morning early Walter Gordon awoke and left the house, his wife supposed for the tavern. She was mistaken. He bent his steps to the house of an old Christian friend, Mr. Holmes.

"Mr. Holmes,'" said Walter Gordon, "I have heard you are intending to build a barn."

"Yes," he replied, "I am thinking of doing so."

"Have you engaged any one to build it?"

"No," he said, hesitatingly. He anticipated what was coming next, and it embarrassed him.

"I am in want of work, and will do it as cheap as any one."

Mr. Holmes looked down. He was evidently trying to frame a refusal.

"I would take care that the work was well done."

"Yes. I know you are a good workman but—"

"But my intemperance is an objection, suppose you will say."

"Frankly, now that you have mentioned it that is the objection—the only one I have—but as you will admit, I think, a weighty one."

"It is; I freely acknowledge it. But, Mr Holmes, I made a resolution last night never t touch intoxicating liquors from henceforth."

"Do you think you have strength to abide b that resolution?" said the deacon eagerly "Are you willing to sign the pledge?"

"I am desirous of doing so," said Gordon.

"What, may I ask, led you to form thi resolution?"

In answer to this question Walter Gordon detailed to the gentleman the particulars wit which the reader is already familiar.

"And now, do you think," he said, in conclusion, "that you are willing to trust me wit this job?"

"I will trust you," he said heartily, extendin his hand to Walter Gordon. "God forbid tha I should discourage you in your resolution by refusal. Perhaps, however, it will be better t employ you by the day, trusting to you to mak the job a short one, since you might find i difficult to get trusted on your own respons bility."

"Thank you, sir, for your consideration. have, I am aware, destroyed my credit. I sha be happy to take it on your own terms. Whe shall I begin?"

"I will order the timber to-day, so that it ma be on the ground to-morrow. Meanwhile, have little jobs around the house sufficient t occupy you to-day."

That evening Walter Gordon came home six o'clock, somewhat to his wife's surpris How much greater was her surprise when took from his pocket his day's wages, sayir kindly,

"Clara, you must need some money for hous hold expenses."

"Oh, Walter," she said, with tremulous ho at his unwonted action, "can it be that you—

"That I have reformed? With Heaven's he I think I have, Clara. I shall try to be a bett husband in the future."

There was joy in the humble home of Walt Gordon that night—the joy of a wife who h found her husband, and of a husband who h found himself.

Three years passed by. At the end of th time Water Gordon was well, prosperous, a happy, while the landlord had sunk into a drun ard's grave, which he had prepared for so ma others.

WHAT COMING WARS MAY WE EXPECT?*

By Rev. M. Baxter.

(Continued from page 381.)

Rev. G. S. Faber's Treatise—The Fall of t Sixth Head—Eight Predicted Marks—A Nir Characteristic Still Unfulfilled—Near Approa of the General War—The Time of Trouble—T Fall of Turkey—The Revival of the Empire France—The Deadly Wound and Final Destru tion.

THE REV. GEORGE STANLEY FABER, Preb dary of Salisbury, England, and a celebrat author of several voluminous prophetical a theological books, published in 1852, a treati under the title "The Revival of the Fren Emperorship anticipated from the necessity Prophecy," in which he expresses the follow views:

"The Seven Heads of the political Ron

---

* Extracted from "Coming Wars," by Rev. Baxter, in two pamphlets—five cents each by m First pamphlet contains "Ten Signs of the End, Description of Approaching Events," with two m and four large diagrams. Second pamphlet cont valuable quotations from Forty Expositors on t events. Address, 63 Bible House, New York.

mpire or Seven-headed Wild-beast in Revelaon 17 and 13, are its Seven successive Politics r Forms of Government. From the angel's ssertion of a naked historical fact, that the ixth Head or Polity was in actual existence at e time when he spoke (for he said, five are llen, and one is, Rev. 17 : 10), we are infallibly rtain that this Sixth Policy or Form of Government was

THE ROMAN EMPERORSHIP ;

d this primary fact furnishes a general basis d a sure clew, to the hierophantic discourse. 'e must obviously trace the historical course of is Sixth Polity until its ultimate fall or exction, because at or just before its extinction, e Seventh Head or Polity must appear to take place.

"Now this Sixth Head or Roman Emperorip, which was in existence in St. John's time, ntinued until 1806. For it was a fundamental inciple of Roman Law that the Territorial man Empire and the Gubernative Roman nperorship were, each alike, a strict UNIT. ence whatever number of personal Emperors ght be at the same time governing the Roman npire in both its Eastern and Western divisions, ey were each alike, and all collectively deemed E EMPEROR.

"Now, in 1804, just two years before the fall the Roman Emperorship, there had started a new Polity, which under the new title of French Emperorship, as embodied in poleon Bonaparte, was actually master of me and Italy, and which not long afterward mally annexed Rome and the Roman States its already ample dominions. This French nperorship has appropriated to itself characteristics of the Seventh Head :

EIGHT PREDICTED MARKS

"1.—It had not yet come in St. John's time ording to Rev. 17 : 10 ; but it sprang into stence in 1804, at the very time requisite in ler to become the Seventh Head, viz. : just ore the fall of the Sixth Head or the Roman perorship in 1806.

"2.—It proceeded fully to occupy the place of t Sixth Head or Roman Emperorship.

"3.—It had the sovereignty and possession of seven-hilled city of Rome, which is an essential racteristic of each one of the Seven Heads ause they are a double symbol, representing only the Seven Hills of Rome, but also the en successive Forms of Government over the man Empire (Rev. 17 : 9, 10).

"4.—It continued only a short space of time m 1806 to 1815, according to Rev. 17 : 10.

"5.—It was also wounded to death by the sword military violence at the battle of Waterloo in 5, according to Rev. 13 : 3 ; a death broadly tradistinguished from only the Fall of all the er Heads.

"6.—It experienced an extraordinary revival n its deadly wound in 1852, when the French perorship was restored in Napoleon III., so t it reappeared as an Eighth Head, although lly no more than the Seventh Head restored political life by the healing of its deadly nd—thus fulfilling the prophecy, and the d-beast, that was and is not, even he is the hth Head, and is of the Seven (Rev. 17 : 11 ; 3).

"7.—It ascended from the abyss—the figura- Oceanic Abyss of Turbulence and Revoluary Agitation in 1848 (Rev. 17 : 8).

"8.—It has revived previous to the end of the years, which was necessary in order to act predicted part at the time of the end.

All these eight predicted characteristics of Seventh Head have now been minutely fuld in the French emperorship. They prove efore, with a force of demonstration, little rt of mathematical, that the French emperip is the predicted Seventh Head of the bolic Wild-beast or Seventh Polity of the nan Empire. And its revival from its deadly nd in fulfilment of Revelation 13 : 3 ; 17 : 8, furnishes a most illustrious attestation to prescient accuracy of the divinely inspired k of the Apocalypse. There is necessarily yet unfulfilled, viz. : that at the end of his future career this Seventh Head is predicted to go into destruction at the final battle in Palestine. 'The Wild-beast that thou sawest, was and is not, and shall ascend out of the abyss and go into destruction' (Rev. 17 : 8) : also, 'The Wild-beast that was and is not, even he is the eighth and is of the seven and goeth into destruction' (Rev. 17 : 11).

A NINTH CHARACTERISTIC

"Prophecy required that vitality should be restored to the sword-slain Seventh Head in order to fulfil its predicted destiny, namely : the Forming a Grand Confederacy against true Christianity and engaging in a fearful War of opinion for the purpose of suppressing it (Rev. 16 : 13–16 ; 17 : 14). In conjunction with the revival of this Seventh Head, we see too an evident preparation throughout Papal Europe for the predicted War of opinion, with a diabolically increasing animosity against the Protestant principles of the Reformation. This dreadful war will commence in Europe before the close of the 1260 years,* and will ultimately pass into Palestine.

"The agents, who are to stir up this war will be the three unclean Spirits of Demons, issuing from the mouths of the Dragon, the Wild-beast, and the False Prophet. They are even now in existence, though they have not yet fully gone forth to the Kings of the Earth to gather them to the war of that great day of God Almighty : as a fact, we now perceive ready prepared harmoniously to co-operate for a bad end, INFIDELITY and MILITARY DESPOTISM, called into action by Revolutionary Anarcny, and Jesuitism of the most arrogant and tyrannical Ultramontane school. Their co-operation might once have been thought paradoxical, but we have already seen enough of their conjoined practices to feel little difficulty in believing that they will cordially act together against Pure Religion, and will be the main artificers of the final great Antichristian Confederation (Rev. 16 ; 14).

"We are constrained to arrive at the anticipative conclusion that we must indeed expect this General War in Europe in no great length of time ; and when we consider the baleful perfection to which the military art of destruction has now been carried, we may readily understand the force of the declaration that in the latter scenes of this internecine war, which opens out at the commencement at the Time of the End; synchronically with the Restoration of the Jews, there shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation even unto that same time.

"Some details of this Time of the End are described with wonderful particularity in the last five verses of the eleventh chapter of Daniel. The expedition of the Roman Wilful King into Palestine will there meet with temporary success, but he is destined afterward to come to his end and none shall help him. The particular locality marked out for the utter destruction of this Seventh Head, together with the False Romish Prophet, being 'between the two seas (the Mediterranean and the Dead Sea) on the glorious holy mountain,' in the vicinity of Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives (Dan. 11 : 40–45 ; 12 : 1 ; Zech. 14 : 1–4 ; Rev. 19 : 19). And according to Zechariah 14, a literal, though only temporary, manifestation of our Lord on the summit of Mount Olivet, may be expected.

"Bishop Hurd justly remarked more than sixty years ago, that even then the 1260 years must have been near their close, since the domineering tyranny of the Papacy had been in more or less active operation little short of twelve centuries. And another impressive sign of the times and indication of our appalling nearness to Daniel's predicted Time of Trouble, is the impending extinction of the Ottoman Power, which is ominously looming on the prophetic horizon. With rare unanimity, commentators have agreed that the drying up of the waters of the mystic Euphrates during the sixth vial, under which we are now living, must import the final Dissolution and Destruction of the Ottoman Power. And there seems to be a general anticipation that the fall of Turkey is not far distant : and the consequent quarrel of the great European Powers about its division, like the quarrel of wolves over a carcass, which they have jointly deprived of life, will probably be the cause of that final predicted war, which, commencing in Europe, will pass, at the Time of the End, into Palestine (Rev. 16 : 12).

"Fearful events are coming upon us. I, in my eightieth year, shall probably be taken away from the evil to come. That evil is coming, I make no doubt ; but it is evil introductory to great good. For when the predicted Antichristian Confederacy shall have been broken, and when (as was also the judgment of Bishop Horsley and other writers) its mighty armaments shall have perished between the seas on the mountains of Palestine, then will be inaugurated that holy and happy period which is usually distinguished by the name of the Millennium.

Some good men have imagined that by the gradual increase of knowledge and religion, we shall glide as it were imperceptibly into the promised purity and felicity of the thousand years. But prophecy speaks in a very different language. There must be an effectual cleansing before the world can be fit for the reception of a Pure Universal Church, and the appointed instrument of cleansing is widely spread tribulation."

The following was the summing up of the whole lengthy argument published by Mr. Faber, in 1818 (fifty-four years ago) :

"In the picture-history of Revelation 13, the Wild-beast appears with one of his Seven Heads wounded to death by the stroke of a sword, yet notwithstanding his temporary death by the sword, the Wild-beast afterward revives in consequence of his deadly wound being healed. The wound, however, which is thus healed, is the wound which was inflicted on the short-lived Seventh Head. But the wounded short-lived Seventh Head was the short-lived FRENCH EMPERORSHIP which was wounded to death by the sword at Waterloo in 1815. Therefore the French Emperorship is that mortally wounded Seventh Head whose deadly wound is destined to be healed. The healing of it can only denote the political event of the re-establishment of the French Emperorship. Whether it be revived by Napoleon Bonaparte, or by the son of Napoleon, or by any other military adventurer—the naked fact of its revival is but too plainly foretold by the voice of inspiration.

"And the Rise of the Eighth Head described in Rev. 17 : 11, corresponds with the Healing of this sword-slain Seventh Head in Rev. 13 : 3 (for the healed Seventh Head will appear as an Eighth Head, though in reality only the Seventh one revived).

"Hence the grand conclusion from the whole is immediately brought out :

'"The predicted yet future Eighth Head or Form of Government over the Roman Empire, will be the revived Emperorship.

"The unerring voice of Prophecy pronounces that under the French Emperorship in its revived condition, the Roman Empire will go into utter political destruction : its final rebellious armament being cut off between the two seas of Palestine, and in the immediate vicinity of the glorious holy mountain. The Wilful King will there perish : and there will be, at the same time, an actual manifestation of Christ himself upon the Mount of Olives. Truly we live in a period so pregnant with extraordinary events that we may well be stirred up to no ordinary degree of seriousness" (Dan. 11 : 36–45 ; Zech. 14 : 4).

(To be continued.)

---

* In his Supplemental Third Volume of Dissertations, published in 1818, Mr. Faber demonstrated the 1260 years (Rev. 11 : 3 ; 12 : 6) to end somewhere between 1862 and 1875. This gave a judicious margin of a dozen years, and is much preferable to his later inclination toward a particular year within that margin.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 383.)

A Catastophe.

Old Dunnit had seen the tears in Julia's eyes and the wanness of her face, and his warm heart ached for her. This was the time, he thought, when perhaps a word in season (Isa. 50 : 4) might win her from foolishness to wisdom. It was yet a long way off sunset, for May days are in no hurry to close, even when the winds are bitter enough to make one long for the cosey warmth of wintry firesides. There had been a fresh north-westerly breeze blowing over the sea for some hours, and during the heat of the day it had been warm and welcome. It was not yet cold, but there was a chilliness creeping landward from the sea which foretold a coming storm.

Old Dunnit and Julia pursued their way to the lighthouse in silence, and were still silent when they gained the little platform of rock beneath its walls, from which they could see a long line of coast, ending on each side with a headland stretching into the sea, and there joining the long line of clouds which lay almost like mimic cliffs beyond the dim blue of the water. Cliff and sea and sky were all that could be seen.

"Ah! there's sorrow on the sea, and it cannot be quiet," said Old Dunnit; "but it seems as if I loved it all the more, and thought of it all the more, for the sorrow. It 'ud seem strange if it was always at rest and quiet; it wouldn't be like this world, Julia. Maybe the Lord loves us the more for the sorrow we have, that cannot let us be quiet, 'specially you young things, as haven't learned to find rest in Him."

"Uncle Dunnit," sobbed Julia, "I've been pretty nigh wishin' all day as I'd never wed Squire Symons. It's all turned out pride and vexation," she added, after a mournful pause; "but if I repented ever so, it couldn't ever be different; I couldn't unwed myself. I should have to keep on bein' his wife, and never have a good man like you for my master, to love me and work for me, as you do for aunt.

"It's poor consolation to call Miss Ruth my daughter and make believe I'm a lady, when I'm harder worked than I ever was. I'm like a dog at a fair, dressed up in a scarlet coat and a hat, and walking on two legs. Nobody thinks he isn't a dog. Master Charlie laughs and makes game of me, and Mrs. Clifford never speaks a word to me if she can help it, when I go to dinner there. But if I repented, what 'ud be the good? It 'ud be all the same; and I'm a miserable woman."

"No, no, Julia, my lass," said the old man tenderly; "it all depends upon whether you are sorry of your sin or your punishment! If you repent of your pride and folly, God can take those away and make you wise and humble. And your punishment wouldn't be all the same if you could believe God was watchin' over you, and carin' for you, and lovin' you with all His heart. For it's with all His heart God loves us. He doesn't say to us, 'Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart,' and then only give us a bit of His own love.

"No, no, Julia all His might, all His strength, all His heart—that's how Jesus loved His disciples; and that's how He loves us still. You didn't know what you might have been, when you wished to be a lady. Why! you might have been one of the daughters of the Lord God Almighty! [2 Cor. 6. 18.] What is a lady to that? Miss Ruth herself thinks nothin' of bein' a lady, because she knows she is one of God's children. And so may I, and so may you, my lass! There's neither high nor low, rich nor poor, in His sight. He couldn't love the Queen herself more than with all His heart."

Julia could not answer. She knew that her uncle Dunnit had talked like this before, but it seemed as if she had been deaf, and could not hear his words. But she heard them now; and oh! could she believe them? would God forgive all her folly and pride?

She looked tearfully across the tossing sea, toward the cliffs under which lay her new home, where life was so difficult. The little cove at Rockwood, for it was hardly a bay, was not in sight, but round the rock which hid it she saw a boat coming—the Clifford boat, once Ernest's now Charles's. Charles had rigged it with a saffron-colored sail, distinct from every other sail along that coast. In the westering light it looked like a gorgeous butterfly flitting over the soft dim blue of the sea, and catching the sunshine on its flame-colored wings.

She watched it listlessly for a few minutes, sobbing now and then like a chidden child. Then her thoughts began to stir. Charles had visited Rockwood while she had been away; and there would be no one at hand to check either him or her husband, who was likely enough to avail himself of his unwonted freedom. It was the first holiday she had taken since her marriage, and what if it ended badly! She had married Squire Symons with her eyes open, knowing him to be a drunkard. There was no hope of his growing any more temperate, or of keeping from fatal excesses, unless he were closely watched, as Miss Ruth had watched him. Well! if God would only forgive her, she would bear with him, and have patience with him; and do her utmost to be a good wife to him. So she resolved—little thinking what was before her!

"Uncle Dunnit," she said sorrowfully, "I must be goin' home now."

Yet she did not turn away at once, but followed the flutterings of the saffron sail for a minute or two. The tide was in Charles's favor, though the wind was against him; but the little boat was performing some unaccountable manœuvres. It was hovering dangerously near a long line of reef, which was covered at high tide, but which was beginning to show its black and pointed crest through the surf that danced and wavered along it.

Near to it the rocks were worn into deep, parallel furrows, over which the sea swirled to and fro, as it rose and fell, and bounded at last tumultuously against the foot of the high precipice, upon the brow of which lay the little path to Rockwood. There was a strong eddy just there at any time, but at this time, with the tide flowing and the wind pressing heavily upon the water, it was more than usually dangerous. Yet, apparently, Charles Clifford had loosed the sail; and the little boat was reeling and staggering in the current, with the sail almost dipping into the water.

"I can't think what Master Charlie can be about," said Julia in an anxious tone; "see how his boat's bobbin' up and down. Who can be steerin', uncle?"

"He'd little Johnny Tucker wi' him," answered old Dunnit, "when he set out. Johnny's a good steersman, lad as he is; but I'll run in and fetch my glass. It's just inside the porch here."

Julia could not take her eyes off the boat, while old Dunnit was searching for it with his telescope among the rocks. At last he fixed it within the range of his glass; and he cried out in a voice of alarm.

"Why! it's old Squire Symons at the rudder," he exclaimed, "and Master Charlie's tryin' to get it out of his hand. Johnny isn't there. They'll be borne on to the rocks. Good Lord! good Lord!"

The last words were spoken not in the common profane manner, but in a tone of entreaty, as if he saw one who could help, and was crying to him to stretch out his hand.

"They're fightin'," he cried, "fightin' for the rudder! They don't see where they are goin'. Are they mad, Julia, or drunk?"

Julia lifted up her voice and uttered a long, shrill, piercing cry of warning; but the wind bore the sound inland, against the cliffs. Yet almost as if in answer to it a loud call for help reached their ears. The sail, all aflame with the evening sunshine, and swelling with the western wind, was drifting down fast into the furrows and deep hollows of the rocks.

"Quick! quick!" cried old Dunnit; "there's my boat down below. I've a strong arm ye and so have you, Julia. There's not a mome to lose."

The fishing-boat was moored at the foot of rude staircase cut in the rock; and it was not minute's work to seize the oars and push o through the tangle of wrack into clearer wate Julia had not spoken since she had uttered h wild, ineffectual scream, and she did not spea now. All her strength was needed for her oa though the languor and weakness she had felt day seemed replaced by a marvellous vigor.

She had her back to the point whither th were rowing; but from time to time she glanc round and searched the waters for the glowi and fluttering sail. As long as it was in sig there was hope that all would be right; but h slowly was their clumsy fishing-boat making way against the tide! How long it was befo they could get away from the current whi flowed round the Lantern-hill! Julia heard Dunnit murmuring a prayer, but her throat w too dry to say, "Amen."

He was sitting on the bench before her, a she saw his face as he turned round to lo toward the boat. An expression of terror w stamped upon it. He turned back, and be himself with desperate effort to his oar; a Julia did the same. Were they to be too late

"Lord! have mercy on their souls!" s heard him say in an awe-struck undertone.

It seemed to Julia as if these muttered wor compelled her to look round, though she m lose a stroke of her oar, and she saw in moment the amber sail drifting on the tossi waves, and the boat breaking to pieces on t sharp point of a rock that had pierced it throug No call came across the water, though they w near enough to hear it, if there had been a The boat was held fast by the tooth of rock, a it was probable that one or both of the men i clinging to it for safety: though the wh foam was tossing over it, as if in triumpha delight over a new toy. The silence was ominous answer to this hope; and as old Dun and Julia came up to the boat they saw tha was empty.

Julia stood up on the bench, and look around. Beyond the reef, closer under t cliffs, was a channel, comparatively smooth, a beyond that a strip of sand, lying below t overhanging cliff. The slanting light of the s fell brightly on the yellow sand, and she co see, flung upon it like a weed, the body Charles Clifford. A few minutes brought th through the straight, smooth channel to t sand; and she sprang out and ran eagerly to side. A low moan, as she tried to move hi made her start again to her feet.

"He's not dead!" she shouted to her unc as he fastened his boat; "it's Master Char and he's not dead."

She shaded her eyes with her hands to lo out steadily over the glistening sea; but th was no other form to be seen. If her husba had indeed been in the boat, he was lost. Dunnit was beside her now, and bending o Charles Clifford; and she had not time yet think of the old man, whose wife she had be Dunnit knelt down, and placed his arm unc Charles to raise him a little; but the sharp ago he seemed to suffer made him desist. This w not the unconsciousness merely of a half-drown man. Some deeper injury had befallen him.

"We must move him higher," said he, " high as we can. It's nigh on four hours to hi tide. We can't carry him to th' boat; and boat can't come nigher. We must lift h higher on th' sands, Julia; it's as much as we c do, that is."

It taxed their strength to the utmost; Julia was exhausted, and old Dunnit was unu to lifting heavy burdens. Charles was utte helpless and unconscious, though now and th he groaned as they moved him by degrees to spot of greater safety. Then they stood a looked at one another in questioning bewilderment. What were they to do next?

(To be Continued.)

EVIEW OF THE QUARTER'S LESSON.

S. Lesson for June 27th. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

OUR lessons for the past quarter have shown our blessed Lord in His ministry of love and power among men. In our first lesson we rned how the elements of earth and also the wers of darkness are subject unto Him. w, then, should we fear one step of the way which we are called to follow Him? True He ver promises us exemption from trial, on the ntrary, "we must through much tribulation er into the kingdom of God" (Acts 14 : 22); very branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, t it may bring forth more fruit" (John : 2); "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth, scourgeth every son whom He receiveth. ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you with sons; for what son is he whom the father steneth not?" (Heb. 12 : 6, 7). But although d's children are far more liable to be tried afflicted than others, yet He who has minion over all the outward and inward wers which could aggravate or alleviate the l, He who has loved us unto death, is to be sted; the Christ of power is He who, having ed His own which were in the world, "loved m unto the end" (John 13 : 1).

t is this Christ of power and of love who ites such as labor and are heavy laden to e unto Him. Who can carry His invita- ? Surely only such as have laid their own vy load on Him, and who therefore can say the prophet whose iniquity was taken away his sin purged, "Here am I; send me" (Is. 3). Such can be "ambassadors for Christ," hough God besought by them, and they pray in Christ's stead, "Be ye reconciled to " (2 Cor. 5 : 20). The Lord directs us as to re and to whom the invitation is to be made. o ye," He says, "into all the world, and ach the Gospel to every creature" (Mark 16 : and as to the manner (Luke 14 : 21, 23), "Go quickly into the streets and lanes of the , . . . go out into the highways and hedges, compel them to come in, that my house may filled." Energy, perseverance, self-denial, needed in the giving of Christ's invitation inners.

ut the fruit of a wide-spread call to sinners ot all good. The parable of the Sower and Seed is a lesson of humiliation which some istians never have learned; they are so loth cknowledge that the seed sown upon the ever did spring up, that it ever had any although God says it had. And then the bling lesson of that which was sown among rns; it is the good seed, it has life, but gs forth no fruit to perfection. Every istian worker would like to have only credit- conversions for God's honor's sake. But educates His working children by the iliations they meet with in their work, and e and more we are brought to see how all is grace, and how it is no credit to us, but to only, that we ourselves have been kept backsliding. Then the most humbling on of all is that of the Wheat and the Tares, terrible mixture of saved and unsaved, godly worldly, not only in our national churches, gradually creeping in and spoiling all bodies eparatists.

ur next lesson was on Confession and Cross- ing. The two subjects are nearly connected. one is bold enough to take up his cross for whom he is ashamed to confess before men. confession of Christ is closely allied to child- confidence in God. What is it which makes difficult for some to say a word for the ter? Only the fear of the suffering which volved in it, the reproach in the family, the ness and contempt of those who once emed us. Now, are we decided, like Paul, ount all things but loss for Christ? Then t things were gain to us, those we count loss Him (Phil. 3 : 7, 8). For instance, instead eing pained at the coldness of those who are to us, we can, for Christ's sake, welcome it, experience a wondrous joy in the midst of the very pain, because it is real fellowship with His sufferings. If worldly people lose confidence in us because they cannot understand our motives, and they suspect and suggest that we are influenced by a desire to render ourselves peculiar, we cannot smart under such an imputation, for they whose whole life in every detail reverts to self, can in no way understand a life in which every motive is entirely unconnected with self-interest. The cross of remaining under false imputations soon ceases to be a cross when it is taken up for Christ's sake, and it is wonderful how impervious we become to the opinions of men.

Our fifth lesson for the quarter was from the Transfiguration, and we learned that as the human body of Christ was transfigured, so shall we also be transfigured at His coming; but we also learned that even now He is carrying on a work of transfiguration upon us, changing us more and more into His likeness. Our part is, never to resist the Holy Ghost, but to obey God's Word with implicit confidence; and where His Word does not decide, for instance, as to which of two duties, both imperative, we should give the precedence—which among, many letters asking spiritual counsel, it is necessary to answer first, etc.—we may count upon the clear direction of God if we are in the habit of obeying unquestioningly and immediately all which we have recognized to be His will, without one thought as to whether it is convenient to us to do it or not. Faith and obedience bring us into a region where self has nothing to say, where the reins of our entire being are in the hands of another, and, being pliable in His hands, He can attain His own ends in us and by us; "we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works" (Eph. 2 : 10), and, except He is hindered, surely He will make His work perfect; God does nothing by halves. And in measure as we are transfigured, subdued unto Himself (Phil. 3 : 21), His power will manifest itself through us, and then our lives as parents will "suffer," and help "the little children," the young men and women of our families, to come unto Him.

In the call to the marriage feast we recognized the appeal of our God to leave all that is ours for His sake, to be absorbed with His concerns instead of our own; and this that we may have part in the marriage of the Lamb, and enter into the joy of our Lord. The bride of the Lamb is never represented in the parables of our Lord. The bride spirit is seen in the wise virgins who looked only for the Bridegroom, not for a reward of their faithfulness like the servants, not for judgment like the sheep (see Matt. 25). The whole teaching of our blessed Lord is a call to union with him. He calls us not only to renounce sin, but our very selves, the instinct of self-love which belongs to our very nature. But why? In Him we find a new and different nature, and we are made partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption which is in the world through lust (2 Pet. 1 : 4), or our natural desires, as the word means in the Greek; i.e., if we deny ourselves, take up our cross, and follow Christ.

Union cannot exist between those of different natures. A man cannot unite himself to a creature of a lower order of being. And we must possess Christ's nature in all its instincts, principles, and powers if we are to be united to Him as His bride. There are living creatures which prey upon and destroy one another, between whom union is impossible, and just as really the spirit of Christ and the spirit of self destroy and displace one another; therefore there is no possibility of union between them. The whole object of this dispensation is to take out of the Gentiles a people for His name, a bride for the Lamb, the Son of God. In the Old Testament the heir was "under tutors and governors until the time appointed of the Father" (Gal. 4 : 2). The child must be under the law to learn obedience. "But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth His Son made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."

The son who is come of age is capable of understanding and entering into his father's mind and thoughts. But we receive the adoption of sons that we may pass on into a higher, nearer relationship. The son can throw himself heartily into all his father's plans, and seek to execute them, not because he is obliged, but because, as son, it is his joy and honor to do so, but they are still his father's plans and not his own. With the bride it is otherwise; here mine and thine cease to be; "they twain shall be one flesh; so then they are no more twain, but one flesh" (Mark 10 : 8), and thus spake Paul "concerning Christ and the Church" (Eph. 5 : 31, 32). "He that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit" (1 Cor. 6 : 17). And when shall we be made one spirit with Him if it is not now? Oh, let us then be joined unto the Lord, rejecting everything in ourselves or out of ourselves which could bring the smallest separation between Him and us. Let no other consideration weigh with us but this simple one, He wills it, or He wills it not. Any other is to bring something in between the beloved of our souls and us.

The judgment, as we have seen, meets us where we are, in the family of God or in the world. Oh, how solemn does life become when we think that nothing escapes the recording angel (Ezek. 9 : 2, comp. to Rev. 20 : 12, and 2 Cor. 5 : 10); for although we cannot believe that God's children will be judged with the world, yet "we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ" (Rom. 14 : 10). Our lesson from Gethsemane shows us judgment executed upon our blessed Lord, and consummated upon the cross.

One of our later lessons, after the resurrection, brought us to consider the power as well as the commission lodged in our hands by virtue of the death and resurrection of our Lord. In the first three Gospels the commission to widespread evangelizing is clearly given. Matthew and Mark, who were themselves apostles, mention only the apostles as recipients of this commission; but Luke, the physician, mentions (Luke 24 : 33) not the apostles only, but "they that were with them," viz., the hundred and twenty of Acts : 1 13–15, composed of the apostles, the women, Mary the mother of Jesus, and His brethren. Luke also mentions how he opened their understanding that they might understand the Scriptures, clearly testifying the need of Scripture knowledge "that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works" (2 Tim. 3 : 17). And it is Luke who records the words of Jesus to them all "Ye are witnesses of these things" (24 : 48). We cannot wonder at this when it was he who tells us of the seventy disciples who were sent out after the sending of the twelve with the same commission and the same power (Luke 10).

Mark dwells on what the Lord said as to the fruits of their preaching—"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe; in My name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover" (16 : 16–18). So, while Matthew contains the Lord's words, "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore," etc., and "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world" (28 : 18–20), and Luke His command that they should tarry in the city of Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high, Mark mentions in detail the manner in which the power should be manifest; so that when, in Acts 4 : 29, 30, the disciples pray that with all boldness they may speak Christ's word, they plead, "by stretching forth Thine hand to heal; and that signs and wonders may be done by the name of Thy holy child Jesus." In our last lesson we considered the ministry of the Lord Jesus, as embodied in Heb. 2.

FOREIGN TOPICS.

The Principal Political Topic in Great Britain during the week has been the introduction of the financial scheme of the government by Mr. Gladstone. That statesman is acknowledged even by his opponents to be a master in financial matters, and, although his measure takes people by surprise, general confidence is expressed in the wisdom of the scheme. Its principal feature is the abolition of the malt tax. For more than a generation this tax has been the subject of agitation by the farmers, and conservative candidates at every election have been required to pledge themselves to work for its abolition. Mr. Gladstone by taking this step has removed from the hands of his enemies an effective weapon which always told heavily against his party in the rural districts. As the change will involve a loss to the exchequer of $5,000,000 a year, the government proposes to increase the income tax and impose a tax on beer to make up the deficiency. The tax on imported wines is to be reduced by arrangement with the French government. We have yet to learn how the total abstinence societies will regard the measure, and as the cable does not render clear what effect will be produced by removing the tax from the raw material to the manufactured article, their opinions cannot be estimated. If, however, the effect will be to reduce the price of intoxicating drinks it is obvious that, however financially wise the step may be, it is a grievous mistake from a moral point of view, and one that so clear-sighted a statesman as Mr. Gladstone was not expected to have made.

The Condition of Turkey is Desperate. A speedy reopening of the Eastern question is anticipated by European statesmen. The country is politically dying. In the coming crisis, which we are glad to see rapidly approaching, we are content to know that the coup de grace to the moribund ' curse of the East," "the abomination of desolation," by which Jerusalem is now being "trodden down" of the Turkish "Gentiles," will be administered by the fittest agent to do the work. The collapse and death of Turkey is imminent. Then may be expected to come on the last question in the great controversy ;—"the battle of the eagles and the vultures," to decide who is to possess the prey ; and the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on Israel, the return of Judah and Israel to their own land, and their acquisition at the Gate in anticipation of the time of yet greater sorrows, when "the coming struggle" and the dreaded Armageddon war shall arrive.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon in a Letter written to a friend recently thus expresses his view of the appointment of the Roman Catholic Marquis of Ripon to the post of Viceroy of India :

"I deeply regret the appointment of Lord Ripon to Viceregal power. I confess I do not understand the motive for it. I am for giving all men an equal political status, for such I conceive to be their rights as men. But experience of Romanists on the throne has led the nation to pass an Act excluding them from it, and I fear the need of such an Act of self-protection has not ceased, for Romanism has not changed. It seems, therefore, to be a dangerous infringement of a great national safeguard to put a Romanist into the pro-regal or Viceregal office. I would not allow a Mormonite to be judge of the divorce court, because his professed religion disqualifies him ; and if Lord Ripon believes that the Pope has power over sovereigns, and considers himself bound to obey him, I judge him to be disqualified too."

The Salvation Army.—On May 25, at St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, London, Mrs. Booth, wife of the "general," delivered a lecture on the "Principles, Measures, and Aims of the Salvation Army." She stated that, according to the most carefully compiled statistics, more than ninety per cent of the working population of Great Britain never crossed the threshold of either church or chapel. Until she had mixed among the masses of the people she had never imagined that such human beings existed as she had seen by the Tyne side, in South Wales, and in Lancashire, where men had pulled a poor little girl-captain down a flight of steps, and kicked her, only because she had tried to bless them and to do them good. It was to reach the untaught, unthinking, and unwashed, over whose heads the ministrations of the Church had flown, that her husband had started the Salvation Army, and acting on the principle of adapting means to ends, they had sought to arouse attention by striking and novel appeals. Much good had been effected, and much more might have been done had the magistrates and police protected the preachers and kept the "roughs" in order, instead of siding with them against the preachers. They had now 5280 men and women speaking in public every Sunday and nearly every night ; these were unpaid ; and there were besides 267 "captains," paid evangelists.

The Roman Catholic Appointments of Mr. Gladstone have already caused a difficulty. Lord Kenmare, the Roman Catholic Lord Chamberlain, finds among the function of his office that of appointing the queen's chaplains, and the Lent preachers in the Chapel Royal. As it would be an anomaly for a Roman Catholic to perform that duty, it has been transferred to the Lord Steward.

Fifty Thousand Bibles and New Testaments have been sold in England during the past twelve months through the agency of "the gospel carriage" established by Mr. Henry Morehouse. Besides this seventy thousand periodicals and five hundred thousand gospel books have been given away by the same means. The Bible carriage resembles a small omnibus, and is large enough to carry several evangelists and singers, with their stock of Bibles, Testaments and religious books and tracts. On either side is but a single window, and there are no steps behind. The entrance is from the platform in front, on which the singers and speakers stand. It travels through the country attending fairs and markets, the evangelists using the opportunity afforded them by the assembled multitudes to preach the Gospel, and much good has been done. The work was suggested to Mr. Morehouse by an earnest Christian lady in Ireland, who defrayed one half the cost of the carriage.

Sunday Schools in Port-au Prince, Hayti, have been established by Mrs. J. Straight, a Christian lady, who is a teacher in one of the government schools. She formerly resided in Europe and acquired a knowledge of the French, German, and Swedish languages, which has rendered her services in Hayti exceptionally valuable. Having given her heart to the Saviour she has devoted all the time, not occupied in her schoolastic duties, to laboring for Christ among the poor and ignorant. Without aid from any society, she has been able to do a valuable work in Port-au-Prince, among both children and adults.

A Mission School in Liberia, West Africa, has been established by Rev. David A. Day, who has also erected a chapel for religious services. He is endeavoring to raise a fund for providing scholarships of $30 each to assist pupils who are unable to pay for board. Coffee trees are being planted on the ground near the mission, the produce of which is sold and the proceeds used to defray necessary expenses. In a few years it is believed the little plantation will provide wholly for the mission.

Colonel Synge's Experiences while in the hands of the brigands are related in a letter just published. It will be recollected that he fell into the hands of Turkish brigands while he was arranging for the distribution of relief to the starving Bulgarians, and was ransomed at the cost of $70,000.

While negotiating for his ransom his captors feared that troops would be sent against them. Colonel Synge says : "They told me that had such an attempt been made, they would have made me a jacket à la franca—i.e., removed the skin of the upper part of the body—and then roasted me alive.

"I very well knew that such a scheme wou only have been resorted to as a last resourc and assured them they were mistaken. Ho ever, on the occasion I was dictated anoth letter demanding the ransom. If it were n sent within five days my ears would be sent i in eight days my nose, and in ten my head.

"After a weary time in the cave, for it w bitterly cold, and in the day-time they rarely a fire unless the weather was foggy or snow w falling, I was told that all had been arrange Taken out, blindfolded, mounted on a mule, a sometimes riding, sometimes picking my ov way, I was brought down to the vicinity of C erina and released."

A British Novelist's Complaint appears in t International Review for June. Mr. Will Collins asserts that he has lost some thousan of pounds by the publication of his works America. He complains bitterly that publish have sold his books here in cheap form withc giving him any remuneration. There is no dou that cases of individual hardship occur in whi authors of both nationalities have suffered, t in this particular case little sympathy will be fe Parents and Christian people generally, ha cause to wish that Mr. Collins could claim a muneration for the American edition of l works, and that it might be so high as to curt their circulation here, or, better still, stop it together.

Two Graves in the churchyard of Astl Worcestershire, England, preach an impress sermon. One is the grave of a young man w had wealth, position, and influence, but w had wasted it all through the terrible power strong drink. The other is the grave of Fran Ridley Havergal, the Christian poetess. O she had had an opportunity of speaking to t young man in a drawing-room, and pleadi with him for his soul. It is remarkable t they now lie side by side, waiting for the res rection. In the event of our decease before coming of the Lord, which of those graves ours most resemble ?

A Russian Nun.—A colporteur went lately a Greek convent near Moscow. He laid his T taments on the table in the refectory, a offered them for sale. Immediately he was s rounded by all the nuns ; one of them wished buy a Testament in large type, but had not money necessary for its purchase. Seeing great desire to have the book, the colport told her he could easily wait for the mon The nun was very much astonished that man, without knowing her, acted thus. So time after he came again into that same c vent. The nun paid her debt most thankful and said she could not find words to express comfort she found in reading that book. "I life ! it is freedom !" she exclaimed ; and t time she bought a Bible.

The Debt on Dr. Talmage's Church.—T dollars received from L. A. C., Baltimore, M

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchm (London) for June may be obtained at the office of CHRISTIAN HERALD. Price six cents.

The Second Volume of the Christian Hera comprising Nos. 37 to 62 (July to Dec., 1879), be procured, elegantly bound in cloth, at this off Price $1.75.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works are on at the office of the CHRISTIAN HERALD, at price low as to bring them within the reach of every c Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with photog of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Ploughm Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents ; in cloth, 60 ce The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volume of sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, a homil cal exposition of the book of Psalms, five vols., a as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon's Birthday-B This popular gift-book contains a suitable pass selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for every in the year, with a blank space opposite for a graphs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. Spurg appear at their respective birthdays. The boo elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cents. Re tances should accompany orders.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

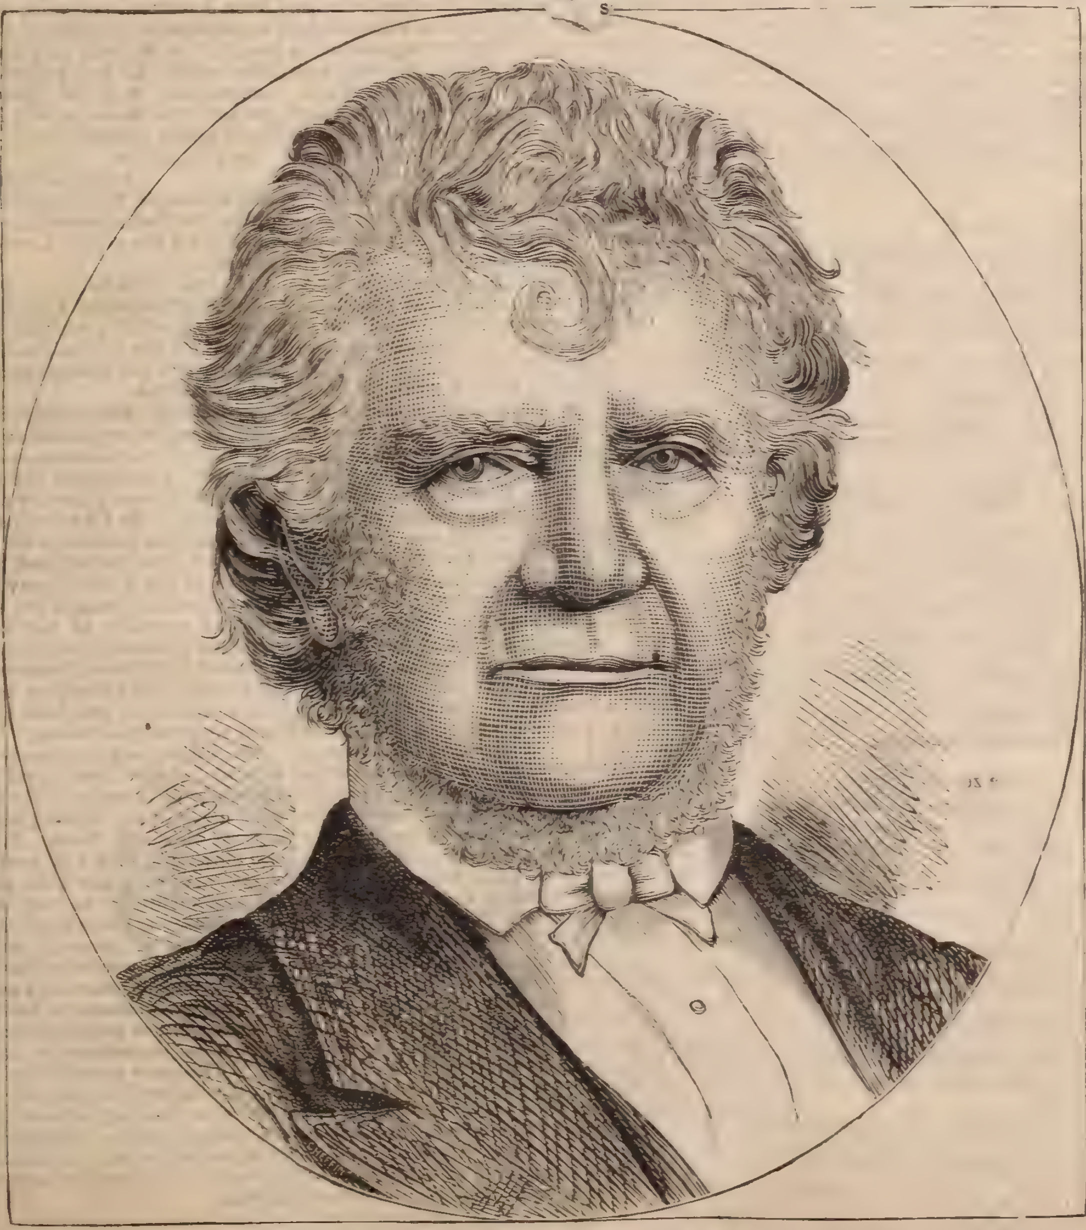
Published at 63 Bible House, New York City, and 2 Ivy Lane, London. Edited in London by the Rev. M. Baxter, in New York by Mr. B. Aitken.

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. TALMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also occasionally a Sermon by the Rev. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL.D., the celebrated Methodist Minister, Rev. W. M HAY AITKEN, or some other Eminent Preacher; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Single Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, JULY 1, 1880. 14th Year. No. 27—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF MR. ROBERT BAXTER, an Eminent Christian Lawyer in England.
HIGH OVER ALL. A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage.
ROCHESTER TOWER. A New Serial Story by Miss M. A. Paull (Continued).
A VICAR'S EXPERIENCE—The Student's Marvellous Dream—Turning the other Cheek.
PROPHETIC EXPOSITION.
A HAPPY HOME; or, Just for Fun. A Temperance Story.
CURRENT EVENTS: The Democratic Nominations—A Mysterious Epidemic—A Daring Rescue—Dr. Talmage's Circular—Dr. Deems in a Storm at Sea—The End of a Life of Sin—A Destructive Scourge—A Fortune Offered for a Wink, etc.
SIN AND MERCY. A Sermon by Rev. W. Morley Punshon, LL.D. (Concluded).
UNPROFITABLE SERVANTS. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
A Warning to Ambitious Young Men.
A WEIGHT OF WEALTH (Continued).
The Fall and the Promise. S. S. Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter.
FOREIGN TOPICS: The Atheist M. P.—The Amnestied French Communists—The Berlin Conference—Lumps of Coal as Arguments, etc.



MR. ROBERT BAXTER, an Eminent Christian Lawyer in Great Britain.

MR. ROBERT BAXTER.

His Early Life as a Lawyer at Doncaster—His Acquaintance with Edward Irving, the Great Preacher—His Promotion of the Great Northern Railway Bill, and other Public Companies, as Parliamentary Solicitor—His Efforts in the Cause of Education, Religion, and Total Abstinence—Testimonial to him from his Native Place.

MR. ROBERT BAXTER is one of the best known evangelical Christian laymen of the British metropolis, and, notwithstanding his venerable age, is active in attendance upon religious meetings and in addressing assemblies of the unconverted whenever he finds opportunity. He possesses a special interest to our readers, being the honored father of the Rev. M. Baxter, the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and author of "Coming Wars," and other treatises. He is of a Leicestershire family, which claims relationship with Richard Baxter, author of the "Saint's Rest," and which for nearly two hundred years has been settled at Atherstone and at Stoke Golding in that county. His father, Mr. Dudley Baxter, of Stoke Golding, was a magistrate and a deputy lieutenant, and the lieutenant-colonel of a regiment of the Leicestershire militia.

The subject of this memoir was born in 1802, and was a third son. His early years were passed at Stoke Golding, and he was articled in a lawyer's office at Atherstone. At the age of twenty-one he received the offer of a lawyer's business at Doncaster, where he settled in 1824. In the following year he married Miss Paget, the youngest daughter of Mr. Paget, a banker of Tamworth, and for the next six years he devoted himself to the routine of his profession, and gained a high reputation for talent and energy.

He was also active in

RELIGIOUS WORK,

and was one of the first to establish, in the Deanery of Doncaster, auxiliaries of the Church Missionary, and Bible, and other religious societies, and to commence a system of district visiting among the poor—labors which at that time were new to the public mind, and provoked much opposition. He was also very assiduous in the cultivation of literature, contributing many papers to leading religious reviews. He was also the chief promoter of the erection of Christ Church, Doncaster.

In 1830 Mr. Baxter's attention was drawn to the subject of Scripture prophecy, which at that time was taken up by a large number of earnest men in the churches of England and Scotland, including the Rev. Hugh M'Neile (the late Dean of Ripon), the celebrated Joseph Wolff, and the equally celebrated Henry Drummond, of Aldbury, and the Rev. Edward Irving. Both by personal intercourse and by participation in publishing the great prophetic periodical of that day, the Morning Watch, Mr. Baxter joined earnestly in the investigations of those scholars respecting the speedy approach of the Second Advent.

Mr. Irving was then in the zenith of his fame, attracting immense congregations by his eloquence, and drawing round him a separate band of devoted but misguided men and women, who were engrosssed in the expectation of the restoration of miraculous gifts to the Church. In the autumn of 1831 their excitement was raised to the highest pitch by reports of miraculous cures among a kindred congregation of Presbyterians in Scotland, and by simulated utterances of wonderful power, which seemed to coincide with the gifts of tongues and prophecy recorded of the Apostolic Age. After a brief trial Mr. Irving acknowledged these utterances as inspirations from above, and sanctioned and encouraged them in his church.

Mr. Baxter did not enroll himself with Mr. Irving and join the Irvingite Church until January, 1832. But then the power with which he spoke, and his great ability, gave him at once an important place in the congregation, and made him one of the most notable of their leaders. He continued among them about four months, when the failure of important predictions unanimously proclaimed by those who were supposed to have "the gift of tongues," and in which he himself had taken part, convinced him that the so-called predictions were

A DELUSION.

With decisive strength of mind he at once publicly declared that he had been mistaken, and came up to London to endeavor to convince and save Mr. Irving, who was then on his trial before the Presbytery of the Scotch Church, and at the crisis of his fame.

Failing in this object, he published a "Narrative of Facts," which had an immense public effect, and proved a death-blow to the further rapid extension of the sect. Some of his companions, including several clergymen of the Church of England, followed Mr. Baxter in withdrawal from the Irvingite communion, while others remained in it. Among the latter the most noted was Mr. Henry Drummond, M.P., who for many years afterward continued to sit and speak in the Parliament, and who lived and died the chief prophet and pillar of the Irvingite or "Catholic Apostolic" Church. Mr. Drummond's son-in-law, the Duke of Northumberland, is now a leading member of that church.

Returning to Doncaster, Mr. Baxter resumed his business as a lawyer until the terrible visitation of Asiatic cholera in the autumn of 1832, which struck down hundreds of the inhabitants. Mr. Baxter gave up his time to organizing a system of house-to-house visitation, and with devoted courage chose for himself the Marshgate district, where, from the low situation and the poverty of the people, the disease raged in its most virulent form. Assisted by a Methodist local preacher, Mr. Thomas Parsonson, he undertook the spiritual and temporal care of the most wretched portion of the town, and spent days and nights in finding out and relieving those who were struck with cholera. Both he and Mr. Parsonson were attacked by the disease, but recovered, and resumed their work.

We now come to a new era in Mr. Baxter's life, when he removed from Doncaster to London, and commenced the career of by which he is best known. Doncaster was upon the line of the Great North Road between London and Edinburgh, and down to 1836 was traversed daily by numerous mail and stage coaches, and other means of communication between the metropolis and the northern counties. But the encroachments of the iron horse had begun, and the Midland Railway, continuing the London and North-Western Railway from Rugby to York, was opened in 1836, and entirely diverted that stream of traffic. The coaches ceased to run, the posting was discontinued, the stage wagons were taken off, and grass grew on the old North Road, while the traffic passed at a distance of ten miles.

PARLIAMENTARY SOLICITOR,

The effect on the prosperity of Doncaster became apparent. Trade dropped off, the residents diminished in number, and a general stagnation and decline set in. But in 1844 a project was set on foot which has since restored the fortunes of Doncaster, and nearly doubled her population. The project was to make a direct railway from London to York, following nearly in the line of the old London Road. With Mr. Beckett Denison, M.P., Mr. Baxter took up the scheme, and organized the London and York Railway Company, now the Great Northern, of which Mr. Denison became the chairman, and Mr. Baxter and Mr. Rose the solicitors. The bill was opposed by the promoters of two other new projects, the Direct Northern and the Cambridge and Lincoln Railway Companies, as well as by all the old companies. The preliminary tribunal of the Board of Trade reported against the London and York Company, and in favor of the Cambridge and Lincoln Company.

The contest which followed was the greatest in the annals of Parliament. Its magnitude may be inferred from the fact that no fewer than twenty barristers appeared daily in the House of Commons committee room; and the Commons committee sat eighty-four days, throug the greater part of two sessions of Parliamen the standing orders being suspended for so tr mendous an investigation. The final decisio was, however, in favor of the London and Yor into which the Direct Northern Company ha then been merged, and an act was passed in 18 for the execution of the project under the no well-known title of the Great Northern Railwa

The same year (1846) saw the commenceme by Mr. Baxter of the South Yorkshire Railwa It was designed to supply railway communic tion from the South Yorkshire coal-pits (the comparatively few in number, and sending the coal by the River Don), to join the Great Nort ern at Doncaster, and to transmit their produ over the Great Northern, Midland, and Nort Eastern Railways. This scheme was final passed in 1847, and the railway constructe The effect on the production of coal was wonde ful. From producing 800,000 tons per annu before the railway, the South Yorkshire distri has increased to a production of 2,000,000 to annually. [The ton of coal in Great Britian 2,240 lbs.]

After his successful promotion of the Gre Northern bill, he was for more than thirty yea chiefly occupied in parliamentary and railwa business, at the head of the large firm of Baxte Rose & Norton, and since its dissolution in 187 at the head of the firm of Baxters & Co. In t long list of railway bills and public companie bills which he has promoted in parliamenta committees may be mentioned the Unde ground, the Metropolitan District Railway, a the Thames Embankment.

In 1868, at the

GENERAL ELECTION

to Parliament, Mr. Baxter was Conservative ca didate for the representation of Hull, and aga in 1870 for the city of Londonderry, but witho success.

He is an attached member of the Establish Church (Protestant Episcopal), acting with t greatest cordiality with all Nonconformists, a he has, for the last half century, taken a prom nent part in the advancement of many evange cal associations.

Possessing deep religious convictions, wi great power of organization, he was foremost the place of his residence to initiate the syste atic district visiting of the poor at a time wh such a work was a novelty and subject to mu opposition. At his own cost and labor, in ord to further the education of the working classe he, in 1835, collected and analyzed from eve parish of the great county of York, containi two millions of people, the state of the scho and the numbers of the scholars. In conce with the Central Education Committee of Yor he aided in the establishment of the Committ of Council on Education in 1839, under whi the educational progress of Great Britain h been so greatly improved.

Mr. Baxter is a very ready public speaker, a has well stored his mind in travel throu Europe and America. He has visited the pri cipal cities of the United States and Canada, well as those of France, Holland, Switzerlan and Germany, and has made himself general acquainted with the laws and customs of tho nations. Though now seventy-eight years ol he possesses a remarkable degree of health a energy, and is generally engaged in his leg business every week day, besides speaking som times at evening meetings and generally delive ing Gospel addresses on Sunday.

As an earnest total abstainer, he takes especi interest in promoting the cause of temperanc He is Treasurer to the Church of England Te perance Society for the province of Canterbu and a few years ago offered £100 to the guara tee fund of £10,000, provided nine others cou be found to accept his challenge by the end the year. This object was successfully acco plished.

The following is an extract taken from

HIS SPEECH

at the celebrated Lambeth Palace Temperan ing convened by the Archbishop of Canter- in 1873: "We welcome the presence of Grace here, for from this meeting will go the voice of condemnation, strong and and ringing through the land, that will greatly to form the public opinion which sire. Every clergyman will more than see that it is his duty to work. I never clergyman who did not mourn over this never yet met a clergyman who would not me such an institution as this. I must not you further, except by saying that no hing in this country will work such a e upon the population as will greater rance and abstinence from intemperance. is the great bane; it is the prevailing it is the sore canker at the root of all the 's prosperity, and we must therefore ad- ourselves to this giant evil, and wrestle t in the grace of God and in the faith of Word, and so we may turn the hearts of ople, and be made the means in our day neration of working such a change that xt one that will follow us will look back he drunken habits of the lower classes as ank God, can look back upon the drinking of the upper classes, and say they are s of history, and that they now torment more."

public speaker at religious meetings at Hall and other places in London, Mr. 's voice has frequently been heard during t thirty years. In conjunction with Lord ck he founded in 1865 the Evangeliza- ciety, of Surrey Street, London, which, the energetic secretaryship of Capt. W. th, now has an annual income of about . He has also been an active promoter Daniell's Soldiers' Homes at Aldershot, m, Colchester, and Plymouth.

kewise was from the first a zealous friend Midnight Meeting Society, of which he is er. Its first meeting was held nearly years ago in St. James's Restaurant, bout 250 unhappy wanderers were wel- to a tea meeting and addressed by the on. and Rev. Baptist Noel and others, the result seventeen fallen persons were , and at subsequent meetings very many en reclaimed.

also President of the Christian Com- (of which Lord Shaftesbury is patron), ciation of about one hundred unremune- hristian workers, who preach the Gospel khouses, lodging-houses, mission-halls, and the open air. It was founded in the Rev. J. Wesley, and its present y is Mr. J. Atkinson.

her very useful society—the London r Mission—has from its commencement co-operation as a member of its com- and for many years he has aided the School movement in London.

ay add that

THE POOR AND NEEDY

roughout his long life constantly found sympathy and help.

e pretty village of Stoke Golding, in rshire, on June 5th, at the Workman's tasteful building, erected by him at a bout $10,000 for the use of the villagers pot where stood the old hall in which born, a number of the inhabitants and ring clergy assembled, and requested ptance of his portrait in oil, an excel- ness, painted by Mr. Pratt of Birming- d of an address. These he accepted in expressing his great appreciation of and of the kindly expressions of esteem ard with which Mr. Eustace and Mr. he spokesmen on the occasion, accom- ied.

. Baxter has now two sons and five s living, and twenty grandchildren. st son and partner in business, Mr. Baxter, who was also held in high s a statistical writer, died in May, 1875, e of forty-eight years. His second son, M. Baxter, we have already mentioned; and his third son, Mr. Frank Baxter, is a lawyer. One of his daughters married Mr. John Hall, an Irish magistrate of Letterfrack, Connemara; another married the Rev. H. Disney, the eloquent and evangelical Vicar of Hinckley, Leicestershire; and another married the late Rev. Edward Pym, Vicar of Willian, Herts.

A Portrait of Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, D.D., of Brooklyn, and a sketch of his life will appear (God willing) in our next issue.

A VICAR'S EXPERIENCE.

At the Band of Hope Anniversary in Exeter Hall, London, on May 12th, the Rev. Simon Sturges, vicar of Wargrave, said:

I love the little children with all my heart. It was my love for little children that led me to take up this temperance work, which has been the happiness of my life for many years. Who does not feel the greatest compassion for the drunkard's children? And then look at the unfortunate marriages cursed through drink. "My husband has taken to drinking. I do all I can for his comfort, but my happiness is entirely blighted;" such is the despairing cry of many a young wife. I have had a large experience with children. I am connected with schools as a diocesan inspector, and there are three large schools in my parish, having 500 children. One of these is an industrial school with 150 children. It is a teetotal establishment. The superintendent, the matron, the schoolmaster, the mistress, the chaplain (myself), never have a drop of alcohol in that building. What is the consequence? These children go away to their places and write me letters saying how happy and prosperous their lives have been because they have received proper instruction in this matter. These children, and the children about me now, are young travellers in the journey of life, and I feel that there is no nobler work in the world than to put a young traveller on the right road.

I heard Dr. Alfred Carpenter relate this fact: He attended a lady once who had two dear little boys, and he said to her, "Don't give these children wine." The lady said, "You don't understand my children's constitution." She gave them wine. They both grew up to be drunkards, and both died of delirium tremens. It is a terrible thing for a child to look in the face of its parent and say, "You taught me to drink, and that has been my ruin." Children should be kept away from the drink, because it is a terrible temptation, and next, because it is a great expense. Numbers of men, to my certain knowledge, are in the workhouse, and need not have been there but for their own improvidence. They say, "Sir, if we had to live our lives again we should not be here. But it's no use preaching to us. We are old men. Go to the children, go to the young men, and tell them to put away this temptation."

The Liberal and Conversative governments alike have done their best to ruin the children. What a sight will these young people see when they leave this building. They will have to go through something like a Balaklava charge,

> "Cannon to right of them,
> Cannon to left of them,
> Cannon in front of them;"

and how could they escape destruction?

I was lately travelling in a railway carriage, and a young woman took out a brandy bottle, and having helped herself handed it to me. I refused, whereupon she said, "I like to see people enjoying themselves." I replied, "I enjoy myself. I am one of the happiest men in the world." And so I am—in fact, almost as happy as Sir Wilfrid Lawson was when he learned that all the publicans were out of Parliament. I congratulate the friends of temperance upon the introduction of Dr. Richardson's "Lesson-book" into schools. As regards Sunday closing, nine to one of the laboring men are in favor of it, and when I asked them why, they said, "For he sake of our children."

THE STUDENT'S MARVELLOUS DREAM.

A bright, intelligent, open-hearted youth entered the University of Dublin early in the present century. The first act of his collegiate life beautifully evinced his natural unselfishness and generous thoughtfulness for others. His mother was a lady of good family and refined manners, but a widow of slender means. He resolved, therefore, if possible, to relieve her of the burden of his support and education by obtaining a sizarship.

Such was this young man. Possessed of superior talents, full of warm and noble impulses, a true friend and charming companion, he was very much the counterpart of the young ruler in the Gospel whom Jesus, beholding with tenderest interest, loved. But, as in his case, one thing was lacking to the young student, and that one thing essential to his highest usefulness and happiness. His heart was not yet given to the world. Neither had the love of Christ yet been felt as a great and wonderful reality. The reading of skeptical authors and the flippant conversation of ungodly fellow-students were fostering the deep-rooted unbelief of his heart. Friendly remonstrances were for a time unavailing. But a change came at length in a most unexpected and singular manner.

One morning he appeared at breakfast with an unusually troubled and anxious expression in his face. Something peculiar had evidently occurred. When asked what was the matter, he replied,

"I had a dream last night that I shall not easily forget. It was very awful. I felt as if I had somehow fallen over a precipice, and was sinking headlong downward to a line of jagged rocks below. It was a terrible moment, and I thought that in another instant I should be a crushed and bleeding corpse. But just as in an intense agony of mind I felt as if all was over with me, there glided forth from the side of the cliffs a glorious Form, all radiant with brightness, in whose face the most winning tenderness was blended with unutterable majesty. I saw it was no other than the almighty and compassionate Saviour. He quickly caught me in His arms and held me up. At once my fears vanished. I felt myself safe, and as He drew me more closely to the cleft of the rock on which He stood, He said, 'See, you were hurrying fast to destruction; but I am your Deliverer. Trust in Me; keep close to My side; I will never let you go, but will guard you henceforward from every peril.'

"When I awoke I was deeply convinced that, although it was a dream, it must have been sent as a message to me from heaven. It is indeed true. I have been going downward to ruin, rejecting the Saviour, and despising His Gospel. Still, now I do trust Jesus has saved me and I am His. It is so merciful of God."

This proved to be the turning-point in his spiritual history, the crisis which decided the tenor and character of his whole after-life. He left college a decided Christian, and as years rolled on became an eminent servant of God. His career was short, but it was "the path of the just." Early called to his rest, he was found ripe for glory, and his death was lamented as a public loss.

Surely the hand of God was in all this. An old writer remarks that "the Almighty often hangs great weights on slender wires." Sometimes a casual word bears fruit in a holy and useful life. Sometimes, as in the case of Martin Luther, a sudden stroke, by which a companion is hurried into eternity, is used by the Holy Ghost to stir the slumbering conscience. Occasionally a passing vision of the night touches the springs of the hitherto dormant consciousness, and imparts to it a new and heavenly impulse. And when we think of cases like the patriarch Jacob's, of Colonel Gardiner, and of John Newton, we may well be led to magnify the manifold wisdom of God.

To the truth embodied in the dreams, and not to the impressive imagery of the fading vision, we must ascribe the happy and abiding results which followed them.

HIGH OVER ALL.

A new Sermon by Dr. Talmage, preached on Sunday Morning, June 27, 1880.

"Unto you therefore which believe He is precious."—1 PETER 2 : 7.

The Cause of Hard Times—Want of Faith brings Ruin in Spiritual and Commercial Matters—Christ Precious—I. As a Saviour from Sin—The Chemistry of the Gospel—II. As a Friend—Business Friends—Family Friends—Christ Always in Town—A Sailor's Narrative—III. As a Final Deliverer—How Cruel Death is!—The Sepulchre a Lighted Castle—Is there Laughter in Heaven?—The World not Good Enough for you—Christ Crucified Again—"Who will Furnish the Nails?"—"Lord Help that Woman"—That Young Man—A Cup Bearer to the Soul.

[Two hundred and forty new members were received into church membership, at the Tabernacle on Sunday. Dr. Talmage read a list of their names, and gave them the right hand of fellowship. This addition brings the total number of church members up to 2,280, being an increase as the result of the special services conducted by Mr. Harrison of 656.]

FOR six years this country had very hard times. What was the matter with the stores? with the harvests? with the men? It was a lack of faith. Money enough, goods enough, skilful brain enough, industrious hands enough; but no faith. Now I have to tell you that what ruins the commercial world ruins the spiritual. Our great lack is faith. That is the hinge on which eternity turns. What was it that lifted Paul, and Luther, and Payson, and Doddridge above the ordinary level of Christian character? It was the simplicity, the brilliancy, the power, and the splendor of their faith. Oh, that we had more of it! God give us more faith to preach and more faith to hear. "Lord! we believe; help thou our unbelief!" "To you which believe He is precious."

CHRIST AS A SAVIOUR.

I. I remark Christ is precious to the believer, as a Saviour from sin. A man says: "To whom are you talking? I am one of the most respectable men in this city; do you call me a sinner?" Yes! "The heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked." You say: "How do you know anything about my heart? I know that about it, for God announces it in His Word; and what God says is always right. When a man becomes a Christian, people say: "That man sets himself above us." Oh, no. Instead of setting himself up, he throws himself down. He cries out: "I was lost once, but now I am found. I was blind once, but now I see. I prostrate myself at the foot of the cross of the Saviour's mercy."

What a grand thing it is to feel that all the bad words I have ever uttered, and all the bad deeds I have ever done, and all the bad thoughts that have ever gone through my mind, are as though they had never been, for the sake of what Christ has done. You know there is a difference in stains. Some can be washed out by water, but others require a chemical preparation. The sin of the heart is so black and indelible a mark that no human application can cleanse it, while the blood of Jesus Christ can wash it out forever. Oh, the infinite, the omnipotent chemistry of the Gospel. Some man says: "I believe all that. I believe God has forgiven the most of my sins, but there is one sin I cannot forget." What is it? I do not want to know what it is, but I take the responsibility of saying that God will forgive it as willingly as any other sin.

"O'er sins, like mountains for their size,
The seas of sovereign grace expand,
The seas of sovereign grace arise."

ONE UNFORGIVEN SIN.

There was a very good man, about seventy-five years of age, that once said: "I believe God has forgiven me, but there was one sin which I committed when I was about twenty years of age that I never forgave myself for, and I can't feel happy when I think of it." He said that one sin sometimes came over his heart, and blotted out all his hope of heaven. Why, he lacked in faith. The grace that can forgive a small sin can forgive a large sin. Mighty to save. Mighty to save.

Who is the God like unto our God, that pardoneth iniquity? Oh, what Jesus is to the soul that believes in Him! The soul looks up into Christ's face, and says: "To what extent wilt thou forgive me?" And Jesus looks back into his face, and says: "To the uttermost." The soul says: "Will it never be brought up again?" "Never," says Christ. "Won't it be brought up again in judgment-day?" "No," says Christ, "never in the judgment-day." What bread is to the hungry, what harbor is to the bestormed, what light is to the blind, what liberty is to the captive, that, and more than that, is Christ to the man who trusts Him.

Just try to get Christ away from that Christian. Put on that man the thumb-screw. Twist it until the bones crack. Put that foot into the iron boot of persecution until it is mashed to a pulp. Stretch that man on the rack of the inquisition, and louder than all the uproar of the persecutors, you will hear his voice like the voice of Alexander Le Croix, above the crackling faggots as he cried out: "O Jesus; O my blessed Jesus; O divine Jesus, who would not die for thee?"

CHRIST AS A FRIEND.

II. Again, I remark that Christ is precious to the believer, as a friend. You have commercial friends and you have family friends. To the commercial friend you go when you have business troubles. You can look back to some day—it may have been ten or twenty years ago—when, if you had not had that friend, you would have been entirely overthrown in business.

But I want to tell you this morning of Jesus, the best business friend a man ever had. He can pull you out of the worst perplexities. There are people in this audience who have got in the habit of putting down all their worldly troubles at the feet of Jesus. There is a man before me who once said to me: "When I want a hundred or a thousand dollars and cannot get it, I go to Christ. He never left me in a predicament. I always get relief some way."

Why, Christ meets the man on Broadway and Wall Street, and Fulton Street, and says, "O business man, I know all thy troubles. I will be with thee. I will see thee through." Look out how you try to corner or trample on a man who is backed up by the Lord God Almighty. Look out how you trample on him. Oh, there is a financier that many of our business men have not found out. Christ owns all the boards of trade, all the insurance companies, and all the banking houses. The Vanderbilts and the Goulds may own the railroads; but Christ owns the Vanderbilts and the Goulds and the railroads.

How often it has been that we have seen men gather up riches by fraud, in a pyramid of strength and beauty, and the Lord came and blew on it and it was gone; while there are those here to-day who, if they could speak out in this assemblage, or dared to speak out, would say: "The best friend I had in 1837; the best friend I had in 1857; the best friend I had in 1873; for the past four weeks has been the Lord Jesus Christ. I would rather give up all other friends than this one."

THE BEST FRIEND I HAD IN NEW YORK

But we have also family friends. They come in when we have sickness in the household. Perhaps they say nothing; but they sit down and they weep as the light goes out from the bright eyes, and the white petals of the lily are scattered in the blast of death. They watch through the long night by the dying couch, and then, when the spirit has gone, sooth you with great comfort. They say: "Don't cry. Jesus pities you. All is well. You will meet the lost one again."

Then, when your son went off, breaking your heart, did they not come and put the story in the very best shape, and prophesy the return of the prodigal? Were they not in your house when the birth angel flapped its wing over your dwelling? And they have been there at the baptisms and at the weddings. Family friends! have to tell you that Christ is the best friend.

Oh, blessed is that cradle over which bends. Blessed is that nursery where walks. Blessed is that sick brow from Jesus wipes the dampness. Blessed is tha where Jesus breaks the bread. Blessed i grave where Jesus stands with His scarre on the upturned sod, saying: "I am the rection and the life; He that believeth though he were dead, yet shall he live."

Have you a babe in the house? put it in arms of the great Child-lover. Is there one in the house? think of Him who "Damsel, arise." Are you afraid you wil to want? think of Him who fed the five sand. Is there a little one in your hous you are afraid will be blind, or deaf, or think of Him who touched the blinded e snatched back the boy from epileptic c sion.

Oh, He is the best friend. Look ove family friends to-day and find another th be compared to Him. When we wa friends, they are sometimes out of town.

CHRIST IS ALWAYS IN TOWN.

We find that some will stick to us i perity who will not in adversity. But comes through darkest night, and amid g est sorrow, and across roughest sea, to c you. There are men and women here who have been dead twenty years ago but for They have gone through trial enough to e ten times their physical strength. Thei erty went, their health went, their familie scattered. God only knows what they su They are an amazement to themselves th have been able to stand it. They look a once happy home, surrounded by all c Gone! They think of the time when the to rise strong in the morning, and walk ously down the street, and had experie health they thought inexhaustible. Gone

Everything gone but Jesus. He has them. His eye has watched them. His otence has defended them. Yes. He h with them. They have gone through d and He was a pillar of fire by night. Th gone across stormy Galilee, but Christ h foot on the neck of the storm. They f waves of trouble coming up around them ally, and they began to climb into the rock of God's defence, and then they s they looked over the waters: "God is our and strength, a very-present help in t trouble; therefore we will not fear thou earth be removed, though the mount carried into the midst of the sea, thou waters thereof roar and be troubled, thou mountains shake with the swelling t Selah." [Psa. 67 : 1-3]

The other day

THERE WAS A SAILOR

who came into the Bethel in New Yo said: "My lads (he was standing among s I don't know what's the matter of me. to hear a good deal adout religion and Jesus Christ. I don't know that I have ligion, or that I know anything much Christ; but when I was mid-Atlantic I up one day through the rigging, and there to come light through my soul. I ha different ever since, and I love those that hated, and I feel a joy I can't tell you. I don't know what is the matter of me." A sailor got up and said: "My lad, I know the matter of you. You have found Jesu enough to make any man happy."

"His worth if all the nations knew,
Sure the whole earth would love Him t

CHRIST AS A FINAL DELIVERER.

III. I remark again, Christ is precious believer, as a final deliverer. You and after a while get out of this world. H there, one perhaps may come on to eig ninety years of age, but your common-sen you that the next twenty-five years will la majority of this audience in eternity. Th years will thin out a great many of these ly circles. This night may do the work for of us. Now, why do I say this? To scare No; but just as I would stand in your , if I were a business man and you were a ness man, and talk over risks. You do not ider it cowardly to talk in your store over oral risks. Is it base in us this morning to a little while over the risks of the soul, that or eternity?

my congregation death has the last year doing a great deal of work. Where is your r? Where is your mother? Your child? brother? Your sister? Oh, how cruel does seem to be! Will he pluck every flower? he poison every fountain? Will he put on every door-knob? Will he snap every -string? Can I keep nothing? Are there armed weapons with which to go out and nd against him? Give me some keen l, sharpened in God's armory, with which I stab him through. Give me some battle- at I may clutch it, and hew him from hel- o sandal.

ank God, thank God, that he who rideth e pale horse hath more than a match in who rideth on the white horse. St. John the contest, the pawing of the steeds, the the battle-cry, the onset, until the pale came down on his haunches, and his rider e dust, while Christ, the conqueror, with ed voice declared it: "O death, I will be ague; O grave, I will be thy destruction."

HE SEPULCHRE IS A LIGHTED CASTLE

shore of heavenly seas, and sentinel angels up and down at the door to guard it. The nd the dampness of the grave are only the of the white surf of celestial seas, and the reathing of the dying Christian, that you s gasping, is only the long inhalation of r of heaven. O, bless God for what Christ he Christian soul, here and hereafter.

ard a man say, some time ago, that they laugh in heaven. I do not know where he s authority for that. I think they do laugh ven. When victors come home, do we not ? When fortunes are won in a day, do we ugh? After we have been ten or fifteen away from our friends, and we greet them do we not laugh? Yes, we will laugh in . Not hollow laughter, not meaningless er, but a full, round, clear, deep, resonant ak of eternal gladness.

O the glee of that moment when we first see ! I think we will take the first two or years in heaven to look at Jesus; and if, thousand years, there should be a moment the doxology paused, ten thousand souls cry out: "Sing! sing!" and when the s: "What shall we sing?" the answer be: "Jesus! Jesus!"

O you may have all the crowns in heaven; I t care so much about them. You may ll the robes in heaven; I do not care so about them. You may have all the scep- heaven; I do not care so much about You may have all the thrones in heaven; ot care so much about them. But give sus—that is enough heaven for me. O I long to see Thee. Thou "chief among usand, the One altogether lovely."

e may be some in this house who have in, this morning, hardly knowing why ave come. Perhaps it was as in Paul's you have come in to hear what this bab- veth; but I am glad to meet you face to nd to strike hands with you in one ear- alk about your deathless spirit. Do you my friend, that eats. It fades. It dies. You are im- . I see it in the deathless spirit looking m your eye. It is a mighty spirit. It is ortal spirit. It beats against the window cage. I come out to feed it. During t week the world has been trying to feed husks. I come out this morning to feed that bread of which if a man eat he will hunger. What has the world done for you? Has it not bruised you? Has it not betrayed you? Has it not maltreated you? Look me in the eye, immortal man; and tell me if that is not so. And yet, will you trust it? Oh, I wish that you could forget me. the weak and sinful man, that I might vanish from your sight this morning, and that Jesus might come in.

VORLD IS NOT GOOD ENOUGH FOR YOU?

Aye, He comes here this morning to plead for your soul—comes in all covered with the wounds of Calvary. He says: "O, immortal man, I died for thee. I pity thee. I come to save thee. With these hands, torn and crushed, I will lift thee up into pleasures that never die." Who will reject—who will drive Him back?

When Christ was slain on the cross, they had a cross, and they had nails, and they had hammers. You crucify by your sin, O impenitent soul, the Lord Jesus Christ. Here is a cross; but where are the nails? Where are the hammers? "Ah," says some one rejecting Christ—some one sitting in the gallery,

"I WILL FURNISH THE NAILS.

I don't believe in that Jesus. I will furnish the nails." Now we have the nails; who will furnish the hammers? "Ah," says some hard heart, "I will furnish the hammers." Now we have the nails and the hammers. We have no spears; who will furnish the spears? "Ah," says some one long in the habit of sin and rejection of Christ's mercy, "I will furnish them." Now we have all the instruments: the cross, the nails, the hammers, the spears; and the crucifixion goes on. Oh, the darkness! Oh, the pang! Oh, the tears! Oh, the death! "Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world."

Lord Jesus, help that man. He sits far back to-day. He does not like to come forward. He feels strange in a religious assemblage. He thinks perhaps we do not want him. O, Jesus, take that trembling hand. Put Thine ear to that agitated heart and hear how it beats. O, lift the iron gate of that prison-house and let that man go free.

Lord Jesus, help that woman, she is a wanderer. No tears can she weep. See, Lord Jesus, that polluted soul, see that blistered foot. No church for her. No good cheer for her. No hope for her. Lord Jesus, go to that soul. Thou wilt not stone her. Let the red-hot chain, that burns to the bone till the bloody ichor hisses in the heat, snap at Thy touch. Oh, have mercy on Mary Magdalene.

Lord Jesus, help that young man. He took money out of his employer's till. Didst Thou see it? The clerks were all gone. The lights were down. The shutters were up. Didst thou see it? Oh, let him not fall into the pit. Rememberest thou not his mother's prayers. She can pray for him no more. Lord Jesus, touch him on the shoulder. Touch him on the heart. Lord, save that young man.

There are many young men here. I got a letter from one of them who is probably here to-day, and I shall have no other opportunity of answering that letter. You say you believe in me. Oh, do you believe in Jesus? I cannot save you, my dear brother. Christ can. He wants and waits to save you, and He comes to-day to save you. Will you have Him? I do not know what our young men do without Christ—how they get on amid all the temptations and trials to which they are subjected. Oh, young men, come to Christ to-day, and put your soul and your interest for this life and for the next into His keeping.

In olden times, you know, a cup-bearer would bring wine or water to the king, first tasting it himself, showing there was no poison in it, then passing it to the king, who would drink it. The highest honor I ask is that I may be cup-bearer to-day to your soul. I bring you this water of everlasting life. I have been drinking of it. There is no poison in it. It has never done me any harm. It will do you no harm. Oh, drink it, and live forever.

And let that aged man put his head down on the staff, and let that poor widowed soul bury her worried face in her handkerchief, and these little children fold their hands in prayer, while we commend you to Him who was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities: for to you which believe He is precious.

FEET-WASHING.

By Dr. A. J. Gordon.

FATHER SANFORD, our aged Christian neighbor, called at our house on his way home from church, as he often did, to tell us about the sermon. For he was a man who not only had a great relish for the Word of God, but great fondness for communicating to others what he had received himself.

"It was upon feet-washing," he answered, when we inquired, as usual, what his minister preached about. "He did not hold,', he went on to say, "that it was a literal requirement which Christ made when He said, 'If I, then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet ye also ought to wash one another's feet.' Feet-washing was a type of cleansing. The priests ministering in the sanctuary were first sanctified by the sprinkling of blood at the altar. But in passing on, their feet would become defiled, by contact with the floor, and so they washed their feet at the laver. So we are first cleansed by the blood of Christ, once for all. But since our feet are in daily contact with this sinful earth, we have to be cleansed again and again by 'the washing of the Word.'

"And not only so, we have to keep others in this cleansing. We have to confess our own sins, that we may be purified, and we have also to admonish our brethren of their sins, and to pray for them, that they may be purified. So, washing one another's feet means to admonish each other of faults and sins, to correct and cleanse each other by the ministry of the Word of God. This was the substance of our ministers sermon; and though it seemed to me rather new and rather figurative, I think I was blest by it."

Such was the account of the morning sermon, as given by Father Sanford. But the good man is much given to "improvements," so he went on with the following quaint comment: "If washing one another's feet means rebuking and admonishing each other, I thought, How important it is that the water be of just the right temperature.

"Hot water will not do. We pluck away the feet instinctively and instantly if they are plunged into water too hot for them. And they who would reprove others successfully should beware of heat or sharpness or anger. Such reproofs are more likely to do harm than good, to provoke evil rather than prevent it.

"Ice-water will not do. A cool and formal style of rebuke only creates coldness in return. A strain or style of reproof in which the reprover speaks as if he were not a man of like passion, and which betrays, not an affectionate interest in the person reproved so much as a quiet air of satisfaction with self—reproof of this kind will hardly do more than chill and distress.

"Lukewarm water will do. It is bad to drink, but good to wash with. If you give it to one, in preaching, in a tepid and indifferent style of pleading and presiding, he 'will spew it out of his mouth.' But in rebuke it is just the thing. Here we must let our moderation be known to all men. We must rebuke at an even temperature, and then we shall benefit without causing a shudder of dislike or a blush of resentment." This was the old Christian's comment on feet-washing.

Pomare, the Queen of Tahita and Moorea, died last September, in the seventieth year of her age. When she was born, missionaries had just come to the South Sea Islands, but not a single convert had been won to Christ. When Pomare died she had beer many years a faithful Christian, more than 300 islands had become wholly Christianized, and on nearly all the rest Christian workers were making known the Gospel.

ROCHESTER TOWER.

By M. A. Paull.

(Continued from page 407.)

Constance's Grief—Miss Calvert's Sympathy—Mrs. Anerley's Return Home--The Rev. Hermann Ferguson—His History—The Minister and the Young Ladies.

Constance kept guard beside her dead father. A couch had been hurriedly arranged upon the platform, and the empty tabernacle in which William Anerley's soul had dwelt was laid reverently upon it; the loving eyes closed forever, the form fast growing stiff and cold. So they waited, doctor and friends and child, through an hour or two of that solemn evening, waited for the coming of the wife and son. Below, in the narrow street, at costermongers' stalls and butchers' shops, men were busy and noisy with the business of this life. At the gin-shops and beerhouses they were drowning their best instincts, and noblest aspirations in drink. But the Mission Hall was quiet—quiet with the still presence of the dead.

In many a humble Christian house which had been blessed by the Albert Mission the event of the evening, the awfully sudden death of their beloved friend and counsellor, was being discussed with broken voices and tearful eyes. Widows were recounting his goodness to them; parents his kindness to their children; husbands his faithfulness to themselves about the drink plague and the wasteful tobacco; and rough men spoke of his mercy, and his tenderness, and his generosity with a choking in their throats and big sobs that shook their brawny chests.

A cab rattled up through the crowded streets, driving as fast as possible among the encumbrances on every hand; but even the eager traders made way for it, as if they understood its business, and it drew up at the Mission Hall. Hastily a lady and a gentleman, and the worthy man who had summoned them, alighted from it.

"Is he better now?" were the lady's first words, as she hurried tremblingly up the narrow stairs, closely followed by her son Cecil. On the threshold of the hall Miss Calvert met her.

"Dearest Mrs. Anerley," she said, pityingly, "with him 'it is well;' but, oh! for you—how will you bear it?"

Cecil Anerley was entirely overcome at this intelligence. He had not realized the possibility of death. His father had but a few hours before left them apparently in the enjoyment of health, and to find him dead was beyond his most dreaded expectation. Mrs. Anerley would not believe it. "Let me see him," she said; "my voice may rouse him. There must be some mistake. What do the doctors say?"

They led her along the room and up on to the platform, where Constance sat beside her father's body.

And when poor Mrs. Anerley saw the white face and marble brow, and felt the cold hands, she uttered a piercing shriek, and would have fallen, had not Constance, aroused to energy at that sound, caught her in her arms. "Lean upon me, dear mamma; I am going to take care of you now."

Mrs. Anerley suffered Constance to place her in a chair, leaning her aching, throbbing temples against her child's shoulder as she knelt beside her, and gave way to an outburst of terrible grief.

Poor Mrs. Anerley could not think—could not act in the first hour of her sudden bereavement—others must think and act for her. To Constance these earliest hours after her father's death were full of the deepest, most agonizing thoughts she had ever had. It was as if an earthquake had overthrown her life, and revealed to her the worthlessness and folly of all things earthly. Her father dead! Gone from them forever; and the life before her that looks so long to a girl of sixteen must be all lived without him. The pillar of her house had fallen; would the house be ever again fit for human habitation?

Behind these thoughts, embittering and darkening all things, was a phalanx of other thoughts yet blacker, yet more terrible, and the dread she had for herself of that unknown life upon which her father had already entered. To her it was the Great Unknown Land, and awful were its mysteries. She had been rudely parted from the being she loved and honored most of all; and should she thank God for that? And could he reasonably expect her to be thankful and grateful that she was fatherless, that she had been made an orphan and desolate? Yet, oh, how miserably conscious she was that this rebellion of hers against God separated her from her father, whose chief delight was to do God's will! Would it separate her eternally?

Yet God had never tried her father thus. His life had been calmer and brighter than hers, and he had been contented with his lot, which she was not; she had heard him say that few men were more richly blessed than he.

What was that they were saying? Constance roused herself from her meditations to learn some of the common every-day matters of fact that did not concern her, she thought, till suddenly she came into close contact with them. Her father having died in another parish to that in which they lived, his body could not be removed till after the coroner's inquest. It was thought best that Mrs. Anerley should go back to her house very soon—her condition needed the comforts and quiet of her home; and Constance had best accompany her, leaving her brother free to attend to matters that must take place at the Mission Hall, where arrangements would be made.

"And leave papa here?" cried Constance passionately. "Not take him home with us?"

Mrs. Calvert drew her aside. "My dear child," she said in her gentle voice, so full of pity now, "the law forbids that your dear father's body should be removed at present, before the inquiry is made into the cause of his death. Don't make things more difficult for your poor dear mother, Constance; I see she is very much comforted by you. Whatever you feel, dear, hide your feelings for her sake, and you will be blessed for the sacrifice of self. There is your sister, too; remember she does not even know as yet the full extent of her loss. In her delicate state of health this suspense is bad for her."

"The truth will be worse, Miss Calvert," said Constance sadly; "but I thank you for what you have said."

Mrs. Anerley, weeping and sighing hysterically, was led away, and down to the carriage. Constance lingered a few moments behind, alone on the platform. She stooped and kissed the dead lips that had ever, when alive, spoken kind words to her, kind even when they reproved; she arranged the soft wavy hair upon the pale, open brow, and knelt for an instant beside that still form, to cry softly, "God forgive me!" and then with great scalding tears welling up from her heart into her eyes, said piteously, "Come back to us to-morrow, papa!" and was gone. She descended the stairs to the carriage, feeling that she had lived several years since she ascended them with her father earlier in the evening.

Outside the carriage, talking to her mother, who had just entered it, was a gentleman whom she at once recognized. But she had no heart to speak to him now; she only bowed her head as he opened the door of the fly for her to enter.

"You will wait for me one minute, Mrs. Anerley," he said softly; "I will accompany you home."

"Oh, thank you!" said the poor widow. "I shall be so very much obliged to you if you will. You can help us about Emmie; poor darling, she knows nothing certainly yet."

"I am going with you, am I not, mamma?" Constance asked, and hated herself the next moment for her self-importance.

"Yes, dearest child, but Mr. Ferguson will be such a comfort to us. I am sure you will like him to come."

Constance did not answer, save by a rather dreary "Yes, mamma, if you wish it," and then relapsed into silence. Presently the gentl returned to them. He gave directions t driver, and they were driven away. What terminable distance it seemed to Constance was in reality a drive of many miles thr poor streets and good streets—streets tee with life, streets silent almost as a church streets fashionable and frequented, streets mentioned in polite society streets made fc interesting by past history, and streets note at all in any save parish records.

At last they came to the dear home, the in Eglinton Terrace, that had been as an refuge from every annoyance, but was n desolate. Emmie ran out when she hear carriage, and stood in the open doorway top of the steps. The air was sharp and and Constance, in an agony of fear lest a loved should die, ran up to her sister, and her arms about her.

"Go in, go in, darling," she cried; " or we shall have you dead too."

"Dead! Constance!" said the poor girl, ing white even to the lips. "You don't can't mean papa is dead."

Over and over again the wail of agony peated in this poor sorrowing, suffering Emily Anerley's troubled cry was but the in No. 12 Eglinton Terrace, of a grief ever in existence somewhere.

Hermann Ferguson, to whom Mrs. A so naturally turned for comfort in her trouble, was the minister of the church the Anerleys attended, and of which she a late husband were members. Hermann F son was a man who had begun to make his in a northern town by his brilliancy of int and effective utterance, and who had the been invited, while still under thirty ye age, to take the oversight of a metrop flock.

Hermann Ferguson's name was not alto suggestive of brilliancy. We should no urally expect a very great degree of vivacit sparkle from a mixture of German and S and to these races, though not on both si immediate descent, he owed his origin. mother was a blue-eyed woman, by name Hermann; his father an Englishman of S parentage, who had formed Maria's acq ance when he studied at Bonn University. mann Ferguson himself was born at Aix-l pelle, where his parents had lived for th year of their married life.

Mr. Ferguson, senior, was then the ma a large and flourishing academy for boy had destined his eldest son for the sch profession and a reversion of the school. the youth's longing to enter the minist continued sense that he was called by preach the Gospel to men rather than to it to children, overcame the opposing wis his wise parent, and he was permitted pare himself for his future work by going of the colleges of his denomination.

These college days Hermann Ferguson declared were the happiest of his life. T thusiasm for study, the delightful theol arguments with fellow-students, the agr companionship of chosen friends, the pl society to which they were made welcome spected heads of families, the innocent a ments, the hours of determined labor wit and pen, the racy lectures of the professo kindness of the motherly matron and he ingness to shield them from the evil results intentional misadventures—all were dwelt by Hermann Ferguson with interest and d

From a large manufacturing town i North of England, with its princely trade its hard-headed, 'cute-brained artisans, h come to be listened to and criticised by an cratic congregation in London, most of moved in good society, and whose yc members were, some of them, tainted b supposed belief in systems of philosophy they had not brains to understand.

Hermann Ferguson, unappalled by thes vellously clever youths and maidens, had be honest to them—to expose their fallacies arlessly; to bring their false reasoning to the ucible of justice and truth, wherein all lies, hether of thought or action, must be found able to bear the test.

The young minister had loved and respected 'illiam Anerley above most men; their inter- urse had been free and brotherly, unrestrained the difference of age. As one of his deacons, r. Anerley had been a tower of strength to the ung man. His grief at his death was ex- eme; he was trying now to show his affection r his memory by tenderness to his bereaved es.

Like all other young ministers, whether good- oking or otherwise, and especially when hand- me, as Hermann Ferguson undoubtedly was, th a bold, manly, intellectual beauty, he had d to run the gauntlet of at least a dozen and half ladies, old and young, widows and spin- ers, who persistently and perseveringly set eir caps at him. Some young ladies went so as to call him "a duck of a man." "By no eans a flattering or appropriate title," quoth ermann dryly, when he heard of it; "a drake a man" would be better; or a very Draco, rchance, if I could have the punishment of ese foolish girls."

By which it will be seen that the minister was newhat hard-hearted, and had not much sym- thy with feminine sentimentality. He was en cruel enough to groan instead of rejoice at h successive arrival of the many pairs of slip- rs which reached him, delicately wrapped in ver paper, with an outer covering or cover- gs variously and wondrously folded, and finally nscribed in delicate caligraphy, which read us:

"Rev. Hermann Ferguson,
4 Albany Street, Westbourne Road."

n a delightful great cupboard in his bedroom, which his landlady permitted him to take en- e possession, he stowed away the slippers, ich accumulated so much too fast for him to ar out even a sixth part of them that every w and then he sent a pair to his less fortunate others and male friends, and even to a married nister or two, always under a strict promise secrecy never to reveal whence they came.

The attentions of the ladies to their pastor re not even confined to coverings for the feet. r instance, it was excessively embarrassing to finely organized, sensitive fellow like Her- nn to receive a small silver teapot, with F. neatly engraved on the side; and as he de- ted smoking, in utter contempt of his German cestry, the gift of an elaborately-worked cigar- e, filled with prime Havanas, and a gorgeous oking-cap, was, save the cap, a great waste of inine ingenuity and silver. He immolated cigars on his hearth, "that they might not any fellow an injury;" the cap occasionally orned or crowned his head when he took a p; the cigar-case was tossed ignominiously o his great cupboard.

(To be continued.)

oung Men Deciding on a Sphere of Acivity themselves, who may be attracted by am- ous motives to public life, will do well to member that no matter how wise and valuable services they may render to their country, how sincere their efforts in her cause may yet the reward they anticipate may never be oyed. As an illustration of this fact they y consider the present position of several cials of Great Britain. Lord Chelmsford, Sir tle Frere, and Sir A. Layard, who labored their country during one of the severest es in British history, have, without exception, ped failure and unpopularity from efforts nowledged to have been well meant, well ised, and thoroughly patriotic. It is even ted that Sir Garnet Wolseley's arrangements the Cape have made him very unpopular. ly in the service of Christ can the faithful vant safely say, I know that henceforth there aid up for me a crown, etc. (2 Timothy 4 : 8).

PROPHETIC EXPOSITION.*

(Continued from page 407.)

Rev. T. Jones in "The Interpreter"—The Seventh Head a Napoleon—Who are the Witnesses—Rev. J. S. Jackson's Views on the Napoleonic Dynasty.

THE REV. THOMAS JONES, M.A., Rector of Creaton, England, published in 1835, a "Sober View of the Millennium," and in 1836, "The Interpreter," in which he said:

"The Scarlet Woman in Revelation 17, is the Church of Rome, and the seven-headed wild-beast on which she rides is the Roman Empire. The seven heads represent seven mountains on which the city of Rome is built. This is the metropolis of the Roman Empire on which the woman is seated. The seven heads are also stated by the angel to signify seven forms of government.

"Five heads of the wild-beast had fallen when John had the vision. The sixth head fell in 1806, when the Austrian Emperor relinquished the title of Emperor of the Romans.

THE SEVENTH HEAD

is evidently Napoleon Bonaparte, who 'continued but a short space, and received the deadly wound with the sword' at the decisive battle of Waterloo (Rev. 13 : 3). And now he 'is not.' The Roman Empire has no head at present (Rev. 17 : 8–11). But his 'deadly wound shall be healed' in the eighth head which is yet to come. This will be of the seven, probably of the seventh, that is, of the same form of government with that of Bonaparte's.

"The Sixth Vial appears to predict the final overthrow of the Turkish power, represented by the drying up of the waters of the Euphrates, to prepare the way for the overthrow of the ten-horned wild-beast and the false prophet. It is supposed that this vial has already commenced, and that the Turkish Empire will gradually decline, and be finally annihilated by some mighty power, perhaps Russia.

"Popery and Mahomedanism sprang up at nearly the same time, about the year A.D. 606; one in the West, the other in the East. They were predicted in the eleventh chapter of Revelation to distress and persecute the true Christian Church for a period of 1260 years, and then to come to their end, and perish forever. When this period commences can never be exactly ascertained until the prophecy be fulfilled. But it is generally computed that these two Antichristian powers sprung up somewhere about A.D. 606, and ever since then they have trodden under foot the true Church of God, and will continue to do so until the end of the 1260 years.

"The great battle of Armageddon will probably be a succession of many battles, which will terminate in the total overthrow of all Antichristian powers. Agents will be employed everywhere by these powers to gather their armies together at that great day. Three evil spirits or false principles will proceed from the dragon, the devil, and the wild-beast, the Antichristian Roman Empire, and the false prophet, the Papal Church: and will be emissaries to go forth with false doctrines to deceive the nations and gather them to this great battle of God Almighty, where they shall fall to rise no more. This formidable contest will take place about the close of the 1260 years, when the Witnesses shall be slain and remain dead a short time (three years and a half), and then live again, but their enemies shall never see the light (see Revelation 11 : 3 to 13).

"The Witnesses are the ministers and members of the Christian Church who profess and proclaim the true Gospel of Christ, and testify against the abominations of Popery. They are predicted to prophesy in sackcloth during the whole period of the 1260 years: and therefore they are still prophesying, and they have not yet been slain The power which is to slay them, is the wild-beast that arises from the bottomless pit, that is, the Roman Empire in its last form, and the instruments, which he will employ to effect his purposes, will be, it appears, Papists and Infidels.

"The Witnesses are thus to be killed or politically silenced and crushed as Witnesses, about the time that Antichrist approaches his end. But after three years and a half shall have elapsed, the Lord will revive them again, endue them with fresh power from on high to renew their testimony to the great confusion and terror of their enemies, upon whom tremendous judgments will fall. And then a most glorious period will commence for the Christian Church, which will last for a thousand years, and the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of Christ" (Rev. 20).

THE REV. J. S. JACKSON, a Church of England clergyman, foreshowed in his book, "The Millenial Church," in 1831, that the Napoleonic Franco-Italian Emperorship, which perished at Waterloo, would be re-existent by about 1868 in connection with the shaking of the nations accompanying Christ's Second Advent. He said respecting the Wild Beast's Seven Heads:

"The Sixth Head (the Roman Emperorship) continued until the subversion of the Germanic (or Germano-Roman) Empire in 1806; and the Seventh Head, which was only to 'continue a short space' (Rev. 17 : 10) arose immediately in the Franco-Italian Emperorship founded by Napoleon Bonaparte. It was from 1806 to the Battle of Waterloo, in June, 1815; and it then received a deadly wound, and now is not (A.D. 1831), but 'yet is,' or, more properly, yet shall be; it shall again spring up in the revival of the Seventh Head of the Roman Empire, or Wild Beast in its Eighth Form, which is 'of the seven and goeth into perdition.' (See Rev. 17 : 8, 11.)

"The Seventh Head revived corresponds with the Wilful King of Daniel, 'who shall come to his end, and none shall help him' (Dan. 11 : 36-45): also with that 'Lawless One (anomos), whom the Lord shall destroy with the brightness of His coming' (2 Thess. 2 : 8). A few short years may now suffice to prove who this Portentous Being, the revived Seventh Head of the Roman Empire shall be.

"The career of Napoleon Bonaparte, the Seventh Head of the Roman Wild-beast, was a kind of type or representation of the time of greater shaking, and more intense convulsions which await a guilty and suffering world, under the despotism of the Seventh-Revived Head and Last Form of the Infidel Power."

(To be continued.)

Turning the other Cheek.—A Swiss Colporteur entered a three-story house, in which, according to the custom of the country, three different families lived. He was warned not to try the ground floor. However, he went there and was met with an order to leave the house instantly; nevertheless he stayed, urging the man and his wife to buy and read God's Holy Word. The man then rose in a rage and struck him a severe blow on the cheek. Up to that moment the colporteur had stood quietly with his knapsack on his back. He now deliberately unstrapped it, laid it on the table, and turned up the sleeve of his right arm, all the while steadly looking his opponent in the face. The colporteur was a very strong man. Addressing his opponent he said: "Look at my hand, its furrows show that I have worked; feel my muscles, they show that I am fit for work. Look me straight in the face; do I quail before you? Judge then for yourself, if it is fear that moves me to do what I am about to do. In this Book my Master says, 'When they smite you on one cheek, turn to them the other also.' You have smitten me on one cheek, here is the other. Smite! I will not return the blow." The man was thunderstruck. He did not smite, but bought the Book which, under the influence of God's Spirit, works marvels in the human heart.

---

* Extracted from "Coming Wars," by Rev. M. Baxter, in two pamphlets—five cents each by mail. First pamphlet contains "Ten Signs of the End, and Description of Approaching Events," with two maps and four large diagrams. Second pamphlet contains valuable quotations from Forty Expositors on these events. Address, 63 Bible House, New York.

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50
per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to THE MANAGER, CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House New York.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of back numbers to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

Persons requiring single or special copies can obtain them most conveniently through
NEWSDEALERS.
Any complaint that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer is promptly attended to if we are given the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, June 23d, at 12.30 P.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Nomination of General Winfield Scott Hancock of Pennsylvania, as the Democratic candidate for the presidency was effected by the Cincinnati Convention on the second ballot. The first ballot was taken on Wednesday evening June 23d, when nineteen candidates received votes. Of these General Hancock headed the list with 171 votes. Next came Senator Bayard with 153 votes, and then in the following order Payne, Thurman, Field, Morrison, Hendricks, Tilden, and Ewing. The other ten names received less than ten votes each. Mr. Tilden's letter to the New York delegates, declining to be put in nomination, was regarded by many persons as insincere, but it was apparently accepted in good faith by the convention, for on the first ballot only 38 votes were recorded for him. According to the Democratic two-thirds rule, 492 votes are necessary to a choice, and the first ballot therefore was merely an index of the relative strength of the candidates. On Thursday morning a second ballot was taken in which Hancock's vote stood at 320. Before the result was announced the delegates of Wisconsin changed from "scattering" to a solid vote for Hancock. The example was quickly followed by other States, and in the confusion a second roll was called which gave Hancock 705 votes, which, on the motion of Mr. Mack, of Indiana, was made unanimous. As a sign of General Hancock's strength in the country, it was stated by one of the delegates to a reporter, as a fact without precedent, that General Hancock was the second choice of all the supporters of other candidates in the convention. Mr. William H. English, of Indiana, was nominated for the Vice-presidency.

General Hancock is a Native of Montgomery County, Pa., and was born February 24th, 1824. He is consequently little more than fifty six years of age. He comes of a line of soldiers; his great grandfather served under Washington, and both his maternal and paternal grandfathers fought in the Revolutionary War. One of them was captured on the high seas, and was incarcerated until the end of the war in the English prison of Dartmoor. General Hancock's father served in the war of 1812, but was at the time of his son's birth practising as a lawyer in the courts of Montgomery County. It was decided that the boy should have a military training, and accordingly, having completed his rudimentary education in Norristown; his native place, he was entered as a student at West Point. He graduated in 1844, as number eighteen in a class which included Generals Grant, McClellan, Stonewall Jackson, and other men afterward distinguished for service in the field.

His first service was in frontier duty in the Indian Territory, and in 1847 he won his brevet as first lieutenant "for gallant and meritorious conduct" in the Mexican campaign. At the outbreak of the civil war he was at Los Angeles, Cal., acting as quartermaster, and in August 1861 was summoned to Washington. His services during the following campaigns are well known. He was seriously wounded on July 3d, 1863, at the battle of Gettysburg, and for some time his life was despaired of, but in May, 1864, he was again in the field and took an active part in the concluding operations of the war.

After the assassination of President Lincoln he was placed in command of the troops at Washington, and was afterward commissioned as commander of the Fifth Military District, with head-quarters at New Orleans, an appointment he resigned in 1868. In 1872, he was appointed commander of the military division of the Atlantic, with head quarters in New York city, where he has since resided. This appointment, made upon the death of General Meade, was creditable to President Grant, since, unfortunately, he was not on speaking terms with General Hancock.

The nomination has been received by the Democratic party generally with approbation. The fact that the Union soldier will probably find his chief support in the South is regarded as a sign that the campaign will not be fought on sectional issues, but be principally of a political character. Doubt was expressed in some quarters as to the strength of the candidate as opposed to General Garfield, from the fact that, while the Republican candidate had a political and a military training, the record of General Hancock was of a military character only; but with the bulk of the party the feeling is one of entire satisfaction.

Mr. William H. English, the Democratic Candidate for the vice-presidency was born at Lexington, Ind., in August, 1822. He devoted himself with so much diligence to study during his early years that at the age of eighteen he was admitted to the Bar. Having served with credit in several civil appointments, Mr. English was elected in 1851 member of the State Legislature, and though only twenty-nine years of age was chosen Speaker of the House. The following year he was elected to Congress, and was subsequently re-elected three times by increasing majorities, serving until 1861. While he was in Congress, the discussions on the admission of Kansas were agitating the Houses. Mr. English took an active part in the question, and mainly through his efforts "the English Bill" was passed. When the war broke out Mr. English was offered the command of a regiment by Governor Morton, but he declined the offer and retired to private life. With two other gentlemen, Mr. English in 1863 founded the First National Bank of Indianapolis, and until recently occupied the post of president of the bank. He is reported to have amassed a fortune of several million dollars.

A Mysterious Epidemic Broke out in the Town of Adams, Mass., on June 15th, and passed over a belt of country two miles wide. Between fifteen hundred and two thousand people, or fully one fourth of the population, were prostrated by a disease resembling cholera morbus, and from a cause yet unknown, though it is generally attributed to atmospheric influences. About half-past eight that night it rained heavily there, though no rain had fallen in towns six miles away, and the air became suddenly and intensely chilly. A fog seemed to rest over the town, which was described as having an odor like that rising from a damp cellar after it has been closed for a lo time. About ten o'clock people began to l sick. Hardly a family escaped, and in some i stances whole families were sick. Three of tl doctors were rushing from place to place, vain trying to answer their hundreds of calls, whi a fourth doctor was helpless with the prevailir disease. The sickness in most cases laste three or four hours, but did not prove fatal i any case.

Dr. Talmage has Sent by Post a Circular t each of the converts added to his church durin the recent revival, in which he asks the followir questions:

"You have connected yourself with th Brooklyn Tabernacle. What can you; and w you do for Christ's sake?

"1. Will you work in the Sabbath School, the Young People's Association, or in the praye meetings, or in visitation of the sick and poor, in the Tabernacle Temperance Society or in al

"2. Will you belong to one of the twel especial divisions of new members, which w meet once a week, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday nights, and be under the leadership Christian gentlemen selected for that purpos yourself choosing the night of the week mc convenient, and the leader?"

A list of leaders is appended to this questio

Dr. Talmage will meet all the twelve divisio together every few weeks. The object of t divisions will be growth in grace, helpfulness, a sociability.

Dr. Deems had a Narrow Escape from Dea during his European trip. In a squall in t Mediterranean Sea he was washed across t deck of the steamship and carried over the b warks on the opposite side. His foot caught some coiled rope, and he hung over the si until rescued.

Dr. Deems has made brief visits in Londo Paris, and Rome; but his time has been chie spent in the Holy Land, obtaining material for t "Life of Moses," on which he has been f some time engaged. He arrived in New Yor on Sunday morning, the 27th inst., and is e pected to occupy his pulpit next Lord's day. portrait of Dr. Deems, and a sketch of his li appeared in the CHRISTIAN HERALD, Novemb 27th, 1879.

A Daring Rescue from a Burning House w accomplished by a boy only twelve years old June 26th, in New York. A five-story teneme building in Third Avenue, densely populate was found to be on fire early in the mornin The people in the house were busy with th household duties, and in many cases did n hear the cry of fire. As soon as the alarm reach the several floors, they clutched any valuabl they had, and crowded down the staircases.

Oswald Morrissey, the little boy alluded t made his escape, and was soon at the street e trance, when he recollected that the infant ch of a neighbor was asleep in a room on the t floor. Without staying to think of danger, rushed up the stairs through the flame a smoke. He snatched up the sleeping babe, a pressing it to his shoulder, passed through t fire again, down the four flights of stairs to t street. A fireman stood at the door, and the b fell fainting into his arms, his clothes on fi and his back and shoulders burned, but with t babe unhurt. Such a story is not likely to forgotten in the families of the rescuer or t rescued, and may remind them of One who ga His life freely to save from eternal destructi those who come to God by Him.

A new Mode of Checking Drunkenness h been adopted at Medford, Mass. The autho ties have ordered that all persons who ha been convicted of drunkenness during t past six months, and all persons convict thereof in the future shall have their nam posted in every licensed saloon, and the propr tors notified not to sell liquor to them under pe alty of revocation of license. This it is hop will make the rum sellers more cautious in su plying liquor to those who are ruining the selves, and their families by their besetting sin

A National Difficulty has been Caused be reen our government and that of Spain by an tack on a schooner flying the stars and stripes. he schooner was plying between Jamaica and hiladelphia, and belonged to a vessel company the latter place; she was overhauled off e American coast on the 31st of May by a panish man-of-war, and searched for arms sup sed to be intended for the Cuban insurgents. fore the Spaniards got on board two shots ere fired at the schooner, greatly endangering e lives of the crew. Explanations have been manded from Spain by Mr. Evarts.

A Life of Sin and Shame came to a Tragic d in Ohio recently. The drug-stores of Tiffin, hio, were visited on June 6th by a young lady attractive appearance and apparently of a perior station. She purchased at each a small antity of strychnine which she took away with . Having secured sufficient for her purpose dissolved the deadly poison, drank it, and d in a few hours. Some years ago she was a t-hearted merry girl, the beloved daughter fond parents who indulged her every taste. oung man of high social position, to whom was engaged to be married, ruined her and erted her. After this her downward path rapid. At length, overcome by remorse, she ealed to her parents, who had turned her out heir house, to forgive her and take her back; they refused. Unable to bear the upbraid s of conscience longer, she resolved to com suicide, and carried her resolution into ect. This is another of those sad events ch tell in words of solemn warning the les too often unheeded that the way of trans sors is hard. (Prov. 13: 15.)

Destructive Scourge Resembling the An t locust in its ravages has attacked the crops me portions of the State of New Jersey. It alled "the army worm," and it is twenty s since it appeared last. When once the ns attack a wheat, rye, corn, or grass field, do not pass out of it until nothing edible is it. They avoid clear ground, but will strip a vated field quicker than a mowing-machine. instance of the destruction accomplished noted on Wednesday night, June 9th, when worms entered an eight-acre lot, ready for est, and in twenty hours totally destroyed thing upon it.

hat a Wink of the Eye might have Real is told by Mr. James W. King in a contem ry as an instance of official integrity un ed by temptation. A speculator heard that nalgamation between two joint-stock com es was projected, which would afford an op inity to make a large sum of money by pt purchases of shares. He was acquainted an official holding a subordinate and poorly position in one of the companies, and went m to obtain reliable information. But the al was a Christian man and a man of honor, knowing the information would operate to disadvantage of his employers, refused to hether the amalgamation was contemplated t. "I can make $300,000 by my specula f you will tell me," said the tempter, "and I ive you half." "I cannot betray my trust," he reply. "You need not speak," said the lator, "just wink your eye and I shall know, ou shall have $150,000." The temptation ierce, but the Christian conquered it. A ays afterward, when the amalgamation was leted, the speculator reproached his ac tance for not giving the information, but as told that an approving conscience was price. It is satisfactory to learn that the ul official prospered in his subsequent and is now receiving a salary of $25,000 a

A Little Girl's Sufferings in the Court of cery recently affected the hearts of all who ssed them, yet they were powerless to help A wealthy resident of Passaic, N. J., pro a divorce from his wife in this city several s ago, and was awarded the custody of o children. He obtained control of one children at once, but the other—a girl of 13 years—was not given up, and the father instituted legal proceedings to gain possession of her. A return was made to the writ before Vice-Chancellor Van Fleet, at Newark, on June 18th.

The girl begged so earnestly to be permitted to remain with her mother, that every person in the court-room was affected. She told the court that she loved her mother dearly, and that her father had not treated her kindly, and she did not want to go with him. With tears in his eyes the Vice-Chancellor explained to her that he had no discretion in the matter; that his own inclinations would be to let her stay with her mother, but the law would not allow it under the circumstances. He said she could visit her mother sometimes, and as her father was very wealthy, while her mother was almost destitute, she would have pleasanter surroundings with him than with her mother. The devoted child declared that she would be happier with her mother in the deepest poverty than with her father, no matter how wealthy he might be. When the girl got home she sank to the floor in an agony of grief, and has since been prostrated with a raging brain fever, and the physicians give no hope of her recovery. Thus do the innocent suffer for the sins of the guilty.

A Testimonial to Mrs. Hayes.—A Suggestion has been made by the Women's Christian Temperance Union "to the friends of temperance reform throughout the country, irrespective of party, sect, or organization, as to the propriety of uniting in some suitable testimonial in approval of the noble stand taken by Mrs. Hayes in excluding intoxicating beverages from the tables of the Presidential Mansion."

"I Want to be an Angel" is the First Line of a hymn sung in the language of every land where there are Sunday-schools, but though many people love the hymn, few know anything of its writer. Her name was Miss Sydney Gill, and she died in Newark, N. J., on June 12th. She was the daughter of the late Bennington Gill, of Philadelphia. While her father was doing business as a merchant in Birmingham, England, sixty years ago, Miss Gill was born, the youngest of four children. Her childhood was spent in England, but soon the family removed to Philadelphia. There, after her father's death, Miss Gill and her sister conducted a large boarding-school for young ladies. They retired twenty-four years ago, and Miss Gill removed to Newark and took up her residence with her brother-in-law, Dr. Wilson. Her death was unexpected. She had made arrangements to spend the summer at the sea-shore. Miss Gill was closely identified with Newark Protestant charities, having long been secretary of the Female Charitable Society, and being identified with other institutions. She was a member of the Clinton Street Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, of which Rev. Dr. Joel Parker was pastor. One Sunday they had an anniversary celebration, and between the morning and afternoon services Miss Gill wrote the hymn. It was read then for the first time, and afterward published.

An Expensive Citizen.—A Convict was Lately discharged from the Connecticut State Prison, at the age of 19, who had spent his childhood in an almshouse, his youth in a reformatory school, and his early manhood in several prisons. The authorities will try to get him off on a long whaling voyage under a good captain, in the hope that restraint, discipline, and absence from temptation will even now reform him.

Sarah Bernhardt, the Actress who Aroused so much enthusiasm in London last year, is now again playing there, and the aristocracy of England crowd the theatre where she is, to do her honor. Even Mr. Gladstone we much regret to say attended a performance last week and sent her a letter expressing his pleasure and admiration. It is reported that she has accepted an American engagement, but it is to be hoped that a woman who so openly defies the moral sense of the community, as to introduce into the society where she goes her two illegitimate children will not be welcomed here with the enthusiasm which she has met in the Old World.

UNPROFITABLE SERVANTS.

A New Sermon by the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."—Matthew 25 : 30.

"So likewise ye, when ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do."—Luke 17 : 10.

"His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant."—Matthew 25 : 21.

The Path Narrow as a Razor's Edge—I. The Verdict of Justice—1. The Unprofitable Man was a Servant—Licensed Loiterers—2. He Thought Ill of his Master—Pleasures Outside the Church—A Dissatisfied Servant had better Leave—3. He did not Think himself Unprofitable—4. What he Did and what he Did Not Do—He did not Use his Talent for Himself—Nor Squander it—A Lazy Schoolboy—5. The Man Condemned—A Dreadful Wage—II. The Verdict of Self-abasement—A Cruel Letter—How is it Possible to Profit God—Service Due as a Debt—All Work Unprofitable because Imperfect—III. The Verdict of Grace—"The Well Done" Given to Faithfulness—Sovereign Grace—A Cardinal's Dying Prayer.

There is a narrow path between indifference and morbid sensibility. Some men seem to feel no holy anxiety: they place their Master's talent in the earth, leave it there, and take their pleasure and their ease without a moment's compunction. Others profess to be so anxious to be right that they come to the conclusion that they can never be so, and fall under a horror of God, viewing His service as a drudgery, and Himself as a hard master, though probably they never say so. Between these two lines there is a path, narrow as a razor's edge, which only the grace of God can enable us to trace.

THE RIGHT WAY

usually lies between two extremes: it is the narrow channel between the rock and the whirlpool. There is a sacred way which runs between self-congratulation and despondency, a very difficult track to find, and very hard to keep. There are great perils in the consciousness that you have done well, and that you are serving God with all your might; for you may come to think that you are a deserving person, worthy to rank among the princes of Israel. The danger of being puffed up can hardly be overestimated: a dizzy head soon brings a fall. But perhaps equally to be dreaded on the other side is that sense of unworthiness which paralyzes all exertion, making you feel that you are incapable of anything that is great or good. Under this impulse have men fled from the service of God into a life of solitude; they felt that they could not behave valiantly in the battle of life, and therefore they fled from the field before the fight began, to become hermits or monks; as if it were possible to do the Lord's perfect will by doing nothing at all, and to discharge the duties to which they were born by an unnatural mode of existence.

Blessed is that man who finds the strait and narrow way between high thoughts of self and hard thoughts of God, between self-esteem and a timid shrinking from all effort. My desire is that the Spirit of God may guide our minds into the golden mean where holy graces blend, and the contending vices, equally natural to our evil hearts, are all excluded. May the Spirit of God bless our three texts, so that we may be put right, and then by infinite mercy may be kept right until the great day of account.

Let us read Matthew 25 : 30.

"And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

I. In this our first text we have

THE VERDICT OF JUSTICE

upon the man who did not use his talent. The man is here styled an "unprofitable servant" because he was slothful, useless, worthless. He did not bring his master interest for his money, nor render him any sincere service. He did not faithfully discharge the trust reposed in him as his fellow-servants did.

1. Notice, first, that this unprofitable person was a servant. He never denied that he was a servant; in fact, it was by his position as a servant that he became possessed of his one talent, and to that possession he never demurred. This man acknowledged that he was a servant even to the last; and though he was impertinent and impudent enough to express a most wicked and slanderous opinion about his master, yet he neither denied his own position as a servant, nor the fact that his talent was his lord's, for he said, "Lo, there thou hast that is thine." In thus speaking he went rather further than some professing Christians do, for they live as if Christianity were all eating the fat and drinking the sweet and not serving at all; as if religion had many privileges but no precepts, and as if, when men were saved, they became

LICENSED LOITERERS,

to whom it is a matter of honor to magnify free grace by standing all the day idle in the market-place. Alas, I know some who never do a hand's turn for Christ, and yet call him Master and Lord. Ill will it fare with them at His coming.

2. This man, though a servant, thought ill of his master, and disliked his service: he said, "I knew thee that thou art an hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strawed." Certain professors who have stolen into the church are of the same mind: they dare not say that they regret their having joined the church, and yet they so act that all may conclude that if it could be undone they would not do the like again. They do not find pleasure in the service of God, but continue to pursue its routine as a matter of habit or a hard obligation.

This unprofitable servant looked upon his master as one that reaped where he never sowed, and used the rake to gather together what he had never scattered: he meant that he was a hard, exacting, and unjust person, whom it was difficult to please. He judged his lord to be one who expected more of his servants than he had any right to look for, and he had such a hatred of his unjust conduct that he resolved to tell him to his face what he thought of him.

This spirit may readily creep over the minds of professors; I fear it is brooding over many even now, for they are not content with Christ. If they want pleasure they go outside the church to get it: their joys are not within the circle of which Christ is the centre. Their religion is their labor, not their delight; their God is their dread, not their joy. They do not delight themselves in the Lord, and therefore He does not give them the desire of their hearts, and so they grow more and more discontented. Devotion is a dreary engagement to them; they wish that they could escape from it with an easy conscience. They do not say as much to their secret selves: But you can read between the lines these words, "What a weariness it is."

It is no wonder when things come to this pass that a professor becomes an unprofitable servant; for who can do a work well which he hates to do? Forced service is not desirable. God wants not slaves to grace His throne. A servant who is not pleased with his situation had better leave; if he is not content with his master he had better find another, for their mutual relationship will be unpleasant and unprofitable. When it comes to this, that you and I are discontented with our God, and dissatisfied with His work, we had better look out for another lord, if any such will have us, for we shall certainly be uprofitable to the Lord Jesus from our want of love to him.

3. Note next that, albeit this man was doing nothing for his master, he did not think himself an unprofitable servant. He exhibited no self-depreciation, no humbling, no contrition. He was as bold as brass, and said unblushingly, "Lo, there thou hast that is thine." He came before his master with no apologies or excuses. He did not join with those who have done all, and then say, "We are unprofitable servants;" for he felt that he had dealt with his lord as the justice of the case deserved; indeed, instead of acknowledging any fault he turned to accusing his lord.

It is even so with false professors. They have no idea that they are hypocrites, the thought does not cross their minds. They have no notion that they are unfaithful. Hint at it, and see how they will defend themselves. If they are not living as they ought to do, they claim to be pitied rather than blamed; the blame lies with Providence; it is the fault of circumstances: it is the fault of anybody but themselves.

They have taken the trouble to dig in the earth and hide their talent, and they as good as ask, What more do you want? Is God so exacting as to expect me to bring more to Him than He gave me? I am as grateful and prayerful as God makes me—what more will He require?

4. It should give rise to much searching of heart when we notice

WHAT THIS UNPROFITABLE SERVANT DID,

or, rather, what he did not do. He carefully deposited his capital where no one was able to find it and steal it; and there was an end of his service. We ought to observe that he did not spend that talent upon himself, or use it in business for his own benefit. He was not a thief, nor in any way a misappropriator of moneys placed under his charge. In this he excels many who profess to be the servants of God, and yet live to themselves only. What little talent they have is used in their own business, and never upon their Lord's concerns. They have the power of getting money, but their money is not made for Christ; such an idea never occurs to them. Their efforts are all for themselves, or—to use other words to express the same thing—for their families.

A professing Christian may toil till he becomes a rich man, an alderman in the city, a Lord Mayor, a member of Parliament, a millionaire; but what does that prove? Why, that he could work and did work well for himself; and if all this while he has done little or nothing for Christ, he is all the more condemned by his own success: if he had worked for his Lord as he worked for himself, what might he not have accomplished? The unprofitable servant in the parable was not so bad as that: and yet he was cast into outer darkness. What then will become of some of you?

Furthermore, the wicked servant did not go and misspend his talent: he did not waste it in self-indulgence and wickedness as the prodigal son did, who spent his substance in riotous living. Oh, no; he was a much better man than that. He would not waste a halfpenny; he was all for saving and running no risks. The talent was as he received it, only wrapped up in a napkin and hidden in the earth—put into a bank, in fact, but a bank which gave no interest. He never touched a penny of it for a feast or a revel, and therefore could not be accused of being a spendthrift with his lord's money; in all which he was superior to those who yield their strength to sin, and use their abilities to gratify the guilty passions of themselves and others.

I grieve to add that some who call themselves servants of Christ lay out their strength to undermine the gospel they profess to teach; they speak against the holy name by which they are named, and thus they use their talent against their Master. This man did not do so; he was bad enough in heart for anything, but he had never openly become so base a traitor. He never employed learning in order to raise needless doubts, or to resist the plain doctrines of the Word of God; this has been reserved for divines of these latter days—days which produce monsters unknown to less educated times.

His lord called this servant "wicked." Is it, then, a wicked thing to be unprofitable? Surely wickedness must mean some positive action. No. Not to do right is to be wicked; not to live for Christ is to be wicked; not to be of use in the world is to be wicked; not to bring glory to the name of the Lord is to be wicked to be slothful is to be wicked. It is clear tha there are many wicked people in the world wh would not like to be called so. "Wicked an slothful:" these are the two words which ar riveted together by the Lord Jesus, whos speech is always wise. A schoolboy was aske by his master "What are you doing, John? He was called up, and thought to be quite cle by saying, but his master answered, "That is the ve thing for which I called you out, for you oug to have been doing the lesson which I set you. It will be no excuse at the last for you to cr "I was doing nothing, sir!" He who do nothing is a "wicked and slothful servant."

"I WAS DOING NOTHING, SIR;"

5. This man was condemned to outer darknes Notice this:

HE WAS CONDEMNED

to be as he was, for hell, in one light, may described as the great Captain's saying, "As y were." "He that is unjust, let him be unju still; and he that is filthy, let him be filt still." In another world there is permanen of character: enduring holiness is heaven, co tinual evil is hell. This man was outside of t family of his lord. He thought his lord a ha master, and so proved that he had no love him, and that he was not really one of h household. He was outside in heart, and his lord said to him, "Remain outside."

Besides that, he was in the dark: he h wrong notions of his master; for his lord w not an austere and hard man, he did not gath where he had not strawed, nor reap where had not sown. Therefore his lord said, "Y are wilfully in the dark: abide there in the dar ness which is outside." This man was enviou he could not endure his master's prosperity: gnashed his teeth at the thought of it. He w sentenced to continue in that mind, and so gnash his teeth forever.

What must it be to be forever outside t family of God! Never to be God's child! F ever in the dark! Never to see the light holy knowledge, and purity, and hope! F ever to gnash one's teeth with painful conten and abhorrence of God, whom to hate is he O for grace to be made to love Him, whom love is heaven. The unprofitable servant ha dreadful wage to take when his master reckon with him, but who can say that he had not w earned it? He had the due reward of his dee

I must now call your attention to the sec text: "So likewise ye, when ye shall h done all those things which are comman you, say, We are unprofitable servants: have done that which was our duty to do." Luke 17: 10.

II. This is,

THE VERDICT OF SELF-ABASEMENT,

given forth from the heart of servants who h laboriously discharged the full work of the d This is a part of a parable intended to reb all notions of self-importance and human me When a servant has been ploughing or feed cattle, his master does not say to him, " down, and I will wait upon you, for I am dee in your debt." No, his master bids him p pare the evening meal and wait upon him. services are due, and therefore his master d not praise him as if he were a wonder an hero. Neither are we to boast of our servi but think little of them, confessing that we unprofitable servants.

A CRUEL LETTER.

Whatever of pain may have been caused the first part of the discourse, I trust it will o prepare us the more deeply to enter into spirit of our second text. Both these texts graven on my heart as with an iron pen, b merciless wound inflicted when I was too fe to bear it. When I was exceedingly ill in South of France, and deeply depressed in sp —so deeply depressed and so sick and ill th scarce knew how to live—one of those malici persons who commonly haunt all public m and especially ministers, sent me anonymou a letter, openly directed to "That unprofitable servant C. H. Spurgeon." This letter contained tracts directed to the enemies of the Lord Jesus, with passages marked and underlined, with notes applying them to myself.

How many Rabshekahs have in their day written to me! Ordinarily I read them with the patience which comes of use, and they go to light the fire. I do not look for exemption from this annoyance, nor do I usually feel it hard to bear, but in the hour when my spirits were depressed, and I was in terrible pain, this reviling letter cut me to the quick. I turned upon my bed and asked, Am I, then, an unprofitable servant?

I grieved exceedingly, and could not lift up my head, or find rest. I reviewed my life, and saw its infirmities and imperfections, but knew not how to put my case till this second text came to my relief, and answered as the verdict of my bruised heart. I said to myself, "I hope I am not an unprofitable servant in the sense in which this person intends to call me so; but I am assuredly so in the other sense." I cast myself upon my Lord and Master once again with a deeper sense of the meaning of the text than I had felt before: His atoning sacrifice revived me, and in humble faith I found rest.

By the way, I wonder that any human being hould find pleasure in trying to inflict pain upon those who are sick and depressed; yet are here persons who delight to do so. Surely, if here are no evil spirits down below, there are ome up above, and the servants of the Lord esus receive painful proofs of their activity. Let me, then, if you have felt any pain from the rst text, lead you to the point at which I per onally arrived when at last I could thank God or that letter, and feel that it was salutary edicine to my spirit.

In the first place, in what way can we have rofited God? Eliphaz has well said, he that is wise may be profitable unto him lf? How can we dream of putting the Eternal debt to us?

CAN A MAN BE PROFITABLE UNTO GOD.

Dear brethren, we ought to recollect that hatever service we have been able to render has n a matter of debt. I hope our morality is t fallen so low that we take credit to ourselves r paying our debts. I do not find men in busi ss priding themselves and saying, "I paid a ousand pounds this morning to such an one." Well, did you give it to him?" "Oh, no; it s all owing to him." Is that any great thing? ave we come to such a low state of spiritual rals that we think we have done a great deal en we give to God His due? When we have rsevered in the hard work of ploughing till no ld is left untilled, when we have done the asanter work of feeding the sheep, and when have finished by spreading the table of com nion for our Lord: when we have done all have done no more than was our duty to ve done. Why boast we, then, or cry for a charge, or look for thanks?

Over and above this there is the sad reflection t, alas, in all we have done we have been un fitable through being imperfect. In the ughing there have been balks, in the feed of the cattle there have been harshness and getfulness, in the spreading of the table the nds have been unworthy of such a Lord as serve. Can any of you look back upon your vice of your Lord with satisfaction? If you . I cannot say I envy you, for I do not sym hize with you in the least degree, but trem for your safety.

s for myself, I am compelled to say with mn truthfulness that I am not content with thing I have ever done. I have half wished ive my life over again, but now I regret that proud heart allowed me so to wish, since probabilities are that I should do worse the ond time. Whatever grace has done for me knowledge with deep gratitude; but so far have done anything myself I beg pardon for it.

pray God to forgive my prayers, for they have been full of fault: I beseech Him to forgive even this confession, for it is not as humble as it ought to be; I beseech Him to wash my tears and purge my devotions, and to baptize me into a true burial with my Saviour, that I may be quite forgotten in myself, and only remembered in Him.

Once more, we cannot congratulate ourselves at all, even if we have had success in our Lord's work, since for all that we have done we are indebted to our Lord's abundant grace. If we had done all our duty, we should not have done anything if His grace had not enabled us to do it. Of thine own have we given unto thee, great God! So far as anything has been worth Thine accepting, it was Thine own beforehand. Hence the best are still unprofitable servants.

If we have special cause of regret because of some evident error, we shall be wise to go in a lowly spirit and confess the fault, and then go on doing the work of each day in a plodding, hopeful spirit. Whenever you get distressed because you cannot do what you would; whenever you see the faultiness of your own service, and condemn yourself for it, the best thing is to go and do something more in the strength of the Lord. If you have not served Jesus well up to now, go and do better. If you make a blunder, do not tell everybody, and say that you will never try again, but do two good things to make up for the failure. Say, "My blessed Lord and Master shall not be more a loser by me than I can help. I will not so much fret over the past as amend the present and wake up for the future."

Have courage: you are not serving a hard Master after all; and though you very properly call yourself an unprofitable servant, be of good cheer, for a gentler verdict shall be pronounced upon you ere long. You are not your own judge either for good or ill; another judge is at the door, and when He cometh He will think better of you than your self-abasement permits you to think of yourself: He will judge you by the rule of grace and not by law, and He will end all that dread which comes of a legal spirit and hovers over you with vampire wings.

Thus I have brought you to the third text.

"His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant."—Matthew 25 : 21.

III. I shall not try to preach upon that cheering word, but shall only say a word or two upon it. It is much too grand a text to be treated upon at the end of a sermon. We find the Lord saying to those who had used their talents industriously, "Well done, good and faithful servant." This is

THE VERDICT OF GRACE.

Blessed is the man who shall own himself to be an unfaithful servant; and blessed is the man to whom his lord shall say, "Thou good and faithful servant."

Observe here that the "Well done" of the Master is given to faithfulness. It is not, "Well done, thou good and brilliant servant;" for perhaps the man never shone at all in the eyes of those who appreciate glare and glitter. It is not, "Well done, thou great and distinguished servant;" for it is possible that he was never known beyond his native village. He conscientiously did his best with his "few things," and never wasted an opportunity for doing good, and thus he proved himself faithful.

It is better to be faithful in the infant-school than to be unfaithful in a noble class of young men. Better to be faithful in a hamlet over two or three score of people, than to be unfaithful in a great city parish, with thousands perishing in consequence. Better to be faithful in a cottage meeting, speaking of Christ crucified to half a hundred villagers, than to be unfaithful in a great building where thousands congregate. I pray you be faithful in laying out all that you are and have for God. As long as you live, whatever faults you have, be not half-hearted or double-minded, but be faithful in intent and desire. This is the point of the Judge's praise—the servant's faithfulness.

This verdict was given of sovereign grace. The reward was not according to the work, for the servant had been "faithful in a few things," but he was made "ruler over many things." The verdict itself is not after the rule of works, but according to the law of grace. If he shall ever say, "Well done" to you and to me, it will be because of his own rich grace, and not because of our merits. And, indeed, this is where we must all come and where we must all keep; for the idea that we have any personal merit will soon make us find fault with our Master, and His service, as being austere and hard.

I have sometimes admired how men who have denied the doctrine of salvation by grace, as a matter of theology, have, nevertheless, admitted it in their devotions. They have entered into controversy against it, and yet unconsciously they believed it. An extreme case is that of who was one of the most inveterate enemies of the Reformation, and a renowned antagonist of the teaching of Martin Luther.

CARDINAL BELLARMINE,

It is reported, and I believe on excellent authority, that this great man, who had all his life long been crying up salvation by works, when dying, breathed a prayer in Latin, the translation of which would be something like this: "I beseech God, who weighs not our merits, but graciously pardons our offences, that He would receive me among His saints and His elect."

Is Saul also among the prophets? Does Bellarmine at the last pray like a Calvanist? Such a case makes one hope that many others may be saved in an apostate church. Thank God, many are a great deal better than their creed, and in their hearts believe what, as polemical theologians, they deny.

Lastly, brethren, with what infinite delight will Jesus fill our hearts if, through divine grace, we are happy enough to hear him say, "Well done, good and faithful servant." Oh, if we shall hold on to the end despite the temptations of Satan, and the weakness of our nature, and all the entanglements of the world, and keep our garments unspotted from the world, preaching Christ according to our measure of ability, and winning souls for Him, what an honor it will be! What bliss for Him to say, "Well done." The music of these two words will have heaven in them to us.

Mind, however, that you are those who are doing all and are faithful. I hear some people speak against self-righteousness, to whom I would say, "You need not say much about that matter, for it does not concern you, since you have no righteousness to be proud of." I hear persons speak against salvation by good works who are in no danger of falling into that error, since good works and their lives have long parted company.

What I do admire is to see a man like Paul, who lived for Jesus, and was ready to die for Him, yet saying at the close of his life, "But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ." Go on, brothers, and think not of resting till your day's work is done. Serve God with all your might. Do more than the Pharisees, who hope to be saved by their zeal. Do more than your brethren expect of you, and then, when you have done all, lay it at your Redeemer's feet with this confession, "I am an unprofitable servant." It is to those who blend faithfulness with humility and ardor with self-abasement that Jesus will say, "Well done, good and faithful servant: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

[PORTION OF SCRIPTURE READ BEFORE SERMON —Matthew 25 : 46.]

[The prayers of the readers of this Journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors in America and England, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and for its weekly circulation of more than 175,000 copies to be blessed by the Holy Spirit to the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Talmage especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

A HAPPY HOME; OR, JUST FOR FUN.

A Temperance Story.

"HURRAH! hurrah! our school has broken up for the holidays, and here come some of the pieces!" shouted Dick Martin, rushing into the room, followed by his two brothers, and up went three caps spinning to the ceiling, and when they were caught, up they went again with another shout which made the room ring again.

But let me introduce you to the parents of these wild young madcaps, who are thorough English boys to the very back-bone—lighthearted, open-hearted, kindly disposed, and generous, yet free and impulsive to a degree. While they are putting away their caps and books, and settling themselves down to the tea-table, at which father and mother are already seated, suppose I tell you the secret of the comfort and happiness that gladden the hearts of all within this pretty cottage home. There sits Richard in his flannel jacket, with little Mary on his knee, his wife meanwhile busying herself with those pleasure-giving little duties known as "getting the tea."

The sweetest picture of all in this domestic scene is Richard's wife, Mary, who, in her neat evening dress, is, as before remarked, getting the tea ready. There is something about her gentle, quiet manner that seems to pervade the whole room, imparting a charm to all she touches. Everything appears to be better in some way from her hands having been connected with it. She is one of those quiet, tender, womanly souls, who are able to make their presence felt wherever they go. But I promised to tell you the secret concerning this happy family, and in as few words as possible I will keep my promise. Richard was a cabinet-maker, one of the most skilful of his class, and five years before my story opens, if you had asked me to show you the most wretched hovel in the village of Strawgate, I should have said, "Come along, then, and I'll take you to see Richard Martin." Of course the cause of all this could be found without searching far. Go to the public-house nearest Dick's hovel, and there you are face to face with the one great temptation that proved more than a match for poor Richard; consequently he had to succumb, and soon became one of the most inveterate drunkards for miles around.

No one could get Dick Martin to sign the pledge. Others in the village signed from time to time, and became sober men, but no one had ever been able to make any impression upon Richard. The master for whom he worked would have given almost anything if he could have induced him to reform. All the early part of the week he spent in drinking; then, during the two or three days left, he would keep sober, and earn as much as his shopmates who had worked all the week.

Among Richard's fellow-workmen there was a shrewd, steady-going teetotaler, called Tom Foster, who had been instrumental in saving many from the demon Drink, and, as may be imagined, had tried every plan he could devise to rescue Richard, but without success. One day Mr. Shaw, Tom's master, a man with a heart full of kindly feeling and consideration for others, said to Tom, "Foster, you have done a good work here among your fellow-workmen, for there is many a happy home now in Strawgate that owes all its comforts to you. Now can't you persuade Martin to be a teetotaler? I have just had to refuse a very lucrative job (work of a kind that I could not intrust to any one but Martin) because I knew that, through his drinking habits, it would never be done by the time wanted. Now look, Tom; it wants a month to Christmas, and if you can get Richard to sign the pledge, and keep it till New Year's Day, I'll make your wife a present of a silk dress."

"I have had many a try, sir," said Tom, "and I'll try again harder than ever, not so much for the dress, but for the sake of Richard and his poor family, who would often starve but for us." And Tom left his master's office and wended his way home, trying, as he walked along, to devise some plan by which he could induce his companion to sign the pledge. He had not proceeded far on his way before he met Richard.

"Good evening, Dick," said Tom; "you are just the very man I want."

"Am I?" stammered Dick, trying to pass on, for he was always a bit ashamed to face his teetotal shopmate.

"Stop, stop!" said Tom, detaining him by the arm. "Now listen to me a moment. You have it in your power to do me a great kindness, and I know you are not the man to refuse, for you have said many times that if you could ever do me a good turn you would."

"Ah, and I will too," said Dick earnestly; "for you and your missis have been good to me and mine many a time. But I can't make out in what way such a worthless fellow as I can be of service to you, for I'm no good to myself nor any one else. But, no matter, I'll do it, if it's in my power," said Dick, with emphasis, not dreaming for one moment what was required of him.

"I knew you would, for you are a good-hearted fellow, in spite of your imperfections," said Tom. "Just come in here," he continued, leading the way into a coffee-shop which happened to be near, "and I'll tell you all about it."

Tom called for two cups of coffee, and when they were brought, said, as he pushed one of them towards Dick,

"Drink that, lad, and listen to me. I have been married seven years next month, and during all that time one of the ambitious desires of my wife has been to have a black silk dress. Less than half an hour ago Mr. Shaw and I were talking about you. Master was saying what a clever fellow you were at your trade, and that if you would only give up drinking it would please him so much he would give anything in reason—in fact, he went so far as to say, 'Tom, if you can get Dick to sign the pledge, I'll give your wife a new black silk dress for New Year's Day.' There! now the secret's out; you can't refuse that, so here's the book," he continued, taking it from his jacket pocket. "Down with your name at once," and, without waiting for a reply, he pushed the pen and ink, which happened to be on the table, toward him as he spoke.

"Done!" said Dick. "I'll do it—just for fun!"

Nothing more was said on either side, so for a few moments the awkward scratching of Dick's pen was the only sound that broke the silence. The next minute Dick's name and address were sprawled across the paper in large, clumsily formed letters, that might have been read from the opposite end of the room.

"There!" said Dick, throwing down the pen with the air of a man who had done something desperate; "but it's only for a time, mind—just for fun!"

"Thanks," said Tom. "I knew you would do it to oblige me," and, closing the book, he rose to depart, anxious to hurry away, in case Dick might change his mind. "You are just the good sort of fellow I always took you to be. And on New Year's Day you shall come to my house to dinner, bring the missis and the children, and we'll have a jolly, happy day together; and you shall see my wife in her new silk dress—your present. Good-by." And shaking Dick heartily by the hand he departed, leaving his shopmate almost stunned with astonishment; for it had all happened so suddenly he could hardly believe it true.

As Dick wended his way home his mind lapsed into such a state of sullen gloom he almost overturned a poor pedler who chanced to come in his way.

"Ah, drink, drink again!" muttered the old man, as he gazed at Dick's retreating figure staggering down the road. "I should have been a rich man years ago if it had not been for the cursed drink."

Dick kept plodding on, stumbling at every step, for he was in a bad humor; he felt quite angry with himself to think that, in a semi-drunken moment of good-tempered weakness, he had done that which he had so firmly resolved never to do. In this dissatisfied condition of mind he at last reached his wretched dwelling, much to the surprise of his wife, who was wearily working away with her needle, that she might add a trifle to the small pittance Dick brought home every Saturday night; for nearly all that he earned at the end of the week had to go to pay for what he drank at the beginning. Without saying a word to his wife, Dick sat down on an old box—for they hadn't a chair in the place—took off his boots, and, flinging them with savage force to the opposite end of the room, slipped off his seat into the corner upon a nondescript heap of old rags—the nearest approach to a bed they could afford—and was soon fast asleep.

(To be concluded.)

SIN AND MERCY.

A Sermon by the Rev. W. Morley Punshon, LL.D.

(Concluded from page 413.)

"I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins."—ISAIAH, 44 : 22.

II. Matchless Mercy—The great Bible Theme—The last Stamp of the Signet-ring—The First Stoop of Divinity—The Sufficiency of the Salvation—No Barrier to Salvation—The Sinner Within the Pale—The Rainbow in the Cloud.

BRETHREN, this is the Scriptural estimate—not mine—this is the Scriptural estimate of the morality that is without godliness. Upon the fairest, loveliest, and most blameless specimen of that morality Christ looks and says—"I know that you have not the love of God within you;" and it is just because of this one fact that every mouth must be stopped, and all the world counted guilty before God.

Brethren, I do account it a satisfaction, among the manifold unworthinesses of my ministerial life, that I have ever kept this inviolate, and that on this matter the trumpet from my lips has given no uncertain sound. I insist upon it, as indispensable to the minister of Christ, that he should set forth the guilt—the personal guilt and the personal danger of every member of his charge; that he should proclaim war to the grave as long as sin lords it in undisputed ascendency over the human soul—care corroding the delights of the sinner, sorrow smiting upon his path, anxiety crossing his transactions, remorse lashing him through the earth like a doomed and stricken spirit, as long as he is led captive by the devil at his will.

NO PEACE AS LONG AS THERE IS NO GODLINESS;

This is just the place to which I wish to bring you at the finishing of the first head of this discourse—not that they are sinners who dwell in the far-off regions of heathenism—oh! how easy it is to acknowledge that—not that they are sinners who crowd the hulks for punishment, or who breathe in prisons the foul and pestilent air; not that they are sinners who join in the drunkard's revels, or frequent the harlot's haunts; but that you—that you, with abundant light, with many appliances, with matchless privileges, with a striving spirit, with a loving Son, with a long-suffering Father, with the light of many Sabbaths, with the voice of many teachers sounding in your ears—that you are sinners before God, that between you and that heaven to which you would fain some day get, there is a chasm, so awful and so infinite, that nothing but the Divinity can bridge it over, that upon you there is gathering an amount of wrath and of wretchedness which nothing but the blood of the heaven descended Saviour can effectually wash away.

II. Well, now, if that were all, it would be indeed a melancholy message that I had to bring in your hearing to-day, but I now come to the second thought—

THERE IS MATCHLESS MERCY.

"I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins."

It might seem strange, it does seem strange, that after this declaration of apostasy and of impenitence the prophet should not have gone away after pronouncing sentence of doom. We might have supposed that his very heaviest thunders would have been launched out against the transgressors, that when he spoke of sin as a cloud he would have gone away without leaving any hope of mercy. Is not God a just God? Is He not angry with the wicked every day? Are not His perfections united to oppose sin wherever it is found? Do not sins of enormity and of aggravation expose to a terrible punishment?

And yet when the voice does speak it is not the voice of vengeance, but of mercy. The whirlwind passes over us, but the Lord is not in the whirlwind; the earthquake comes, but the Lord is not in the earthquake; the fire burns fiercely, but the Lord is not in the fire; and after the whirlwind has spent its force, and after the rocking earth is still, and after the fire has ceased to burn, there whispers the still small voice, and as we listen we hear it as it speaks, "I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins."

Premising—which we have no time to prove to-night, if, indeed, proof were necessary, premising that this method of reconciliation must provide, somehow, for the purity of God, and of the vindication of the honor of His throne, and that all has come about by the atonement, the accepted atonement, of Jesus, we proceed to observe upon this God of mercy. That the character of God as the God of mercy is

THE GREAT BIBLE THEME.

Why, the whole tale of the Bible is a tale of grace. Every promise distils it; it is the bur-len of every prophet's message, and of every poet's song; evangelists lived only to point out ts wonders; apostles preached only to unfold ts precious meaning.

The last words of the Bible—oh, I never can orget this!—the last words of the Bible, after it was finally closed—ay, finally closed, as a complete and authoritative revelation—the last words f the Bible are words of grace—as if the angel ngered to utter them, as if he uttered them st in order that they might make the deepest npression upon the mind; as if the former con-ext of the Bible were made valid by the last amp of the signet-ring, "The Spirit and the ride say, Come, and let him that heareth say, ome, and let him that is athirst come, and hosoever will, let him take the water of life eely."

I said sin was everywhere; so is grace. Where n hath abounded, there grace doth much more bound, and like the rich music of some ever-resent and majestic river, it goes rippling on st the habitations of every man, never ceasing its flow, never drying up, never freezing over, ntinually bearing its musical message to the r and to the heart of the world. This is the ee, the repeated, the everlasting testimony of e Word—"As by the offence of one judgment me upon all men to condemnation: even so by e righteousness of one, the free gift came on all men unto justification of life."

This gift of grace, you remember, was not own in the world until the entrance of sin. here had been many attributes of God before; ere had been His power before; there had en His righteousness before; there had been s goodness before; but grace was, so to eak, a new idea, a new fountain struck out of e heart of the Deity. There was power in the ndrous creation of the universe, in the fiat of e word which bade all things be, and they re; there was righteousness and there was sdom, in the administration by which the unise was adjusted, and by which all things were ot in their order; there was goodness, pure, ential goodness, in the love of God to Adam fallen; but there was no grace until there was s.

There was no room for grace in a universe ere there was no room for sin; but, just as d always puts together, when sin came into the world, grace came into the world, and as soon as man had bereft himself of every love compelling quality, and had become alien and degraded, and desolate, and prostrate, and trampled, then it was that God opened the Divine nature to let out the fulness of the love which should recover and which should redeem him. All former manifestations of God had been ascents—ascents to higher, and higher, and still higher elevations; this was the first stoop of the Divinity; this was to show, not how high Divine love could climb, but how deeply Divine love could come down that it might snatch from the dunghill and from the grave those who had sinned, and that it might uplift them with the Divine favor. "Oh, the depths of the riches, both of the wisdom and of the mercy of God!"

THE POISON AND THE ANTIDOTE

I announce it now, and I rejoice to announce it as an indisputable fact, that God can be just and yet the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus. Christ died for you! Christ died for you all. The everlasting Son of the everlasting Father became the weary babe in the manger at Bethlehem, became the homeless traveller along the journey of life, became the saddened victim in the Garden of Gethsemane, became the spotless sacrifice upon the accursed tree; and the declarations of Scripture which announce that by that sacrifice salvation has been purchased, are both explicit and numerous. The Saviour comes, and as He points to His wounds He addresses His message to you, "This is my blood of the New Testament, shed for you and for many, for the remission of sins." "Be it known unto you"—it is announced formally as a royal proclamation—"Be it known unto you that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins." "Unto Him that hath loved us"—that is the song of the redeemed, and they are never tired of singing it—"Unto Him that hath loved us, and washed us from our sins in His own blood, to Him be glory and dominion forever and ever."

Brethren, it is on the cross of Christ that the law is magnified, and the bargain is sealed, and holiness glories in its most illustrious radiance. The cross is the fulness of love; the cross is the security of peace; the cross is the pledge of salvation; and the application of the blood of Jesus, not its intellectual apprehension, but the application of the blood of Jesus, secures pardon, and holiness, and heaven. I do rejoice that these statements are so frank and so clear, and I put them before you now. I address you all. There is no need of painful lacerations, no need of cruel penances, no need of costly works, no need of piled-up sacrifices, in order to purchase your salvation. Broad and long upon your hearts I would write the old, old Gospel-message—"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house."

There is mercy, and, oh, I want you to look at

THE SUFFICIENCY

with which this salvation is invested. As aggravated as your sins have been, so abundant is the mercy of the Lord. Now, brethren, consider; I speak to you all in good faith; I offer you all salvation, through Christ Jesus, if you will but repent and believe. I need not trim my phrase; I need not beware of my words, because the thought steals over me as I speak that some of you have no power to obey the summons which I give. I am charged by my Master with the deliverance of one simple Gospel-message, and I will not blaspheme the honor of the God I serve by supposing that He has given any one of you a command which He has deprived you of the power to obey.

Brethren, out upon all dishonoring manifestations of the character of the God we serve; out upon all perversions of the all-mighty and all-merciful truth as it is in Jesus! I do indignantly protest against any teaching which would hang the fetters of an everlasting malice upon the cross of my Saviour, and I tell you—I tell you with a frank and fearless outspokenness which knows no apprehension or misgiving—that to your own present and eternal salvation except the barrier which your own hands have piled. There is mercy for you.

THERE IS NO BARRIER

Do you want proofs of it? Search the Bible through from the beginning to the end, you find frequent, explicit, and continual declarations of the Word. If you are not a sinner, then, indeed, I do not know of a salvation for you, unless from the first moment of your existence to the last you can keep the commandments of God without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing. If you are not a sinner, there may be some fear that you are out of the pale of the Gospel redemption, for Christ died for sinners; but if you are a sinner, not all the morbid ingenuity of human unbelief, and not all the sophistry of the old demon of the pit, can prevent you from entering, if you will, into the charter of liberty wherewith Christ waits to make His people free.

And what are you, I wonder, that you should be excluded from the pale of the Gospel salvation? You may tell your own tale if you will; surely, if you are penitent you will make it black enough against yourself; you may state your own case if you will. You have been neglecters of the great salvation, have you? Invitation after invitation has fallen upon you unheeded. You have broken loose from the restraints of a father's counsel, and from the tenderness of a mother's care, and they are both gone—both gone; and before the gray hairs had time to come upon them your wickedness drove them to the grave. You have asked long since for your portion of goods, and have wasted your substance in the far-off land in riotous and in prodigal living. You have trampled upon Gospel privileges; you have been a dark blasphemer; you have been a terrible drunkard; you have been sadly licentious; you have been awfully selfish; you have been profane in your thoughts as well as in your words; and all your life up till now, though sometimes you have had to trample on many hindrances, all your life up to the present has been spent in rebellion against God.

Well, what then? I wait for more. Imagine crime on crime; add enormity to enormity; heap up aggravation and aggravation, "like Alps on Alps arise;" go to the extremest verge of possibility in guilt; stand upon the mouth of the pit; listen to the tramping of demon feet, and feel already round you the claspings of the spiral wreaths of flame: I do not care. "Let the wicked man forsake his ways." Can you hear that? If you are within the sound of my voice, of the redemption of Jesus. If you are within sound of any Gospel ministry, you are within the pale of the redemption of Jesus—"Let the wicked man forsake his ways, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and He will have mercy upon him, and unto our God, for He will abundantly pardon."

YOU ARE WITHIN THE PALE

They are, undoubtedly, terrible sins, those sins of yours; they are very vile; they are very frowning; they are very colossal; they are very Titanic:

> "But though your sins as mountains rise,
> And swell and reach to heaven;
> Yet mercy is above the skies,
> And they all may be forgiven."

It is a dark cloud, but on its bosom there is planted the rainbow, belting the heavens with its hues of beauty, spanning with its brilliant arch the darkest destiny of man, tinting with a strange gladness the cheek of hot despair, resting upon the wrath of the world as a beautiful covenant of peace.

Oh, there is rest for you in Jesus, and if you will but come now, with all the burden of your sins upon you, and clasp the cross, you may expect the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls. There is mercy: mercy for the vilest, mercy for all, mercy for you; and God waits now that He may say to each conscience here, "I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins."

May God grant you all mercy! Amen.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 414.)

A Blighted Life.

Two days and nights passed by before Charles Clifford regained his full consciousness. He knew nothing of the lapse of time. There was neither memory nor foresight stirring in his brain. A dark gulf of two lost days, like broken links out of a chain, separated his past life from the future.

When he came to himself he lay for a while perfectly still, making no effort to move. There was profound silence around him, and the room was lighted by a lamp which he could not see. It seemed only an hour or two, and surely he had fallen asleep somehow during the interval since he had been drinking with old Squire Symons, and laughing over the trick they had played upon Julia, when they had together forced the rusty lock of the old wine-cellar, the key of which she had carried away in her pocket. They had been as merry over it as boys.

But Charles's mind was awake, and had awakened from its long stupor with fully its natural vigor. How was it then that he had so clear an impression of inviting old Squire Symons to go back with him to Clifford, and fetch Julia home? He could recollect distinctly how he and the white-headed, stooping old man had gone down to the beach and set sail, Squire Symons taking the helm. He could actually see him again seated in the stern of the boat, and hear him swearing at the chilly wind. How was it then that he came to be lying in Squire Symons's bed? This was his bedroom; he knew it well enough to recognize the place he was in.

He could only answer the question by coming to the conclusion that he had drunk more of the old wine they had found in the cellar than he had intended; and that he had never left Rockwood at all. He was vexed with himself; more vexed than usual, for he knew he might have done Squire Symons a mischief; possibly have led him into a dangerous excess, in Julia's absence. He had been lying quite still until this moment, but now he wished to draw the curtain which screened the head of the bed.

But how was this? His muscles no longer instinctively obeyed his will. He could move his arms and turn his head from side to side on his pillow; but no other movement seemed possible to him. He made a second effort, and a third, bringing into play all the force of his will, and all the nervous power he possessed; but he could not stir himself. He lay like a log. There was no longer the usual correspondence between his will and the heavy framework of bone and flesh which formed its prison. He could not understand it, or believe it.

It was a queer thing, he thought, to put him into Squire Symons's own room. After all, it would be best to turn over a new leaf, and give up these dangerous indulgences. He knew what he would do—get the bishop to find another living for Britton, and persuade Ernest to come back to Clifford Vicarage. If Ernest and Ruth were living near to him, "by George!" he could, and he would, keep himself straight.

The nightmare must be over, or he could not reason so clearly. Who ever heard of a man forming schemes of reformation like these, when under the effects of a nightmare? He would get up now. But though the veins in his temples grew swollen, and drops of perspiration started to his forehead, with the vehement efforts and the secret dread that was stealing over him, he could not bestir himself and rise from the bed. What was the matter with him? He groaned aloud, as he asked himself this question.

In an instant he heard a footstep cross the room, and Julia looked down on him nervously. She was dressed like a nurse, in a simple cotton gown, and her hair was tucked away under a white cap. Her face was pale and full of care and sorrow. She looked very unlike the Julia he was used to see.

"Am I ill?" he asked in sudden terror. She nodded silently; and he could see the tears glistening in her eyes.

"What is the matter?" he inquired; "I feel as heavy as a log; I cannot move myself. What on earth ails me?"

"You've had an accident and are hurt," answered Julia; "you musn't try to move yourself."

"An accident!" he repeated; "hurt!"

Then with a vivid flash of memory there came back to his brain the terrible moment when he was struggling with the drunken old man at the helm while the jagged reef of rock was lying right across their track and the breeze was blowing his little boat upon it. He could hear again the sharp ripping of the planks as the boat struck on a point, and the splitting of the slender mast; and he felt himself struggling in the sea. That was the last thing he could remember; but he was on the sea then, and it was evening. What was the time now? and how was it he found himself safe, and in Squire Symons's bed?

"Julia," he said, in an awe-stricken tone, "where is your husband?"

"Never mind now," she answered sadly.

"He was lost!" he exclaimed; "he was quite beside himself. I know he was lost."

The tears fell fast from Julia's eyes, and she turned from the bedside to wipe them away, out of Clifford's sight. Her husband was in every sense lost; even the poor drowned body had not been recovered, to be buried among his ancestors.

"Julia!" Charles called again.

"I'm here," she answered.

"When did it happen?" he asked.

"That was Tuesday evening," she said, "and we're in the middle of Thursday night. I'm sittin' up with you, and Uncle Dunnit is in the next room."

"Does Ernest know, and Ruth?" he inquired.

"Master Ernest sat up with you all last night," she replied, "and Dr. Welsh, and a physician from London. The London physician couldn't stay any longer, and he said it was no use him stayin'."

"Am I much hurt?" asked Charles with intense anxiety. "Tell me the truth, Julia. I must know the truth. What is it makes me feel as if I could not move a limb? I might be made of stone. Is it a very bad accident?"

Julia had come back again, and was looking down on him, with a strange look of deep, unutterable pity in her black eyes. Her lips trembled as she spoke, and her voice faltered.

"Master Charles," she said, "wait till Master Ernest's here to tell you. He's gone back to London to tell Miss Ruth; nobody else could tell her how her poor father died. Try to think of God, and go to sleep."

"Think of God?" he repeated. "Do you think that would help me to sleep? There's no sleep in me now. Who could go to sleep if they were like me, and could not move a limb? Tell me all about it, Julia."

"I couldn't," she sobbed; "my husband was drowned, and lost altogether; and I can never, never speak kind to him again, nor him to me. I wish I'd only known! Wait till Master Ernest comes back to-morrow."

"I cannot wait," he cried in an agony; "go and send old Dunnit to me."

Dunnit came, and stood beside him as Julia had done, looking down on him with the same expression of deep pity, while Charles's eager questioning eyes scanned his face. He did not ask old Dunnit to tell him the truth; the truth would come from his lips, whether he wished to hearken to it or no. He could not run away from it now, as he had done in old times.

"What is it, Dunnit?" he asked.

"Must I tell you all, Master Charles?" he said.

"Yes!" he answered, though the word was formed by his parched lips rather than uttered by his voice. He held out his hand, and the old fisherman clasped it betwen both his own, and fell down on his knees beside the bed.

"Oh! dear Lord, dear Lord!" he cried, "I know thou loves us every one, as if we were little young children playin' around thy footstool. It is thy footstool, Lord. All this green earth and fields and woods; ay! and the troubled sea. All about thy footstool we're sufferin', and toilin' and lovin', and livin' and dyin'; and thou sees us, and loves us all. The mother watches her little babes playin' at her feet, and wilt thou not see us, dear Lord? Ay! and if the children fret, and quarrel, and hurt each other, the mother does not drive 'em away wi' anger from their safe hidin'-place at her feet. And wilt thou drive thy sinful children away from thee? We are far from thinkin' that of Thee, dear Lord.

"And now we lift up our eyes to Thy face, and we call to Thee. We know thou knows what to do. There's one has died on Thy footstool, drowned in th' sea; and one that's stricken down in his full strength and youth; but spared to live a while longer. Oh! help him to put his trust in Thee! Thou art always good and lovin' and wise; and Thy ways are higher than our ways. Oh! give us strength; give us patience; give us faith in Thee. We seem to feel Thee very near to us, Lord. We have only to wait a little while, and Thou'lt lift us up from Thy feet into Thy bosom."

Old Dunnit's voice ceased, but Charles did not open his eyes. He was passing through an agony of dread. There was a terrible solemnity to him in the old man's prayer, in its simple words, and its broken accents.

"Tell me all," he murmured at last; "what is it?"

"The doctors say you'll never be able to get about again," he answered pitifully; "it's the back that's hurt. Your head's all right, and your mind clear; but you'll be a cripple for life. We found you lyin' near the rock the sea had tossed you on, after you had nearly swum ashore. But you're not goin' to die, thank God! you'll live many a year yet. You'd have died for certain if Julia and me hadn't been sent to save you. Squire Symons was gone in an instant of time. There's been depths of mercy shown to you, Master Charles."

"To be a cripple for life!" he moaned, turning his face to the wall, and feeling, in the act of movement, how utterly helpless he lay. It seemed to him as if it would have been better to have been killed outright. He was a burden to himself. To have no power over his own limbs; to be bedridden; to be nothing but a living log, while the world was going on with all its interests and pleasures, and he taking no part in them, though he was still in the world. Would it not have been better to have stepped over the boundary at once, and seen what lies on the other side of the great mystery of death?

But the choice was not given to him, whethe he would die or live. We may long for death, and rejoice exceedingly when we can find th grave; but still life may be given to us, and th sun rise, and the darkness come for us, swingin us from day to night, and from night to day, i spite of all the bitterness of soul and anguish o body which make the burden of living all bu unbearable. (See Rev. 9 : 6.)

Charles Clifford lived to feel this. His merr life was over, but it was not to be a short one Even while he loathed it, he could not but car for it, and obey the rules by which it could b prolonged. He was compelled to cherish hi miserable existence more carefully than he ha done, while it was still full of vigor and th power of enjoyment. Henceforth his chief worl in the world would be simply to keep himsel alive.

(To be continued.)

Russia is Fortifying her Western Frontie bordering on Germany, with feverish haste, and a enormous cost. Kowno and Lenczyca are wax ing into strongholds of extraordinary dimension and strength. Kowno is destined to serve a once as the basis of operations against Eas Prussia, and as the rallying point for resistanc against any German invasion from that prov ince. A large number of gigantic preparation for a western war are to be completed by 188

THE FALL AND THE PROMISE.

S. S. Lesson for July 11th, Gen. 3 : 1-15. Golden Text, Rom. 5 : 12. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

OUR golden text tells us that "by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." We are about to consider the grievous history of the first entrance of that principle into our world, which has brought in its train all which is included in shame and sorrow, misery and death. Let us approach with no critical minds, but with bowed hearts, in humble but deep gratitude, if indeed the death which has passed upon all men, and therefore upon us, has for us lost its terror, because Jesus, through death, destroyed him that had the power of death, and delivered them who through fear of death were subject to bondage (Heb. 2 : 14, 15).

Our subject teaches us that "the serpent"—"that old serpent, called the devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world" (Rev. 12 : 9)—"was more subtle than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made, and he saith unto the woman, Yea, hath God said," etc. He came to the woman, the weaker one, and suggested a doubt as to what God had said. God had given man dominion "over every living thing" (Gen. 1 : 28), and Eve's first false step was that of listening to an inferior. "Sin shall not have dominion over you," says Paul by the Holy Ghost (Rom. 6 : 14), but when we listen, or give any attention to suggestions of sin, we are half way toward falling under its dominion. The second false step was that of answering the wicked one. Eve said, "We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden : but of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die."

Once having gained her ear, the tempter becomes bold, and unhesitatingly gives God the lie, for he says, "Ye shall not surely die ; for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened ; and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil."

"Ye shall be as gods" was the inducement held out. Adam and Eve knew none but God; no doubt there lay in their hearts a holy ambition to resemble God. One way lay before them—the path of obedience and trust, the confidence that God knew best, and that He would satisfy this ambition by conforming them more and more to Him in whose image they were created. Another way, which seemed to be a short cut, now lay before Eve, but in order to take it she must leave the path of obedience and trust in God, which had been holy, happy, and honorable.

She made a third false step. With ears and voice she had been occupied with temptation and the tempter ; next her eyes were engaged. It was now but a short step to the consummation of sin. "And when the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise, she took of the fruit thereof and did eat, and gave also unto her husband, and he did eat." She did not take God into consideration, and probably it was the first time she had failed to do so since she was created. All sin comes from self-consideration. "When lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin" (James 1 : 15) ; if the enticement comes and meets with a will fully subject to God, with desires bent on pleasing Him and not self, there is nothing in which the temptation can find conception, and thus sin cannot be brought forth. The woman gave sin to "the lust of the flesh," for she saw that the tree was good for food. Although there was plenty of unforbidden fruit all round, she went to "the lust of the eyes," for she saw that it was "pleasant to the eyes," and she opened the door of her hitherto pure heart to "the pride of life" when she saw that it was a tree to be desired to make one wise" (1 John 2 : 16).

And in all this she forgot God's will and His interests, and thought only of her own. Poor blind Eve! she had yet to learn how she misunderstood her Father's heart when she thought that He could withhold any good thing from them that walk uprightly (Ps. 84 : 11). Her first impulse was to give of the fruit to her husband, and he did eat. He may have argued: God's threat is not carried out, Eve is not dead, and if I eat of the fruit I can be only in the same case as she is. Thus he yielded, and by him "sin came upon all men." All which was noble and upright in man was fallen. No sooner had Eve disobeyed than she considered her husband as little as she had considered her God. Had anything of nobility remained, she would have said, "I have sinned, I will bear the consequences, but I will not involve Adam in my ruin!" Alas! she had let self take the upper hand, and now she was its slave.

At once effects of the fall begin to work. "The eyes of them both were opened, and they knew that they were naked," and so they sew fig-leaves together to hide from one another, and they take refuge behind the trees of the garden that they may hide from God. Where all is pure there is nothing to hide, nothing to conceal. When a man is walking before God he does not need to hide himself under a cover of self-righteousness or self-justification ; he is glad that his faults may be perceived that they may be corrected ; it is sin which brings concealment ; righteousness is pure, transparent, simple. It was a sad moment when Adam and Eve heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden in the cool of the day, and they "hid themselves from the presence of the Lord among the trees of the garden. And the Lord God called unto Adam, and said unto him, Where art thou?"

Where was he? Hidden away from God. Where art thou, reader? Art thou in Christ hidden from thyself and from the devil, in Him, or art thou hidden away from God, in thyself, and in sin? Where art thou? Adam answered, "I heard Thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid because I was naked, and I hid myself." Yes, he was naked; his innermost thoughts lay open and exposed ; he had covered his body with the fig-leaves, but the nakedness of his guilty conscience lay exposed before the holy eye of God, and he shrunk from the gaze. "Who told thee thou wast naked?" God said, "Hast thou eaten of the tree whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldst not eat?" And the man said, "The woman whom Thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat." What a wound for the heart of God! The man whom he had pronounced "very good" (Gen. 1 : 31), and who had rejoiced in communion with Him, now sought to hide away from Him, excused himself on the score of his nakedness instead of his sin, and then laid blame on the woman who was God's special gift to him. "God hath made man upright ; but they have sought out many inventions" (Ecc. 7 : 29).

This total want of uprightness from the moment of man's fall, this dishonorable shirking of responsibility—oh, how it is transmitted from father to son ; how this heritage of shame has clung to our fallen nature! Only they who live the life of Christ, even among converted souls, are free from this degrading principle which comes from the father of lies. It entered with sin into our first parents, it remains with sin in the nature of all their descendants. When the Lord "said unto the woman, What is this that thou hast done?" she answered, "The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat." It is as though Adam would say, "I should not have hid from Thee except Thou hadst made me naked. I should not have eaten of the fruit except Thou hadst given me the woman ;" and she, "I should not have sinned except Thou hadst created the serpent." And thus all confidence between them and God was at an end, and there was bitterness instead ; yes, they knew evil now, but, alas! they were not as God.

In the midst of His sorrow—for it must have been bitter grief to the heart of God to see the distrust of Him, and the confidence which had been placed in His great enemy by our first parents—God manifests that love which the Lord Jesus proclaimed to Nicodemus (John 3 : 16), "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." He had questioned Adam and Eve, but He puts no question to the serpent. He pronounces only a curse upon him, and then says, "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed ; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." Thus, before the darkness of night had gathered over the first sad day of sin, our Father gave the promise of a Saviour. So great, so tender is the love of God. But sin must be recognized, and thus we read that He said unto the woman, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception : in sorrow shalt thou bring forth children ; and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee."

"And unto Adam He said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it ; cursed is the ground for thy sake ; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life ; thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee ; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field ; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground, for out of it wast thou taken : for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Labor was not the curse ; this was ordained beforehand when Adam was to dress the garden and keep it (Gen. 2 : 15). But the curse was the thorns and the thistles, the difficulties and hindrances, the pricks, etc. In the New Jerusalem "His servants shall serve Him," but "there shall be no more curse." Idleness, not labor, is a curse.

We read (ver. 21), "Unto Adam also and to his wife did the Lord God make coats of skins, and clothed them." Whether God taught them anything about sacrifice, and whether the animals whose skins they wore were thus a type of Christ, we are not told, but God's covering was better than theirs. "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper" (Prov. 28 : 13) ; man's covering is but fig-leaves. But blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered" (Ps. 32) with God's covering, the righteousness of Christ. Oh, how blessed it is that although "by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men for that all have sinned," yet God's great remedy lies also open unto all who will, for Jesus Christ by the grace of God tasted death for every man, and "Whosoever will let him come and take of the water of life freely" (Heb. 4 : 9 ; Rev. 22 : 17).

After the fall we see how the Lord God said, "Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil : and now lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever ; therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden," etc. Was it that immortality in his then fallen condition would have been an endless curse? We find the promise of the tree of life to him that overcomes (Rev. 2 : 7) ; "And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony ; and they loved not their lives unto the death" (Rev. 12 : 11) ; and the tree of life, once forbidden, is become the heritage of those who obey their God (Rev. 22 : 14.)

Hindoo Women, Throughout the British Indian Empire of two hundred million people, are still painfully secluded and downtrodden. Several Zenana missionary societies are maintained by different denominations for visiting the female apartments in houses, which men are not permitted to enter. The Baptists have twenty-seven lady visitors and forty-six native teachers and Bible-women, who visit about seven hundred women in Zenanas. In Calcutta women of good position are seldom met in the streets or public meetings, and then are closely veiled. In Cyprus and all Mohammaden countries they occupy a similar inferior position.

FOREIGN TOPICS.

The Atheist Member of Parliament, Mr. Bradlaugh, has occupied the attention of the British legislators to the exclusion of other matters during the past week. A determined effort has been made by the Conservative party to prevent his taking his seat. Mr. John Bright strongly advocated Mr. Bradlaugh's admission in a bitter but powerful speech. He administered a severe rebuke to those aristocratic members of Parliament who are theoretically orthodox, but practically irreligious, by saying that "the working classes would not be influenced by the religious cry, and would support Mr. Bradlaugh, because the lower classes do not believe any more in the Christian dogmas than the upper classes in their practice."

Finally a division was taken, when 230 members voted for Mr. Bradlaugh to be admitted, and 275 against his admission; he was consequently informed that he would not be allowed to take his seat. Mr. Bradlaugh thereupon insisted on his right, and, becoming disorderly, was taken into custody and locked up in the clock tower of the House, but after one day's imprisonment was released. An effort will be made by his friends to reverse the decision of the House.

It is probable that he will finally be admitted. Many members who sincerely regret that any constituency should have elected such a man to represent it, and shrink from association with him, yet feel that the will of the people must be respected, and whoever they choose, must be received on that principle.

An Amnesty Bill for the Pardon of the French communists now in exile as a punishment for crimes committed during the period of disorder which followed the fall of the empire, has passed the Chamber of Deputies, and been sent to the Senate. According to a document published by the Gaulois, over half the communists waiting to be amnestied have been, at various periods of their careers, condemned for offences against the common law. It is unpleasant to contemplate the return of 400 rogues and vagabonds, but the political expediency of pardoning them appears to have influenced the leaders of the republic. They believe that the communists will do less harm to the stability of the republic when released than their continued incarceration now does in making the government unpopular with the masses.

The International Conference at Berlin has concluded its labors, and decided on a frontier line between Turkey and Greece which gives to Greece a considerable accession of territory.

The ambassadors will report to their respective governments, and the powers will dispatch an identical note to the Porte announcing the decision of the conference. It is believed that the conference so thoroughly considered the subject and the harmony is so complete, that it will be unnecessary to take special executive steps for carrying its decisions into effect. Turkey is beginning to abandon its attitude of proud, apathetic indifference, affecting to caution the Conference as to the dangerous length it evidently means to go. But as the proposal adopted originated with England, and was approved by France, the two nations most friendly to Turkey, she will probably accede to the arrangement.

The Atalanta appears to have been Unsafe in the estimation of British sailors, and some have called her a floating coffin. The Plover gunboat arrived at Spithead lately, bringing home five ordinary seamen of the Atalanta, they having been left behind in the West Indies. One of them, M'Cormick, said he never liked the ship, which pitched and rolled terribly. No matter what the weather was, they were always shipping water. If the Atalanta was struck by a sea in a gale she would go down on her side with a lurch, and remain in that condition sometimes for five minutes, the sea washing her decks. She was too top-heavy to right herself. Another of the five men, named Westlake, says when there was anything of a breeze, the Atalanta would keel over terribly, and when she gave a sudden lurch, one would think she had gone altogether. He never liked a vessel so little as he did the Atalanta. Captain Stirling seemed to be always on deck. The men speak in the highest terms of him. The other three made corroborative statements.

The Late Empress of Russia was Interred on June 8th, with the customary solemnities. A procession of 5000 persons moved slowly along the left bank of the river Neva. The funeral car was a magnificent gilded carriage, with a canopy of white and gold. The bier was carried into the cathedral by the emperor and his sons, and deposited on the catafalque. During the service which followed, the emperor and the grand-dukes kissed the lips of the empress, while the others present kissed her hand. The metropolitan bishop finally presented earth on a silver plate, which the emperor and others sprinkled with a miniature gold shovel on the tomb. A discharge of cannon concluded the formalities. If the emperor had shown the lady a little more kindness during her life she would have been a happier woman. Imposing funeral ceremonies do not atone for the neglect of a lifetime.

Even Spain, the Country most Intensely Roman Catholic of all European nations, does not seem anxious to receive the French Jesuits. The following official announcement has been made, and cannot be considered a cordial invitation. "The government having received many petitions from religious orders about to be expelled from France, has issued a circular to the civil authorities declaring that no order, college, or religious establishment will be permitted in any province near the French frontier, and in the rest of the peninsula only after due authorization from the government, and after their petitions and motives have been investigated."

The British Campaign in Afghanistan is virtually concluded. General Donald Stewart has received orders to withdraw his forces with the least possible delay compatible with the health of the troops. It is desired that Cabul should be evacuated by British soldiers not later than October 31st. Orders have also been given for the return to India of the surplus staff, and the stores and ammunition which may not be required. It is believed that Gandamak and the Shurtargardan Pass will be the extreme points remaining in British occupation. And these passes will be fortified and garrisoned by British troops as a precaution against future troubles arising from the Afghans.

Gen. Valentine Baker, the English Cavalry officer, who has, since his dismissal from the British army for gross immorality, been in the service of the Sultan of Turkey, is mentioned in connection with mission work in Asia. He has been appointed by the Sultan as the head of a commission to examine the condition of affairs in Asia Minor. He recently spent nine days in Harpoot, and while there examined into the workings of Armenia College. Subsequently he wrote to Rev. Dr. Barnum, the American Board's missionary: "I cannot leave Harpoot without sending you a small offering in aid of your admirable institution, and I inclose a check for ten liras ($44)." Thus Gen. Baker, in laboring for the improvement of the Turkish provinces, recognizes how valuable an aid is furnished to that work by Christian missions, and Gen. Baker is not a man likely to place a higher estimate on them than they deserve.

A King in the Pulpit. A Missionary Journal says: "We do not often hear of kings occupying Christian pulpits, but recently King Eyo of Old Calabar, on the coast of Guinea, West Africa, supplied the place of the United Presbyterian missionary in his absence."

Lumps of Coal an Unanswerable Antidote to infidelity. At a lecture in the British mining district by Mr. Bradlaugh, the lecturer, according to his custom, challenged any person in his audience to reply to his observations. A rough-looking miner immediately rose, and in his peculiar provincial dialect said, "Maister Bradlaugh, me and my mate Jim were both Methodys, till one of these infidel chaps cam' this way. Jim turned infidel, and used to badger me abou tending prayer-meetings; but one day, in pit, a large cob of coal came down upon J head. Jim thought he was killed, and, ah m but he did holler and cry to God.'" Then t ing to Mr. Bradlaugh—with a knowing look said: "Young man, there's now't like cob coal for knocking infidelity out of a man!"

A British Legislator's Nightmare.—Du the recent debate on the opium trade in House of Commons, a new member rather rally fell asleep and dreamed. It must have a troubled dream, however; for presently resounded through the still lobbies agon cries of "Help! help! murder! murder!" eral members rushed forward to the slumbe legislator, and woke him up. He refused several minutes to believe that he was n imminent peril, and continued to cry and s gle. A glass of cold water sprinkled upon head, however recalled him to his senses he went off denouncing the tightness of his lar and the soporific tendency of Mr. Pe motion. An English journal remarks in nection with this incident, "There are, u tunately, other members of Parliament qui fast asleep in regard to the promotion of social and moral reforms."

The Chinese Tract Society Recently Hel second anniversary at Shanghai. The Ch version of the hymn "From Greenland's mountains" was sung with powerful earnes on the part of those who lifted their voic join in it. The Rev. Bau Tsih-Dzae said t religion is ever to be carried to the multitud China it must be through the 14,000 or 1 native Christians resident in various parts empire. Although the spoken dialects of are widely different, one written language vails throughout the empire, and is unders in all the eighteen provinces. This make work of the Tract Society particularly p cable. The society has forty trustees, h whom are natives, the other half being mis aries of various denominations.

The Building of Mr. Spurgeon's Girls' Or age is announced to commence immedi The cost of houses and schools for 250 chi will be $25,000.

It transpires that the £25,000 left by Tyson, late of Upper Norwood, for the Stoc Orphanage, is subject to nine annuities, that a quarter of a century will elapse befo whole of the money can be realized on beh that institution.

It further appears that the residue of Tyson's estate, which was to be given Pastor's College, will be lost to that institu this clause of the will having been inserted in twelve months of the testator's death, is contrary to English law in cases where institutions are concerned.

The Wesleyan Chapel in City Road, Lo founded by John Wesley, which was par destroyed by fire in December last, has restored, and was reopened on Sunday, Jun

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watc (London) for June may be obtained at the office CHRISTIAN HERALD. Price six cents.

The Second Volume of the Christian H comprising Nos. 37 to 62 (July to Dec., 187 be procured, elegantly bound in cloth, at this Price $1.75.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works are o at the office of the CHRISTIAN HERALD, at p low as to bring them within the reach of eve Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with pho of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Plou Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth, 60 The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volume sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, a h cal exposition of the book of Psalms, five vols. as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon's Birthda This popular gift-book contains a suitable selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for ev in the year, with a blank space opposite fo graphs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. Sp appear at their respective birthdays. The b elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cents. tances should accompany orders.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

ublished at 63 Bible House, New York City, and 2 Ivy Lane, London. Edited in London by the Rev. M. Baxter, in New York by Mr. B. Aitken.

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. ALMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also occasionally a Sermon by the Rev. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL.D., the celebrated Methodist Minister, Rev. W. M AY AITKEN, or some other Eminent Preacher; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Single Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, JULY 8, 1880. 14th Year. No. 28—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

ORTRAIT OF REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D., of Brooklyn, with Sketch of his Life.

OO LATE FOR RANSOM. An Evening Sermon by Dr. Talmage.

HAPPY HOME; or, Just for Fun. A Temperance Story (Concluded).—Matt the Idiot Boy.

OCHESTER TOWER. A New Serial Story by Miss M. A. Paull (Continued).

PROPHETIC EXPOSITION. Compiled by Rev. M. Baxter—A Brahmin's Testimony.

CURRENT EVENTS: Opening of the Campaign—President Hayes at Yale—Another Appalling Steamboat Disaster—The Gift of a Church—A Christian Minister in the Narragansett Disaster—An Army Officer in the Inebriate Asylum, etc.

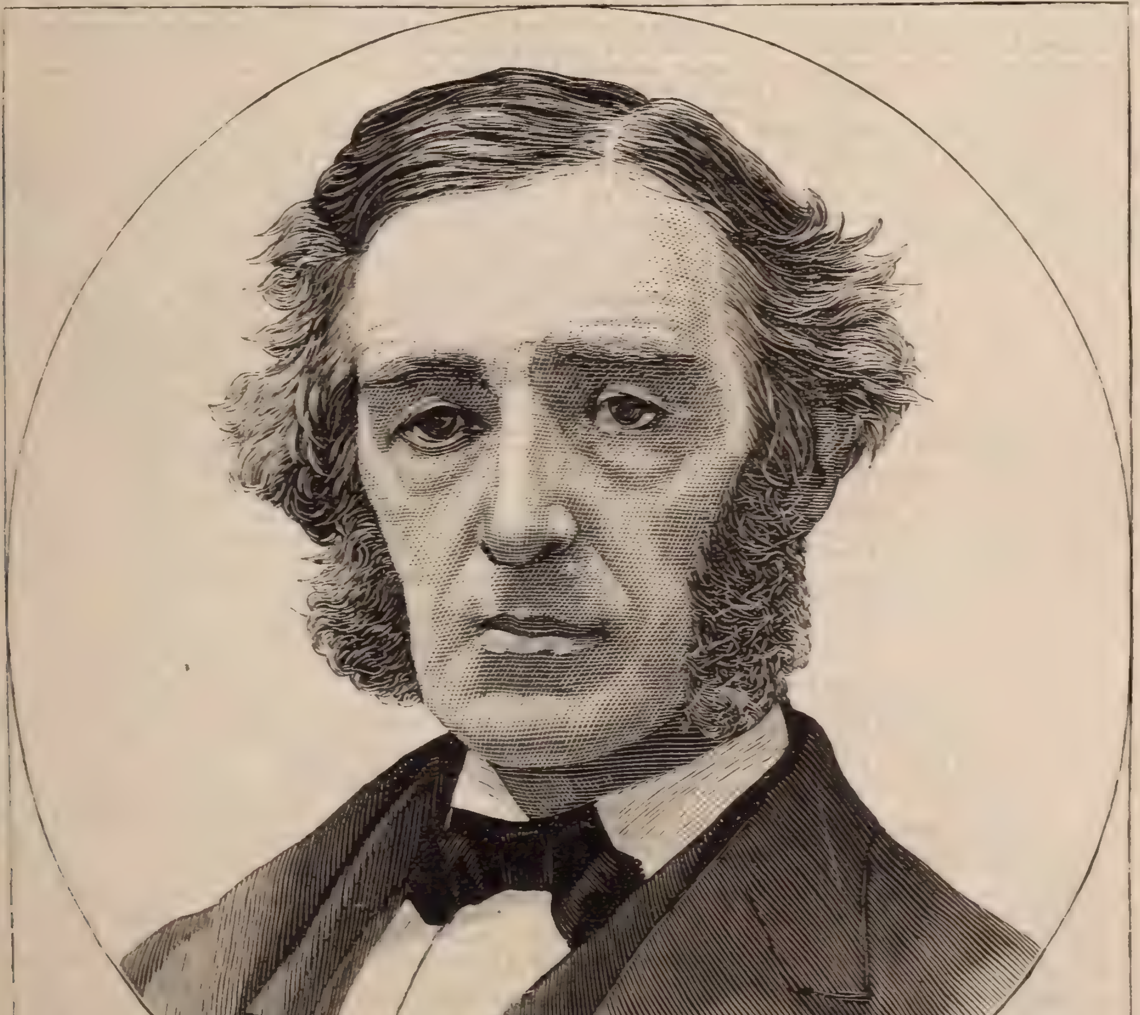
A BLESSED NATION. By Dr. Deems. His Sermon last Sunday.

FREE GRACE, a MOTIVE FOR FREE GIVING. A New Sermon Preached on Hospital Sunday, by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH (Continued).

Cain and Abel. S. S. Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter.

FOREIGN TOPICS: The British House of Commons and Mr. Bradlaugh—Sir A. H. Layard on the Condition of Turkey—The Volcanic Condition of Europe—Sermons Illustrated by the Magic Lantern, etc.



REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D., the Celebrated Preacher, Author, and Temperance Advocate.

REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D., OF BROOKLYN.

An Anniversary Celebration—The Key to Successful Preaching—Birth and Early Years—Washington's Chocolate Bowl—Graduation and Visit to Europe—First Ministerial Work—The Settlement in New York—Removal to Brooklyn—The Lafayette Avenue Church Built—Summary of Work—A Mother-Church—Literary Labors—An Immense Audience.

ON a recent Sunday evening the Presbyterian Church at the corner of Lafayette Avenue and South Oxford Street, Brooklyn, was the scene of an interesting and impressive celebration. Passers-by noticed that something unusual was in progress, for although large numbers gather there every Sunday, on this evening an unusually numerous crowd was passing in at its doors. Within, the commodious edifice was crowded to its utmost capacity, and the walls were decorated as for a marriage. Banners adorned the galleries, and flowers in profusion covered the pulpit and the base of the gallery, while from the roof, suspended by an invisible wire, was the effigy of a dove with outstretched wings, made of white flowers. It was a bright and joyous scene, and as the Jubilee singers in front of the platform sang the Te Deum all hearts responded to the soul-stirring words.

Very appropriate was that opening anthem, for pastor and people were celebrating the twentieth anniversary of their union, and all felt that there was abundant cause to sing, "We praise thee, O God." Twenty years pastor and people had labored together in the cause of the Master, with one heart and one mind, and God had abundantly blessed the united effort. During those twenty years no less than 3059 persons had been received into church membership, of whom 2000 had been converted under the pastor's ministry. Besides this, two other churches had been organized, had gone forth as little colonies from the Lafayette Avenue Church, and are now thriving and prospering and doing a good work in the city.

As these facts filled the minds of all present, the Te Deum Laudamus was no formal, unmeaning utterance, but the devout expression of sincere gratitude to God.

The singing over, Dr. Cuyler, in a voice tremulous with emotion, read the twenty-third Psalm, and preached a sermon appropriate to the occasion. At its conclusion he said, very impressively: "The past fills this house to-night more than does the audience. The past has gone on record in the book of judgment. The future let us leave with God. Twenty years hence many assembled here will doubtless have passed away. Oh, that they may be found with Christ, at the right hand of the Father in glory. Twenty years hence some other person will probably labor in my place. Oh that he may do so, faithfully. When I am laid in my last resting-place in Greenwood, I only ask that this may be written upon my tombstone: "Pastor of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church;" and beneath, the message I first gave to you: "I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified."

In the last words of Dr. Cuyler's sermon the reader has the clew to these twenty years' successful work. He has preached Christ. Whereever a preacher is content to be nothing himself, is desirous only to proclaim Christ, and let the people look on His face, success may be expected. Learned disquisitions on other topics may raise the preacher's reputation; descriptive sermons rich in word-pictures may attract attention and admiration; fierce polemical discourses may stir up enthusiasm for some particular section of doctrine; but it is only when Christ is preached that souls are saved—it is only when Christ, the living personal Christ, is held up before the people in His matchless perfection, that hard hearts are melted and stubborn spirits are subdued. The passage Dr. Cuyler adopted for his motto, and which he hopes may be cut on his tombstone, is one that should be ever present on the mind of every minister of the cross.

From the account of this twentieth anniversary we turn with interest to the narrative of the pastor's life.

BIRTH AND EDUCATION.

Theodore Ledyard Cuyler was born at Aurora, N. Y., on January 10th, 1822. He is the son of a lawyer of some distinction and ability, who was not, however, permitted to superintend the education and training of his son, for he died at the early age of twenty-nine, when his boy was only four years old. Deprived of a father's care, the child was thrown entirely on the resources of his widowed mother; but, happily for him, that mother placed no reliance on her own wisdom, but with tender love and in humble faith confided her fatherless boy to the care of Him who has promised to be "a father to the fatherless and a judge of the widow." She had no other child, and she watched over his early years with prayerful solicitude. She was a woman of active piety and of strong intellect, and her influence was potent over him for good. She was a granddaughter of Dr. Johnes, who for more than fifty years was pastor of a church at Morristown.

During the pastorate of Dr. Johnes he had the honor of numbering among his hearers George Washington, who during part of his winter campaign had his headquarters in the vicinity of Morristown, and made the acquaintance of the good pastor. He frequently visited the house of Dr. Johnes, and Dr. Cuyler shows with some degree of pride a large china bowl, out of which the Father of his Country was accustomed to drink, while enjoying Dr. Johnes' hospitality, his favorite beverage—chocolate.

So well did the widowed mother fulfil her trust that her boy graduated with honor at Princeton in 1841, when only nineteen years of age. At that time he had made no but inclined to that of the law, which presented the prospect of a brilliant and lucrative career, and which peculiar circumstances rendered easy and attractive to the energetic graduate. But God saw in him a vessel meet for His service, and the legal career, with all its wealth and honors, were joyfully relinquished. By one of those coincidences which the world calls chance, but which the Christian recognizes as the leading of Providence, young Cuyler, still contemplating a life at the bar, strolled one evening into a revival meeting. There the scale was turned; the Holy Spirit touched his heart, and henceforth he devoted himself to the service of Christ.

CHOICE OF A PROFESSION,

Young men who are hesitating as to the selection of a sphere of life may be desirous of knowing how the choice young Cuyler made, appears to him now. He has seen his compeers at college attain positions of eminence in the legal profession and realize fortunes which the ministry of the gospel does not offer. Does he regret that he gave his life to the Lord? It was after thirty four years of laborious service in that cause that he said, with all due respect for some of his ancestors—Sir Matthew Hale Smith, William Wirt, and Theodore Frelinghuysen, he would not change places with the Lord Chancellor, or the prince of the bar on this or any other continent. He ceased not to thank God unceasingly that his lot was cast in the ministry, and his humble life to the ministry of the resurrection. The ministry had its hardships, its vexations and its trials, and its strain on the nervous system. To the man who enters the ministry for popularity the work was irksome drudgery, but to the man who entered it for love of Christ the crosses were turned into crowns, and the rod well borne yielded the richest blessings. He had never seen the day yet when he would change places with a millionaire, or any monarch on his throne.

The year 1842 was spent in Europe, where he made the acquaintance of the most distinguished men of the day in religion and in literature. He had been from boyhood a total abstainer from intoxicating liquors, and while in Great Britain he threw himself heart and soul into the temperance movement. One of his most vivid recollections is that of an immense meeting in Glasgow, where he delivered an address at the fir reception of Father Mathew. His letters d scribing places and persons of interest were pul lished in this country, in the columns of the r ligious press, and gave evidence of the pow and grace of diction which have, since the made the name of Cuyler a household word both continents.

Returning to America Dr. Cuyler enter Princeton Theological Seminary, where he studi for three years. At the conclusion of his colle course he labored for a short period in Wyomi Valley, and then removed to Burlington, N. At Burlington he remained three years, and th went to Trenton, where he founded a new co gregation. In 1853 two invitations were sent the young preacher whose fame as an earne energetic Christian minister had spread throu the country. The first was from the Shawm Congregational Church of Boston, Mass., a the other from the Reformed Dutch Church Market Street, New York. He accepted t latter, and for the next seven years he labored the "Empire City." But the growth of the bu ness necessities found the old church an impe ment in its way; arrangements were made for purchase, and the edifice was pulled dow

While the site of the future religious home the Market Street congregation was undecid an event occurred which decided the trustees to build a new church. In February, 1860, t of Brooklyn, worshipped at the corner of Ca ton and De Kalb Avenues. A vacancy occur in its pulpit, and certain influences had b brought to bear, that threatened disintegrati One of the members of that congregation s gested Dr. Cuyler's name for the pastorate. committee came to his residence in New Yo and laid a call before him. He declined ent taining it until the decision of the Market Str Church was made, but when the project of bui ing was abandoned, Dr. Cuyler accepted "Little Park" invitation.

LITTLE PARK PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH,

On a stormy Easter Sunday, April 8th, 18 Dr. Cuyler first addressed his Brooklyn cong gation, then numbering two hundred and f persons, and worshipping in a temporary cha on De Kalb Avenue. Soon a permanent str ture became necessary, and the lot at the cor of Lafayette Avenue was purchased. The c break of the civil war, soon after the contr for the new church, were signed, threatened put a stop to the building, but by the energ work of the church, and especially of the la connected with it, sufficient funds were fin raised, and the church completed, at a cost $42,000, exclusive of the land, which cost $ 000. The dedicatory services were held March 16th, 1862, and sixty new members w received on that day.

From that period steady and uninterrup prosperity has attended the church. In 1866 work began to expand, and for sometime as m as twelve and thirteen meetings a week w held. For two consecutive communion sons 240 persons were received at the Lo table, and of those 100 were heads of famil During 1866, 325 persons were added to the c munion of the church as a thank-offering God. A mission was established in War Street that soon grew into the Memo Church, which has now 200 members, and vary Chapel, started by William W. Wicke 1861, is now the flourishing Fort Greene Chu in charge of Rev. Dr. Adam McClelland. It at that mission in 1871 that Mr. D. L. Mo labored with so much power, and brought over 100 converts, who were received into membership of the mother church. It was wl there that Mr. Moody instituted his Bible re ings, which have since startled millions of pe here and in Europe. In 1867 the Lafay Avenue Church met in session with the He Street Church, and instituted a movement resulted in the organization of the Classon A nue Church, to which they contributed one of its original membership.

During the twenty years which have elap

Dr. Cuyler preached his first sermon in klyn, 4500 children have been enrolled in abbath School connected with the church, iom 427 have been admitted to membership onfession of faith, and nine have entered hristian ministry. Besides the regular h and Sunday-school work Dr. Cuyler has d himself of every opportunity presented hristian philanthropic operations. The ehem Mission, Gospel work in the Navy the Five Points' Mission, and the Chil- Aid Society have all received Dr. Cuyler's t and vigorous assistance, and he has been lar attendant and a most efficient advocate the temperance meetings of the two cities. g the whole period Dr. Cuyler has labored idefatigable energy on Sunday and through ek, taking active interest in all the move- connected with the church.

physique is not robust, and it might have xpected that the continuous strain would npaired his strength, but Dr. Cuyler says, evout thankfulness, that during the whole e has never been kept from his pulpit by s except on one Sunday. "This remark- cord," said Dr. Cuyler significantly, in a interview, "should be mentioned in con- with the fact that all through my life I en a total abstainer."

les the work of a preacher and pastor and ance orator, Dr. Cuyler has attained con- le eminence as written for the periodical press about usand articles, many of which have been d in Great Britain. The aggregate cir- of the journals in which the articles, peared amounts to over forty millions, ence Dr. Cuyler naturally considers it a e to address. Many of these articles, d from the journals in which they ap- have been issued in book form, and have that shape had a wide circulation. these latter works, the most prominent tray Arrows," "Heart Life," "Thought "Pointed Papers," "Cedar Christian," y Crib," "His Own Daughter," and ody's Son." The last mentioned has ceedingly popular, and has attained a on of over 100,000 copies.

AS AN AUTHOR.

yler hoped to have attended the Sunday- entenary Meetings now being held in itain, but the serious illness of a beloved r prevented his taking the journey. Our vill sympathize with him in his affliction t that if consistent with the will of God ave the joy of seeing the sick loved one to health.

---

pect to publish a Portrait and Life rt Raikes next week, in view of the -School Centennial Celebrations.

BRAHMIN'S TESTIMONY.

R. CHAMBERLAIN, of the Arcot Mis- dia, relates the following incident:

close of one of his Bible lectures, a one of the most cultured in the place nvert), arose and asked permission to words. In the course of a short ad- gave the following remarkable testi- he Christian Scriptures:

the mango tree on yonder roadside. approaching ripeness. Bears it that itself or its own profit? From the the first ripe fruits turn their yellow ard the morning sun until the last pelted off, it is assailed with showers and stones from boys and men, and er-by, until it stands bereft of leaves, ches knocked off, bleeding from many wig, and piles of stones underneath, lubs and sticks lodged in its boughs, ly trophies of its joyous crop of fruit. uraged? Does it cease to bear fruit? y, If I am barren, no one will pelt me, l live in peace? Not at all. The next e budding leaves, the beauteous flow- nder fruit again appear.

That is a type of these missionaries. I have watched them well, and have seen what they are. What do they come to this country for? What tempts them to leave their parents, friends, and country, and come to this, to them an unhealthy, climate? Is it for gain or for profit that they come? Some of our country clerks in government offices receive more salary than they. Is it for the sake of an easy life? See how they work, and then tell me. No; they seek, like the mango tree, to bear fruit for the benefit of others, and this, too, though treated with contumely and abuse from those they are benefiting. Now, what makes them do all this for us? It is their Bible! I have looked into it a good deal at one time and another, in the different languages I chance to know. It is just the same in all languages. The Bible—there is nothing to compare with it in all our sacred books, for goodness and purity, holiness and love, and for motives of action.

Where did the English-speaking people get all their intelligence, and energy, and cleverness, and power? It is their Bible that gives it to them. And now they bring it to us and say, "This is what raised us. Take it, and raise yourselves." They do not force it upon us, as the Mohammedans did their Koran, but they bring it in love and translate it into our languages, and lay it before us and say, "Look at it, read it, examine it, and see if it is not good."

Marvellous has been the effect of Christianity in the moral moulding and leavening of Europe. I am not a Christian. I do not accept the cardinal tenets of Christianity as they concern man in the next world: but I accept Christian ethics in their entirety. I have the highest admiration for them.

A HAPPY HOME; OR, JUST FOR FUN.

A Temperance Story.

(Concluded from page 428.)

DICK'S wife could see only one explanation to his early return home and strange manner: he had been dismissed from his employment—a calamity she had dreaded daily for many months past. Burying her poor, grief-stricken face in her thin, wan hands, she wept as if her heart would break. How would she get food for her poor children now? for though they benefited but little from the work of his hands, yet, trifle as it was, it kept them from starving. With that heroic forgetfulness of self so often shown by women in the hour of trial, she thought not of her own bitter fate. That most unselfish of all feelings, a mother's love, held such complete possession of her aching heart, she thought only of those whom God had given her to nurture and love; so, dashing aside her tears, she rose from her seat with a wild, despairing look in her eyes, and, clutching at the guttering light with a frenzied grasp that spoke of a mind tottering on the verge of despair, she hurried to the corner of the miserable hovel in which her children were lying, and, holding the glimmering light aloft, gazed down upon the little half-starved inmates of that dreadful bed with feelings that may perhaps be imagined, but can never be described.

"Good-morning, sir," said Tom Foster, gleefully saluting his master on the morning following the events just narrated.

"Ah, Tom, is that you? Good-morning," was the cheery response of the kind-hearted man. "What has made you so pleased, for you seem to be in an unusually happy mood this morning?"

"I am indeed," said Tom, "for I have a bit of good news for you;" and, bending close to his master's smiling face, he exclaimed, in a low, confidential whisper, "Dick's signed the pledge!"

"You don't say so!" said the old man, with a start.

"But I do!" said Tom; "and, what's more, here it is in black and white," he continued, laying the open book before the astonished gaze of his master.

Tears gathered in the eyes of the tender-hearted old man as he looked upon that badly written line in Tom's pledge-book.

Before the world was a day older Tom and Dick were both at work together at the distant village of Brookford.

I should like to describe the joy of Dick's poor wife when she learned that he had not been discharged after all—to picture to you what she felt, when, after a week's absence at Brookford, he came home sober, and with a week's wages in his pocket. Such an unlooked-for event in the life of the Martins did happen. Ah, and every week too, till New Year's Day arrived. The health, happiness, and general comfort resulting from this radical change in Dick's habits may readily be imagined.

"Mary," said Dick, on the last Saturday in the old year, as he sat by the fire having his supper, "Tom Foster has invited us all to go and take dinner with him next Monday, which is New Year's Day; so get yourself and all the children ready, for he declares he won't take a denial."

Of course Mary protested all she could against the proposed visit, saying she had nothing either for herself or the children half nice enough to go visiting in. But all her excuses were of no avail, for Dick had his own reasons for urging compliance with Tom's wishes, so Mary had to make the best she could of the few things she had bought since Dick signed the pledge, and agree to go.

In due time they arrived at Tom's house, where they received a most hearty welcome. Poor Dick could not help noticing the difference between Tom's wife and his own, for Mary's face still wore that pale pinched look pain and privation is ever sure to cause; and as for her dress, it stood out in striking contrast to Mrs. Foster's new silk one. The repentant husband noticed and felt every little difference in the two wives so keenly a lump came in the poor fellow's throat.

The great contrast between Tom's ruddy, comfortable-looking children and his own ill-clad and poorly nourished little things was the next thing that attracted his attention, and the difference seemed greater than even that of the two wives. So up came another lump in poor Dick's throat, for his conscience smote him terribly. He made a stern resolve within his own mind, which I will not stay to disclose now.

"Well, Richard," said Tom, after tea was over, and all the happy party were about to depart, "have you enjoyed yourself?"

"Enjoyed myself?" said Richard; "why, I never had such a day before in all my life, and if all this sort of thing comes of living as you do, why, I'll never drink another drop as long as I live."

Poor Mary heard all that her husband said, and wanted to give expression to her own thoughts on the subject, but when she heard Dick's vow, her heart became too full to speak, so she quietly turned aside to hide the tears of joy that would come, although she tried so hard to restrain them.

"What is Dick saying?" said Mr. Shaw.

"Why, he has resolved never to touch strong drink again as long as he lives," said Tom.

"Yes, and I mean it, too!" exclaimed Dick, with an air of determination that he had never assumed before.

"Richard," said Mr. Shaw, laying his hand upon Dick's shoulder, "this is the happiest moment of all in this unusually happy day. I cannot find words to tell you how delighted I am at the resolve you have made. May Heaven give you strength to keep it."

In a few moments more that happy group, so strangely brought together, separated, and so the party broke up.

Right manfully has Dick kept his word, for many years have elapsed since that eventful day. That is the secret of Richard Martin's happy home, and how it was he kept the pledge, though he only signed it "for fun!"

TOO LATE FOR RANSOM.

A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage, Preached on Sunday Evening, June 20, 1880.*

"Beware lest He take thee away with his stroke: then a great ransom cannot deliver thee."—Job 36: 18.

Trouble Failing of its Proper Effect—A Warning against Procrastination—Gospel Opportunities taken Away—I. By the Withdrawal of Intellect—The Cornish Fool—Five Hundred Chances to one against Death-bed Repentance—II. By the Final Withdrawal of the Holy Spirit—Signs of His Departure—III. By Death—Death Sudden, Unexpected—A Sailor's Talk with a Landsman about Death—No Reformation Possible after Death—Everlasting Punishment—An Angel Substitute Refused—No Army can Deliver—No Change in the Judge—God Does not Destroy Souls—It is Suicide.

TROUBLE makes some people mad. It was so with Job. He had lost his property, he had lost his health, he had lost his family, and his trouble, instead of driving him to God, drove him to exasperation. And so I suppose there may be in this house to-night those who have not been profited by the misfortunes of life. Their estates took wings and flew away. There may be a hollow cough in the household, there may be a subtraction from your comfort, there may be an addition to your irritations and annoyances and disasters, and your trouble, so far from driving you to God, has driven you away from Him, and you tell me to-night that you have no peace in God, no comfort for this world, and no prospect for the world to come.

In other words, you are in the position in which Job was, when the words of my text accosted him, and if they were appropriate to him, they are appropriate now, when they are uttered in your hearing: "Beware lest He take thee away with His stroke; then a great ransom cannot deliver thee." The whole idea of the text is, that God sometimes suddenly removes gospel opportunities, and then we are ransomless.

I. Sometimes gospel opportunities are taken away through

THE WITHDRAWAL OF THE INTELLECT.

A man says, As long as I can keep my reason, as long as I have the capacity to judge between right and wrong, as long as I have an opportunity of a consideration of the Gospel, I am safe, and I can afford to adjourn this matter.

But suppose your intellect should perish, by fever, by casualty, by the hurling of a missile, by the dropping of a brick from a scaffolding, by the dashing down the streets of an ungovernable horse, by the discharge of firearms; suppose your intellect should be gone, what then? If you are unforgiven and unprepared for the future world, with it goes the opportunity of salvation and of Heaven.

There are thousands in asylums of the land who for ten years or twenty years have been demented, but there was a time when they stood in thorough mental and intellectual health, they had as strong and as well poised an intellect as you have to-night, but disaster came, and for many years they rejected the offers of mercy and salvation, and when their intellect went their opportunity went; now they are not responsible for anything they say; now they are not responsible for anything they do.

There was a time when they were responsible, and if in the great Day of Judgment they should say to God, I was for many years demented, I didn't know my right hand from my left, I had no capacity to judge of these things, Christ will answer, There were long years in which you had intellectual prosperity, long years in which you rejected my grace, long years in which you drove back my Spirit, and driving back my Spirit you drove back your last opportunity, and a ransom cannot deliver thee.

But, my friend, we had better be in the condition of the Cornish fool, whose biography has been written and published in England, Robert Anderson. He was a weak man, but he had brought scores and scores into the Kingdom of God. They called him a fool. He hadn't half the wit or sense of other people, but in his biography he gives us this account: "The mob pursued me in the streets, I lost my hat, I got upon a meat-stand, and while I stood there my heart grew hot with love toward those who pursued me, and I began to pray, and I began to exhort." Oh, my God, give me the patience of the Cornish fool, who yet had the grace of God, rather than the mightiest intellect that God ever created unillumined of His grace.

Not appreciating the fact that we need our mental faculties for the choice of this religion, men postpone to the final hour of life the things of eternity, not recognizing the fact that in the vast majority of instances in the closing moment of life, the intellect is beclouded, and there is no capacity for choice.

Oh, how many quote the story of the dying thief, who found mercy, and encourage their procrastination to the last hour, saying, that man found salvation in the last moment, and I can find it in my last and dying moment, forgetful of the fact that they are misinterpreting the whole of the word of God, that while in the Bible there are accounts of hundreds of men who died, there is only one instance where a man found mercy at the last moment; in other words, the whole meaning of that passage is, that there is not more than one chance out of five hundred of death-bed repentance that amounts to anything. And yet how many procrastinate to that hour when their reason may be gone. Beware lest He take thee away with a stroke of your reason; then a great ransom cannot deliver thee.

II. But I remark again, that God sometimes removes gospel opportunity by

THE WITHDRAWAL OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

There are persons in this house who were very serious twenty years ago; there are persons in this house who were very thoughtful forty years ago; I do not know just the time, but you may remember it; it was when you were very sick, or it was when you were standing by the sick and dying bed of some one whom you greatly loved; it was in some great crisis of your life, you remember it; I cannot tell just when it was, but you know when it was; you were very serious, very thoughtful, almost prayerful about your soul. God's Spirit strove mightily in your heart, and you drove Him back. That was your opportunity of salvation.

You tell me that since that time you have had no very serious consideration of the great things of eternity. I will not take the responsibility of saying the Holy Spirit has gone finally and forever from your heart, but if you tell me that for twenty or forty years you have had no serious reflection it looks like it. You say, I never pray; that is one sign of the departure of the Spirit. You say, I have no anxiety about the eternal world; that is another sign of the withdrawal of the Spirit. You say, I am not at all impressed with the service to-night; there is nothing in the song, nothing in the Scripture lesson to move my heart—that is another sign of being given up of the Spirit. I do not say the Holy Ghost has finally flown from your heart, but I say it looks like it.

I knew a man seventy five years of age who attended all the religious services, yet was unmoved. I asked his history, and I found that at twenty-one years of age he was in the midst of a great revival, a great awakening, and he was persuaded that that was his time for Heaven. He drove back the Spirit; he lived on to seventy-five years of age unconcerned in regard to the future, and he died without one particle of hope.

Next Wednesday the Cunard steamer will leave the wharf at eleven, two, or three o'clock, and after it has been gone two hours, go on the wharf and shout to it, beckon it to come back, will it come back? Yes, sooner than the Holy Ghost departing from your soul will come back.

During these nine tremendous weeks some of you have been mightily moved by the Spirit. That Spirit said to you in som our services, Come to Christ, and you answ Not now. More emphatically the Spirit Come to Christ, and you said, Not More emphatically the Spirit called you, you said, I will come after a while. But I get over my evil habits first; I am in habit of taking strong drink, I must get that first; I am in the habit of indulging i games of chance, I must get over that fir am willing to come, after the world has re to scoff at me; I mean to come, but not And that Holy Spirit, after your procrastin for one week, three weeks, four weeks, weeks, six weeks, seven weeks, eight weeks, weeks, stands with His hand on the door of heart, about to go away. Let Him depa Him take His final departure from your and you are as certainly lost as though death had occurred a hundred years ago.

Jerusalem stood forty years after it was d ed. "Oh, Jerusalem, Jerusalem," said C "how oft would I have gathered thee as gathereth her brood under her wings, b would not." Christ pronounced the do that city. It stood forty years, but all th under that doom, and then it went down. is a dead line beyond which a soul may and be saved. As the poet says:

> "There is a line, by us unseen,
> Which crosses every path,
> The hidden boundary between > God's mercy and his wrath."

And there are many of you, I fear, wh come up to that dead line, and if you go the same direction the next step your fe be planted on the other side of the lin Holy Spirit grieved finally and forever from your heart. Beware, beware, lest H thee away with His stroke, and then a gre som cannot deliver thee.

III. But I think in a great many cas sudden withdrawal of gospel opportunity from this world. We often hear aged say, Oh, I can't live long; but I have to that one hundred young and middle-aged die where one aged man dies, for the reas there are not many aged ones to quit life. over this assemblage to-night—how few aged; their comrades gone. There will hundred people in this house who will this life to one aged person now in this who will depart this life.

THE MOMENT OF OUR DEPARTURE

And our departure will be sudden; if w it will come in the winter, it will com summer; if we think it will come in th mer, it will come in the winter; if we will come by day, it will come by night think it will come by night, it will come No one expects to depart when he depa denly, and the Gospel offer falls this sid grave. All the invitations of mercy m sounded at the door of the grave, the cannot hear it; elegant and eloquent e will do the man no good; epitaphs chise polished Scotch granite will do him no bewailing kindred cannot do him any suddenly, suddenly he went.

"Oh," says some one, "I will stand ba all these perils." That will make no dif You say, "I will not go upon the sea, I go upon a rail-train;" that will make n ence—suddenly. A sailor said: "My fat lost at sea, and my grandfather was lost and my great-grandfather was lost at "Well, then," said the landsman, "you never venture on the sea; you also will p And then the sailor turned to the lands said, "Where did your father die?" H "In bed." "Where did your grandfath He says, "In bed." "Where did you grandfather die?" He says, "In bed." said the sailor, "beware lest some nigh you are asleep, God calls you." Sudden denly.

You may take it as cowardly, if you but I declare I have an infinite horror of n of this life without Christ. I would sooner that I had a right to a sensation of safety in leaping from the top of Mont Blanc thousands of feet down, than to go out of this world without Christ and expect any safety.

---

* Dr. Talmage did not preach at the Tabernacle on Sunday last, we therefore publish an evening sermon he recently preached.

Oh, when our last hour on earth comes, our gospel opportunity passes. And here comes that tremendous thought of my text: it implies that when once a man has passed out of life, or passed beyond the dead line, that then and there there is no hope for his salvation, and my text pronounces it a dead failure. Beware lest He take thee away with His stroke, and then a great ransom cannot deliver thee.

know there are restorationists who say the soul passing out of this world will go into another world, and if a man was wicked in this world, he will suffer there, and that after a while he will then enter Heaven. Do you really think so? That a soul going down among the Hildebrands, the Neros, the Robespierres, and the abandoned and the debauched of the universe will get reformed? Would you send a sick child to Memphis, smitten with the yellow fever as it was summer before last, and expect the child to recover? Would you send a soul down into the land of eternal disease, amid an epidemic of transgression, and expect the health of the soul to be restored?

ould you send one into the worst abominations of New York or Brooklyn life, with all the abandoned surroundings, and expect that one to be reformed, purified, built up, elevated, and saved? It is absurd; it is unphilosophical; it is not only contrary to the Word of God, but it is contrary to common-sense, that a man can go down amid all the suffering and abandonment of that world, and ever come up again. How does the passage go? These shall go away—into three months' punishment? No. These shall go away into a hundred years of punishment? No. These shall go away into a thousand years of punishment? No. These shall go away into everlasting punishment.

uppose a spirit from Heaven should after a while knock at the gate of the doomed world, and say, "Let me in, and let that man out, I will come in and suffer in his place," the jailer would say, "This man had all opportunity of salvation. He had all warning. He had all invitation. He cannot come out."

A RANSOM CANNOT DELIVER HIM.

ppose a spirit from Heaven should knock at that gate, and say, Let that man come out, he was affluent in the world. He had splendid surroundings. Let the poor pauper come in and suffer in his place. The spirit at the gate would say, He cannot come out. This substitution cannot take place. These had their good things on earth, while these had their evil things. These are comforted. These are tormented. A ransom cannot deliver them.

metimes an army has gone forth to capture prison walls. The army of Napoleon thrust their bayonets into the doors of the Inquisition and opened them. Do you suppose the doors of the eternal incarceration shall ever be broken up he armies would not come down from Heaven, for they would not fight against the decrees of Heaven; they would not bring their batteries to bear against that door, for the captives themselves are captured. They themselves are chained. They themselves are destroyed. And a great ransom cannot deliver them.

metimes men are imprisoned for life, but after a while there is another judge, there is another governor in office, and you find that imprisoned man in the street, and you say, How is this And he says, I have been pardoned. There is another governor. There is another judge. But let me say, There is no other judge, there is no other governor. But let me say further that God will never yet destroy a soul. And all the ages of the past He has never destroyed a soul. If the soul is destroyed, it is suicide. Oh, Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself.

, this is a tremendous thought. Do you suppose there will be any deliverance for those who finally reject God after thousands of years have passed away, if this Bible is true? After thousands of years, when some one shall say to a soul, How long have you been here? The soul may say, I have ceased counting. Why count these passing ages which take us no nearer the end?

Ages, ages, ages, eternity, eternity, eternity. The wrath to come, the wrath to come, the wrath to come. The City Hall bell tolls three for the third district, four for the fourth district. It taps five for the fifth district, but those bells of eternal conflagration will toll on and toll on forever.

Yet, blessed be God, I am here to-night to tell you

THERE IS A RANSOM,

there is a deliverance for any man or woman, whatever his or her fault. I want to tell you of a braver than Grace Darling, when she put out from the lighthouse amid the breakers; Christ launched from Heaven to earth in the wild track of our sins and wretchedness to pull us ashore. I have to tell you that Christ came in pangs, and suffering, and agony indescribable, to bring you up from darkness and from sin and death into life and the bright hope of the Gospel. There are His wounds. There is His bleeding side. There is His bleeding temple. There is His bleeding heart. There are His bleeding feet, and there is your sacrifice, there your atonement, there is your ransom. "Whosoever will, let Him come."

Oh, man and woman, so long prayed for, so long offered the mercy of God, have you concentred all your physical and mental and spiritual energies in one awful determination to be lost? Is there nothing in the value of your soul, or in the great assurances of Christ, or in the thunders of the last day, or in the raptures of heaven, or in the surges of wrath, to arouse you from your indifference, and compel you to pray? Oh, thou, whose garments are dyed with the winepress of thy suffering, ride through this audience to-night, and bring all these people captive for grace. "Look unto me all ye ends of the earth, and be ye saved, for I am God, and there is none else."

I have presented all the arguments from Sabbath to Sabbath. Before many of you I have stood ten years preaching this Gospel. I have told you of Sinai and of Calvary, I have held back nothing I thought I ought to present. You have all the facts before you, and yet there are many sitting in the house of God unsaved, notwithstanding all the Gospel calls. And then, during these last nine weeks, while God has been rousing up the people, and they have come from the north and the south, the east and the west, and been changed by the grace of God, and men who have toiled in revivals of other days, the revivals of fifty years ago, have arisen in our meetings, and said, We have never beheld it on this wise; we never saw such multitudes seeking after God. We never observed such solemnity.

In 1857 five hundred thousand souls in America were brought to God. You were not brought. Revival after revival, Christian influence after Christian influence, prophet after prophet, alarm after alarm, and you are not saved. Oh, will God have to come with greater power upon you? Will He have to take another portion of your worldly estate before you are moved? Will He have to take another darling child from your household before you will begin to pray? Will He have to bring sorrow upon sorrow and agony upon agony before you will yield your heart to the Lord? Oh, Son of God, display thy power to-night in the salvation of all this people!

[The prayers of the readers of this Journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors in America and England, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and for its weekly circulation of more than 185,000 copies to be blessed by the Holy Spirit to the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Talmage especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

MATT, THE IDIOT BOY.

A LADY wandering along the sea-coast of an English watering-place, observed a boy intently gazing up at a small space between the clouds. Drawing close to him, she said, "What are you looking at, my boy?" The child made no answer, "Boy, boy," said she, shaking him gently by the sleve, "what are you doing?" The boy sighed, rubbed his eyes, shaded them, looked up again, and said with earnestness, "Matt was looking for God. Matt wants to see God." The clouds closed, and, as if to comfort himself for the disappointment, he said in a more cheerful tone, "Matt shall see God some day."

At this time a little girl ran out of a cottage, calling out, "Matt, come home; dinner is ready." The lady followed, and being asked to walk in, she learned that Matt was an orphan, about thirteen years of age, living with an aunt and grandfather. After this she often called and one day found the old man ill. The clergy man shortly afterward came in, and read the eighteenth of Matthew. When he came to the parable of the "king that would take account of his servants," Matt's attention became riveted.

When he had finished, Matt turned to him earnestly, saying, "Parson, read some more." Mr. Green began to relate the parable thus: "A great king said (and in speaking he pointed upward), bring my servants to me, and I will make them pay me all the pounds that they owe me. And they brought one servant that owed ten thousand pound—a great many, a great many! And he had no pound to pay; and the king said, he shall be put in prison, and never come out any more till all the money is paid." The tears trickled down the poor boy's cheeks; his countenance showing great alarm, and rushing to the beach, he threw himself down and wept piteously. The next day the lady found him again in his usual attitude, looking up; and not until she noticed him did he notice her.

"What is Matt doing?" she asked.

"Matt was talking to God," he replied.

"What did poor Matt say?"

The boy joining hands, looked up with a piteous expression of submission and fear, and said, "Good God, Matt has no money to pay!" And then shaking his head, he told her, with the deepest emotion, that he was going to be put in prison; God was going to put Matt in prison. The lady, taking both his hands to fix his attention, said cheerfully: "Jesus Christ has paid for poor Matt. God will not put Matt in prison now. Jesus Christ has paid all for Matt."

"Man that paid—man that paid—Matt says thank you, thank you!"

The grandfather died, and Matt was told that he went to God, and that God would soon send for him also. This took such possession of Matt's mind that he would ask for his new cap, and have his hands washed, that he might be ready when God would send for him. "God would send for Matt some day," he repeated softly; "perhaps it would be to-day, and Matt must be ready; Matt must always be ready."

One day he inquired of the lady what kind of a place it was that God would take him to.

"It is never cold there," she said; "no one will be hungry or sick."

"Will any one beat me there?"

"No; God will take care of Matt."

A time of trouble came—his aunt died—and poor Matt was found, one cold, snowy morning, nearly frozen to death in a cave, his dying voice uttering these words: "Matt shall see God some day. Matt will never be cold any more. God! God! and man that paid! oh! take poor Matt away."

The young person who found him ran for assistance, but, before Matt was removed, the spirit had passed away.

Happy Matt! Yes, reader, the poor idiot boy was happy, for he had laid hold upon the gospel message that Jesus paid the debt of sin.

The mystery of mysteries is folded up in these words, "God manifest in the flesh."

ROCHESTER TOWER.

By M. A. Paull.

(Continued from page 423.)

The Minister's Correspondence—The Funeral—Reading the Will—Planning for the Future—A Message from the Mission Station.

IT would have been amusing to have peeped at Hermann Ferguson when he began his matutinal opening of letters. Several of his clever, well-read feminine auditors had begun a correspondence with him on philosophical and religious subjects. Perhaps they had a faint hope that from letters on the love of wisdom they might one day begin to write letters on the love of each other. His answers to all these fair correspondents were short, terse, and emphatic models of polite annihilation.

"My dear Madam (or Miss, as the case might be): I cannot become a father confessor in the Congregational Church, nor should I think it right to become what may be termed a Protestant equivalent for one. Every reasonable and important doubt or question I am asked to solve I shall try to do, but this must be by my public sermons. I have no time to do it in private controversy. Thanking you for your confidence, I remain, my dear Madam, yours truly,

"HERMANN FERGUSON."

It was quite a comfort to the minister when he had drawn up this reply. It was carefully put away in the desk, stereotyped, as it were, to be simply copied whenever occasion required.

But women are never daunted, and next came what Mr. Ferguson remorselessly called "the reign of sweetmeats." Every day or two some charming girl or woman took a cooking fit. She descended from her parlor to her kitchen, rolled up her sleeves, slipped off her rings, put on a marvellous apron or adult pinafore which enveloped her whole form, and proceeded to concoct custards, or jelly, or blanc-mange, or delicate cake, or tempting pastry, which was duly forwarded to the much-persecuted, much-enduring man.

And these things he dared not throw promiscuously into his cupboard to keep company with the superfluous slippers and the cigar-case; for he feared by thus acting he should encourage the immigration of a vast colony of mice. So he must needs allow Mrs. Poddikins, his worthy landlady, to smell and taste and admire, and very frequently utterly demolish the dainties, while the number he distributed to the poor sick people he visited was a marvel to them, he being a bachelor; and caused them to form a deceptive estimate of the gastronomic talents of Mrs. Poddikins.

The most bearable and least perplexing of the gifts which crowded upon him from his fair friends was what he laughingly called "The Ferguson Flower Mission," on which, directly spring commenced, they industriously entered. His pleasant parlor became a very garden of beauty, and as Hermann never desired to set limits to the numbr of his flowers, the only difficulty arose with poor Mrs. Poddikins, to provide sufficient accommodation for them in the way of vases, glasses, and the like.

Perhaps could the charming young lady who sent a choice nosegay of exotics to him from her greenhouse have known that it, though greatly admired and appreciated, was thereafter destined to bloom, and then to wither, in a milk-jug, without a lip, all other flower-holders being in use, her enthusiasm about her neat bouquet might have been of a somewhat cooler degree.

Several ladies were unfortunately jealous of Emily Anerley, and her fair face had been considerably discounted in consequence, because business with his principal deacon so often led Hermann Ferguson to No. 12 Eglinton Terrace, although the young girl herself had never looked upon him in any other light than that of her father's friend; and it had never even occurred to the minister that such a construction could be put upon his visits.

"I think everything has been conducted, mother, just as he would have wished," said Cecil Anerley, as the sad family gathered around the fire the evening of the day on which their loved one's remains had been laid in the grave. All of them had attended the funeral.

The deceased Mr. Anerley had often expressed his horror and dislike of those wretchedly forlorn masculine funerals, whence womanly tenderness and affection and feeling seem banished; where a group of men standing at the grave's mouth harden their faces and look askance or defiant, ashamed to weep in the presence of each other; and reduce what should be at least more solemn and sad than an ordinary leave-taking to a decorous farce. He had often said that in his view family life and family ties ought as far as possible to be represented at funerals, not with pomp and pageantry, but simply and lovingly.

Mrs. Anerley had leaned upon the strong young arm of Cecil, and the two girls clung very closely to each other, and stood very near to them; and their tears, all save Constance's, had fallen very fast. On her expressive countenance there was a touching melancholy, as of subdued weeping, that in one so young was more noticeable than less controlled outbursts of sorrow.

They laid Mr. Anerley to sleep in the well-ordered cemetery, with spring sunshine flooding the quiet scene; above them a sky of brightest blue, and the perfume of the floral resurrection in the air; with birds swelling their little throats all around and warbling forth a welcome to the bright new life of the spring.

The service, read with deep and almost overpowering feeling by their own minister, and followed by a very short but very beautiful allusion to the life-work of this true and noble-hearted man, was soothing to the feelings of those nearest and dearest to him, and helpful, too, to many others who sorrowed for their loss; to many a poor man and woman from the Albert Mission, and from many another mission hall and society for the elevation of his fellows with which William Anerley was connected.

Quietly and simply and unostentatiously as the funeral was conducted, without plumes or hired mourners—which latter were indeed not needed when so many freely mourned him—it could not fail to be a very large one; and different sections of men and women, representatives from various organizations, formed quite a long procession from the cemetery chapel to the grave.

And there were two little lads that had wandered out from Albert Street, the orphan children of a costermonger whom William Anerley had befriended and ministered to through a long and weary illness, who came shyly forward to drop a bunch of daffodils into the open grave.

Among the costlier white bouquets and wreaths from widows and children and richer friends, the golden flowers had a sweet story to tell, of seed that had already borne fruit, and of one, garnered in the heavenly harvest home, who had, doubtless, already met and welcomed the friend who had first drawn him to the Saviour.

The sad solemnities of the funeral having been concluded, the Anerleys returned to the home whose every room must forever to them be "crowded with their loss."

The will, which William Anerley had had carefully drawn up by his lawyer a few years before, had been read by that gentleman to the widow and children, the only ones immediately interested in it save the two co-executors with Mrs. Anerley, who were appointed and requested to act, in case he died before his son had attained his majority, in order to assist her in the management of the business matters. These gentlemen were the Rev. Hermann Ferguson and Mr. Scott, one of the partners of the firm by whom Cecil was employed; and they had also been present.

The private property left by Mr. Anerley was of no very considerable amount. He had had an excellent wholesale grocery business, and the good-will which could be obtained for this would add, of course to the means of the family. He was also insured for 2,000*l*.; but his sudden and premature death naturally caused many dif ties in the settlement of his affairs, and necessitate their occupying a very different h from the genteel residence in Eglinton Ter now that their large annual income was cu and they had only a moderate maintenanc gether with the help Cecil might be able gr ally to afford them.

From the few words they could bear to s each other about the funeral, they passed these other subjects.

"I don't at all like the idea of your lea this house, dearest mamma," began Consta "and I think it may be prevented. I inten put my shoulder to the wheel."

Cecil's face, which had saddened so mu the last week, with its awful burden of ex ence, looked more like his old bright self a as he glanced at Constance, and said with a yet very tender smile, "What wheel, stance?"

"I don't believe in your doing all the wor the family, Cecil," said the young girl ener cally. "If I were a boy, you would give m privilege of helping, and why should I not it only because I am a girl? Surely sixte an old enough age to commence our life and to be useful in many families. I might lady help or a nursery governess—my certi would be of use, I expect; and if I coul even half the rent of this dear house per mamma need not leave it. I shouldn't thanks for any other house than this, the o consecrated by his very presence."

Poor Constance hid her face in her hands few minutes, while Mrs. Anerley and Emily aloud.

"I like you all the better for what you said, dear," remarked Cecil presently, "b can't accept your generosity. Mamma and two girls must keep together."

"Then suppose we stay here and set school?" said Constance, raising a very flu face, with dark eyes that gleamed through t

"That would worry mamma; neither sh Emily has strength enough to set a scho foot, and you alone are not old enough," Cecil again. "You have no idea what a b it is, Constance, to have other people's chil to take care of and to be accountable for."

At another time Constance would laughed at the grave, fatherly, experience with which her brother, not yet quite tw years old, uttered this sentiment; but she not laugh now; and Cecil went on, " don't you think, Constance, after all, th would seem more like what father would wished, if we cannot keep together in this and rather expensive house, to keep togeth a small one?"

"There is yet another plan," said Const her eyes brightening. "Surely I might work as a daily governess, and that woul even better. In this way I could still work evening at my Senior exam."

"I don't think you should want to leav at all, dear," said poor Mrs. Anerley some querulously; "you seem to be doing not but plan how you can leave me."

"Oh, mamma!" cried Constance sadly; she added, "Do explain for me, Cecil."

Constance was perfectly aware that every which Cecil said found its way immediate Mrs. Anerley's perceptions. Her deservedl loved son had what his sisters called "a w putting things" that never wounded if it di always please their mother. Cecil respond Constance's appeal.

"She is only trying and thinking how to you most, dear mother," he explained. " must not think she would wish to leave you were not to do something for your comfort.

Constance felt a little compunction at speech, for her spirit had been like a caged at the gloom and restraint of the past days. told herself again and again that she coul bear for No. 12 Eglinton Terrace to cease the home of her dear ones, and yet she she could hardly endure the emptiness that er again be filled—the solitude that could er again be peopled.

ist at that moment there was a quiet ring at front door bell, and Mrs. Anerley remarked, expect that is Mr. Ferguson; he said he ild look in and wish us good-night as he re- ed from the mission service."

It is very good of him to have taken it to- t, when he is always so busy," said Emmie.

e came in, and there seemed to enter also reshness and strength that emanated from irm, strong, bright nature.

We have had such a very nice time," he "and I have brought to you from them a touching resolution of sympathy and con- nce. It is not an empty form." He sat , took a piece of paper from his pocket- , and read aloud.

Out of the depths of their own loneliness sorrow for the greatest loss they could sus- as a society, the members and assistants at anches of the Albert Mission offer to Mrs. ley and her children their loving sympathy heart-felt prayers. Signed on their behalf or ourselves." Here followed their signashall prize it very much; we all shall. you write and tell them so, Mr. Fergu- said the widow holding the paper very y which the minister had handed to her.

ecil should do that," returned Mr. Fergu- "they will like it so much better from one urselves."

(To be continued.)

PROPHETIC EXPOSITION.*

(Continued from page 423.)

ey to the Revelation—The Political Sun— Work of the Unclean Spirits—The rch's Expectation—The Wilful King.

E REV. PHILIP ALLWOOD, B.D., Fellow of alene College, Cambridge, England, pub- in 1829 his "Key to the Revelation of St. " (two vols.), in which he clearly showed he darkening of the Napoleonic Empire its Waterloo eclipse in 1815, and its future earance a few years before 1866, as the Head of the Roman Empire, was pre- d in the year-day fulfilment of the fourth, and sixth Vials in Revelation 16. The ing is a summary of his statement:

e political Sun of the Fourth Vial, 'to power was to be given to scorch men with d with great heat,' was Napoleon I., who, peror of France and King of Italy, and tor of the Confederation of the Rhine, overthrown the Austro-German Emperor sterlitz, compelled him to resign his pre- y among the Potentates of Europe, and quently the dignity of 'Head of the Holy Empire,' which title Bonaparte forth- ssumed to himself, and in proof of it ated his son ch was the humiliation of Germany and a, and Spain, Portugal, Italy, Naples, etc., erwent as great abasement.

"'KING OF ROME.'

t the Fifth Vial is stated to be 'poured on the throne of the Wild-beast, and to his kingdom with darkness.' And has e kingdom of the Wild-beast become dark- since Bonaparte's overthrow and eclipse battle of Waterloo, in 1815? Who can ere his throne is? Where is now (in he ancient and splendid title of 'Head of man Empire,' which became vested in rte, and was visibly held by him in full so long as he was able; and before the larkness, which has since overwhelmed gdom, had put him, the Political Sun, out of sight? (Rev. 16 : 10).

"But events of great variety and importance are now connected with the pouring out of the Sixth Vial. The first of these events is the exhaustion and 'drying up of the great river Euphrates'—a symbol of the great Turkish Empire, through which it winds its course. And it is among the most ominous and unequivocal signs of the times, that the Turkish Empire is thus tending to dismemberment and dissolution. The ulterior purpose of this catastrophe is also disclosed, viz.: 'that the way of the kings of the East may be prepared,' that is, that the tribes of Israel may be restored to Palestine. (Rev. 16 : 12–14).

"As regards

"THE THREE UNCLEAN SPIRITS

that are here predicted presently to go forth to gather the nations to the war of the great day of God Almighty, the FIRST of them from the mouth of the dragon, or Satan, is obviously the Spirit of Infidelity, which has produced such incalculable misery and destruction among the human race since its violent outburst in the French Revolution of 1793. The Third Spirit, coming from the mouth of the False Prophet, is the malignant, artful and intriguing Spirit of Popery or Jesuitism, such as is remarkably on the alert in Britain and Ireland: and has been greatly strengthened by the revival of the order of Jesuits in 1814.

"We already perceive these two spirits of delusion in partial operation among us. But, doubtless, their energies will be greatly increased in the world at large in the future time that is here alluded to, by the wonderful occasions which will then draw them forth, and by the aid which they will then receive from the SECOND Spirit, which will then proceed 'out of the mouth of the Wild-beast,' or Roman Empire. And this SECOND Spirit will be a spirit of insatiable ambition and lust of conquest, which will be exemplified in him who will then be the head of the Wild-beast or Roman Empire.

"Such a confederacy between these 'Three Spirits' of Infidelity, and Lawless Despotism, and Jesuitism, will not be at all unparalleled or unnatural: for we have seen an ever-memorable example of it already. When the Pope, on September 10th, 1804, entered into a concordat with Napoleon Bonaparte (the representative of the infidel French Revolution), and conducted the coronation of that same individual, as French Emperor, on December 2d, 1804; and likewise the further coronation of that Emperor, as King of Italy, on May 26th, 1805. By all these means was effected a coalition between Infidelity and Lawless Ambition and Popery, which will, indeed, attach herself to anything which favors her own aggrandizement.

"The eventual fall of the Turkish Empire will evidently make some very remarkable changes in the political relations of the Great Powers of Europe, Asia, and Africa, which can in any degree be affected by it. Its extensive provinces, so capable of high improvement—and especially the Land of Israel, so admirably adapted by its situation for containing the Seat of a Universal Monarchy—will present temptations which it may be difficult for inordinate ambition, supported by power to resist. And under the ambitious views of the powerful and intriguing Prince, who may then be the visible head of the Wild-beast or Roman Empire, aided by the influence of Infidelity on the one hand, and Romanism on the other—such a catastrophe may easily be conceived to give rise to a grand political confederacy, similar to that which in 1806 caused the dissolution of the Austro-German Empire, and the transfer of the Headship of the Roman Empire to the French Emperor. This prophecy regarding the Three Spirits, states not merely the probability, but the certainty of such a confederacy as this.

"The name ARMAGEDDON points out the locality where finally there will be the last great war before the Millennium, and at the same time a miraculous display of Divine Power and Justice, and the total destruction of this confederacy, consisting of the WILD-BEAST, that is, the Last Head of the Roman Empire, with the confederate kings of the earth and their armies, together with the FALSE PROPHET. Simultaneously the city of Rome will be consigned to remediless ruin (Rev. 16 : 14; 18 : 19 : 19).

"The Last Head of the Roman Empire, though now (in 1829) involved in the darkness produced by the Fifth Vial, will then stand confessed in the broad light of day."

THE REV. E. T. VAUGHAN, M.A., Vicar of St. Martin's, Leicester, England, a leading evangelical clergyman of great celebrity, and author of numerous books—the father also of Dr. Vaughan, late Vicar of Doncaster—published in 1827–8 a prophetic work called "The Church's Expectation," in which he stated his belief that Napoleon Bonaparte, with his colleague and successor in unity, was Daniel's wilful king of the last days—thereby vowing his belief that another Napoleon would arise as the colleague and successor in unity with Napoleon I. to complete the predicted career of the Wilful King. As to the time of the Coming of Christ, he wrote in 1827:

"THE MOST DISTANT DATE
now recognized seems to be 1888."

He also said: "Now, in regard to the view that the prophecies and dates of Daniel should be applied to the Pope, the Turk, the French Revolution, and Napoleon, I am not content with affirming anything less than that 'the Stone which smiteth the Image'* is Christ; the little horn † of the fourth wild-beast is the Papacy; the little horn ‡ of the ram and he-goat is the Turkish or Mohamedan power; and 'the king that doeth according to his own will'§ (usually called Daniel's Wilful King) is Napoleon, with his colleague and successor in unity. Nor should I fear to make these assertions good, by even short investigation, to sound and patient reason, aided as she hath been by that broader light, which might well have been expected to issue from the sun-setting of prophecy.

"We are told in Luke 21 : 24, that as soon as the Times of the Gentiles shall have been fulfilled, Jerusalem will no longer be trodden under foot by the Gentiles; and then shall be seen those signs in the political and material heavens which are appointed to usher in the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour. The Jewish tribulation is first to terminate; then commences the Gentile judgment, 'the shaking of all nations,' which is closed by the Lord's terrible but most welcome appearing, 'the coming of the Desire of all Nations' (Haggai 2 : 7). So that one event we are to look for is the delivering up of the Jewish city and temple from Gentile into Jewish hands—and if the signs of the times be examined, and among others if the towering genius, vaulting ambition, impenetrable ferocity, skill, science, and success of the

REVOLUTIONARY STANDARD-BEARER

'that was and is not and yet shall be' (Rev. 17 : 8) be calmly weighed, the epoch of change, unto the coming of the Son of Man, will be judged as near as I have concluded it to be." ‖

(To be continued.)

---

racted from "Coming Wars," by Rev. M. in two pamphlets—five cents each by mail. mphlet contains "Ten Signs of the End, and tion of Approaching Events," with two maps large diagrams. Second pamphlet contains quotations from Forty Expositors on these Address, 63 Bible House, New York.

* Daniel 2 : 44. † Daniel 7 : 8.

‡ Daniel 8 : 9.—In the year-day historical fulfilments, the little horns of Dan. 7 and 8 respectively signify the Papacy and Mahomedanism during 1260 years, but in the future literal-day fulfilment they both represent the last Personal Antichrist in the exercise of his Western and Eastern dominion, during 1260 literal days. (EDITOR.)

§ Daniel 11 : 36.

‖ Mr. Vaughan clearly set forth the established Premillennium doctrine that Christ at His Second Advent before the thousand years of the Millennium, will not entirely destroy the Nations of mortal men now dwelling in the flesh on this earth, for although multitudes will be cut off by His judgments, yet some will be spared and converted; and over these and their descendants, Christ (living in Heaven and not on Earth) will personally reign for 1,000 years, after which there will be the general judgment. (Isaiah 24 : 6; 26 : 9; 66 : 16, 19, 23; Daniel 7 : 13, 14; Zechariah 14; Revelation 20, etc.)

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

The aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50 per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to The Manager, Christian Herald, 63 Bible House New York.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of back numbers to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

Persons requiring single or special copies can obtain them most conveniently through

NEWSDEALERS.

Any complaint that the Christian Herald cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer is promptly attended to if we are given the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

Last week's edition of the Christian Herald was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, June 30th, at 1.15 P.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Presidential Campaign was Opened by the assembling of the national Republican committee in New York last week. The appointment of a chairman and secretary for the current year was the first business. Mr. William E. Chandler, Governor Foster, and Marshall Jewell were the gentlemen suggested as suitable for the chairmanship. An adjournment took place to permit of Gen. Garfield expressing his preference, and the committee finally selected Marshall Jewell for the responsible position. Senator Dorsey, of Arkansas, will be secretary.

The Selection of General Hancock as the Democratic candidate for the presidency has received general commendation in all quarters, even the Republican journals joining in the chorus of approval. The ticket is undoubtedly a strong one, and the contest will probably be severe. It promises, however, to be of a purely political character, turning on the principles of the two parties; neither sectional issues nor personal questions entering so largely into the strife as they have hitherto done. Both parties were menaced by serious dangers, and might have made selections which would have forced the campaign into a personal instead of a national channel; but both at Chicago and Cincinnati the issue reached may be regarded as eminently satisfactory. Should the Republican party retain their hold of power, or the Democrats succeed in electing their candidate, the general feeling will be that the presidential chair is filled by a man of tried patriotism and proved ability.

President Hayes, at the Yale Commencement exercises, on Thursday, July 1st, received the honorary degree of LL.D. In the course of a speech at the dinner, the President called attention to the number of Yale graduates now holding important national offices at home and abroad. He also made a statement as surprising as it was gratifying to the Yale professors and alumni, in reference to his Southern policy, which has caused so wide a divergence of opinion among both Republicans and Democrats. Speaking of the period when he took office, the President said: "It seemed to me that the pacification of the country was the first duty. I know great and good men have failed to see it as I saw this. To restore the confidence of the people, to have a period of rest and repose, to have time for things to recover, seemed to me to be the first and great purpose of the administration. Looking at this it occurred to me I would find some man in the South upright and honorable, but who was opposed to me in the war, so that he should have the confidence of the South. How was I to do this? I found no great political leader suggesting that this course might possibly lead to a solution of the difficulties.

"While I was pondering what to do, and what course to pursue, there came to me, like a flash from a clear sky, the thought of Yale and the venerable president whom we almost worship. Without drifting into a speech, I will simply say that I wrote to him and then followed implicitly President Woolsey's advice. All may not have followed as I hoped for, but I do feel that, in that matter, I found the true key to the situation."

In thus taking the people into his confidence, President Hayes makes clear many matters which had previously appeared inexplicable.

Gen. Garfield's Nomination is Regarded with satisfaction by the church to which he belongs. The Cincinnati Christian Review, which is the organ of the Church of the Disciples, thus writes of the general's character: "General James A. Garfield is a member of the Church of Christ, and has been for about thirty years. We are glad to record the fact that, besides being a statesman of acknowledged ability, his private life has been pure, and that his Christian character is without a stain. We have known Brother Garfield personally for twenty-five years, and during all that time have known him as an humble Christian, unpretentious in his profession, magnanimous and liberal-hearted, honest, faithful, and philanthropic, with a head and heart ready to serve in the humblest cause of humanity. The last time we were in Washington City, we found him teaching a Bible class in the Sunday-school of a very obscure church. He is one of the biggest hearted Christian men we ever met."

Another Fatal Steamboat Disaster has Followed in the shocking series of which the wreck of the Narragansett was the commencement. On Monday, June 28th the Steamer Seawanhaka, which runs between New York and Glen Cove, L. I., stopping at intermediate ports, caught fire in the East River between Ward's Island and Astoria, and in a few minutes was enveloped in flames. At the time between two hundred and fifty and three hundred passengers were on board, many of them being residents of New York who live during the summer at towns on the Sound.

A slight shock was the first intimation the passengers received that anything was wrong, and almost instantaneously the cry was raised that the vessel was on fire. In the sudden alarm many persons jumped overboard, some of whom were drowned and others killed by the paddle-wheels. The captain was in the wheel-house at the time, and immediately headed the ship for the sunken meadows between Randall's and Ward's Island, where she ran aground. The passengers at this point leaped from the burning vessel, and a large number were able to wade ashore, while others were picked up the boats sent from the shore and passing vessels. Many were afraid to trust themselves to the water, and remained on board until their clothes caught fire. Forty-three bodies have already been recovered, and inquiries have been made as to twenty-eight other persons who were, it is feared, on board the steamer at the time of the disaster.

The coolness and heroism of the captain are warmly praised by the survivors. While the flames surrounded the wheel-house and scorched his clothes, he held his position at the wheel, although his hands were so blistered by the fire that he suffered torture. The wisdom of his course too, which was not evident at first sight, was clearly proved afterward. Had he ste the vessel for the nearest land, the flames w have been carried by the wind to the ste the vessel and so all the passengers would ably have been burned, but in keeping th to the wind the flames were confined stern until the ship ran on the Meadows captain is now in the hospital; his inj serious, but it is hoped will not prove fatal.

These appalling calamities, following e other in such rapid succession, proclaim a sole warning of the uncertainty of life.

Among the Passengers on Board the S wanhaka was the Rev. Jacob W. Diller, D. Rector Emeritus of St. Luke's Episcopal Chur Brooklyn. He completely lost his presence mind and although his daughter who accompa him fastened a life preserver around him, could not be persuaded to jump into the wa His daughter stayed by his side entreating to save himself, until her own clothes cau fire, when she reluctantly sprang over the and was rescued. Her father was burned death.

Dr. Diller was born in Lancaster, Pa., enty-eight years ago. He was associated the Rev. Dr. Muhlenberg for many years, acted as tutor of mathematics under him. forty years ago he was ordained a deacon, was associated in the ministry with Dr. Jo son, of St. John's Church, Brooklyn. He five or six years rector of a church in the cese of Vermont. About thirty years ago was chosen rector of St. Luke's Church, Clin Avenue, Brooklyn, and has been in charge that parish ever since.

Mr. Charles A. Dana, the editor of the York Sun, Mr. J. W. Harper, of the emi publishing house, and many other promi citizens were also on board, but were provi tially rescued. The Rev. Wm. E. Webste the Methodist Church, the recently appoi agent of the La Teche Seminary in Louisi and his wife were also among the saved.

Another Appalling Calamity which aced the passengers of a river steamer was p dentially averted on Tuesday, June 29th. Steamer Long Branch, with about a thou passengers on board, the majority of w were teachers and children of the Sunday S of the Hanson Place Baptist Church, Broo was run into by an oil barge in the East R Her stern was carried away and a hole ten wide made in her side, and but for the fact her water tight bulkheads were closed, she have sunk on the spot. As it was, she was into a slip on the New York shore and secu No lives were lost and the passengers, being t ferred to another steamer, proceeded on journey devoutly thankful to God for His serving mercy.

The Annual Camp Meeting at the Thou Island Park, this summer, will commen July 11th under Chancellor Haven. The mainder of the programme is as follows: 21–27—Scientific and Esthetic Conference. 28–August 1—The International Christian perance Camp-Meeting Association of United States and Canada. August 4–15— day-school Parliament. August 16–21—Th ternational Society for Investigating and moting the Science of Teaching. August 2 —The Christian Summer Training College Lay Workers. August 26–31—The course o tures on Social Science.

A Church has been Given by Mr. Geor Seney, the President of the New York M politan Bank, to the Methodist Connection is erected at Bernardsville, N. J., and has $10,000, the whole of which has been paid by Seney, whose previous munificent gifts to Wesleyan University have rendered his prominent among liberal donors.

A Lady in Tennessee has Sent us Ten Do for the Persian Famine and ten dollars fo American Bible Society. These generous d tions have been paid by us, the one to the byterian Board of Foreign Missions, and other to the Society's treasurer.

In the Scene of Distress and Confusion on ard the Stonington after she had collided with e Narragansett on June 11th a Christian min- er among the passengers was able to render uable service. This was Rev. Edward Ander- n, of Quincy, just returning from the funeral his father. He proffered his services to the cers of the Stonington, and they were ac- ted; and the care of the perishing, as they e snatched from the waves and received ard that ship, was intrusted to him, while to wife, who showed equal self-possession and itude, were given in charge the many half- wned little children. Mr. Anderson is of the nion that more than a hundred persons must e perished.

n Army Officer was Saved from a Drunkard's ve through a short residence in the Inebriate A lum. He related the circumstances at a re- t meeting of that institution. After he re- ned from the civil war his father retired from ness as a manufacturer, and the officer suc- led him, but he became a hard-drinking man; property became involved, and he was re- d by debts and bad management to the e of ruin. His creditors agreed, if he would e an effort to recover by going to some m, they would give him time to save him- He did so, and after six months' treatment e, he returned, and is to-day, through the ing of God on the means employed, a suc- ul, temperate man. Before this he had many efforts through societies, and by l, to reform, but all had failed.

brother officer, and an attached friend, who e close of the war had become a farmer, also nder the power of drink, but he refused to an asylum, as he said his falls were only ional, and he was not a confirmed drunk- At length his wife died, and in an attack lirium, he set fire to his buildings, and was after found dead by the roadside. He left hildren to the cold charities of the world, y his influence did much to lower the so- of his town, and encourage evil.

Effort to Resuscitate Life in a Criminal had been executed, was made recently at eport, Conn., by Dr. Porter, an army sur- The result was an utter failure. The r was able by his electrical appliances to e action to the lungs and other organs. the heart was tried. This was the supreme nt, for could the central engine of organic once more set in motion, and the stream ood pass freely into and out of the lungs, imera of once more living after death had red would have been successfully solved. e heart remained motionless, and the doc- knowledged himself beaten. Thus man is t the limit of his power. Physical life and al life are both the gift of God, and man endent for both on Him and Him alone. 36 : 9).

unatic's Letter.—A Letter was sent re- to Superintendent Louis D. Pillsbury, is a curiosity of correspondence. It ap- that the use of writing materials is forbid- the inmates of the lunatic asylums, but izzie King, who is confined in the Auburn n, desiring to bring her case under the of the authorities, conceived an ingenious for evading the regulation. She obtained sion of a Bible deposited in the asylum by merican Bible Society, and cut from its each letter as she needed it to make up ition. She stitched these letters together ntences grammatically constructed, and raphically correct, and the stitching was tly done as to be almost invisible. The s a work of art was so peculiar in its na- re, that Governor Cornell requested the e to retain it, which was granted.

An Engineer's Fright.—A Steam Fire En- ne, hich cost the Common Council of Asbury rk 4000, was ordered out for trial on June th. The fireman got a good head of steam on, he engineer, Bartine Green, took charge teamer. Trying one of the steam cocks, d there was little water in the boiler. He ly turned the pump tank, when he found it would not admit any water into the boiler. Thoroughly frightened he forsook his engine, and, with his fireman, beat a hasty retreat. Green then returned and made frantic efforts to turn the pump, but without avail. The boiler seemed to be at white heat, and now thoroughly convinced that an explosion must take place, he turned and fled. After running forty yards, Green fell in a swoon, and from night until morning he was unconscious. When he came out of the swoon, his first words were "Pull the valve." The doctors think his condition precarious. The engine exploded and became a total wreck.

When the engineer saw that his life was in peril, having done his utmost to save his employers' property, he had the wisdom to fly; but there are many men who in circumstances where their souls are placed in peril, by temptations to sin they have not the strength to resist, remain in the danger instead of seeking safety in flight (Matt. 5 : 29).

A Brave Soldier's Attachment to his Flag was evinced at Washington the other day. The flag of Stonewall Jackson's corps has recently been unfurled in the bunting room of the War Department at Washington. A southerner called with two friends and asked to see it. It was handed to him. In silence he held it for some time, then on his knees he carefully spread it on the floor. When one of his friends asked him what he was doing, he answered, tears streaming from his eyes, "Can't the father look at the son, or the son at his father? This flag my father held when he fell upon the battle-field; this flag my brother held—he too died; I also carried it." Whereupon he raised his hands to heaven and poured out a most fervent prayer. His friends had hard work to get him to give up the flag. A tattered end falling on the floor, the officer in charge picked up the piece and gave it to the man, and he departed. The flag represented to the poor man the cause for which he and his relatives had fought, and he loved it. So the holy cause for which missionaries risk their lives in heathen lands is loved, and the Master whom they serve will, when they have finished their work, receive them into mansions prepared for them.

An Examination of Students who were Deaf, dumb, and blind took place on Wednesday, June 23d, at the New York Institution on Washington Heights. The principal, Dr. Isaac L. Peet, gave various interesting exhibitions of their skill and accomplishments. A blind, deaf, and dumb boy, about fourteen years old, who had had less than a year's instruction, was given an order to count out twenty crayons and put them under a mat. The order was given by means of the sign language, transmitted by feeling the motions of the hands of the person who communicated with him. The order was correctly performed amid the applause of the audience. A blind deaf mute also wrote several sentences on a type-writer, and on another type-writer a deaf mute without hands wrote by means of a stick inserted in his coat-sleeve.

Drowned by a Leaden Life-preserver.—D. P. Newell, a well-known real estate dealer of Chicago, is supposed to have been drowned under peculiar circumstances. His mind has been diseased lately, and he had become impressed with the notion that he had invented a life-preserver composed of lead. He took passage one day last week on the steamer Sheboygan for Grand Haven across the lake. He left word for his wife that he was going out to try his invention, and that she would soon know the result. It appears that when half way to the other shore, he quietly undressed, and, binding the lead which he carried with him about his body, slipped unobserved into the water. His body has not been seen since, and will probably never be recovered.

Sinners are continually doing in spiritual matters as this man did with his body. They invent a way of salvation different from God's way, or trust to their own righteousness, and the end is infinitely more disastrous than death.

FREE GRACE A MOTIVE FOR FREE GIVING.

A New Sermon by the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

(On behalf of the Free Hospitals of London.)

"Now our Lord Jesus Christ Himself, and God, even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts, and establish you in every good word and work."—2 Thessalonians 2 : 16, 17.

The Coming of the Lord the grandest Hope of the Church—The Thessalonians Perplexed—I. Importance of Believers Enjoying Consolation—It Increases Valor—Paul's Emphatic Expression—It Affects the Heart—Prevents Impatience—Promotes Fruitfulness—II. Gospel Consolations Bestowed Freely—Described as a Gift—By Jesus Himself—And God the Father—The Divine Love—Through Grace—The Consolations are Everlasting—Human Merit as a Foundation for Hope—Like a Shadow Buttressed by a Dream—People who Imagine Sin is Dead in them—III. Consolations should lead to a Life of Benevolence—In Action and in Word—The London Hospitals.

The Thessalonian saints had been much persecuted and afflicted, and they had exhibited great faith, insomuch that Paul says, "We ourselves glory in you in the church of God for your patience and faith." As if they had not enough trouble coming from the outside, there sprang up in their midst certain hot-headed teachers who declared that the day of Christ was immediately at hand. The coming of the Lord is the grandest hope of the church, and it is an evidence of the extreme power of error to poison and pervert truth that a hope which is our brightest consolation can be so twisted as to cause the saints to be "shaken in mind" and troubled.

So it appears to have been with the Thessalonians. They were perplexed with mysterious rumors, which the zealots probably supported by a misinterpretation of the apostle's own language in his former letter to them. It would appear that they were tempted to leave their regular habits of life: and some of them neglected their business upon the theory that there was no need to attend to it, because the world was so speedily to be at an end.

This gave an occasion for "busybodies" to cease from working, and create great disquietude among the more sober members, and therefore Paul wrote them this second letter, with the earnest intent that they might be established in the truth and kept from evil, that disorderly walking might be repressed, and that the church might be at peace. Paul felt that it was of the utmost importance that this honorable church should be at rest, and should not lack consolation, either as to its bitter persecutions or its internal difficulties.

My subject this morning leads me to make this the first point to be dwelt upon—it is most important that believers should enjoy consolation. When I have for a while spoken upon that, I would with delight expatiate upon the fact that this consolation is most freely provided and bestowed in the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; and it is from this subject that I purpose to draw a practical inference which may help the collection for the hospitals, namely, that the freeness with which these consolations are given to us should lead us to a holy benevolence toward others who need consolation.

I. First, then, it is of the utmost importance that believers should enjoy

CONSOLATION.

We must not say that it does not matter whether we are doubting or believing, whether we are sighing or rejoicing: it does matter a great deal. Every commander knows that if he has not his soldiers in good heart, there may be a great many of them, and they may be well trained for war, but the battle is not likely to be won.

Courage is essential to valor. Much depends upon the case in which a man finds himself upon the eve of conflict. If the soldier has no stomach for the fight, as our forefathers were wont to say, he will make a sorry display when the tug of war comes on. The Lord delights not to see His people with their heads hanging down like bulrushes, depressed and dismayed. His word to them is, "Be strong; fear not."

Paul puts this prayer into a very remarkable shape: to my mind it is expressed in a deeply solemn form, for he writes, "Now our Lord Jesus Christ Himself." Was there need for that word "Himself?" Does it not make it very emphatic that he seems to call upon the Lord Jesus to give them comfort, not by any intermediate agency, but in His own person and by His own power. It is so essential that we should be comforted that Jesus, even our own Lord Jesus Christ, is entreated Himself to become the consolation of His people. Is not that a weighty matter which leads the reverent heart of Paul thus to plead?

Nor is this the only instance in the epistle where this desire is expressed, for a little further on, in the third chapter, at the sixteenth verse, we have it in other words but with equal forcefulness: "Now the Lord of peace Himself give you peace always by all means. I do not know that in one single sentence there could be compressed a more intense desire that they may be at peace.

"The Lord" is invoked, and He is styled "the Lord of peace," that all His divine majesty may be seen, and His peace-making power may be displayed. "The Lord of peace" is entreated to give peace, not by His angels nor by His ministers, nor by His providence, but "Himself" to give peace; and this is asked for "always," "give you peace always." Peace in the cool of the evening is not enough, it is needed at all parts of the day, in all the days of the year, in every period of life, in every place, and under all circumstances.

The wish is expressed with great breadth in the words, "Give you peace always by all means:" if it cannot be brought by one means let it be by another, but somehow or other may you enjoy the peace which the Lord alone can create. I cannot imagine that such a prayer as this would have been placed among the Scriptures of truth, which are to be our guide till the Lord cometh, unless it had been of the utmost importance that we should enjoy peace of mind.

The apostle almost hints at one reason for this strong necessity, for in one word he lets us see that it is a vital blessing because it affects the Christian's heart. His expression is, "Comfort your hearts." It is well to have a strong hand, how else shall we labor? It is well to have a firm tread, how else shall we stand? Yet these are secondary matters as compared with a healthy heart. A disease of the heart is an injury to the whole man. If anything goes amiss at the fountain the streams of life soon feel it. The entire manhood depends upon the heart; hence the need of comfort for the heart, and the value of the promise "He shall strengthen thine heart."

It is a calamity when the springs of action are weakened, and the spirit is made to sink. "The spirit of a man will sustain his infirmity, but a wounded spirit who can bear?" Touch the flesh where else you will, but spare the brain and the heart, for these are the man so nearly, that he is wounded to the quick when these are hurt. When the spirits begin to sink then the waters have come in, even into the soul. Hence our Lord said to His disciples, "Let not your heart be troubled." However your house may be troubled, however your bodily frame may be troubled, "let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me." Faith upholds the heart, and enables the man to bear up under pressure; faith, I say, and nothing else.

Brethren, this confidence is needful to prevent

IMPATIENCE AND OTHER EVILS.

Possibly it was the lack of comfort which led certain of the Thessalonians to preach the immediate coming of the Lord: their impatience excited the wish, and the wish led on to the assertion. When men lose the present comfort of plain gospel doctrines they are very apt to begin speculating, and in carnal heat foretelling the coming of the Lord. They left that patient waiting which is our duty, for a fevered prophesying which is nowhere encouraged in the Word of God. Hence the apostle said to them in the fifth verse of the third chapter, "The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ."

Laziness and despondency lead many to cry, "Why are His chariots so long in coming?" just as idle workmen long for Saturday night. You think time too long and life too long, for you are not happy where your Lord has placed you, and you are eager to rush out of the field of service into the chamber of rest. This will not do, my brethren, either for you or for me. We must be braced up to further labor. We must receive comfort in our spirit that we may be able patiently to toil on, however long life may be, and however long our Lord may delay; for if not, if we grow impatient, we may resort to rash fanatical action, as I have already shown you that certain Thessalonians did.

Under the idea that the Lord was coming they neglected their daily calling, and became busybodies, gadding about from house to house, and loafing upon others who did not pretend to be quite so spiritual. They were mere star-gazers, looking for the advent with their mouths open and their eyes upturned, being evermore in grievous danger of falling into a ditch. Paul bade them get to work and eat their own bread, quoting himself as an example, for he had wrought with labor and travail night and day that he might not be chargeable to them.

My friend, if you are growing impatient for the day of the Lord, I pray that comfort of heart may cool you. To-morrow morning take down the shop shutters and sell your goods as if Christ were not coming at all, for should He come you will be all the more fit to meet Him for being engaged in your calling. If I knew that the Lord would come to-morrow I should attend to my regular Monday duties, and on no account leave one of them to go and stand at the window, looking for wonders. Whether the Master comes to-morrow or in a thousand years your wisest course is to follow your calling in His fear and for His sake. We ought to do our work better under the impression that perhaps He may come and find us at it; but we may not neglect our duty under pretence of His appearing.

Of this, however, be sure, you will not patiently wait if you are not happy. You will not go on conscientiously plodding, doing the same work, walking in the same regular way, unless your heart is stayed upon God. You will run after this novelty or that if your mind is not resting in Jesus. Hence the devout prayer of our text that God our Father and our Lord Jesus Christ Himself may comfort our hearts and establish us in every good word and work.

Once more, I am sure this comfort is eminently desirable, because

IT PROMOTES FRUITFULNESS.

The apostle more than hints at this: "Comfort your hearts and stablish you in every good word and work." When we are not happy in the Lord we do not give ourselves heartily to His service. We grow impatient, and then we need the exhortation of the thirteenth verse of the third chapter, "But ye, brethren, be not weary in well doing." If we feel that Jesus is ours, that all things are working for our good, and that eternal glory is secured to us by a sure covenant, we are moved by gratitude to complete consecration, for the love of Christ constraineth us.

So it all comes to this. We, who are constitutionally despondent, must not give way to depressions; we must cry to God to help us by the divine Comforter. We must aim at being cheerful Christians. We have abundant reasons for being cheerful, for the Father Himself loveth us and hath given us everlasting consolation in Christ Jesus. Do not let us be so unwise, and so ungrateful, as to neglect these consolations of the Spirit. Is it not apparent that we are invigorated, equipped, and prepared for our Lord's use when we are strong in the Lord and t power of His might? Therefore, let us breat earnestly to God the desire that His everlasti consolation may be laid home to our spirits, a that our hearts may be comforted at this n ment.

II. We shall now turn to the second point our meditation, which is this: Gospel conso tion is

MOST FREELY BESTOWED.

I want, in the chief place, to call your att tion to the manner in which all the way throu the freeness of divine consolation is set before by the apostle.

First, observe that the consolations bestow upon believers are most free because they are scribed as a gift. "Now our Lord Je Christ Himself, and God, even our Fath which hath loved us, and hath given us ev lasting consolation." Every blessing that we ceive from God comes as a gift. We have p chased nothing: what have we to purchase with? We have earned nothing: what w did we ever do that could deserve everlast consolation from the hand of the great Lord

The freeness of this gift is seen in every p of it. The consolation given us of God is v complete, but it is as manifestly free as it is dently perfect. Notice its completeness, I p you. It covers the past with these gol words, "which hath loved us:" as for the p ent, it is enriched with this truth, "hath gi us everlasting consolation;" and as for future, it is glorified with this blessing, " good hope through grace." Here is a tr comfort, a consolation in three words, and der each aspect it is a free favor.

Lest we should make any mistake about th consolations coming to us most freely, the ap tle mentions One from whose hand they co from whom nothing has ever come in ot manner but that of manifest grace. He m tions "our Lord Jesus Christ Himself." Oh charms me to think that he should comfort When Jesus Christ begins to draw near a m soul his joy begins; but when the Lord Himself down steadily to console His breth I warrant you it is done in heavenly style: for will not fail nor be discouraged.

He will wash our feet if the weariness there; He will give His bosom for a pillow our head if the pain be there. He hath s "I will make all his bed in his sickness,' that if the woe comes from disease He will c us there. He will anoint our eyes with salve if the eyes are failing, and bind up broken heart if that be bleeding. Lest we fal will put underneath us the everlasting arms, lest we be wounded He will spread over us shadow of His wing. He will be all to us He is in Himself: judge ye what that is. know that the comforts of the Gospel mus graciously free since they are brought to u Jesus Christ Himself.

Then the apostle solemnly adds, "and our Father." There seems to me to be a pec touch of sweetness about this. It is not " the Father"—which notes his relation to J but our Father, which sets forth His relatio us. We love God the Father; unto the Fa be glory for ever and ever: but as "our Fat He comes nearer to us, and gladdens our he Now, a father does not pay wages to his dren; his gifts to them are freely bestowed o the love of his fatherly heart. What father pects to be paid for what he does for his and daughters? Thus we see that the ever ing consolations of the Gospel, coming to u cause we are the children of God, are quite from anything which makes them a hire debt, and they come to us in the freest pos manner, as spontaneous donations of our Father, whose delight it is to give good gif them that ask him.

Cannot you look up, you desponding one this moment, and cry, "Our Father?" first hymn greatly refreshed my spirit just for I felt very heavy till the Holy Ghost forted me with it;

"If in my Father's love
I share a filial part.
Send down thy Spirit, like a dove,
To rest upon my heart,"

d felt that I could urge that argument, and in inmost heart I pleaded it before the Lord : , if I be indeed thy child and thou be a Father me, then deal with me as with a son, and let feel Thy Spirit resting within my bosom, t I may know myself to be Thine beyond a ubt. Oh, how sweet to feel the Spirit's witness to cry, "Abba, Father!" Now, beloved, spirit of adoption is never a spirit of bondor legality ; it never boasts of human merit, its one song is "free grace and dying love." y our Father's free favor make your hearts to concerning this, and I know that this will our strain—

"Behold what wondrous grace,
The Father hath bestow'd
On sinners of a mortal race,
To call them sons of God!"

ook at the text again, and you will see how cit Paul is upon one point. To make us see freeness of those consolations which come od's troubled people, he writes it, "Our Jesus Christ Himself, and God, even our er, which hath loved us." Divine

LOVE IS THE FOUNDATION

r consolation. No everlasting consolation have visited our hearts if the Father and on had not loved us.

lways feel inclined to sit down when my stry causes me to come across the great of God's love to His people : because it is o much a truth to speak upon with the e as to enjoy in silence in the heart. I can understand that God should pity my misery ; comprehend God's caring for my weak- but I am filled with sacred amazement I am told that He loves me. Loves me! can there be in me for the Holy Ghost to Brother, what can there be in you that should set His heart on you?

y say that love is blind : I will not say that edeemer's love is of that sort, far rather say that it must have been wonderfully sighted love to have been able to perceive ing lovable in us. Yet is his love the and fountain of all our mercies. He oved us. Question there can be none that free : for love is unpurchasable ; if a man give all the substance of his house for would utterly be contemned. Love goes the market ; it knows nothing of price, or : it must go forth unbribed, unhired, or all, in any case ; and far more in the in- of the eternal love of the great Father, is only begotten Son. Price and purchase ine love? Wherein would such an insin- fall short of blackest blasphemy?

again, observe that, as if the apostle that we should get away from this docf grace, he added, "He hath given us ting consolation and good hope through ' Some people do not like the sound of ord "grace." "It is too Calvinistic. not care what you call it, but it is the st word in the Bible next to the name of r Saviour. It is from the grace of God our hope begins. Man as a rebel can arn anything but damnation through his rits : grace must reign, or man must die.

ose this part of the subject I would reat this is the reason why the consolaich God gives us are everlasting. Dwell word "everlasting." Do not suffer anyritter away its meaning. You may safet that there are certain folks alive who hat everlasting has not the meaning of duration, for it means that or nothing. e too much personal interest involved in d to allow it to be toned down into age- or any other miserable sense. We should think that the Bible meant the opposite it seems to do as believe that everlasting omething temporary.

Is given us everlasting consolation, and on why it is everlasting is because it is founded on the grace of God. If it were built upon our merits it would stand upon a foundation of ice or mist : it would rest on a shadow buttressed by a dream : but if God loved us out of pure grace, and if Jesus Christ has given us consolation out of pure love, and if our whole comfort rests upon the sovereign grace of God in Christ Jesus, then there is no reason why it should ever pass away unless God's grace can evaporate, which cannot be, since God changeth not, but must be for evermore the same. Our Lord Jesus changeth not, for He is the "same yesterday, to-day, and forever."

Ah, you high-fliers, who derive a lofty comfort from your feelings, your happy sensations, your holy works, and your belief that sin is dead in you, fly away as much as you can, you will be brought down one of these days! Like Icarus in the Grecian fable, who flew so high that he melted the wax of his wings and fell, so will it be with all who venture aloft on wings of self-confidence. He who lies humbly at God's feet, conscious of his sin, and mourning over it, and resting for everything upon sovereign grace and free mercy in Christ Jesus, he may keep where he is with safety, for his hope shall never fail him.

III. So far have I brought you ; now for our closing point, which is a practical one. Since these consolations of God's love have been so freely bestowed upon us they should lead us to

A LIFE OF HOLY BENEVOLENCE.

We ought to be free in our giving to others, since God has been so free in His giving to us. As He has abounded toward us in infinite liberality we ought to abound toward all with whom we come in contact up to the full measure of our ability, in all love and kindness and mercy.

In every benevolent enterprise Christian men should take a hearty interest. Read that seventeenth verse—"Comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good word and work." I am a man, and being a man, everything that concerns men concerns me. I am a Christian man, and as a follower of Christ, the Son of Man, everything that can do good to my fellowmen is a matter in which I delight to take my share.

This should be done in direct actions as well as in words. Read—"Stablish you in every good word and work." Certain of the oldest manuscripts run "In every good work and word," and I suppose in our new translation we shall have it so, and very properly too. In this case work is probably first, and word next.

Some Christian people think that "word" should be everything and work nothing, but the Scriptures are not of their mind. These professors speak a great deal about what they will do, talk a great deal about what other people ought to do, and a great deal more about what others fail to do ; and so they go on with word, word, word, and nothing else but word. They do not get as far as "work," but the apostle put work first in this case, as much as to say, "whether you talk about it or not, do it."

This should be done without pressure. No one could lay constraint upon God to bless His people, no pressure was put upon Christ to redeem us ; everything, as we have shown, was spontaneous, sovereign, free. Even so should men give to God out of an overflowing heart.

THE LONDON HOSPITALS.

The particular case before us this morning is, to my mind, a very important one, and one which should greatly move all generous spirits. In this great city of near upon four millions of inhabitants, the provision of hospital accommodation is small to a painful degree. In those hospitals which will be helped by the collections of to-day I think there are only 5,531 beds, or about one for 723 persons. Considering the liability of working men to disease and accident, and the great number of the poorer classes, this is a fearfully small preparation for possible necessity.

But this is not the worst, for out of these 5,000 beds, as I gather from an admirable paper in The Lancet, there are never more than 3,232 in daily use, thus diminishing the supply to an appalling extent. These empty beds are very largely made so by the lamentable fact that the hospitals have not the means of using them. The depression in trade has been felt by our free hospitals to such an extent that they live from hand to mouth in a manner which is not honorable to one of the wealthiest cities in the world. The Hospital Sunday Collection has not yet come up to the proper mark, and it is time for ministers to say so, and instruct their people, who if they knew the need would promptly supply it.

The Lancet wisely says that if the sermons of to-day could be preached in the hospitals themselves, the collections would be doubled. There are many objections to carrying out the suggestion, but I have no doubt the result would be as anticipated. Suppose me, then, to be preaching in one of the great wards and yourselves to be standing among the beds, I know those poor creatures lying near you writhing in pain, and those others grateful for the relief they have received, would plead much more forcibly than I can. The sight of suffering is the best argument with benevolence. Look at the rows of sick folk and let your heart be touched.

As the service could not well be held in the hospital, The Lancet suggests that the ministers should spend Saturday in going over a hospital. I could not very well do that, but I have tried in my mind vividly to realize the scene, and I think most of you are quite as able to draw the picture as I am, for you have been there to see for yourselves, and some of you have been there as patients to partake for yourselves in hospital benefits. Picture the wards of mercy, and let every sick person there entreat you to help the funds of these admirable institutions.

An exceedingly powerful plea to my mind arises from

THOSE EMPTY BEDS.

There they are, two thousand of them! Waiting to be couches of hope to the suffering. Alas, they cannot be filled because there is not the means for providing the people with food and nourishment. Sorrowful necessity! I cannot endure to think of it. A bed for a sick man rendered useless by some one's meanness! Where is the niggard? Surely he is not here!

It would be even more painful to go to the homes where those persons who ought to occupy those empty beds are pining for the want of the hospital help, waiting the next turn—which turn may find them in the grave—but which turn would come to-morrow morning if funds were forthcoming. Must they lie there till they are beyond the reach of surgical help because the wealthy of this so-called Christian city cannot spare a little from their luxuries to furnish poor sick humanities with nutriment? Oh, that one with a trumpet tongue could speak to our nobles, our merchants, our traders, our gentlemen of leisure, and bid them consider the sick poor. Oh, that they all knew the exquisite luxury of doing good!

I ask you, dear friends, according as God has intrusted you with this world's wealth, to help the hospitals. I do this with all the greater confidence, because you are believers in the doctrines of free grace. Give freely, for you have received freely. Remember that yesterday and to-day Jews, Catholics, Protestant, people of all sects, have heartily joined in this common effort for suffering humanity, and if those who believe in the free grace of God are behindhand, nay, if they are not among the foremost in the race, it will be to the dishonor of the glorious Gospel which they profess.

The Lord accept your offerings as you now present them! I hear the sound of your gold and silver already, for you are eager in the work of mercy. The collectors are a little too rapid in their work, but I will not restrain them, for it is a fit ending to my discourse that you should hasten to pass from word to work. In so doing may God bless you. Amen.

The collections amounted to £257 [$1238].

[PORTIONS OF SCRIPTURE READ BEFORE SERMON —2 Thess. 1 ; 2 : 1-4 ; 3 : 13-17.]

A BLESSED NATION.

A New Sermon by Dr. Deems, preached at the Church of the Strangers, New York, on Independence Day, July 4, 1880.

"Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord."—Psa. 33 : 12.

Patriotism of Instinct not of Reason—Not so lofty a Sentiment as Christian love—I. Patriotism may be Fostered by Considering our Advantages—1. Our Location—Its Isolation—2. Our Solidarity—Without Colonies—3. Our Immense Resources—4. Our Extent of Territory—5. Our Growth in Solitude—6. Mingled Blood—7. Our Elastic Institutions.—II. We may have all these and not be a Blessed Nation—1. We may lose Happiness by having no God—2. By having wrong Gods—III. The Ground of Blessedness—In having Jehovah for our Lord—We must know Him—Honor His Name—Keep His Commandments—As Individuals and as a Nation.

Patriotism, my brethren, appears to be a spontaneous sentiment that does not spring from our reason but from our instincts. When a man says, "I love this land because it is my native land," he does not assign a reason for his love; he is simply reduplicating a sentiment. It is as if he said, "I am a patriot, because I am a patriot."

Patriotism is not one of the noblest or loftiest sentiments of our nature; yet there is in it an element of culture which no man can afford to despise. It is sometimes said that Christianity is antagonistic to patriotism; but the charge is not true. Christianity cultivates a loftier sentiment, in teaching that all men the world over are brothers. It thus, in binding us to all the world by that which is nearest, cultivates within us a higher—a sanctified patriotism. Christianity does not destroy patriotism, it rather may be expected that a Christian is a better patriot for being a Christian.

I. But though we regard patriotism as an instinct, our reason may be employed to cultivate it, by an examination of the advantages of one's own country. In our own case it is our duty to look at

THE CATALOGUE OF BLESSINGS

God has bestowed on these United States. An occasion for exercising that duty is furnished to the people of this country, by the day on which we celebrate the birth of the nation; on a day when a hundred and four years ago the Declaration of Independence was signed. In looking at that catalogue I notice some things which make men whose wisdom is only worldly wisdom say, "Blessed is that Nation."

1. Our Location is peculiar. Where is there a nation of such a size, holding so much territory, which stands in such entire isolation. We stand here alone between the seas. The nation nearest to us in our sympathies, the nation from which we sprang, is so far from us in actual distance that we do not rub each other. True, there is a little fishery business now and then, to trouble our relations, but it is not serious enough to disturb our tranquillity. But in Europe every great nation is so closely packed among its neighbors that there is perpetual friction. What would the Czar of all the Russias give, to have an Atlantic roll on one of his coasts and a Pacific on another? In this particular, men and nations resemble fruit; they do well if they are not packed too closely. Contact produces corruption and decay. A narrow channel separates England from France, and we are reminded in history that it did not suffice to prevent disagreements, quarrels, and war.

That little island in the North Sea, which at first was inhabited by people who grubbed out their habitations from the earth, has been so blessed of God that now she boasts that the rising sun is saluted by the beating of her drums the whole world round. She is a little land, that you may walk across in a few days, and that you may ride across in a few hours, but she has acquired more territory than any other European nation, and she is chiefly indebted for her prosperity to the isolated position she occupies among the nations of Europe. But the isolation we enjoy, is far more complete, and in a worldly light men say of us "that is a blessed nation," because we stand just as we do.

2. Another worldly advantage we possess is

OUR SOLIDARITY.

We stand all compact; we are all together. Other nations of the earth—and England is an instance of this—are affrighted every day and every hour by the very source of their wealth. What would England be without her colonies? Take from her her star-bedizened banner of India, her young and flourishing Dominion of Canada, her wide territory in Australia, or her colonies in South Africa, and what would England be? But we have no colonies, and we thank God for that, and we pray that God in His mercy may spare us such an infliction. Everything that a man or a nation has, in dress or address, in state or estate, that is useless is probably hurtful.

I have seen brave young officers dining in the London clubs who have gone to other climes to fight in defence of these outlying dependencies. At one time sent to freeze in the severities of a Russian winter; at another, sent to scorch under an African sun; and this they do cheerfully, and they come back to their clubs in ordinary attire, wearing no uniform or decoration, and sit there so modestly that you have no idea there is anything heroic about them. They fought to defend the colonies of their country, for the stability of their country makes it necessary that they should be defended. But we have no distant provinces to defend, and worldly and even atheistical statesmen say, on that account, "Blessed is that nation."

3. Then look at

OUR IMMENSE RESOURCES.

People say to an American, travelling in Europe, "Have you such productions in your country?" Ninety-nine times, out of a hundred, he may safely say "yes" with his eyes blindfolded. On some beautiful bright morning the American traveller is often asked, "Do you get weather like this in America?" I have sometimes said "Certainly. We have all kinds of weather at the same time. To-day some of our citizens are gathering oranges for their breakfast and others are sleighing in snow five feet deep."

If a wall were built round this great land so high that no one could scale it, we could still live and flourish without help from any other people. Could you say that of Great Britain with all her wealth? Of France—sunny France, that paid the enormous war indemnity? Of Germany with her gigantic military power? Is there any nation that could grow, or even exist under such conditions? Could even China? No.—We could. There is nothing any nation possesses that we absolutely need, that we could not dispense with. God has bestowed on us everything needful in a natural sense, to build up the greatest nationality the world has ever seen. Is not that enough to make this a blessed land?

There is a blessing too in our relations with the rest of the nations. What are we doing to-day? Feeding the world. Years ago we had a nursing mother. Now we are nourishing her. Men say "we must have peace with that nation for our teeming millions depend on her for food." When Ireland starves, who feeds her? America. England is in that position of dependence, that if we were to say "Not a cargo of food shall cross the Atlantic," the power of England would drop like a paralyzed arm. I thank God and you ought to thank God that he has raised us up to feed that grand, brave nation.

4. Another peculiarity which from a worldly point-view makes this a blessed nation is

THE AMOUNT OF ROOM WE HAVE.

All the blessings I have mentioned have fallen to a people who are not restricted for room. Sometimes we are a little crowded in New Yo but we have only to cross the river and find room. Go out a thousand miles and find plenty of room. Go out two thousa miles, three thousand miles and you find s more room.

What is it that makes Westminster Hal place full of anxious faces? It is a crowd England, a crowded Ireland. Everywh there is a cry, "We have no room for exp sion." You and I do not know what it is, less we have lived in those densely popula countries, to be so restricted for room but almost every land that complaint is made. I we have no such experience, we cannot real it any more than some bachelor living with sister in some great mansion with its twe rooms, with plenty of servants, can realize condition of families in our crowded New Y tenement houses. As for us, we can go W and go West and still find lands waiting to pay the tiller of the land with an abundanc wealth.

5. A fifth blessing of which we are at this enjoying the benefit, is in which the old original colonies grew. and I who are Southerners may, as we l back to the founders of our nation, thank for those Cavaliers who came to this country their Bibles in their hands, and with their c vated minds and courtly manners. You are of New England birth can think with g tude of those sturdy Puritans who came ov the Mayflower. You can recall the hards of those early years; of their labors, their a eties, and their sorrows. Of the perils o mine and of disease, and of the Indians who rounded their homes and the cradles of t babes. Theirs was a doleful lot, and to-day reap the harvest they sowed in tears.

THE VAST SOLITUDE

Those Godly founders of the Nation cre such a moral character in this land that w not now fear the crowds of immigrants come not in twenties or thirties, but in thousa in entire towns. There came over in the s vessel in which I sailed, enough immigran form a whole town. If such crowds had la on these shores soon after those Puritans Cavaliers came, such crowds as now arri Castle Garden, the country and the Go ment would have been swamped. But no strong is the moral life of the nation th do not fear them, we can welcome them, as the thousands arrive we can say, "Com come on." The heat in the boiler is so that we can pour in these gallons of unas lated water and the steam is not decreased

6. Another ground of blessing is that

WE ARE NOT ALL OF ONE FAMILY.

Thank God for that. There is very littl blood in America, and the quicker that reddens the better, for blue blood is thinnest thing that keeps life in mortals. blessing came by pouring in this blood that blood in the wealth of God's provid and it has been boiled down until the syr humanity may be gained. There has grafting and crossing and crossing until, can tell but that the rose, the very flower race may unfold its petals and bloom on shores.

Look at the statistics of Immigration, a you count the proportions of English, Irish, and Germans, and French, and Ita and Swedes who are received here, ask selves what will be the end of these t Then with the farsightedness of the state and the scholar, say, "Blessed is this nati

7. We enjoy, lastly, the great blessing

ELASTIC INSTITUTIONS.

Consider what strains have been put o political institutions. My first recollection election are of that when John Quincy was running against Andrew Jackson f Presidency. Of the one candidate it wa he was the "most consummate scound the earth," and of the other I remember ing it said "he was so bad that if he we hell the devil would hardly have him." At ery election we have heard the cry, "This is e great crisis of the nation's history," "Now u are going," "now you are gone." Yet we rvive, we are not gone.

n this we resemble the nation nearest to us. ame out of the desert one day, and was dazed h the announcement that the British Parlia- nt had been dissolved, and that that great stesman who had dazzled kings and queens, the statesmen of all lands, had been rejected the nation, and the other great man had been led in. When I got to England I found the of London rolling on as if nothing had hap- ed; the people went about their daily busi- s and the Queen had gone to her summer dence, everything was just as usual.

he elastic nation is the nation that can r to be pulled out, and pulled out to its ut- st capacity, and being pulled out does not here helplessly, but flies back again to its inal shape. Such a nation has this people wn itself to be.

. Now brethren there comes this question. a nation have all these seven things I e mentioned and yet be swer certainly. Now, what is requisite to e Heaven unite with earth to give us a sing? Bismarck, Disraeli, and other great smen have said, "blessed is that nation," , Lord, what is thy verdict? What is the e of the supernatural—for there is a super- ral.—That voice is clear, "Blessed is that n whose God is the Lord."

NOT A BLESSED NATION.

With all these advantages we may yet lose iness by having no God. Atheism is priva- f fundamentals. It cuts off no streams, t dries up the sources of life and the foun- of blessing. It is so in science, in politics, n social life. You have never had truly tific men who did not plant their science od. There have been men with a great f scientific information who have denied but never a really scientific man.

this nation becomes atheistical, its ings will be turned into curses. Its isola- will become the isolation of an iceberg, its arity the solidarity of a frozen lake. There ever been a nation that denied God that made or maintained its nationality or erity. Remember this, for it applies to in- uals, as individuals make up the nation. mber that every man who does anything ake another man a disbeliever in God, is g away our national greatness. He is no t who does that, but a traitor to his nation s spitting on the national honor and steal- essedness from his mother.

Another way in which we may miss the ng is by having

WRONG GODS.

is there a danger of wrong gods being in America? Certainly, there is great r. We may worship wealth; we may wor- ur institutions. There has come to be eat a reliance placed on our institutions e are apt to look to them as the salvation nation. Our common school system is a in point. The fact is that many of our en are being turned out of the common ls, infidels. It is not long since a parent to me, with tears in his eyes, saying, t shall I do? What shall I do? My as become an infidel. I was too poor to im to a private school and in the com- school he has become an infidel!" An- instance was that of a French lady who e that by association with a teacher in ools she had lost her faith; the progress insidious poison in her soul had been so eptible that she had been unaware of it oo late. The common school system has o beneficial to the nation that there is a of our making it a national idol, and ol may be used to destroy the nation, for teaches that Jehovah uses idols to de- nations. Remember, the voice of God Blessed is the nation that hath common schools, but "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord."

III. THE TRUE GROUND OF BLESSEDNESS

consists simply in having Jehovah for our Lord. Nationally and individually, is this principle true.

We must know Him. Not know Him "as the minister says," but know Him as he is represented in the Bible. There are many representations of Him, which at first sight appear mean and selfish, but when we come to know Him thoroughly we get right views. Thus we read that God is a jealous God, and we think of jealousy as a low contemptible thing. But as we learn more of God's character, we realize that His jealousy is no personal or selfish thing, and that while He is jealous for the right, His mercy toward the wrong-doer is infinite. We must know Him as He was incarnate in Jesus Christ. Know Him as He shone on the cross, as well as when He thundered on Sinai.

We must Honor His name.—Every truly loyal man honors his king, and with a loftier loyalty we should honor our Lord. Individually and nationally; in Congress and in our Houses of Assembly; everywhere throughout society, we ought to teach men to honor the very name of our King.

We should Keep His Commandments.—They are not to be regarded as the promulgation of Moses or some other "Hebrew fellow," they are the voice of Jehovah to men. Men who break the Sabbath, who are profane, who are liars, have lost their power as well as their purity; they are stabbing their nation and stealing its blessedness.

Let every man consider this matter in his political duties. I am no partisan, but I preach the gospel of righteousness. Every man ought to cast his ballot with the thought present in his mind that in that act he is registering his voice as to whether Jehovah shall be the Lord of this nation. If we abstain from voting we are not doing our duty. It is a sin and a shame to be silent on that great question. Let us remember that no man is worthy of our vote who is a godless man, and while there are bad men in all parties, there are good men in all parties, and if we trust in God He will bring the good men to the front. In the day of election, as on every day of life, let us remember that Jesus is our King, and whoso speaks against Him is a disloyal man. As on Calvary Jesus stood for us and brought us salvation and honor, so let us in the casting of every ballot solemnly vote for the Lord Christ as our Republic's King.

THE SOLDIER AND THE WRECKED SEA-BOY.

ROBERT RAIKES'S relations to individual scholars are pleasingly illustrated by several interesting anecdotes, one of which is related by himself as follows, about the year 1800:

"One day, as I was going to church, I overtook a solider just entering the church door; this was on a week-day. As I passed him I said it gave me pleasure to see that he was going to a place of worship. 'Ah, sir!' said he, 'I may thank you for that.' 'Me?' said I. 'Why, I don't know that I ever saw you before.' 'Sir,' replied the soldier, 'when I was a little boy, I was indebted to you for my first instruction in duty. I was one of your Sunday scholars.'" He then told his name, and brought himself to Mr. Raikes's recollection by a curious circumstance which happened while he was at school. His father was a vile, profligate man. After the boy had been some time at school, he told Mr. Raikes one day that his father was wonderfully changed, and that he had left off going to the alehouse on a Sunday. It happened soon after that Mr. Raikes met the man in the street, and said to him, "My friend, it gives me great pleasure to hear that you have left off going to the alehouse on the Sunday; your son tells me that you now stay at home and never get tipsy." He immediately replied that Mr. Raikes had been the means of this change being produced, and accounted for it thus: "The good instruction which you give my boy at the Sunday-school he repeats to me, and this has so convinced me of the error of my former life as to have led to my present reformation."

A touching story of another of Robert Raikes's scholars is told in a small pamphlet, published at the beginning of this century, entitled

THE SEA-BOY'S GRAVE.

The writer of it relates that he once voyaged home from the West Indies in a ship on board of which were a notoriously wicked sailor and also a cabin-boy who had been instructed in one of Raikes's Gloucester schools. The boy's name was Pelham, but among the crew he was known as "Jack Raikes." In the course of the voyage the sailor was struck down with fever, and as he daily grew worse it was feared that he would die unrepentant and without hope. "Jack Raikes," however, obtained leave to nurse him. He watched over him with womanly tenderness, told him of the Saviour he had learnt about at school, and prayed with him constantly and earnestly for salvation in the Redeemer's name. After a while the hard heart melted, and bitterly were the sins of a past misspent life deplored. Then came to this poor seaman, in quicksuc cession, the blessed consciousness of the Saviour's forgiving love, and a triumphant entrance into God's kingdom of glory.

A few days afterward a storm came on. The stout ship, while nearing her destination, was driven far out of her course. With relentless fury the tempest hurried her to destruction on a sunken rock off the northern coast of Scotland, and the sailors, as a last chance, took to the boats. The boat in which "Jack Raikes" found a place was soon overturned by the angry waves, and next morning his body was among the number of those that strewed the neighboring shore. His countenance wore a sweet and heavenly expression. Among his few effects was found his Bible. Engraven on its clasps of brass were these words: "The gift of Robert Raikes to J. R. Pelham."

A JEW'S CONVERSION.

THE following account of how a young Jew was led to Christ is written by himself, and will be read with much interest:

The ways of our Lord are many and wonderful, especially so in bringing a poor sinner to see His love. I was born of Jewish parents, and have been brought up strictly orthodox. Thinking, as every Jew does, that Christianity was idolatry, I hated the very name of it. From my earliest days I supported myself with the earnings of my own labor, and lived as a respectable Jew ought to do; and I have always been respected as such. When at Berlin, I was employed a long time by the president of the Jewish community there. But it pleased God to bring me to Christ.

Without having any special object in view, perhaps from a mere desire to see a little more of the world, I left Berlin for London. Mr. A. met me in the street one day, and spoke to me of salvation through Christ. At first I would not listen to him. I could not see that I needed a Saviour; I thought, as all Jews do, that every one must work out his own salvation. Mr. A. invited me to his meeting-place, and to his private residence, where he explained to me the Scriptures. I shall never forget the impression which Isaiah liii. and Zech. xii. at that time made upon me. He then proved to me from both the Old and the New Testament, that it was not by my works that I could be justified before God, but through the atoning sacrifice of the Messiah as predicted by our own prophets. I now feel like another man altogether. I trust in Jesus for salvation, and beg of you to baptize me in His precious name.

I am fully aware that by taking this important step I shall lose my parents, relatives, friends, etc.; still I will take the Cross of Jesus and follow Him. I thank God with all my heart for bringing me to the truth as it is in Christ Jesus our Lord. May all Israel soon be brought to the same truth.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 431.)

Rose Fading.

ERNEST and Ruth had found their happiness weighted with an unexpected burden. They were very happy ; happier than they had either of them ever been. The life they led was very different from life at Clifford or Rockwood. They were brought into contact with many minds and many interests ; and they thoroughly entered into the new intellectual current which was flowing around them. To Ruth it was perfectly new. Her life-long seclusion at Rockwood gave a charm to all the varied incidents which every day brought to her. The companionship existing between herself and her husband was even more complete than she had anticipated in her brightest day-dreams. He seemed to understand her thoughts and desires without words.

It was Rose who was tasting the bitterness of real loneliness ; she, who had never known what it was to be alone. Until a few months ago there had not been a thought in her simple heart which she could not have told to her father ; but now an absolute dullness had come over her. She could not tell him how desolate she felt. She had so long believed herself to be first in her father's heart, that it was a profound though wordless grief to her to find Ruth there, in the place she had considered her own.

It was no wonder, she thought, that he should prefer Ruth to her ; for Ruth was full of life, and animation, and a beautiful happiness, which embellished everything she said and did. Rose looked on with a sore and sorrowful heart. It was Ruth now who was her father's companion ; not the little daughter, whose house had been built on sand, and had been swept down in the great storm that had beaten against it.

This was the cloud over Ernest's happiness ; at first scarcely more than the thin fine mist which scarcely dims the sunshine, and which is most clearly recognized when it has passed away, and the true brightness shines. He would not own to himself that Rose's presence was a restraint, yet when Ruth and he were alone together, he felt a freedom that was wanting while her sad young face was beside them. How to bring the smiles back to that face grew a serious problem to both Ruth and himself.

This spring was a very different season from the last to all of them. Ernest was fully as much occupied with public meetings ; for he was a good speaker, apart from any consideration of position or influence, and his services were requested by several committees in their arrangements for their respective meetings. But he found himself a person of much less social importance, as the secretary of a small charity, than he had been as the wealthy Clifford of Clifford.

As to Rose, the season was a miserable counterfeit of the last. She heard of the same things, read of them in the newspapers, was near enough to catch the echo of them, and that was all her share. No one mentioned the Fortescues in her hearing—those summer friends of hers, who had won her girlish heart and tossed it away as a worthless bauble. It was the bitterness of this which crushed Rose's spirit. She envied Jenny Britton, who had always envied her. Why had not her father been content to remain the humble vicar of Clifford, when she would have grown up as his daughter unnoticed and uncourted ?

Sometimes Ruth fancied she heard in the still hours of the night moans and sobs reaching her through the thin walls of their cottage. But when she stole into Rose's room with her softest footstep, she would find her sleeping apparently, with the quiet, regular breathing of girlhood. Rose smothered her crying, half ashamed and half frightened. What could she tell Ruth ? How could she find words to express the morbid sorrows that were poisoning the sources of life ? Ruth would reason with her, and talk to her of submitting to God, of trusting to His love. As yet Rose could do neither.

It was just such an evening in May, as the one when Rose and Ernest had driven homeward the year before, through the cool and quiet lanes lying between Dartford and Clifford. All the village was astir. By this time every person in it knew that the great London physician, as well as Dr. Welsh had pronounced solemnly that there was no hope of Master Charles ever getting about again. The place had been in a tumult of agitation, almost as great as if every household shared personally in the calamity that had happened.

This evening they were scattered in groups of three and four all along the valley, upon the road which Charles had tramped down, footsore and weary, but in vigorous health and strength, only a year ago. Julia and his mother were watching and weeping beside him now at Rockwood. It was known that Ernest was coming back with his wife and Miss Rose, and all the villagers had turned out to catch a glance at them, though it was felt to be inopportune to give them any other welcome. All the Symonses who were in England were also coming, to stay at Clifford Grange while their affairs were settled, for Charles could neither be moved from Rockwood nor bear the noise of a number of visitors there.

"Please God," said old Dunnit, "we shall have Master Ernest and Miss Rose back among us for good. Clifford's never like itself with them away."

"But Master Charlie's the master still," objected one of his hearers ; "Master Ernest 'ud be naught but a bailiff."

"Master or bailiff," answered old Dunnit, "Clifford 'ud be a different place wi' Master Ernest in it."

"Th' old Squire has well nigh ruined Rockwood," said Dan Popham, from the home farm at Rockwood ; "they say Captain Symons 'll find himself up to th' neck in mortgages. He'd no share in his mother's fortune, bein' his father's heir, and he can't afford to live at the place now it's come to him. It's many a year since any one of us has clapped eyes on any o' th' Symons, except Miss Ruth. What 'll they do with th' place, thinks thou ?"

"It 'll be many a long week ere Master Charlie can be moved, if all's true," said another.

"What 'll Julia Rush do now ?" asked a third ; "she's not been a fine lady for long. Folks say there won't be a brass farthin' for her when all's over, not a farthin'. She'll be sorry she turned up her nose at thee, Dan Popham."

"I'd marry Julia Rush any day she'd have me," said Dan ; "she's a brave lass."

"Julia's made up her mind to stay wi' Master Charlie, as long as he needs her," answered old Dunnit ; "she's saved his life, and now she'll take care of it, and she's a rare good nurse. Master Charlie 'll have every comfort nursin' can give him. And Julia has repented herself sore for all her folly and sin, and please God ! she'll make a good woman yet."

"If Master Ernest comes back for good," said the woman who had spoken of Julia, "which 'll be mistress at Clifford Grange, the old madam or the new one ?"

That was a question none of them could answer. It was well known that Mrs. Clifford set great store on her position as mistress of Clifford, and had frequently declared that no new mistress could or should depose her.

"Mrs. Britton 'll miss gettin' her own way this time," remarked the same woman, who was notorious as a gossip in Clifford ; "there's no chance of Master Charlie ever getting married now, so Miss Jenny is safe. I thought as all Mrs. Britton's eggs 'ud never get hatched, she'll have to put up wi' a few addled ones."

"Hush ! hush ! hush !" said old Dunnit, in a kindly tone ; "we must all put up wi' addled eggs. Let's take care we don't hatch cockatrice eggs. There's a many sins have got a smooth white shell outside 'em, but when they're hatched they sting. I don't know what eggs Mrs. Britton has to do with ; but poor Julia has hatched hers, and a pretty brood o' sorrows are come of it. And we're all the same, all same ; silly creatures that don't know w they're wishin' for."

Here they come !" shouted Dan Popham.

Two carriages were coming down the vall and the villagers stood aside under the hed rows, the men taking off their caps, and women courtesying in silence as they pass There was a gravity and a sadness about return that struck painfully upon Rose, who looking eagerly from side to side at the familiar faces. When the carriages were ou sight the people dispersed slowly to their homes.

"Didst thou see Miss Rose ?" they asked another ; "she looks like as if she was str for death ! It was like a funeral their con back."

"God forbid !" said Mrs. Dunnit and other mothers in the village.

The Symons family had met under somew strange circumstances. Their father's death brought them together, yet there were funeral rites to be attended. It would have b a relief to go through the ordinary ceremo which follow death. For a day or two, u some idea had been gained as to the state of Squire Symons's affairs, the sons passed a their time in rambling over the neglected es and the badly cultivated fields of the ho farms, while Ruth and one of her elder sist the only daughters living in England, w occupied in providing their mourning-dresse

Ruth alone mourned over her father, to wh she had given the best of her life, and for wh she had hoped against hope. The catastro she had always dreaded, and which she averted during many years by a complete sacrifice, had overtaken him as soon as she left him to other guardianship. Ought she to have remained with him ?

Her father's widow was an incumbrance embarrassment. There was, of course, no vision for her ; and none of Ruth's brothers sisters were willing to do anything for Julia, kept herself out of sight as much as she co with an instinctive feeling that they all bla her for the sudden death of their father. W Ruth saw her first, she was startled at paleness of her face, and the traces of long, tinuous weeping about her eyes. Ernest had Julia across to Clifford Grange to get ove inevitable meeting with his wife, which had put off from day to day, and she fell dow her knees before Ruth.

"Oh, I shall never forgive myself for le him !" cried Julia ; "but I thought M Charlie was safe away, and there'd be nobo come and tempt him. I did my best to good wife to him, only it were hard, Miss R never to see my own mother, and her fr and sendin' me scornful messages, as if I myself too grand to go and see her. Can ever forgive me, Miss Ruth ?"

"I forgive you if there is anything for forgive," answered Ruth ; and moved by a den impulse of compassion and grief she sto and kissed Julia's pale face, which flushed momentary pleasure. "Get up, Julia," added, "and sit down here beside me. have a good deal to talk about. My bro Captain Symons, and I are thinking what c done for you."

"Don't do nothin' for me," she earnestly ; "it's my fault as you are not still with your father, and takin' care of hi deserve to be punished ; and Uncle Dun me, we thought you might let me be serv

"No, no," interrupted Ruth ; "we co let our father's widow go into service.

"Listen only a minute," urged Ju vant to Master Charlie ; his nurse, I was afraid you wouldn't, perhaps, because I know I'm Julia Symons Squire Symons's wife. But I'd never by his name, and I'd never, never sp belonged to you, if you'd only give y to me bein' servant to Master Ch want somebody faithful now that he ot to the floor again ; and I'd rather wait

m than be the finest lady in the land.
t will be a hard thing to have old Mrs.
rd for a mistress, after I've been on a level er, and been her visitor, and I know she'll it as bad as bad can be ; but I'll put up
, I will indeed, Miss Ruth. Master Ernest, e satisfied his poor brother was well done long as I was about him."
m sure he would be, Julia," said Ruth.
e groans and mourns all day long, and all too," continued Julia, with tears in her
"it almost breaks my heart to hear him.
God ! oh, God !" he cries, hundreds and eds o' times. And I'm no scholar like and I'm not in favor wi' God, like Uncle
t. He isn't any scholar, but he speaks od told him the very words he ought to I never know what to say to Master
, and I can do nothin' to comfort him, noothin' his pillow and fetchin' him some-eat or drink."

(To be continued.)

CAIN AND ABEL.

esson for July 18th. Gen. 4 : 3-15. Golden t, 1 John 3 : 15. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

one man sin entered into the world and by sin" (Rom. 5 : 12) ; "sin when it is bringeth forth death" (James 1 : 15).
ter sin was consummated, death followed ain. When Eve's first son was born, she I have gotten a man from the Lord." "I tten :" the principle of self was at work ; ness of God in which she was created appeared. When Hannah received the to her petition, and God gave her a son, rned to God the precious gift, and said, his child I prayed, and the Lord hath e my petition which I asked of Him.
re also I have lent him to the Lord ; as he liveth he shall be lent unto the Lord" 1 : 27, 28). The one mother said, "I tten ;" the other, "I have given :" the ght her own ; the other sought not her il. 2 : 21 ; 1 Cor. 13 : 5.)
onder when Cain was grown up, he also his own. "In process of time it pass, that Cain brought of the fruit of und an offering unto the Lord."
ould be apparently better and more le ? No doubt he had bestowed care or on these flowers and fruits, they result of painstaking and industry, but not in a position to offer them. Sin e into the world, and death by sin, and s passed upon Cain, i.e., the sentence of ut in his offering, in his approach to re was no recognition of this fact ; he one who believed himself to be acceptaod, and his works acceptable also.
ignored the fact of his condemnation,
h was passed upon him.
as precisely the case with the Jews in of Paul, for he writes (Rom. 10 : 3), ey being ignorant of God's righteous-going about to establish their own ness, have not submitted themselves righteousness of God." It was the saiah's time : "To what purpose," says
, "is the multitude of your sacrifices
? I am full of the burnt-offerings of c.
good work which man does before he a clear personal understanding with t his past sins, is a dead work, from nscience must be purged "to serve od" (Heb. 9 : 14). Of those who commend themselves to God by s, their earnestness, their zeal, oming as lost sinners, and re-esus' sake, it is written, ecome garments, neither s with their works"
g leaves God can see then they are their are conducting of "an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous" (1 John 2 : 2). They have not built upon the only safe foundation "that is laid, which is Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 3 : 11).

Cain was in this case : he was not an atheist, but in our days he would have been a rationalist. He acknowledged that it was his duty to worship God—it was God's due—but he would not consult Him as to what offering he should bring, and he would offer that which would most conduce to his own glory, the fruits and flowers which he had so carefully tended. He would show his God that he had made good use of his time, that he valued God's gifts, and God would be bound to treat him as a dutiful son, well pleasing in His sight. But Cain had forgotten, or chose to ignore, that God had said to man, "Cursed is the ground for thy sake," and he was offering to God the fruit of that which was accursed.

Abel, his brother, sought also the face of God, but how differently ! He "brought of the firstlings of his flock and of the fat thereof." Here was the acknowledgment of his sinfulness, the recognition of the curse which God had pronounced. We are taught (Heb. 11 : 3), "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sac rifice than Cain." In Cain's offering there was the element of reason, perhaps of devotion in a sense, but faith was wanting, he saw all from his own point of view, and not at all from God's. Abel, on the contrary, saw himself condemned, altogether unworthy to approach God, and in the lamb slain, "the just for the unjust" (1 Pet. 3 : 18), he ratified the sentence of his own condemnation, and his belief in a coming substitute, "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world" (John 1 : 29).

By this sacrifice, "he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of (upon, see Gr.) his gifts." "The Lord had respect unto Abel and his offering." Without doubt God sent fire from heaven to consume it, as in Lev. 9 : 24 ; Jud. 6 : 21 ; 1 Kings 18 : 38 ; 2 Chron. 7 : 1. "God testifying of(upon) his gifts" implies that in some perceptible way the offering was accepted. But Cain's offering which perhaps was near enough to Abel's for him to see the fire from heaven, lay there unnoticed. "But unto Cain and to his offering He had not respect." Oh, reader, has God respect to you and to your offerings ? Are your prayers accepted or not before God ? How stand you with Him who created you ? Has the sacrifice of Jesus, has God's Lamb saved your soul ?

Cain was not indifferent. Abel had obtained witness that he was righteous ; the very sunlight of heaven sat upon his soul, and peace reigned within his heart ; he had come to an understanding with his God ; he was the loved child of a loving Father. But Cain was there put to shame before his younger brother, his offering refused. himself unnoticed. What should he do ? Should he humble himself, and learn from his brother ? Should he own himself in the wrong ? No ; he "was very wroth, and his countenance fell," and he made no appeal to God. But God in His tender mercy drew near to him, and said, "Why art thou wroth ? and why is thy countenance fallen ? If thou doest well shalt thou not be accepted ? And if thou doest not well sin (i.e., the sin-offering) lieth at the door. And unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him."

Cain was mortified that his brother was preferred before him, and God so lovingly shows him that if he accepts the sin-offering as Abel had done, he could take the place of elder brother again. But, no, he yielded to the sin which was bringing forth death. For "he that loveth not his brother abideth in death." Cain "was of that wicked one, and slew his brother." And wherefore slew he him ? Because his own works were evil and his brother's righteous (1 John 3 : 12-14). Cain could not deny that Abel had found favor with God, but he would not condemn his own works by following Abel's example. Oh, how many are there who will not come to the Lord Jesus for pardon, because they are ashamed to take the same way as some one who they esteem less than themselves.

As yet the sentence of death upon sinful man had been executed only in a spiritual sense. But now, we read (ver. 8), "And Cain talked with Abel his brother : and it came to pass when they were in the field, that Cain rose up against Abel his brother and slew him." What an awful moment for Cain, for Eve, for Adam ! The fearful punishment of sin was no longer an unknown apprehended evil, there lay the corpse of the first victim of sin, slain by the hand of a brother, an awful witness that "sin when it is finished bringeth forth death."

And the Lord said unto Cain, "Where is Abel, thy brother ?" And he said, "I know not, am I my brother's keeper ?" What was this ? The old grievous sin of Adam and Eve, casting the blame on God. It is as though he had said, "If Thou dost accept my brother, why then dost Thou not keep him so that he cannot be hurt ? it is not my wrath but Thy negligence which is the cause of Abel's death." What is the cause of spiritual death in churches, families, etc. ? Is it not that men shirk all responsibility with respect to others, and say in their hearts, "Am I my brother's keeper ? he must look after him self as I look after myself." Oh, this grievous selfishness, how terrible it is, but how general it is ! The gospel teaching is widely different, "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself" (Rom. 14 : 7). "So we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another" (Rom. 12 : 5).

God makes another appeal to Cain, "What hast thou done ? the voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto Me from the ground. And now art thou cursed from the ground, which hath opened her mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand." To Adam God had said, "Cursed is the ground for thy sake," but He did not say, "Cursed art thou." Cain was the first man born in sin, and God pronounced a curse upon him. He continued, "When thou tillest the ground it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength ; a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be on the earth." It was a fearful sentence, such as could only be pronounced on one who had sinned against grace.

"And Cain said, My punishment is greater than I can bear" (marginal reading, Mine iniquity is greater than that it may be forgiven). Oh, why did he not even now learn from his murdered brother the way of reconciliation with God ? "Behold," he continued, "Thou hast driven me out this day from the face of the earth, and from Thy face shall I be hid." Oh, there was bitterness, remorse, but no humbling of himself before God, ; there was no plea that he might seek and find again the hidden face of God. But there was fear for the consequences of his sin, "I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth, and it shall come to pass, that every one that findeth me shall slay me."

But God had mercy for Cain according to the measure of his application to Him. He sought not forgiveness or spiritual blessing, but he feared for his life. There was perhaps a natural instinct in Cain's mind that as he had taken away life, so his life was justly forfeited. Later, in the time of Noah, God said, (Gen. 9 : 5, 6), "Surely your blood of your lives will I require ; at the hand of every beast will I require it, and at the hand of man ; at the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of man. Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed : for in the image of God made He man." But so tender is our God, that He seems to have sheltered Cain in response to his fears. For "the Lord said unto him, therefore, whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold. And the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him." Some have thought that Lamech (ver. 23, 24) was the revenger of Cain, but the evidence is not clear. Any way, it was a terrible life for Cain to live with his brother's blood upon his conscience. "And Cain went out from the presence of the Lord." Was it forever ?

FOREIGN TOPICS.

The British Government has Espoused the cause of Mr. Bradlaugh, the Atheist Member of Parliament, Mr. Gladstone himself urging the House of Commons to allow him to make an affirmation instead of taking the usual oath. Considerable pressure was put on the Liberal Members to induce them to vote as Mr. Gladstone desired, and on July 1st, the House rescinded its former decision, and Mr. Bradlaugh was allowed to take his seat.

A letter to the London Standard, by a gentleman having an extensive acquaintance with Indian affairs, states that the idea is now beginning to be current in India, that Mr. Bradlaugh's views are gaining ground in society and that England is abandoning Christianity. The effect of this impression will be to inflict a serious blow to the cause of all those missions in India in which the various Christian bodies are interested—a blow from which they will not recover for many years.

The Berlin Conference has Decided on the new frontier line between Turkey and Greece. The accession of territory Greece will gain by the arrangement, if it is carried out, will be 390 geographical square miles, which will increase her domain by more than a third of its present size, and the area will add to her population 400,000 inhabitants. The Plenipotentiaries, in stating their motives for their decisions, specially point out that they have endeavored not to give either side strategical positions dominating over the other's territory.

The Condition of Turkey is Considered Hopeless even by Sir A. H. Layard, the ex-Minister of Great Britain to that country, who was prior to his residence at Constantinople, a firm believer in the good intentions of the Sultan. In a recent letter he said, "Never perhaps was this Empire in so disorganized and critical a state; everywhere are misgovernment, corruption, incompetency of the Turkish functionaries; everywhere Mussulmans and Christians suffer alike." Sir A. H. Layard says he has tried expostulation with the Sultan, and even "menaces;" and he advises the English Government, "If it is in earnest in wishing to save Turkey and reform its administration, so that its people may be justly governed, it must be prepared to go farther than mere menaces." He further states: "There is little or no protection for life and property in Macedonia, Epirus, and Thessaly. Brigandage is rife, the Christians are ill-treated and oppressed with impunity, and the state of these provinces is bordering on anarchy."

The Decrees of the French Government against the Jesuits were put in force on June 30. In Paris the Jesuit fathers shut themselves in their rooms and locked their doors. The commissioners at once sent for a locksmith and the doors were forced. The fathers were then ejected one by one with all the courtesy possible, by the police. Each member of the fraternity made a new and formal protest against the violation of his domicile before leaving. At a quarter to nine o'clock the last Jesuit had vacated the premises. "The holy fathers," were treated as martyrs by their female admirers, many of whom knelt on the stones to be blessed by the prostcripts. One of the fathers who is an English subject appealed to the English Minister, but so far, without any result. Similar proceedings to those in Paris took place in other cities. Thirty-nine Jesuit establishments have been closed.

European Society is Described as Volcanic by an American traveller recently returned from Europe. Gen. Garfield, in a conversation with a reporter a few days ago, stated that a friend of his who had spent the last two years in Europe had returned deeply impressed with the state of society on that continent. He had found that it was the prevailing impression among very many of the thinking men of Europe that society there was being undermined by certain irresistible influences. He said "in the first place, it is honeycombed by widespread and still wider-spreading infidelity. The Christian religion is no longer a supreme influence over the minds and consciences of themasses. The leaders of thought, the scholars of England, France, and Germany, have popularized unbelief, and in France it has passed into a current remark that only women and children areany longer to be seen at church. In the second place, there is great restlessness among the masses in regard to the inequalities of society. Why should the few be so very rich and the many so very poor? is the burden of their inquiry, and also of their conversation one with another. "The undertone of discontent is visibly growing, and is finding expression through channels that are unsettling the foundation stones of the whole social fabric in Europe. Socialism in Germany, Nihilism in Russia, Communism in France and Chartism in England are all at work, and the masses are being leavened with these principles. Their aversion to kingcraft and priestcraft borders upon revolution. The whole of Europe is volcanic at this time. Immense standing armies are all that repress the outburst. But while they repress it, they afford the grievance on which revolution grows and spreads, and becomes more and more irresistible for the final reckoning. It is believed by many of the most sagacious minds that the day of upheaval is not far off."

The Salvation Army in Ireland has been received with hostile demonstrations. At Derry the meetings were much disturbed by mobs of low rowdies, of both sexes, who attended for the purpose. The evening meeting was the noisiest of all, notwithstanding the presence of police officers and constables. Outside the building a large mob of rowdies had assembled, and as the army inside began to sing, they cheered, hooted and yelled. Inside there was also a similar mob, some of whom smoked pipes, others cursed and swore, and shouted derisively, especially when the army were singing, or went to prayer. During the addresses coarse jests were hurled at the speakers, and at times the noise of shouting cursing, swearing, and laughter combined, drowned their voices. Neither the presence of policemen nor their remonstrance was sufficient to keep order, and the meeting was conducted amid scenes of the wildest clamor and confusion. The members of the army are not discouraged. They see in this opposition that Satan fears their work and they know that their Master has power to overcome him.

Mr. McAll's Evangelical Work in Paris is making encouraging progress. He now holds meetings in the ball-rooms of the Elysee which have been remarkably successful. The audience, always large, has become more and more attentive and respectful. Equally good results have crowned another effort undertaken in the Boulevard des Capucines, in the centre of Paris, a quarter inhabited by a rich and well-read population, in a well-known hall, where secular lectures are given during the week. A considerable number of those who have been accustomed to attend the hall during the week now go on Sundays, and listen attentively to the preaching of the Gospel.

The Beer Sellers of Birmingham, England, are complaining loudly against the coffee taverns. They assert that since the coffee taverns were established their business has seriously fallen off. As the promoters of the movement had that design in view, they will regard the protests of the beer sellers as an encouraging evidence of the success of their work.

The Anniversary Meeting of Dr. Barnardo's Homes was held on Wednesday, June 2d, in Exeter Hall, London, which was crowded with an enthusiastic audience. Lord Cairns presided, and there were present Lord Denman, Lord Brabazon, Earl of Jersey, etc. The report stated the past year's income was in excess of any previous year, having amounted to 35,683*l*. The sum of 10,279*l*. had been expended during the year in completing the houses at the Village Home for Girls, at Ilford, on the new buildings for boys at Stepney, and the necessary alterations at the Home for Little Boys, Jersey. A special expense of 700*l*. was rendered nece by the epidemic of scarlet fever which pre at the Village Home. The committee need of increased funds to balance the acc as all the money is expended. More tha boys and girls are supported in the Homes

An Incident Related by Dr. Bonar, of burgh, the thoughtful student of prophe having occurred during his travels in Sy quoted by the Rev. Matthew R. Miller in Luminous Unity.'" Dr. Bonar says: " the missionaries entered a synagogue on A rabbi was preaching. The moment h the missionary enter, he stopped and sh at the height of his voice, 'Shemah Yi etc., i.e., 'Hear, O Israel, the Lord is one the Lord is one,' as if to turn every eye in to one who could maintain that Jesus w Son of God. It is the rallying cry of the
It is a watchword worth a dozen of argume them." This way of attracting the symp of an audience, and setting aside the me the question in dispute, may sometim effectually used on the side of Christ; as i when Paul called out in the council, " Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee" (Acts 10.)

Sermons Illustrated by the Magic La are being preached in India. The Rev.
Parker a missionary at Moradabad, sent for a magic lantern, with pictures illust the life of Christ. A fine instrument, large number of pictures, showing the pri events in the life of our Lord, was in du forwarded to him. The Rev. E. Cunnir writes that it has been used with eminen cess. Some of the most respectful, inter and devout congregations have been asse in groves at night, beholding on a canva pended from the limb of a giant mang that wonderful series of events commencin the manger and ending with the ascensio listening to the recital. Men and wome refused an invitation to hear the Gospel accepted, an invitation to inspect some pic

Signor Gavazzi. The Eminent Italian E list, who preached at the Rev. Newman chapel, London, on Sunday, May 30th, re to the growth of Ritualism in Englanc urged the people of that country, in the n
the Protestant martyrs, to remain firm faith of the Reformers, and to assist in ch
the spread of Romanism.

Book Received: "The Quiver of Song," for Sunday-schools, Prayer-meetings, meetings, etc., by John R. Sweney and Kirkpatrick, contains 151 hymns with music.
lished by John J. Hood, 1018 Arch Street, P phia, Pa.

Contributions Received: For the Irish ine; from A. A. Godlett, Gowensville, S.
For the debt on Dr. Talmage's Church; from Prettijohn, Arcadia, Ind., $1. from Mrs. Y. M Corsicana, Tex., $1. For the Persian Famine
J. D. McKenny, Fisher's Grant, Nova Sco
These sums have been sent to the usual quarte

The Prophetic News and Israel's Wat
(London) for June may be obtained at the offic
CHRISTIAN HERALD. Price six cents.

The Second Volume of the Christian comprising Nos. 37 to 62 (July to Dec., 18 be procured, elegantly bound in cloth, at this Price $1.75.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works are at the office of the CHRISTIAN HERALD, at low as to bring them within the reach of Twelve Sermons on various subjects, wit of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. Joh Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit sermons, $2.50. The Treasury cal exposition of the book of P as Psa. 118, $3 per vol.
This popular gift-book selected from Mr. Sp in the year, with a graphs. The signa appear at their elegantly bound tances should

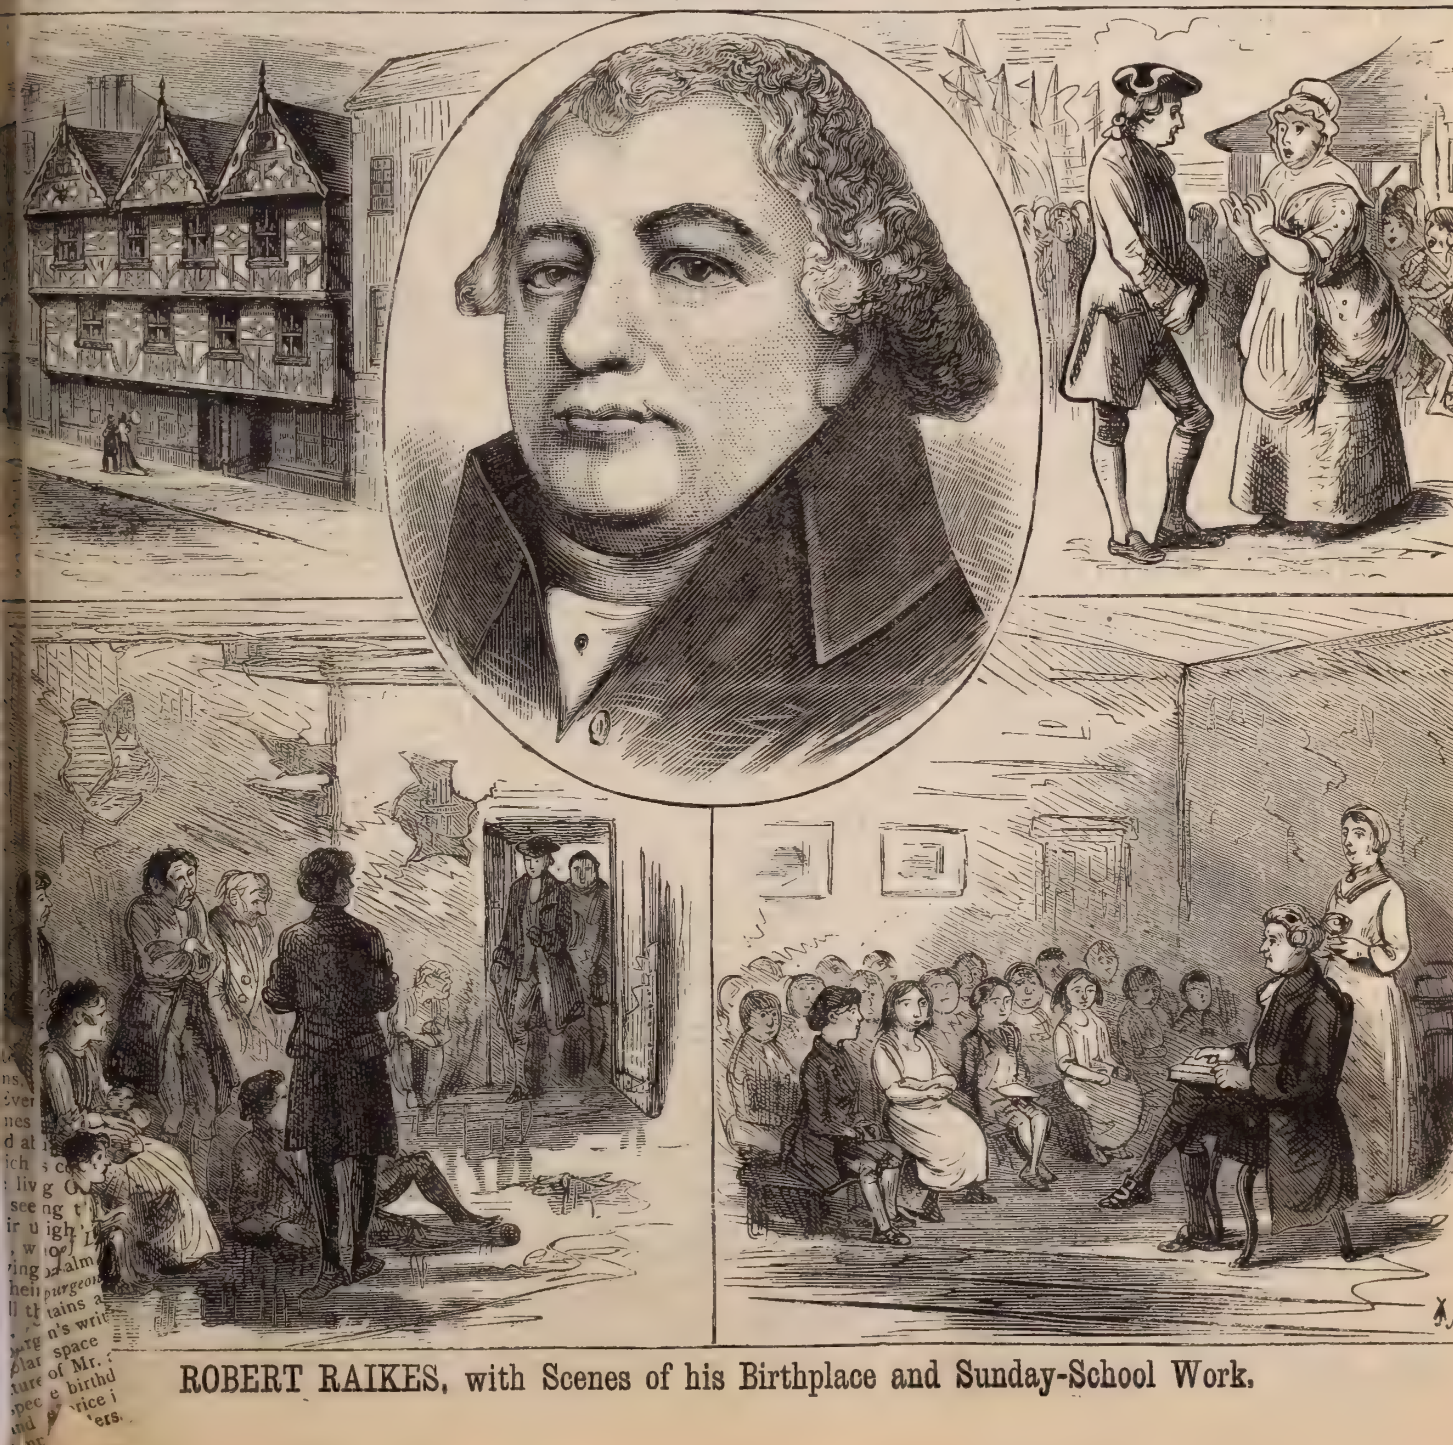
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

ingle Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, JULY 15, 1880. 14th Year. No. 29—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

RTRAIT AND LIFE OF ROBERT RAIKES, the ather of Sunday-Schools.
IN. A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage.
HESTER TOWER. A New Serial Story by iss M. A. Paull (Continued).
OPHETIC EXPOSITION; Compiled by Rev. M. axter.—Some Famous Jewels Sold at Auction.
PICTURE OF A SCENE ON AN ENGLISH RACE-COURSE—Organization of the Open-Air Mission.
CURRENT EVENTS: The Candidates and the Platforms—Steamboat Inspection—The Fasting Doctor—The Salvation Army Stoned—Sixty-five Years in the Sunday-School—Strange Death of a Thief, etc.
THE BRITISH POLITICAL REVOLUTION: Its Prophetic Aspect, by Rev. M. Baxter.
THE SHEEP BEFORE THE SHEARERS. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
A WEIGHT OF WEALTH (Continued).
Covenant with Noah; S. S. Lesson by Mrs. M. Baxter.
FOREIGN TOPICS: The Irish Tenantry and the Government—Turkey Hesitating—The New Spurgeon Orphanages—The Persian Famine—A Royal Lady and Mission Work—A Methodist Mandarin, etc.



ROBERT RAIKES, with Scenes of his Birthplace and Sunday-School Work.

ROBERT RAIKES,

The Father of Sunday-Schools.

Birth at Gloucester—Succeeds to his Father's Business—His Marriage—The Gloucester Jails—Work among the Prisoners—Ancient Sunday-Schools—A Memorable Conversation—The First Sunday-School in Gloucester—The First Teachers and their Salaries—Newspaper Advocacy—The First Four Years' Work—Queen Charlotte's Interview with Mr. Raikes—Formation of the Sunday-School Union—How the British and Foreign Bible Society arose—Sunday School Work taken up all over the World—Touching Interview between Joseph Lancaster and Mr. Raikes—Death and Burial.

In a house in Palace Yard, just beneath the shadow of the venerable cathedral of Gloucester, England, on September 14th, 1735, Robert Raikes first saw the light. His father was a printer, the son of a clergyman who lived at Holderness, in Yorkshire. "Raikes the printer," as he was called, was a man of enterprise and perseverance, and in the year 1722 originated a paper entitled the Gloucester Journal, the ninth in order of time among English provincial papers, and in size scarcely larger than a sheet of foolscap. He managed his literary venture so successfully that it soon obtained an extensive circulation. A curious testimony to this fact is recorded in one of the early numbers, as follows:

"A demure old farmer applied to the printer of the Gloucester Journal, and with great gravity of face told him that he feared the mealmen and bakers seldom read their Bibles, but as he knew they always read the newspapers he desired a corner of his paper for the following texts: 'Just balances, just weights, a just ephah, and a just hin, shall ye have' (Lev. 19 : 36); 'Divers weights, and divers measures, both of them are alike abomination to the Lord '(Prov. 20 : 10.)"

Respecting the youth of Robert Raikes there is very little to record. His father intended him for the career of a journalist, and with this object furnished him with an education which was both liberal and practical. One of his personal friends, the Rev. Dr. Glasse, F.R.S., in after life wrote respecting him, that "he entered on his profession with superior acquirements, and he is not less remarkable for his accuracy than he is for his fidelity and integrity in every part of his conduct."

On the death of his father, on September 7th, 1757, the responsibilities of a large and important business devolved upon Robert Raikes. Thus at the early age of twenty-two he became sole proprietor and editor of the Gloucester Journal, and succeeded also to the management of a general printing and publishing establishment, in which the personal character of the master exercised a most material influence. Success followed, and in process of time the young printer grew to be one of the most influential men in his native city.

In the year 1767, in the thirty-second year of his age, he was married, in London, to Anne, only daughter of Thomas Trigge, Esq., of Newnham, Gloucestershire, and sister to Sir Thomas Trigge and Rear-Admiral John Trigge. At the ripe age of sixty-seven, after a business life of forty-five years, he retired upon a well-earned competency.

The Sunday-school system, with which the name of Robert Raikes will ever be inseparably connected, may be said to have originated in

THE JAILS OF GLOUCESTER.

It was there that he learned the direct connection between ignorance and crime, and there he saw the futility of dealing with the effect without removing the cause. The county jail consisted of a portion of Gloucester Castle, a fortress built by William the Conqueror, and its condition, when Raikes first knew it, was simply horrible. Debtors and felons were indiscriminately herded together, men and women, child offenders and hardened criminals, and the most fearful immorality was the natural and inevitable product. Owing to the utter absence of all sanitary arrangements, the whole place continually reeked with infection, and deaths were of constant occurrence. The city prison was in a scarcely less deplorable condition.

Years before the celebrated John Howard commenced his prison crusade, Robert Raikes had been unostentatiously laboring among the miserable inmates of Gloucester Castle. His first efforts seem to have been to provide the necessaries of life for the imprisoned debtors, and with this object he was earnest in his solicitations, both through the channel of his newspaper and by personal application to his friends. In response to these appeals Raikes received many contributions, which he personally distributed among the most needy cases in the jail. John Howard,

THE PRISON PHILANTHROPIST, who visited Gloucester in 1773, and dined at Mr. Raikes's table, thus bears testimony to the value of his labors: "In September the felons were very pitiable objects indeed, half-naked and almost famished. In December their appearance was much altered. Mr. Raikes and other gentlemen took pity on them, and generously contributed toward their feeding and clothing. Mr. Raikes continues his unremitting attention to the prisoners."

Mr. Raikes did not content himself with relieving the temporal necessities of the prisoners. He cared also, and chiefly, for their moral and spiritual wants. Frequently mixing among them, he endeavored to awaken within them aspirations toward a better life. To those who were able to read he supplied good books, and encouraged them by precept and example to instruct their less favored fellow-prisoners. For all who were able and willing to work he endeavored to find some kind of occupation, and he ever strove to inculcate among them the Christian principle of kindness one for another. While seeking to show his practical sympathy with the inmates of the jail, Raikes often took the opportunity of illustrating, by a reference to their wretchedness, the contrast between the happiness of a path of virtue and the misery of a path of vice.

Considerable controversy has raged round the question,

WAS RAIKES THE FOUNDER OF SUNDAY-SCHOOLS?

If by "the founder of Sunday-schools" is meant the person to whom the idea of imparting education to the young on the Lord's day first originated, or by whom that idea was first carried into execution, Raikes is not entitled to the description. Years before Raikes commenced his work, the notion of Sunday instruction had presented itself to several philanthropic individuals in various parts of England and America, and was in isolated cases put into practice.

Again, if by the term "founder" is meant the person to whom alone the establishment of Sunday-schools is due to the exclusion of all participation in the work on the part of others, Raikes cannot lay claim to the honor, nor indeed can any other individual. In the whole of his labors Raikes had several most valuble co-workers, and to one at least—the Rev. Thomas Stock, Rector of St. John the Baptist and St. Aldgate, Gloucester—belongs almost if not quite as much credit for the institution of schools in Gloucester as to Raikes himself.

Raikes's distinctive honor lies in the fact that, by means of his newspaper and other organs of public opinion, he recommended the practice far and wide, and never ceased his advocacy till the scheme was generally adopted throughout the land. The movement, hitherto unheard of save in a few provincial towns and villages, was by him brought into the light of day. In vigorous language he introduced it to all classes of readers. From cottager to king, all learned of the new institution through Robert Raikes. He raised Sunday teaching from a fortuitous rarity into a universal system. He found the practice local; he made it universal. It is upon this ground that admirers of Raikes rest his claim to the honored title of "Founder of Sunday-schools."

ANCIENT SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

The principles upon which Sunday-schools a based being as old as Christianity itself, it not surprising to find these principles reduced practice in numerous instances prior to the tablishment of the Sunday-school system
Robert Raikes. In the fifteenth century Char
Borromeo, Archbishop of Milan, nephew of Po Pius V., founded in the parishes of his dioce a number of Sunday-schools of which many y continue. He died in 1584, at the age of fort six. A hundred years later the Rev. Jose Alleine, an eminent Nonconformist of Taunto and author of "An Alarm to the Unconve ed," adopted the plan of gathering the you together on the Lord's day for instruction.
the county of Gloucester, years before Rail was born, Mrs. Catherine Boevey, of Flaxley A bey, had one of the earliest and certainly one the pleasantest Sunday-schools on record.
America a Sunday-school was founded betw
1740 and 1747 by Ludwig Hacker, at Ephra Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, among German Baptists there. In 1763-4 a Sund school was established at Catterick, Yorkshi by the Rev. T. Lindsey, conjointly with a ben olent lady named Cappe. Miss Ball, a you Methodist lady living at High Wycom started a Sunday-school there in 1769.

About that period another was instituted, o somewhat humbler scale, at Little Lever, f miles from Bolton, Lancashire, by a poor n named James Hey. "Old Jemmy" emplo the working days of the week in winding b bins for weavers, and on Sundays he tau the boys and girls of the neighborhood readi His school assembled twice each Sunday in cottage of a neighbor, and the time of comme ing was announced by the ringing, not of a b but of an old brass pestle and mortar. Afte while Mr. Adam Compton, a paper-maker in neighborhood, began to supply Jemmy w books, and subscriptions in money were give him. He was thus enabled to form th branch establishments, the teachers of wh were paid one shilling each per Sunday for t services. In 1778, a Sunday-school was c menced in Macclesfield by the Rev. David Si son. And in the same year it is said that Rev. Thomas Stock, afterward Raikes's worker in Gloucester, had a Sunday-schoo Ashbury, in Berkshire.

While Raikes was meditating on the condi of the criminals in the jails he became pressed with the conviction that a large pro tion of them had become criminals thro their ignorance. He believed that if the dren of the poorest classes were given an ed tion, especially a religious education, man them would be preserved from a criminal ca That conviction ultimately developed into project for establishing Sunday-schools.

A MOMENTOUS CONVERSATION.

The opportunity of putting his idea into p tice occurred, when one morning Mr. Ra went into the slums of Gloucester to enga gardener. The man he went to see was a from home, and while waiting for him he struck with concern at seeing a group of dren, wretchedly ragged, at play in the str
He asked a woman whether those childre longed to that part of the town, and lame their misery and idleness. "Ah, sir," said woman, "could you take a view of this pa the town on a Sunday you would be sho indeed; for then the street is filled with m tudes of these wretches, released that day f employment, who spend their time in noise riot, and cursing and swearing in a mann horrid as to convey to any serious mind an of hell rather than any other place."

Raikes did not go home and get up a p meeting, he did not ask for subscriptions, h not, wise man that he was, organize a com
tee. He did two very simple things: he hu up four poor women, who, for a shilling a were ready to receive and teach some of t children to read and say the Church Catec each Sunday, and he obtained the clergym

ht for me to give it, much as I love you, Con- nce ; but do remember, dear child, poor child, t your father's memory is dearer to me than you. Do you suppose I shall not respect it ?"

Then Mrs. Anerley began to sob hysterically, l Constance, vexed with herself for her fruit- s endeavor, and for having, perhaps, suggest- a possibility to her mother that she had not n thought of, brought her some simple nedy, and strove to quiet her by loving ca- ses and tender words. Then she sat, holding mother's hand, till Mrs. Anerley was fast ep, when, stealing softly away, Constance hed her own room again.

(To be continued.)

E BRITISH POLITICAL REVOLUTION.

Its Prophetic Aspect.

By Rev. M. Baxter.

rogressive Step toward the Fulfilment of Five ophetic Events which immediately precede rist's Second Advent and the Final Crisis of is Age—1. The increased Prevalence of the irit of Democracy and Radicalism until Brit- becomes a Republic, etc.

HE fact cannot be denied that the General tion of 1880 has resulted in a startling and ing predominance of Liberal votes, which equally great surprise to both Liberals and ervatives. It has been signally shown that traordiary revolution may be silently tak- lace in the political views of the nation, and here may be no visible indication of it on urface.

ere are at least five aspects in which this ex- dinary wave of Liberalism sweeping over ritish nation will manifestly tend to hasten rd the fulfilment of Scripture prophecies cted with the predicted final crisis of t's second Advent between 1885 and 1890.

The increased prevalence of

THE SPIRIT OF DEMOCRACY

adicalism until universal suffrage and re- anism are established in Great Britain, as s in all the rest of the ten kingdoms, be- 1885 and 1890, is clearly foretold in (a) 2 : 31-45, and (b) Rev. 16 : 13, 14, and (c) And the present great Liberal reaction ep in that direction.

In Dan. 2 : 31-45 the prophetic image of a s explained to represent, as all admit, the uccessive universal empires of Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome, corresponding the image's golden head, silver breast, loins, and iron legs, terminating in ten on toes, upon which a stone "cut out of ountain without hands," i.e., Christ at His l Advent will descend with destructive e (about 1890) ; and then the stone will be- great mountain, and fill the whole earth the subsequent millennum of 1,000 years.

ar's Roman Empire was bisected into a n and Eastern empire during the dual f Valentinian and Valens, in correspond- ith the emblem of the two legs ; and then al subdivision of each foot into five toes is understood to denote the future and final sion of each of those Western and East- ves into five kingdoms, which will be sub- lly—1. Britain, legislatively separated reland, because Ireland never belonged to man Empire ; 2. France, extended to the nd annexing Switzerland, Belgium, Lux- g, etc. ; 3. Spain, with Portugal added to taly ; 5. Austria, south of the Danube, arated from Eastern Hungary—five king- n the western half ; and, 6. Greece, en- northward so as to comprise Thessaly, , and Macedonia ; 7. Egypt ; 8. Syria, d from the Turkish empire ; 9. Central south of the Balkans and west of Mace- —i.e. ancient Thrace—together with a in Asia Minor to be attached to the gdom of Syria ; 10. Bulgaria, with Ser- probably Roumania added to it. These doms will then be allied together in a ten- ed confederacy, as denoted by the ten horns on the one corporate body of the wild beast (Dan. 7 : 24).

The exact subdivision of all the countries of Cæsar's Roman Empire into these ten kingdoms will necessarily involve terrific wars and revolutions ; but the point we have to notice just now is that the ten toes, symbolizing these future ten kingdoms, are composed of iron mingled with clay and not of pure iron like the legs of the image. This indicates that their governmental principle will be a clay-iron or democratic-despotic principle, for the clay has long been understood to denote popular democratic power in contrast with the iron of monarchic absolutism.

Britain, therefore, as one of the ten-toe kingdoms, will soon have

A CLAY-IRON GOVERNMENT,

that is, one in which the sovereign will be elected by universal suffrage, just as the late Emperor Napoleon was elected by a plebiscite ; and, consequently, we must expect the franchise to be progressively extended and lowered until it reaches manhood suffrage ; and then the populace will not be content with merely electing the Members of Parliament by manhood suffrage, but will insist on that mode of electing the sovereign himself, whether he be a Republican president or king.

(b) In Rev. 16 : 13, 14, three wonder-working frog-like spirits are predicted to go forth from the dragon, the ten-horned wild beast, and the false prophet, to gather the nations of the world to the final war of Armageddon. This accompanies the drying up of the Euphrates or Turkish Empire under the sixth vial, which is the very epoch in which we are now living.

Standard expositors agree that the first spirit from the dragon or Satan is one of Antichristian infidelity and Satanic spiritualism, which has certainly gone forth with unwonted energy of late years.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH,

the newly-elected Member for Northampton, by his speeches and publications, is one of the many modern apostles of infidelity ; and there are numerous propagators of spiritualistic sorcery. The third spirit from the false prophet is one of Mohammedan and Papal zealotry and frenzied fanaticism, as shown in Romanist Ultramontanism, and in Mohammedan jehads, i.e., proclamations of a holy war.

The second spirit from the ten-horned wild beast or Roman Empire is one of Democracy, and Radicalism, which, run into an extreme, culminates in Socialism and Communism. This plain prediction, that at the present epoch of the sixth vial the spirit of Democratic Liberalism and Radicalism is to go forth to pervade and leaven the nations with its contagious influence, is certainly being fulfilled to some extent by the present wave of Radicalism, as it is designated in political speeches ; for example, in the recent speech of Mr. Cross, a prominent member of the defeated party, at Manchester, when he said :

"Lord Hartington (then leader of the Liberal party) has seen with just as much surprise as myself the vast wave of Radicalism suddenly spread over the electors of England ; and his own speeches show how clearly he feels the deep responsibility that rests on him to stem that tide which has swept over England, to check that tide of Democracy, and to show at all events that, so far as he is concerned, he will rule England with firmness and moderation. If, relying upon the better part of the Liberal party, he will resist the Radical tail which will press heavily on him, and not give way to evil counsels, he may rely upon the cordial support of the Conservatives. But how will he deal with the Irish Home Rulers? If he does not to a certain extent satisfy their desires, they will be the first to turn against him."

A Liberal Government may be better than a Conservative Government for some reasons. It will not show so much favor to the abominably corrupt Governments of Turkey and Egypt. Its policy is more likely to be one of enfranchising and benefiting oppressed peoples and nationalities in the East. It is also more likely to promote measures in the direction of temperance, such as the Sunday closing of public-houses, etc. ; but the danger is that moderate Liberals will be unable to withstand of the extreme men of their own party : for it is a significant fact that the greater number of the Liberal majority in the new Parliament of 1880 are Radicals. Now this has never been the case in any former English Parliament. In that of 1868 the Liberal majority consisted of a greater number of moderate than extreme Liberals, i.e., Radicals.

THE REVOLUTIONARY TENDENCIES

Assuredly, throughout Europe generally, the tide of Democracy is rising, and soon its surging, foaming, seething torrent, rushing onward with resistless fury, will burst all barriers, and, overleaping every flood-gate, will cover the earth as with a garment. Whether it will come as a desolating flood, or whether as a beneficent inundation, like that of the Nile, fertilizing the barren wastes and bringing fruitfulness and blessing as its effect, time will show. The fact that it is coming is indisputable.

(c) In Rev. 17 : 3, Cæsar's Roman Empire, pictured as a ten-horned wild beast, is presented in its final stage with its whole body scarlet colored, and ascending from the revolutionary "abyss" and without any crowns on its horns or heads, although it had crowns in Rev. 12 and 13. This is generally understood to signify that at that future period its ten horns, i.e., the rulers of the nations of the RomanEmpire, will be crownless, i.e., Republican ; and that the sovereignty will be in the people constituting the whole body of the nations, because the body of the wild beast is scarlet, which is the emblem of sovereign power.

Hence the above-mentioned three prophecies all point to the approaching universal spread and prevalence of Democratic popular power.

(To be continued.)

The Famous Jewels Belonging to the French Imperial family are about to be disposed of. They will be divided into three parts. The first will comprise the historic jewels and stones, and will be placed in the Louvre. The second part will contain the scarce minerals, and will be placed in the Museum ; while the third portion, will be put up to auction.

M. Turquet, the official who has the custody of the jewels, has had an inventory made of this princely treasure. One of the most famous of the diamonds is the one called Regent. It weighs 136½ carats, and is one of extreme whiteness and brilliancy. This stone has a very curious history attaching to it. It was bought by the Duke of Orleans, then Regent of France, of Pitt, the Governor of Fort St. George, in the year 1717, for £135,000. When rough the stone weighed 411 carats, and the cutting cost £2,000. Pitt had purchased this stone in Golconda, of Jamelchund, a Hindoo merchant, as he states in a pamphlet published to clear himself from the reports about his having stolen it. This diamond, however, was actually stolen from the Garde Meuble in 1792, but was restored in a mysterious manner. After this it was recut at a cost of £3,500, an operation which took two years to perform. Napoleon the First was so enamored of this gem that he had it set on the pommel of his sword. Some idea of the size of the Regent may be given when it is stated that it is 30 carats larger than the Koh-i-noor, the most valuable of the British royal jewels.

Another remarkable object in the sale is a round pearl valued at 200,000 f., and still another is a necklace of pearls, styled Collier de la Reine, composed of twenty-five pearls, and worth 996,700 f. Next comes a long clear ruby, weighing 56 carats, and valued at 500,000 f. There is also an amethyst of more than 13 carats, valued at the large sum of 600,000f., and a sapphire of 132 carats, worth 100,000 f. By selling the jewles of the third class M. Turquet expects to realize ample funds for the purchase of works of art wherewith to enrich the national museums.

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50

per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to THE MANAGER, CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House New York.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of back numbers to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

Persons requiring single or special copies can obtain them most conveniently through

NEWSDEALERS.

Any complaint that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer is promptly attended to if we are given the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, July 7th, at 11.45 A.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Both the Republican and Democratic Candidates for the Presidency are placed in a difficulty by the platforms of their respective parties. Gen. Garfield, who was prominent in opposition to the Chinese Immigration Bill which was passed by Congress but vetoed by President Hayes, is confronted with the clause in the platform adopted at Chicago which deals with the Chinese question, and which he cannot be expected to indorse heartily. Gen. Hancock, on his side, is made the champion of a platform which, if he adopts it, places him in an anomalous position with regard to the President, who, being by virtue of his position the commander-in-chief, is Gen. Hancock's superior officer. Some curiosity is excited as to the means the candidates will adopt to overcome these difficulties.

The rumor that Gen. Grant had announced his intention of supporting the Democratic candidate, which occasioned so much surprise when it was published, has been promptly contradicted. Gen. Grant, while expressing his high opinion of Gen. Hancock's personal, military, and official record, says he is opposed to the principles of the party which has put him in nomination.

Tea Culture in the South.—A Southern Journal says: Commissioner Le Duc has recently been selecting sites for tea farms in Georgia, and has returned to Washington, leaving an assistant to complete the work. He thinks that he will have no difficulty, as the problem of tea culture at the South, or at least in Georgia, has been already solved. A quantity of tea equal to that imported from Asia is raised in quantities in this State at a cost of not more than twenty cents a pound, and readily finds a market at from forty to fifty cents.

The Bureau of Steamboat Inspectors is Undergoing an ordeal of criticism, owing to the series of disasters which has shocked the community during the past few weeks. The general opinion appears to be, from inquiries made as to the operations and powers of the bureau, that the defects in the supervision of the boats are due rather to the laws than to the officers employed. There is a want of centralization in the arrangements which renders it difficult to fix the responsibility for defective supervision, and an attempt will probably be made in the next session of Congress to increase the power of the Inspector-General and at the same time hold him responsible for the efficient working of the system of inspection. At present he has only a limited power of initiating inquiries, and has no means of correcting irregularities and negligence on the part of local officials.

On Wednesday, July 7th, nine steamers were seized in the port of New York, the owners of which had failed to comply with the laws of inspection. They were subsequently released, after bonds had been given for the appearance of the owners at an investigation. The loss of so many valuable lives in the recent calamities renders a thorough inquiry imperative, and measures must be taken to guard against a recurrence of them.

The Isthmus Canal Scheme is Reported by M. Lesseps to be approaching realization. He states that the French capital has already been subscribed, and that American capital has begun to flow in. He believes that by the fall of next year he will be ready to commence operations. Meanwhile the Nicaraguan scheme has not been relinquished. Admiral Ammen and Mr. Blanchet, who advocate that route, had an interview with President Hayes on July 10th, with the view of directing his attention to the importance of favoring their project. The President, in reply, stated that he looked upon the Nicaraguan route as the most available one, and he hoped Mr. Blanchet might see his long-wished-for project carried into execution.

Dr. H. S. Tanner, a Physician from Minnesota, has succeeded in attracting a good deal of notice by professing to go entirely without food for forty days. The exhibition has been going on in the Clarendon Hall, New York, since June 28th. Similar cases have occurred before, and the only time that competent and reliable watchers were present the patient died. It is very difficult to make sure that such a case is properly watched; for a small quantity of liquid food will keep the life in a person who does not exert himself, and it is easy for such a quantity to be concealed in the sponges, towels, and clothing which the exhibitor uses. In one case, where a girl was pretending to fast continuously, it was discovered that her mother passed food to her from her mouth, whenever she kissed her, which she did many times a day. When Dr. Tanner had completed a week of his forty days, members of the Neurological Society of New York undertook to watch him; so either the detection of a fraud or the death of the patient is now certain. It will be an awful and wicked thing if Dr. Tanner is allowed to die.

Denis Kearney, the California Agitator, whose violent language has occasioned so much alarm in that State, has since his release from prison been deposed from his leadership by the party of the Sand Lots. The State Convention of Democratic workingmen, held at San Francisco July 2d, formally adopted the Cincinnati ticket, and declared Kearney's office as president of the party vacant. It is believed that he will still command the adherence of a section of the party, but the San Francisco journals assert that it is only the section composed of the poorest and most disreputable members.

The Salvation Army is making Progress in all the cities where corps have been established. A German corps has been started in New York, at a hall in West Fifty-third Street, and the meetings held have been crowded, and conversions have taken place. At Grand Union Hall and at the Baxter Street Mission many remarkable instances of God's saving mercy have occurred. Drunkards and abandoned persons of both sexes who were considered as hopelessly depraved may be seen rejoicing in salvation, "clothed and in their right mind."

Satan resists these energetic assaults on his kingdom according to his usual devices. He has stirred up wicked men, both in New York and Philadelphia, to assault the members of the army, and in several cases serious personal injury has been inflicted. In West Philadelphia a stone thrown at one of the preachers struck officer of the Army on the back with so mu force that she was confined to her bed for day, and still suffers considerable pain. At of the German services in New York stones w thrown, one of which struck a brother over left eye, inflicting a painful wound. There now ten corps at work, with four hundred spe ers, and an urgent invitation has been sent Commissioner Railton to visit Texas. It ca from a Christian man who had read in one the local journals an article condemning the vation Army, but who was convinced, from unfriendly remarks made, that the Army doing a work much needed in his neighborho

Roman Catholicism appears to be Los ground in some of the Western States. F James O'Connor, vicar apostolic of Nebra says: "It would surprise Catholics in the to know how many have been lost to the f in the West during the last half century. Nebraska alone, with its sparse population, number thus lost has been from 10,000 to 000, and the church has no more bitter ene to-day than these children of Catholic paren Those who have been familiar with the influ of Romanism on the domestic life of the pe will have no difficulty in accounting for the b enmity of which Mr. O'Connor complains.

Dr. Ripley, one of the most Eminent Lite men in America, died in New York on July at the age of 78. He was the literary edito the New York Tribune, the founder and ec of Harper's Monthly Magazine, and a freq contributor to other periodical literature. mother was a near relative of Benjamin Fr lin, and was remarkable for her educational quirements and literary abilities. Dr. Ripley formerly a Congregational minister at Bo but during a visit to Germany in 1842 he happily imbibed doctrines which led him o return to America to abjure evangelical theol and he thenceforward devoted himself ex ively to literary pursuits.

Religion at Princeton.—Dr. McCosh said public meeting held recently in Cincinnati, speaking of the condition of the college, " lieve you will be pleased to learn that the bers of the faculty watch over the morals o students, and we have really very little among us. We have had the courage t down hazing and other evils which still re in many colleges. We were supported b great body of students, and, the evils now rooted out, we have at this mo perfect peace and order. I believe our a wish us to continue a religious college, an of us give instruction in the Word of G every young man placed under our care. year 80 of the 120 who graduated were prof Christians. I know that you will be gratif learn that at the present time there is religious interest with prayer pervading than one half of the whole college."

Judge Black's Opinion of the State of S as recently expressed, is not of an encou character. In reply to an observation m a friend that the lines which formerly d people in religious matters seemed "to ing out," the judge said he had noticed th tinctions between right and wrong appeare fading out with them. Probably no man good opportunities of forming an accurat ion as a judge, and the fact that so emi judge expressed such an opinion is most cant and ominous. Society is in a most d ous condition when the distinctions b right and wrong are not clearly defined.

Beer as an Explosive.—An Explosion red on board the steamer Stonington, o York, last week, which severely injured the sailors. A barrel of beer formed part cargo, and during the passage it exploded ing the staves about with great force. A who was near it when it exploded was on the arm and leg so violently that both were broken. Had the liquor reached its nation it is possible that it would have don serious mischief by breaking some one's

A Wicked Attempt to Injure a Public Man s been made in New York. A packet was sent ently to the office of the Society for the Supession of Vice, addressed to Mr. Anthony Comock. On being opened it was found to contain mass of putrid matter, which emitted a very ensive odor. The only person who handled was Mr. Arthur F. Ducret, Mr. Comstock's nographer, and it is feared that he has reved fatal injuries from the contact. Soon er examining the parcel alarming symptoms peared; his skin became black, and his joints re greatly swollen. By severe treatment some the symptoms were reduced, but Mr. Ducret still confined to his bed and in great danger. e disease is stated by the physicians to be emia, or blood poisoning. Mr. Comstock's rk in New York has made for him many enes, and the malignity which prompted so bolical an act as this shows how valuable t work is in the best interest of society.

emperance Meetings are being Held at ean Grove this week, in connection with the men's Christian Temperance Union, under direction of Mrs. A. Wittenmeyer, assisted Mrs. Youmans, of Canada; Mrs. Lathrop, Michigan; Mrs. Reese, of Ohio; Mrs. Riley, Washington; Mrs. Burt, of the Woman's ional Christian Temperance Union; Mrs. nson, Miss Greenwood, Miss Coleman, and ers, from Brooklyn, and many of the speak- and workers of New Jersey, New York, nsylvania, and Connecticut. A National nperance Convention was held at Asbury k last Wednesday, the sittings lasting until urday.

ixty-five Years in the Sunday-School.—The st Baptist Church, Philadelphia, numbers ong its Sunday-school teachers a venerable seventy-three years of age. She has been he Sunday-school ever since it was organized, ch was sixty-five years ago. She was then he infant class.

ree Ice Water.—An Ice-water Fountain for use of the public has been placed in one of recesses of the New York Post Office build- The tank bears the inscription, "Free iceer, by the Business Men's Society for the ouragement of Moderation." An attendant laced in charge of the fountain, and glass blers are provided for the free use of the lic. The intense heat which has prevailed several weeks has been provocative of thirst, the Moderation Society in providing free water, has done indirect work in the cause of perance.

he Indian Schools at Carlisle, Pa., appear e successfully grappling with the vexed ques- of Indian civilization. Miss Mather, writto the New York Tribune, says: "Twenty- of the girls run the sewing-machine with , and do excellent work. Some of them and make their own dresses. All the work e dining-room is done by them. Some are ning to cook, and all keep their rooms, which always open to inspection, in nice order. boys are learning the tinner's trade, ten ess-making, six shoemaking, eight carering, and eight blacksmithing and wagoning. These boys are trained by skilled men, who pronounce their work and prog- equal to that of boys taken from any civilized ity."

e Virginia Bible Society is about to Can- the entire State with a view of supplying y family with a copy of the Holy Scriptures. ly fifty active men will be employed in the at a salary of $25 a month and expenses. Long Island Bible Society has also resolved canvass the whole island, excepting Brookfor the same purpose.

Extensive Fire was Caused near River- , L. I., last week, in an attempt to settle a ite. Two German residents quarrelled over ossession of some hay which both claimed. strange idea of setting fire to the hay oced to them as an amicable mode of settling dispute, and the plan was adopted. But the was not confined to the hay, but extended to the adjacent woods and 1200 acres of valuable timber were burned. For two days and nights the farmers at Calverton were obliged to fight the fire to save their dwellings and crops, and many narrow escapes are reported. One man in endeavoring to save his cord-wood was hemmed in by a fire that had been started, and was obliged to drive his team into the river. This is only one of innumerable instances in which a dispute over a trifling matter has led to serious loss. The world would have been saved untold sorrow and suffering, had Christ's rule as to quarrels been generally observed and practised (Matthew 5 : 39-42).

A Thief has died a Strange Death at South Canaan, Pa. A short time ago a burglary was committed at the house of one of the citizens, and a number of valuable articles were stolen. The police were unable to discover the criminal, but a few days ago his dead body was found lying in an unfrequented spot, shot through the head, and with his plunder around him. He had carried off, among other articles, a loaded gun, and in the hurry of his flight it had been accidentally discharged, killing him on the spot. Thus his crime brought its own punishment, which crime generally does sooner or later, though very seldom in so remarkable a manner (Psalms 94 : 23).

A Tract was given with each Railroad ticket issued by an agent at one of our principal stations during several years. He was an earnest Christian man, anxious to use every opportunity to spread the knowledge of his Master. Every year he expended fifty dollars in tracts, which he thus distributed, and after continuing the practice for five years he had the happiness of counting twenty-two letters he had received during that period from persons who had been converted by the blessing of God on the tracts he had given them with their tickets.

The Second Sunday-School Assembly at Round Lake will begin on July 20th, and continue ten days. Each day will be devoted to some special department of Christian work, including a Mission day, home and foreign; a Temperance day; two Children's days; a day of Sacred Concert; an Alumni reunion day; a Robert Raikes day; a Christian literature day; and a day of revival work. During the Assembly tents will be furnished to clergymen and their families free. There will be a department of illustration, embracing models of the temple, and the tabernacle, and an Oriental house, and Oriental costumes, relics, pictures, maps, and agricultural and commercial implements. The blackboard and object-teaching will be illustrated. Eminent ministers and laymen of different denominations have consented to deliver addresses.

A Town is being Swallowed up by the Missouri River in Iowa. The river has a bend just where it flows by the town of Covington, and the banks there are being gradually washed away. A strip of land thirty feet wide was swept away on June 20th in a few hours. The citizens have tried to moor trees and logs to the bank in the hope of forming a barrier to the flood, but the current is so swift and the water so deep that these attempts have failed. In two years over six hundred feet of ground have been swallowed up at irregular intervals, and the buildings are now being put on rollers for removal.

A Child was Rescued after being Seven Days in a morass near Baltimore last week. He was lost while on a free excursion for poor mothers and children. The place was carefully searched for several days, but no trace of him could be seen. Afterward a gentleman passing through the excursion grounds heard a noise, and tracing it, found the boy sunk in the mire above his waist. He was much emaciated, but it is thought he will recover, notwithstanding he was so long without food.

A New Gospel Tent.—The New York Baptist City Mission have decided to conduct a tent campaign this summer. A tent capable of seating two thousand persons has been secured, and it is to be set up at Second Avenue and Twentieth Street.

THE SHEEP BEFORE THE SHEARERS.

A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"As a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth."—Isaiah 53 : 7.

A Condescending Figure—I. Our Saviour's Patience—1. Dumb toward His Adversaries—2. Not a Word against us—3. No Repining at Punishment—4. Complete Submission and Self-Conquest—5. Complete Absorption in His Work—II. Our own Case as Sheep—The Sheep Rewards its owner by being Shorn—It is Benefited by the Operation—The Cleansing precedes the Shearing—The Sheep not Injured—Done at a Suitable Time—III. Imitate our Lord's example when our Turn Comesto be Shorn—The Stupidity of a Beaten Dog—Yield Thyself—The Downhill road to Heaven.

It is very suggestive of the way in which our Lord Jesus took the sinner's place that we are here in the context compared to sheep: "All we like sheep have gone astray," and then He who comes to take our place is compared to a sheep also—"as a sheep before her shearers is dumb." It is wonderful how complete was the interchange of positions between Christ and His people, so that what they were that He became, in order that what He is they may become.

See how closely He became like His brethren. I can very well understand how we should be like to the sheep and He to the shepherd; but I should never have dared to coin the comparison which likens Him to a sheep. I dare try to explain, but I should never have dared to utter it if I had not found it here. To liken the Son of the Highest to a sheep would have been unpardonable presumption had not His own Spirit employed the condescending figure.

Though the emblem is very gracious, it is by no means novel, for our Lord had been long before Isaiah's day typified in the lamb of the Passover. To call Him "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world," is a very frequent mode of explaining to us how He made expiation for our transgressions: and indeed even in His glory He is the Lamb in the midst of the throne, before whom angels and the redeemed are bowing.

I delight to bring before your minds the singular communion between yourselves and Jesus: you "like sheep," and He "as a sheep;" you like sheep in your wanderings, He like a sheep in His patience; you most like sheep—I mean myself and you—most like sheep for foolishness, but He only like a sheep for the sweet submissiveness of His spirit, so that beneath the shearer's hand "He openeth not His mouth."

I. I will not keep you with any preface, but invite you to consider first, under the figure of a sheep before her shearers. Let us view our Lord's patience by the help of the Holy Spirit.

OUR SAVIOUR'S PATIENCE,

I do not think I will preach to you, but I will set before you as open a window as I can, and ask you to look in, and behold the Lamb of God. Our Lord was brought to slaughter, and brought in another sense by another figure to the shearers: to the slaughter that He might die; to the shearers, that He might be shorn of His comfort, and of His honors, shorn even of His good name, and shorn at last of life itself. While He was before the slaughtermen He was quiet as a lamb that is led; when He was under the shearers He was as silent as a sheep that lieth to be shorn.

You know the story of how patient He was before Pilate, and Herod, and Caiaphas, and on the cross. You have no record of His groaning, or of His uttering any exclamation as though impatient of the pain and shame which He received at the hands of wicked men; you have not one bitter word, one hard speech. Pilate cries, "Answerest thou nothing? Behold how many things they witness against thee;" and Herod is bitterly disappointed, for he expected to see some miracle wrought by Him.

All that He does say is like the bleating of a sheep, only so infinitely more full of meaning.

He utters sentences like these—" For this purpose was I born, and came into the world, that I might bear witness to the truth," and," Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." He is all patience and silence.

1. Now remember, first, that our Lord was dumb and opened not His mouth against His adversaries, and did not accuse one of them of cruelty or injustice. They slandered Him, but He replied not; false witnesses arose, but He answered them not. He did not say, like Paul, " God shall smite thee, thou whited wall." I am not going to condemn Paul, but I certainly am not going to commend him. In contrast with the Master, how differently he behaves!

He had only to have lifted His eye to heaven, or to have felt a wrathful wish, and legions of angels would have chased out the ribald soldiery; one flash of a seraph's wing and Herod had been eaten by worms, and Pilate had died the death he well deserved as an unjust judge. The hill of the cross might have become a volcano's mouth to swallow up the whole multitude who stood there jesting and jeering at Him; but, no, nothing of the kind; there was no display of power, or rather there was so great a display of power over Himself that He did not use His might against His bitterest foes; He restrained Omnipotence itself with a strength which never can be measured, for His mighty love availed even to restrain divine wrath. He kept back the natural indignation which must have come over His spirit against the injustice, the falsehood, the shameful malice of His foes; He held it all back, and was patient, meek, silent to the end.

2. Again, as He did not utter a word against His adversaries, so He did not say a word against any one of us. You remember how Zipporah said to Moses, " Surely a bloody husband art thou to me," as she saw her child bleeding; and surely Jesus might have said to His Church, " Thou art a costly spouse to me, to bring me all this shame and blood-shedding." But He giveth liberally, He openeth the very fountain of His heart, and He upbraideth not. He had reckoned on the uttermost expenditure, and endured the cross, despising the shame.

"This was compassion like a God,
That when the Saviour knew
The price of pardon was his blood,
His pity ne'er withdrew."

3. And again, as there was not a word against His adversaries, nor a word against you nor me, there was not a word against His Father or of repining at the severity of the punishment of our sin. You know how Cain said, " My punishment is greater than I can bear," and yet to me he seems to have been treated with strange leniency, that first red-handed man. Sometimes you and I have cried, when under a comparatively light grief, " Surely my grief cannot be weighed in the scales, nor measured in the balances." We have thought ourselves hardly done by.

He alone of all mankind could truly say, " All thy waves and thy billows have gone over me;" yet there is not a complaint, for " My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" is a cry of grief, but it is not a cry of repining. It shows manhood in its weakness, but not manhood in revolt. There is the cry of grief, but there is not the voice of rebellion there, nor even of despair. We have the lamentations of Jeremiah, but where are the lamentations of Jesus? Jesus wept, and Jesus sweat great drops of blood, but he never murmured nor felt rebellion in His heart.

4. I see in this, in Christ our Lord, complete submission. He gives Himself up; there is no reserve about it. The sacrifice did not need binding with cords to the horns of the altar. How different from your case and mine? He stands there willing to suffer, to be spit upon, to be shamefully entreated, and to die, for in Him there was a complete surrender. There was no reserve about his body, soul, or spirit. He was wholly given up to do the Father's will, and work out our redemption.

There was a complete self-conquest, too. In Him no faculty arose to plead for liberty, and ask to be exempted from the general strain; no limb of the body, no portion of the mind, no faculty of the spirit started, but all submitted; a whole Christ giving up His whole being unto God, that He might perfectly offer Himself without spot for redemption.

5. There was not only self-conquest, but there was a complete absorption in his work. The sheep, lying there, thinks no more of the pastures, it just gives itself up to the shearer. And Christ forsook His Father that He might be one flesh with us; that was at the very first, and therefore He came here and was joined unto us at Bethlehem. He kept up the union to the end, and hence He was one with us in death. The zeal of God's house did eat Him up in Pilate's hall as well as everywhere else, for there He witnessed a good confession. No thought had He but for the clearing of the divine honor, and the salvation of God's elect. His powers were concentrated into one desire, and the passion of love to men made His heart hot within Him, till it melted and ran out in a stream of love and blood.

The wonderful serenity and submissiveness of our Lord are still better set forth by our text, if it be indeed true that sheep in the east are even more docile than with us. Those who have seen the noise and roughness of many of our washings and shearings will hardly believe the testimony of that ancient writer Philo-Judæus when he affirms that the sheep came voluntarily to be shorn. He says: " Woolly rams laden with thick fleeces put themselves into his hands (the shepherd's) to have their wool shorn, being thus accustomed to pay their yearly tribute to man, their king by nature. The sheep stands in a silent inclining posture, unconstrained under the hand of the shearer. These things may appear strange to those who do not know the docility of the sheep, but they are true."

II. Thus I have very feebly indeed set before you, dear friends, the patience of our beloved Master. Now I want you to follow me, in the second place, to view under the same metaphor as that which is used in reference to our Lord.

OUR OWN CASE

Did not I begin by saying that because we were sheep He deigns to compare Himself to a sheep? Now, just go back again. Our Lord was a sheep under the shearers, and as He is, so are we also in this world. Though we shall never be offered up like a lamb in the temple by way of expiation, yet the saints for ages were the flock of slaughter, as it is written, " For thy sake we are killed all the day long, we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter!"

Jesus sends us forth as sheep in the midst of wolves, and we are to regard ourselves as living sacrifices, ready to be offered up. I dwell, however, more particularly upon the second symbol; we can go, and do go, as sheep under the shearer's hands. I want to speak to you a little now about this figure, as I have no doubt it has been wrought out in the lives of many here present, and may perhaps be wrought out at this present time, and in future days in the rest of you. We need to be reconciled to the shearing process, and to that end I shall speak at this time.

First, remember that a sheep rewards its owner for all his care and trouble by being shorn. There is nothing else that I know of that a sheep can do. It yields food when it is killed, but while it is alive the one payment that the sheep can make to the shepherd is to yield its fleece in due season. And so, dear friends, a sheep, if it were intelligent, might well be reconciled to be shorn because it would say, " The shepherd deserves to be rewarded for his pains, and so I am content to go down to the shearing house, to yield my fleece that he may be repaid."

Some of God's people can give to Christ a tribute of gratitude by active service, and they should do so gladly every day of their lives; but many others cannot do much in active service, and about the only reward they can give to their Lord is to give up their fleece by suffering wh
he calls upon them to suffer; submissively yiel ing to be shorn of their personal comfort wh the time comes for patient endurance.

Here comes the shearer; he takes the she and begins to cut, cut, cut, cut, taking away t wool by wholesale. Affliction is often used the big shears. The husband is taken away, perhaps the wife, little children are taken aw property is taken away, health is taken aw Sometimes the shears even cut off your go name; slander comes, everything seems to co and remove your consolations, till all comfo vanish.

Well, this is

YOUR SHEARING TIME,

you may not be able to glorify God to any v large extent except by undergoing this pr ess; and if this be the fact, do you not thi that you and I, like good sheep of Christ, sho surrender cheerfully and say, " I lay mys down with this intent, that thou shouldst t from me anything and everything, and do wl thou wilt with me; for I am not mine o
I am bought with a price, and so I would che fully yield to anything by which thou may get some honor out of me. Thou great Sh herd of the sheep, clip and shear me as th wilt, so long as thou seest some sort of ret for all thy tender care and bitter woe.

Notice that the sheep is itself benefited by operation of shearing. Before they begin to sh the sheep the wool is long and old, and ev bush that catches it, every thistle with whic gets entangled, every brier that it passes tears off a bit of the wool, and the sheep lo ragged and forlorn. If the wool, were left o when the heat of summer came it would not able to bear itself, it would be so overloaded w clothing that it would be as we ourselves are wl we have kept on our borrowed wool, our flan and broadcloths, too late. After the heat summer has come we have to throw off our th clothes: we cannot bear them; so the sheep is better for losing its wool, it would become a l derance to it and not a comfort if it could ret it.

So, brethren, when the Lord shears us, we not like the operation any more than the sh do; but first it is for His glory, and secondl really is for our benefit, and therefore we bound most willingly to submit. There many things which we should have liked to h kept which, if we had kept them, would not h proved blessings, but curses. Remember, a s blessing is a curse. The brazen serpent preser as a relic became a snare to the people till it broken up and called Nehushtan, a piece of br
The manna, though it came from heaven, only good so long as God's command made blessing, but when they kept it over its due t it bred worms and stank, and then it was no bl ing.

I do believe that many persons if they co would keep their blessings stinking in the ho till they filled their cupboards with worms.
God will not have it so. Up to a certain p for you to be wealthy was a blessing; it wo not have been a blessing any longer, and so Lord took your riches away. Up to that p your child was a boon, but it would have b no longer so, and therefore it fell sick and d
You may not be able to see it, but it must tainly be, that God, when He withdraws a bl ing from His people, takes it away, becaus would not be a blessing any longer. Remem this text, " No good thing will I withhold f them that walk uprightly," and if that be t then this is true, " No really good thing w take away from them that walk uprightly," that is something more than withholding.

You who know something about sheep remember that before sheep are shorn they always washed. Were you ever present at scene when they drive them down to the bro to the place where they have dammed up stream to make a pool for washing? There men stand in rows, while the shepherd stand the water breast high. The sheep are dri wn, and the men seize them, throw them into e water, keeping their faces above water, and ill them round and round and round to wash e wool before they clip it off. You see them me out on the other side frightened to death, or things, wondering whatever is coming, no ubt under the impression that they are going t be drowned, and when they escape they stand ating on the other shore as one by one they ish their swim.

want to suggest to you, brethren, that whener a trial threatens to overtake you, before it ually arrives you should ask the Lord to sanctify you. If He is going to clip the wool, ask him to wash it before He takes it off; ask to be cleansed in spirit, soul, and body. That is a very good custom Christian people have of asking a blessing on their meals before they eat bread. Do you not think it is even more necessary to ask a blessing on our troubles before we go into them?

fter the washing, and the sheep has dried, the sheep actually loses what was its comfort. It is thrown down, and you see the shearers; you wonder at them and pity the poor sheep. The sheep is losing what was its comfort. It will happen to you that you shall lose what is your comfort. Will you recollect this? Because the next time you receive a fresh comfort you must say this is a loan. O sheep, there is no wool on your back but what will come off; child of God, there is no comfort in your possession but it will either leave you, or you will leave it.

he shearers, when they are taking the wool of the sheep, take care not to hurt the sheep: they clip as close as they can, but they do not cut the skin. If possible they will not make a gash or a wound, or draw blood, even in the smallest degree. When they do make a gash, it is because the sheep does not lie still; but a careful shearer ha

BLOODLESS SHEARS.

this Thomson sings in his Seasons, and the passage is so good an illustration of the whole subject that I will adorn my discourse with it:

"How meek, how patient, the mild creature lies!
What softness in its melancholy face,
What dumb complaining innocence appears!
Fear not, ye gentle tribes! 'tis not the knife
Of horrid slaughter that is o'er you waved;
No, 'tis the tender swain's well guided shears,
Who having now, to pay his annual care,
Borrow'd your fleece, to you a cumbrous load,
Will send you bounding to your hills again."

Be sure that when the Lord is clipping and shearing us He will not hurt us; He will take our comforts away, but He will not really injure or cause a wound to our spirits. Hath He not said, "In the world ye shall have tribulation, but in me ye shall have peace." If ever the shears do make us bleed, it is because we kick, because we struggle.

You will notice about sheep-shearing that the shearers always shear at a suitable time. It would be a very wicked, cruel, and unwise thing to begin sheep-shearing in winter time. There is a proverb which talks about God "tempering the wind to the shorn lamb." It may be so, but it is a very wicked practice to shear lambs that winds need tempering. Sheep are shorn when it is warm, genial weather, when they can afford to lose their fleeces, and are all the better for being relieved of them. As the summer comes on sheep-shearing time comes. Have you ever noticed that whenever the Lord afflicts us He selects the best possible time?

There is a prayer that He put into His disciples' mouths, "Pray that your flight be not in the winter:" the spirit of that prayer may be seen in the seasonableness of our sorrows. He will not send us our worst troubles at our worst time. I have frequently noticed, and I have treasured it up with gratitude, that when I have had strong inclinations to sin, the opportunity has not come; that if ever I have had opportunities of sinning temptingly put before me, then I have had no inward longing toward the sin. When the inward desire and the opportunity meet, that is a very dangerous case indeed, but the Lord keeps His people from that.

There is another thing to remember. When God takes away our mercies He is ready to supply us with more. It is with us as with the sheep, there is new wool coming. Whenever the Lord takes away our earthly comforts with one hand, one, two, three, He restores with the other hand six, twelve, scores, a hundred; he takes away by spoonfuls, and he gives by cartloads: we are crying and whining about the little loss, and yet it is necessary in order that we may be able to receive the great mercy. Yes, it will be so, we shall yet have cause for rejoicing, "joy cometh in the morning." Yes, there is new wool coming; do not therefore fret at the shearing. I have given these thoughts in brief, that we may come to this last word.

III. Let us, in the third place, endeavor to imitate the example of our blessed Lord to be shorn. Let us be dumb before the shearers, submissive, quiescent, even as He was.

WHEN OUR TURN COMES

I have been giving, in everything I have said, a reason for so doing. I have shown that it glorifies God, rewards the Shepherd, and benefits ourselves. I have shown that He measures and tempers our affliction, and sends the trial at the right time. I have shown you in many ways that we are wise to submit ourselves, as the sheep does to the shearer, and the more completely we do so the better. Oh, brethren, we shall be happy when we have done with self: it will be all well with us whatever we may have gone through, when we learn that verse of Toplady's:

"Sweet to lie passive in Thy hand,
And know no will but thine."

I know we struggle a good deal, and we make excuses for struggling. Sometimes we say, "Oh, this is so painful, I cannot be patient! I could have borne anything else; but not this." When a father is going to correct his child does he select something that is pleasant? Oh dear no. The painfulness of the chastisement is the essence of it, and even so the bitterness of your sorrow will be a blessing to you. By the blueness of the wound the heart will be made better. Do not rebel because your trial seems strange. It is as good as saying, "If I have it all my own way I will not rebel, but if everything does not please me I will not endure it." Sometimes we complain because of our great weakness. "Lord, were I stronger I would not mind this heavy loss: I am like a sere leaf driven of the tempest." But who is to be the judge of the suitability of your trial? You or God? Since the Lord judges this trial to be suitable to your weakness, depend upon it it is so. Lie still, lie still, lie quite still!

"Alas," you say, "my grief comes from the most cruel quarter; this trouble did not arise directly from God, it came through my cousin or my brother, who ought to have treated me with gratitude. I could have borne it if it had not come in that way; it was not an enemy, then I could have borne it." Then let me tell you it is not a traitor after all. God is at the bottom of all your tribulation—look through the second causes to the great First Cause.

It is a great mistake when we fret over the human instrument which smites us, and forget the hand which uses the rod. If I strike a dog with a stick, he bites my stick—that is because he is stupid; if he thought a little he would bite me, or else take the blow and bow in obedience. Now, you must not begin biting the stick. After all it is God that uses that staff, though it be of ebony or of blackthorn. It is well to have done with all this picking and choosing, and to leave the whole matter in the hand of infinite wisdom. A sweet singer has put this matter very prettily; let me quote the lines:

"But when my Lord did ask me on what side
I were content,
The grief whereby I must be purified,
To me was sent,

"As each imagined anguish did appear,
Each withering bliss
Before my soul, I cried, 'Oh! spare me here, Oh, no, not this!'

"Like one that having need of, deep within,
The surgeon's knife,
Would hardly bear that it should graze the skin,
Though for his life.

"Nay, then, but He, who best doth understand Both what we need,
And what can bear, did take my case in hand,
Nor crying heed."

This is

THE PITH OF MY SERMON:

O sheep, yield thyself, yield thyself! O believer, yield thyself, lie passive, lie passive, struggle not! There is no use in struggling, for our great Shearer, if He means to shear, will do it; if He means to send us trials and troubles He will not spare for our crying, He will not mind our whining, He will do His will and carry out His purpose. What is the good, therefore, of rebellion? Did not I say just now that the sheep, by struggling, might be cut by the shears! So you and I, if we struggle against God, we shall get two troubles instead of one, and after all there is not half so much trouble in a trouble as there is in our kicking against the trouble.

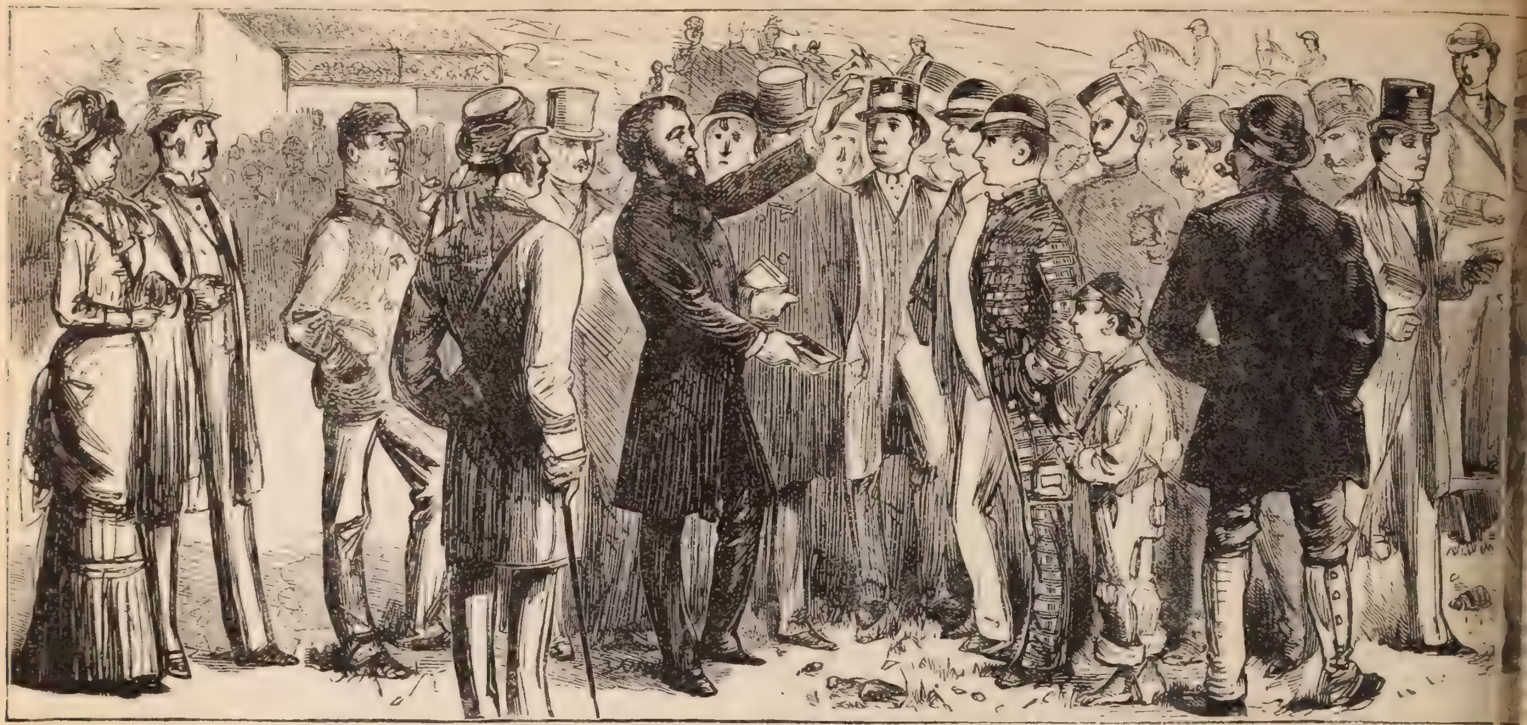
The eastern ploughman when he ploughs has a goad, and pricks the ox to make it move along; he does not hurt it much, but suppose the ox flings out the moment it touches him, he drives the goad into himself, and bleeds. So is it with us, if we kick out against divine providences we shall get a sore wound, much more than was ever needful; we shall endure much more pain than would have come if we had yielded to the divine will.

What is the use of kicking and struggling then, you fretful ones? You cannot make one hair white or black. You that are troubled, rest with us, for you cannot make shower or shine, rain or fine weather, with all your groaning. Did you ever bring a penny into the till by fretting, or put a loaf on the table by complaint, or get a shilling in your pocket by murmuring? Murmuring is wasted breath, and fretting is wasted time. But to lie still in the hand of God brings a blessing to the soul. I wish myself that I could be more quiet, calm, and self-possessed, but an active mind is apt to turn upon itself to its own wounding, when all the cares of a church and a great work press heavily.

I long to cry habitually, "Lord, do what Thou wilt, when Thou wilt, as Thou wilt with me, Thy servant: appoint me honor or dishonor, wealth or poverty, sickness or health, exhilaration or depression, and I will take all right gladly from Thy hand." A man is not far from the gates of heaven when he is fully submissive to the Lord's will. Though heaven is up hill the road to it is down hill, and when a man has gone down so much that he is dead to self, he is not far from entering into that eternal life where God shall be all in all, in bliss for ever and ever. You that have been shorn have, I hope, received a word of comfort through the ever blessed Spirit of God. May God bless it to you. Oh that the sinner, too, would submit himself to God, yield himself up, and rebel no longer! Submit yourselves unto God, let every thought be brought into captivity to Him, and the Lord send His blessing, for Christ's sake. Amen.

[PORTION OF SCRIPTURE READ BEFORE SERMON—Isaiah 53.]

[The prayers of the readers of this Journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors in America and England, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and for its weekly circulation of more than 185,000 copies to be blessed by the Holy Spirit to the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Talmage especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]



OPEN-AIR PREACHING AT EPSOM RACES, IN ENGLAND, IN MAY, 1880, BY MR. KIRKHAM AND OTHERS.

The Practice of Open Air Preaching—History of the "London Open-Air Mission"—Archbishop Tait's Commendation of it—Rev. H. Webb Peploe's Conviction by a Tract on a Race-course—Edwin Kerwin's Conversion by Tracts and Preaching at Races—Experiences at Epsom.

THE race-course at Epsom during the last week of May is always, for four days, crowded with frequenters of horse races, especially on the day of the Derby on Wednesday, and of the Oaks on Friday. And the opportunity is not neglected by Christian workers to sow the seed of the Gospel among the vast crowds, as depicted in the illustration at the head of this article.

Nineteen centuries ago, the voice of the forerunner, John the Baptist, was heard before the First Advent, crying, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord," so to-day the voice of the herald is heard as the Second Advent speedily approaches, while he cries in the open air, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," and preaches repentance and a coming judgment, proclaiming as he does so, "The Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

The need of open-air proclamations of salvation will be denied by no disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the imperative urgency of the work is more clearly recognized than ever before. As a practical recognition of this need, the "Open-air Mission" was inaugurated in 1852, and has successfully prosecuted its work for the last twenty-seven years. The object of the society as originally proposed, and to which there has been steady adherence, is "to encourage, regulate, and improve the efforts of Christian men, especially laymen, who carry the Gospel of Jesus Christ to their fellow creatures assembled out of doors, or in places frequented by the masses."

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY,

at the annual meeting of the Mission, held in 1875, said:

"It is calculated that the metropolis increases annually by 40,000 living souls. Now, whatever efforts may have been made to extend the usefulness of the Church according to its prescribed and regular machinery, you will all see that it is quite impossible for any regular efforts of ordained clergy to keep pace with this ever-growing population, and what a wise clergyman does in his parish and neighborhood is to enlist the sympathy, and not only the sympathy, but the active co-operation of every man and of every woman ready to take his or her part in spreading the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Now, it is of the very essence of such efforts as that which has brought us here to-day, to endeavor to reach those who cannot be reached by the ordinary ministrations of our churches."

The area covered by the operations of the Mission is exceedingly large, and comprises divers kinds of work. One branch—the visitation of races, fairs, and other special gatherings of the people—is almost peculiar to the Open-Air Mission, as no other organization or agency does it systematically, and it is only taken up by individual workers occasionally. The field, certainly, is one which at first does not appear very promising, and it requires courage, self-denial, and tact of no ordinary kind. But though there is much wayside, stony, and thorny ground, there is nevertheless a harvest to be gained which amply repays all the toil bestowed. The Rev. H. W. Webb Peploe, Vicar of St. Paul's, London, thus related at the anniversary meeting of the Religious Tract Society, in Exeter Hall, in 1878,

HIS CONVERSION BY A TRACT ON A RACE-COURSE,

'A lad, bursting into manhood, of the age of nineteen, is spoken to one night by a faithful Christian, and he tries the next day to reject the influence which had moved him to tears the night before. He endeavors to cast off the effect produced by passing rapidly to the race-course in the town of Derby, hoping, if possible, to shake off all that he had heard; but as he steps upon the race-course a young man walks forward to him, and says, 'Sir, would you kindly look at that?' and his eye falls just for a moment upon the simple, single-paged tract, and the words that strike him are these: 'Reader, if you died to-night would you be in hell?' He fled from the race-course as one stricken by God's hand, or one pursued by a spirit that was striving to drag him into hell. For seven miles he ran, and that young man from that day never dared to go back, until this night he stands in the presence of an Exeter Hall assembly, telling them of God's mercy."

EDWIN KERWIN'S CONVERSION BY TRACTS AND PREACHING AT RACES.

As a further illustration of the blessing which accompanies Christian efforts at race-courses, the following letter to Mr. Kirkham will be perused with interest. The writer of it is one of the chief helpers in the Tower Hamlets Miss and in that capacity has the direction of ne seventy Christian workers, about twenty-fiv whom are open-air preachers:

"Ever since I saw your account last yea of your visit to Doncaster races, I have felt at if you again visited them this year, at the t. Leger season, I should like to go with you, at is, if you will have me. And now perhaps u would like to know my reason for asking is favor. In September, 1868, I left King's C for Manchester, on my way to Doncaster, t ee the St. Leger run. I went down a few day efore, and so avoided the crush. I was a g at card-player at that time, and never was wit ut a pack in my pocket. My fellow-passengers re three gentlemen, and no sooner had the in left the platform than I pulled out my cards nd asked them if they would like to play a gar of whist. They looked at me with some am nt of suspicion, and then at one another. Su sing their thoughts, I remarked that I was t a sharper, and although I usually played dail or money, I would play them for love. The ccepted my invitation, and we occupied the me in playing until we arrived at Peterbor h, where I alighted for refreshment. As I ste ed out of the carriage, two young women conf nted me and proffered me a tract, which I ok, and thanked them, for I was always resp ful to those whom I thought were trying do good, however mistaken I imagined they w in their method.

"Upon resuming my seat in the trai my travelling companions said they thought ey had had enough of card-playing. I then led out my note-book, and with it the tract, ch curiosity led me to read. The perusal the same made me very uncomfortable, and I r it again and again. It made such an impr ion upon me, that when I arrived at my desti ion I actually handed it round the table at sup r to be read, at the same time commenting up the beautiful words it contained.

"St. Leger day came, and I started from an chester for Doncaster. Soon after reachi the race-course, and just on the other side the grand stand, my attention was drawn to a oup of men with a banner, upon which was a t of Scripture. They were singing and prea ng. I had often seen this before at race-me ngs, and always ridiculed such conduct, an en then thought what fools they were. I c ided it was blasphemy to be talking about God d Jesus on a race-course.

" However the text displayed upon the ban- r I could not forget, and it left a very uncom- table feeling within. The few words I heard the preaching seemed to make me feel even rse, and I thought I had better clear out of it, went and stood opposite the grand stand. me time after I was watching the horses start the Leger when I again espied the preachers, o had come over close to where I was stand- g. This was more than I could endure; and soon as the race was over I quitted the course th anything but kind feelings toward the eachers.

" I returned to Manchester very downcast. I de up with betting men whose conversation I herto had delighted in, but it seemed to be fully repugnant now. I went so far as to get o another compartment, but that was also ed with the same class of passengers, and so rode on to Manchester in a most mournful ood. I seemed to care for nothing. I was to ve stayed ten days longer, but returned to ndon the day after. Other circumstances the rd used to follow up the impression made on me, and in November, less than two onths afterward, I was converted to God. rely God's hand can be seen in all this, and u can understand my desire to stand and tell e story on the Doncaster race-course. I am urs very truly,

" EDWIN H. KERWIN."

The greatest effort of the Open-Air Mission, this branch of its operations, is put forth at som races, during the Derby week. This ar, in the course of seven days, more than thirty rsons took part in the work, more than fifty dresses were delivered, and nearly 100,000 acts and books were given away. One even- g, through some words of the preacher on tting, there was an outbreak of feeling. Look here, sir!" one of the betting men ex- aimed, "you preach the Gospel: that's your siness, and let betting alone." Another man clared he would knock the preacher down, if cost him £5 for doing so. At the close of the eeting the mission agent found a London police spector in plain clothes ready to escort him to s lodgings. "If it hadn't been for you," he id kindly, "I should have been in bed long nce, for I have to be up early; but I did not now what might happen, so I stayed to see e end."

Instances might be multiplied indefinitely to ove the value of this agency, and of the suc- ss of the zealous exertions of Mr. Gawin Kirk- am, Secretary of the Open-Air Mission, and of s numerous coadjutors.

PROPHETIC EXPOSITION.

Compiled by Rev. M. Baxter.

(Continued from page 439.)

r. Mercier's Interpretation—Napoleon I. the Seventh Head—The Crimean War—The Unclean Spirits—Expected result of the Crimean War—The Fall of Turkey not to come by War.

THE REV. LEWIS PAGE MERCIER, M.A., aplain of the Foundling Hospital, London, ablished in 1853, a discourse upon "The Pres- t European Crisis," containing the following marks:

"The seventh head of the Latin Empire, des- nated by the seventh head of the Apocalyptic lydra (Rev. 17 : 10), appeared in the person of apoleon Bonaparte, who preceded by two ears the abdication in 1806 by the Austrian mperor Francis of the title of Cæsar and Em- eror of the Romans (which title had never for 350 years been in abeyance). Napoleon con- tituted himself the head of that Roman Em- ire, whose capital, Rome, he seized, and over hose ancient feudatories he reigned with power s absolute as that of the first Cæsar. After a rief reign, extending over a period marked by iore amazing conquests and extraordinary phe- omena than the world had ever seen, he, that is to say, the dynasty which he represented, fell at Waterloo wounded to death (Rev. 13 : 3).

"A period of peace then ensued, which, placing the French people under a constitutional government and prospering them in the arts of civilization, seemed to promise to mankind a continuance of tranquillity, and to postpone indefinitely the predicted horrors of the last vials which immediately precede the restoration of God's ancient people, the Jews, and the inauguration of the peaceful millennium of one thousand years.

"But the eye that saw the deadly wound of Bonaparte's French Empire beheld also the miraculous healing of that wound,* and the revival of that same form of government under circumstances so similar, and with form and spirit so identical, as to be called the same as the seventh head, although apparently an eighth. For while all men were secure and Louis Philippe's monarchy seemed daily acquiring strength, which promised to make it impregnable, suddenly, as by a secret blow, in 1848, it fell to pieces; its line of kings becoming exiles for their lifetime, and the prophetic sea of revolutionary tumult raging again with tempestuous violence.

"But suddenly as the one fell, the other form of government reappeared. A single man, but little known, and foolishly despised by those who looked not beyond the surface, declared himself the successor of the sword-slain head of the French, or in reality, Latin Empire. Men looked and were amazed: their views were disproved, their human expectations scattered to the winds; and now among the wings of the earth sits one in whom lives and breathes the Napoleonic spirit that overran the continent from Madrid to Moscow, and placed the heel of an obscure Corsican upon the necks of the descendants of an hundred kings.

LOUIS NAPOLEON,

"But simultaneously with this phenomenon in the west, appears a sign in the east. The Turco-Mohammedan Power, which formerly overthrew and took possession of the Eastern Roman Empire, now arms itself for a struggle against the mighty Russian foe, which, true to the traditionary policy of the house of Ivan, issues forth from the less genial provinces of north-east Europe and plants its standard on the borders of the Danube.

Yet shall not war destroy the kingdom of that once fierce and sanguinary foe of Christendom. He shall be broken without hand (Dan. 8 : 25). The mystic Euphrates shall be dried up (Rev. 16 : 12). Rotten to the core, and destitute of internal power of coherence, the struggle of the Ottoman is but the preliminary to his gradual dissolution.

"Those two signs, then—the Revival of the military French empire of Bonaparte and the manifestly approaching overthrow of the Turco-Mohammedan power symbolized by the Euphratean Horsemen—are momentous warnings of what is about to follow. And there are equally potent signs to be read in the very spirit of the age. Probably never since Christianity made its way among the nations of Europe has there been a time when the 'Three Unclean Spirits,' predicted under the sixth vial, of 'Satanic Infidelity, Despotism springing out of anarchy, and Jesuitical Popery,' have ventured abroad under so thin a disguise as in the present day.

"The mines of the two first-named are spreading in all directions: and never have the emissaries of the corrupt Hierarchy which aids in treason and abets in disaffection, plied their calling more successfully and undisguisedly than now. If we could only divest our minds of the smooth sounds of political language, the position in which our country stands, might well cause us astonishment, and the aspect of all Europe fill us with apprehension and alarm (Rev. 16 : 13–16).

"Centuries of misrule will have to be expiated in the compass of a few years. The long smouldering fire of hate now burns slowly, but unceasingly, throughout the Italian States, like the lava of their own volcanoes. From Rome to the Caucasus, the lurid atmosphere of the political world threatens a conflagration. The antipathies of nations and creeds long repressed by force of circumstances, when once let loose, must result in horrors to which even the dread catastrophes of the first fifteen years of this century can offer no parallel; appalling, because they will be the final effort of Satan before the binding of his powers (Rev. 12 : 12 ; 20.): fearful, because present means of destruction exceed tenfold in power, magnitude, and rapidity of movement, those which hurried our forefathers into the presence of their Maker. It can scarcely be too much to say that the coming wars will equal in awful reality, if not surpass, all that our imagination can picture of the terrible and the dread.

"The date assigned to the conclusion of the prophetic eras of Daniel, Zechariah, and Revelation (viz., the 1260 years, etc.), is not far distant. Many are running to and fro, and knowledge is being increased (Dan. 12 : 4). Let us bear in mind that it has been expressly declared that the coming period, in whose destinies we cannot doubt that our own country (from the extent of its maritime power and the magnitude of the interests it has at stake (must play a prominent part, will be one marked by such trouble and universal suffering as has never been known since there was a nation upon the earth (Daniel 12 : 1).

"In the great wars from 1800 to 1815 there was not a nation that did not suffer, and in each nation there have been but few that did not in some way share in the general calamities. But so vast has been the increase and extension of human relationship since then, that now even an equal amount of war would produce a greater extent of human suffering."

EXPECTED RESULT OF THE CRIMEAN WAR.*

"The question arises—If Turkey is to be the victor in the present contest (the Crimean War), and the Muscovite be driven ingloriously back to his northern fastnesses, how is prophecy to be fulfilled? What becomes of the predicted fearful European War? Where is the predestined restoration of Judah and Israel, and how far off is the prophetic period of Unexampled Woe? What is to be said if the present conflict be concluded by the submission of the Czar to the terms offered by the western powers, and by the consequent victory of the Ottoman?

"The answer is that the predicted horrors of the final European War do not commence until the downfall of Turkey, out of which it necessarily springs. It is also declared, I believe, as above stated, in Dan. 8 : 25 ; Rev. 16 : 12, that the Ottoman Empire will

NOT BE DESTROYED BY WAR.

Consequently the present Crimean War cannot be the final prophetic war. Turkey will ultimately be dismembered, not by the pressure of external rapacity, or foreign violence, but by mere internal inability to keep its heterogeneous elements longer in cohesion. The Christian population will learn their own strength, and the political and numerical weakness of their Mohammedan superiors. Turkey will be broken without hand and dried up.

"And when eventually the Ottoman Empire is dismembered, the flames of war must rage over the entire continent of Europe. Austria cannot, without peril to her existence, permit the Russian to acquire a permanent standing in the territories of European Turkey. France will not endure an Austrian rival on the Mediterranean. To England the opening of a passage through Asia to her Indian possessions would be a call to arms. The outbreak of war would be a signal to every smaller state that now groans under oppression and misrule to rise and assert her rights and independence. In these prospective events the elements of the final prophetic war are not difficult to be recognized."

(To be continued.)

---

*[Note by Editor in 1876.] Mr. Mercier wrote these words at the time of the Crimean War of England, France, and Turkey against Russia in 1853.

* Appendix in 1853.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 447.)

Changes at Rockwood.

"If you'd come and see him!" urged Julia. "He thinks all the world o' you."

"I'll come gladly," replied Ruth.

"I know I'm nothin' better than a common servant-girl," said Julia humbly; "and he only used to make game o' me; so it 'ud be no use me sayin' anythin', even if I knew how. But you're a lady, and he thinks all the world o' you."

It cost Julia a pang to own this in so many words. Though she had risked her life for Charles Clifford, and was willing to devote it to his service, he thought nothing of her; while he thought all the world of Ruth, who had never given to him a moment's care. She could not explain it to herself. Charles Clifford had never been like Ernest, who seemed to belong altogether to another sphere than hers. Charles had always chosen to associate with people like himself. Then how was it that he could think so much of Ruth, and find merely a subject of ridicule in her own devotion and love to him?

"And oh! Miss Ruth," she continued, "his mother can't comfort him, no more than me. She sits, and cries, and wails by his bedside, and never says a word to cheer him up. 'We shall have to live all the rest of our days in this hole,' she says; 'there's no more company for us, and no pleasure in life. I'm a miserable woman,' she says. "Sometimes Master Charlie pretends to be asleep, when he hears her come in. 'Julia,' he said, last night, 'what have I done to bring my father's curses on me? Ernest says he took them off before he died, but they've overtaken me all the same. I made him miserable, and now I'm miserable. Even my mother looks on me as a burden.' 'You're no burden to me, Master Charlie,' I said; 'I love to wait on you.' But it was no good; he only groaned deeper than ever; and I heard him callin', 'Oh, God! oh, God!' like a child that's lost its way and is callin' for its mother."

Julia hid her face in her hands, weeping bitterly; and Ruth wept too. It was pitiful to them both to think of Charles Clifford suddenly struck down in his full vigor; but Ruth's grief and pity were nothing to Julia's.

"What I want to ask," resumed Julia, "is to be only his nurse, Julia Rush, just as if I'd never called myself anythin' else. I know you and Captain Symons and the rest have a right to settle what I ought to do, because I was your father's wife; but folks will forget all that by and by. It was a silly blunder o' mine, and I'm rightly punished for it. I'm young and strong, and I might take care o' Master Charlie as long as he lives. Oh, my dear Miss Ruth, he'll need somebody very true and patient to take care of him.

"The doctors say by and by, maybe not for some years yet, but the mischief 'll creep up to his head, and he'll be quite silly, like a poor idiot. He'll need somebody to love him very faithful, then; and there's nobody in the world but me. Other folks might be cruel to him; and it breaks my heart already to think he might be badly dealt by. Perhaps it's the work God has set for me; I'd like to think it was, it'd be so kind of Him. If I could only fancy God was sayin', 'Julia, you take care of this poor Master Charlie for Me,' I could keep on for hundreds o' years. That 'ud give me all the help I want."

"Julia," said Ruth, taking her large red hand between her own, "I believe God has set you this work to do. It will be a great sacrifice for you, my poor girl; but I believe you can do it. Yes; you shall take care of him if you will."

"You'll let me be Master Charlie's servant?" exclaimed Julia.

"With all my heart; it's a noble thing to do," answered Ruth. "Did you never hear what Jesus said, 'Whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant; even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give His life a ransom for many?' (Matt. 20:27, 28.) You are choosing wisely now, Julia."

"I don't know much about Him," she said, with kindling eyes, "but it's somethin' like what Uncle Dunnit says. Do you mean that Jesus Christ was like a servant, a real servant, doing real work that was beneath Him? Not makin' believe to work like grand folks do. I never thought of that before. I wish I had before I began to wish to be a lady. I'll think about that when I grow tired and low. And I'll keep myself under to Mrs. Clifford, however aggravatin' she is. If I could only be a right good woman at last I'd put up with anythin'. Jesus Christ doin' real work that was beneath Him! Oh, Miss Ruth, what a foolish woman I have been!"

Julia went back to Rockwood with a lightened heart. She knew very well that a dreary life lay before her; and that the service she had entered upon would be a hard one. Not for her would there be any of the common joys and sorrows of her own class; no small, quiet home of her own; neither husband nor child.

She had forfeited all these; and in their place was allotted to her a life of constant care and weariness; sleepless nights and anxious days. Yet she felt glad, she hardly knew why. Her path by the cliffs led her past the almost hidden cove where she had faced death while choosing to remain faithful to Charles Clifford. With slow and cautious steps she felt her way to the summit of the precipice, and lying down stretched her head over the edge to catch a glimpse of the strip of sand far below her.

The waves were running in upon it, curling and rippling in the sunshine, as if playing with one another; but none the less steadily creeping over it, and stealthily filling up all means of escape from it. If she had forsaken her charge, and left Charles Clifford there in his unconsciousness, death would have been certain. Thank God! she had kept true.

But as Julia went on her way, slowly and thoughtfully, it seemed to her that the doom stealthily creeping onward upon Charles Clifford was like the treacherous tide she had been gazing on from the perilous standpoint. Slowly it might come, but there was no escape from it. No love or pity could save him. It would be her lot to watch its inroads and encroachments; to sit by and see him sinking into helpless imbecility. For the hours she had waited under the cliffs for deliverance, there would be years to wait for the only deliverance that could come to release Charles Clifford. Could she remain all those years beside him?

"God keep me true!" she cried in her inmost heart.

It was several weeks before Ruth could gather courage and strength sufficient to revisit her old home. The shock of her father's death had been too great and too sudden for her to rally quickly from the blow. The dreary circumstances attending it preyed upon her spirits; and Ernest, who was compelled by the duties of his secretaryship to leave Clifford for days together, would not listen to any project of her visiting Rockwood and his brother Charles until she had recovered in a measure her natural balance.

Ernest was fully awake to the difficulties of his own and his brother's position, with regard to each other and to the estate. There was no hope of even a partial recovery for Charles from the fatal injury to the spine, which reduced him to the state of a helpless and bedridden cripple. How many years he might linger on in this condition would be due to the manner in which he bore his terrible doom, and to the faithfulness of his nurse and attendants.

Yet he was the owner of Clifford, and had a clear right to dispose of it as he chose. No doubt, at present, he fully intended to bequeath it to Ernest; but there was nothing to prevent him, in the future, from leaving it to any stranger who might seek to gain an undue influence over his weakened brain. Charles must fall more and more under the impulses of mere caprice and whim; and as his mind grew feebler his passions would grow stronger. There mus be to the end an utter uncertainty of succeedin to his possessions.

Yet the estate needed a master. Already during the twelve months since Ernest had give it up, affairs had fallen into some disorder. Hi quick eye discerned it as he rode over the farn attached to Clifford Grange, and inquired int the progress of the trade he had started by th coasting craft, which had succeeded so well under his own direction. There had not been tim for any serious neglect or falling off; but ther was the beginning of it to be detected everywhere.

It annoyed Ernest, as it annoys every ma whose heart is in his work, to see that on whicl he has bestowed much labor and thought fallin into decay and ruin. Now that Charles was absolutely disabled, though he could not ruin himself and his estate by reckless extravagances neither could he look after his own affairs at all Henceforth he must see only through the eye of another man, issue his orders through anothe man's mouth, and leave everything in anothe man's hands.

Ernest's love for Clifford was too deeply rooted ever to be altogether eradicated. He ha entered heartily into his new work, and enjoye it with the vigor and healthy enjoyment of man who feels that he is living a conscientiou and useful life. But in Clifford he felt that th prosperity and peace of the whole place was in great measure due to himself, and dependen upon him.

His friendship for many of the homely fishermen was as true a friendship as can exist between man and man. It had been very pleasar to him to dwell among them, as he had done, i an almost patriarchal fashion; their head an leader; the chieftain whom they were all willin to follow loyally. There were many life-lon ties uniting them to him, and him to them. had been a grievous thing to him to leave the to Charles; it was hardly less grievous to thin of them being left to the direction of a hirelin

Slowly the project formed itself in his mind t come back to Clifford as Charles's bailiff. Th meant to be a servant where he had been maste a servant to an imperious and capricious employer. He would not be Clifford of Cliffor Charles had resented his change of name, an refused to call him by the family surname; an though he had retained it as being better know by it than by his old name, it was possible th Charles would persist in calling him by the la ter. Continual vexations and mortificatio would beset him. There would be nothing gain for himself, but very much for Charles, f Clifford, and for the people who had been h care during so many years.

His post in London could be filled up imm diately by scores of men as well qualified for i duties as himself. But who else could fill th post as he could?

If he could serve God and man better at Cli ford than elsewhere, it was his duty to tramp under foot any mere dread of encountering ve ations and mortifications. Was he not call upon to "consider Him who endured such co tradictions of sinners against Himself," and n to be weary and faint in his mind? (Heb. 12:3 It is enough for the disciple that he be as h master, and the servant as his lord."

There was the Rockwood estate, too; th lands belonging to Ruth's brother, lying side side with the Clifford estate. Captain Symon the heir, could not live upon it, and he was a ready seeking an agent to take it into his hand Ernest had often revolved schemes in his mi for developing the natural resources of his neig bor's lands, and from time to time had tried arouse old Squire Symons to some energy. would not be too much to take charge of bo Clifford and Rockwood. There would be magisterial duties to discharge; and the clain of society upon him would be few when he w known to be no longer the owner, but the bail of Clifford.

(To be continued.)

THE COVENANT WITH NOAH.

S. Lesson for July 25.—Gen. 9 : 8–19. Golden Text, verse. 13. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

R subject for to-day is God's Covenant with N 1. This was the first which God made with He had made a precious promise to fallen that the woman's seed should bruise the ent's head, but a promise is not a covenant, promise is given to us that we may receive covenant is made with us that we may keep d is binding on both parties who make it. ough it be a man's covenant, yet if it be rmed, no man disannulleth or addeth thereto (Gal. 3 : 15). God's promise to Adam was en, not to him, but to the serpent; but a nant must be subscribed by each of those are concerned in it.

hy could not God make a covenant with Ada? Death was pronounced on him, and ot yet executed. Noah, on the contrary, life out of death, he lived when the end of esh was come before God because of sin 6 : 13). He alone had recognized God's nd His justice in the destruction of guilty and thus God was in a position to meet him, and come to terms with him. Oh, if could but see this, that God can only deal them through death, through the execution Is own just sentence upon sin, then there be a better understanding of the death of ; there would be less discouragement, for children would expect nothing from them- ; there would be more victory, for God and would meet every child of His in every ency, who claimed His strength by virtue us' blood; and the long-lost power of the h which is vested in Christ would be in force again.

would seem from Gen. 4 : 26 that there was vous, ominous silence between God and man the birth of Enos, the son of Seth. Then d of a division in mankind, "sons of God" daughters of men." Probably Cain's pos- was without God, but it may be not exclu- so; Seth's posterity which contained the ors of Christ was probably godly, although clusively so. Among Cain's descendants to have been the first architects, herdsmen, ians, and metal-workers; the power of in- without God was developing. Among posterity we find a man who walked with and who, seeing that death was an unnat- nd foreign power, by faith was translated e should not see death, and was not found se God had translated him, for before his ation he had this testimony, that he d God" (Heb. 11 : 5). Thus there is good ce that among Seth's posterity were some ere really men of God.

S seems to have spread its deadly contagion apidly, for "God saw that the wickedness n was great in the earth, and that every ation of the thoughts of his heart was only ontinually. And it repented the Lord that d made man, and it grieved Him at His ' (Gen. 6 : 5, 6). This is a sad picture, at sin was it which brought the wicked- f man to a culminating point? It is writ- er. 11, 12) "The earth also was corrupt be- od, and the earth was filled with violence. od looked upon the earth, and behold it rrupt; for all flesh had corrupted His way he earth."

divides, He separates His people in all gen- s to be a peculiar or special people unto lf (Ex. 19 : 5, 6; Deut. 7 : 6; 1 Pet. 2 : 9, man, on the contrary, seeks to do away ll distinctions, to bring all things to a nd to assert that the difference between al and unspiritual lies entirely in the nat- sposition and not in a transformation by ger of God.

's great work is to manifest the difference n His people and the world, in positions in they are thrown closely in contact, as with in Egypt, who, in Potiphar's house and in ison, was separated from the Egyptians by esence of God with him, and while helping them was so distinct from them that he could not let his bones mingle with their soil; as Daniel in Babylon, whose life was several times in danger through persecution, but who, in the midst of the ungodly, maintained his place of testimony. As a boy he would not defile himself with the king's meat, as a young man he could reprove the proud Nebuchadnezzar to his face, as an old man he feared rather the failure in open witness for his God, than the fury of the lions.

One of the great sins of believers in our day is making common cause with the unconverted, in business and in pleasure, etc.; they think it unkind to believe another to be unconverted, whereas it is the most unpardonable selfishness to let them go on in their lost condition, they believing all the time that they are in the right. The more we love others the more faithful we shall be to them. One may say, "How can I judge?" If you lived in the power of the Spirit you would discern the state of others, but you would learn to approach them with no feeling of condemnation, but of love. Your life would give you an authority in speaking to them which would be more and more irresistible.

The Lord Jesus prayed (John 17 : 15, 16), "I pray not that Thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that Thou shouldest keep them from the evil. They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." It is much more a life of faith to remain in the midst of an unconverted family, witnessing in faith and love for Christ, than to seek another and easier position. It is much more unselfish, and much more in the spirit of Christ to remain in a church where the burden of the unsaved lies sore upon our hearts, and the death of the members is a constant cross to us, than to come out and join those only who understand us. If we are faithful enough the power of the Spirit in us will make the position of unsaved souls unendurable, and they will either come to Christ or cast us out from among them. Outward separation is by no means always the separation unto God which is the glory and the privilege of His own people.

God sent on the inhabitants of the earth the terrible judgment of the flood. He said, "My Spirit shall not always strive with man," so that we may conclude that during the "hundred and twenty years" in which Noah was "a preacher of righteousness" (Gen. 6 : 3; 2 Pet. 2 : 5), God's Spirit was at work, and yet so fearfully resisted by man, that we do not hear of a single conversion the whole time. With Noah alone, could God hold communion, because he had found grace in God's sight (Gen. 6 : 8). But Noah stood not by virtue of his good works. "By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, prepared an ark for the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith."

Scripture lays this before us as the true teaching of baptism, when speaking of how in the days of Noah "few, that is eight souls, were saved by water. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God), by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. In baptism, if we rightly understand it, we are buried with Christ (Col. 2 : 12), wherein also we are risen with Him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised Him from the dead. As Noah condemned all men, himself included, and only escaped by special provision, so in the form of baptism we condemn ourselves and the world, acknowledge God's justice in our condemnation, and accept His provision by virtue of Christ's resurrection, "through faith of the operation of God who hath raised Him from the dead."

It is with such as live out of death, who take their stand in Christ's blood and His resurrection that God can make a covenant. Were it otherwise, God would ignore and become a party to man's sin. God made Noah the head of a new race of men, and gave him the same dominion which He had formerly given to Adam (comp. Gen. 9 : 1, 2, with 1 : 28). But there was a difference in His gifts. To Adam and Eve before sin and death came into the world, only herbs and fruits were given to man and beast for food (Gen. 1 : 29, 30). But now that death had entered into the world, God says to Noah, "Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you; even as the green herb have I given you all things." Everything told of the coming Sacrifice. Everywhere was there life out of death to typify the great coming Atonement for our sins.

But before God makes His covenant with Noah, He makes a command He has never reversed, "But flesh, with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat. And surely your blood of your lives will I require; at the hand of every beast will I require it, and at the hand of man; at the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of man. Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed, for in the image of God made He man."

It was after this that God made His covenant with Noah, which He made also "with every living creature that is with you, of the fowl, of the cattle, and of every beast of the earth with you; from all that go out of the ark to every beast of the earth: and I will establish My covenant with you; neither shall all flesh be cut off any more by the waters of a flood; neither shall there any more be a flood to destroy the earth." It was a covenant of safety and protection. God's side was to extend His mighty hand over man to shield him from the doom he merits. Man was in his infancy, and the requirements on his side of the covenant are not clearly stated. Could it be that of man's responsibility with regard to the brute creation? God has said (ver. 2), "And the fear of you and the dread of you, shall be upon every beast of the earth, and upon every fowl of the air, and upon all the fishes of the sea; into your hand are they delivered:" that as God extended His hand over all things in His dominion, so should man extend his hand in mercy over the beasts? When God gave to Abraham the covenant of circumcision (Gen. 17 : 1, 2), He said unto him, "Walk before Me, and be thou perfect, and I will make My covenant between Me and thee."

And God said, "This is the token of the covenant which I make between Me and you, and every living creature which is with you for perpetual generations: I do set My bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between Me and the earth." This was no spiritual covenant, although it teaches spiritual truth, "And it shall come to pass when I bring a cloud over the earth, that the bow shall be seen in the cloud, and I will remember my covenant . . . and the waters shall no more become a flood to destroy all flesh. And the bow shall be in the cloud, and I will look upon it, that I may remember the everlasting covenant between God and every living creature of all flesh that is upon the earth."

The rainbow is an accompaniment of the presence of God. When Ezekiel saw the manifestation of Christ in glory, he says (Ezek. 1 : 28), "As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about." Again (Rev. 4 : 2, 3), the Apostle John saw through the door that was opened in heaven, One who sat on the throne, and He that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone; and there was a rainbow round about the throne like unto an emerald." It may be that the cloud in which the glory of the Lord so often appeared to the children of Israel, was also in the form of a rainbow, a perfect circle without beginning or end, and without break. But what we learn therefrom is the infallible certainty of God's spoken Word; He cannot deny Himself. There is a rainbow presence of God in every trial of His children, "Surely in the floods of great waters they shall not come nigh unto him" (Ps. 32 : 6). If God's Word concerning the destruction of the earth by water, has stood incontestably firm already four thousand years, Oh, how sinful is it for us to doubt one thing which He has spoken in His Word.

FOREIGN TOPICS.

The Government Measure Introduced into the British Parliament to secure compensation to Irish tenants who are evicted from their holdings has aroused strong opposition. It has passed the second reading in the House of Commons, and is being debated, clause by clause, in committee. Rumors are current that the bill is by no means unanimously approved by the administration, and that several of Mr. Gladstone's colleagues regard it as too radical in its provisions. The Marquis of Lansdowne, who was Under-Secretary of State for India, with a salary of $7500 a year, has resigned rather than vote for the bill. He owns 124,368 acres of Irish soil. The Duke of Argyll, Earl Spencer, the Marquis of Hartington, and other influential members of the Gladstone cabinet are also reported to be opposed to the measure, believing that its effect will be to deprive landlords of the power of getting rid of a tenant, even if he refuse to pay rent. It is contended that Irish tenants are not suffering from the harshness of landlords to such an extent as to call for a measure so extreme as that of the Government; and one of the most determined opponents of the bill, himself an Irish peer, has offered to vote for it if six cases can be given in all Ireland where the landlord has unfairly raised the rent and evicted the tenant.

The difficulties of the Premier's position may be estimated by the fact that while he has offended his friends by conceding so much to the Irish tenants, Mr. Parnell and his friends are vigorously opposing him for conceding so little.

The Turkish Government is Considering what answer shall be given to the demands of the Berlin conference. The correspondent of the Times at Constantinople says: "If the powers restrict themselves to a mere friendly recommendation, the Porte will easily find means for indefinitely delaying a solution without giving its refusal; but if the decisions of the conference are accompanied by anything in the nature of a threat or an ultimatum, some decided policy must be adopted. What this policy will be it would be hazardous to predict, but I may say that among influential personages two plans are recommended: one consists of openly defying the will of Europe in the hope that the powers will be unable to agree upon a means of compulsion, and the other consists of simply protesting or in affecting to comply, but at the same time stirring up energetic popular resistance among the Albanians. Both parties counsel resistance in some form, and they differ merely as to what form resistance should take."

The Famine in Persia continues with Unabated severity. Mr. Sheed, an American missionary at Oroomiah, Persia, writes: "The past two weeks have been the worst we have seen. In the city the Moslem charity, after three weeks' effort, failed, and nearly 3,000 whom they had been feeding were turned into the streets. Fifty or more are daily dying—dying men, little children thrown into the streets to die, corpses half eaten of dogs are common sights. With a few exceptions, there is no money or care shown by the Khans and the wealthy, and nothing is done by the Government. In Moslem villages the death-rate is increasing. In one village three women were taken in the act of eating a child. Where our relief committees are at work, few deaths have occurred, but unless the relief is increased, many persons thus far preserved will drop off. Many are greatly reduced in strength, and the two months to come threaten a worse condition than in the two months past. The price of grain is very high, and the supply by importation only."

The Chinese Authorties are Fighting against opium. The London and China Telegraph, May 18th, states that a rising has taken place on the southern confines of Shantung, owing to the authorities insisting on the destruction of the poppy plants. The provincial governor, Tan, has issued proclamations, shut up opium dens, punished offenders—in short, done all that he can to put a stop to the vice. He has recently ordered a census to be taken for the purpose of finding out the name, residence, and employment of every opium-smoker in the city. He has ordered the smokers to break off the habit; and given them three months in which they must do so. If at the end of that time they are still offending, they are to be punished.

The South American War.—It is Reported that Chili, having completely overcome the armies and navies of Peru and Bolivia, has issued a statement of the conditions on which she will make peace. Among the stipulations is a demand for two hundred million dollars as an indemnity for war expenses.

The Tay Bridge Disaster.—The Report of the commissioners appointed to inquire into the Tay disaster has been presented to the British Government. The report censures severely the contractors, the engineer, and the North British Railway Company. The design of the bridge is condemned, and the company charged with neglecting to keep it in proper repair. Although the construction of the bridge was faulty, the commissioners believe it might have weathered the storm and lasted for years had it been kept in thorough repair.

The Statue of Robert Raikes was Unveiled in the gardens of the Thames embankment, London, on July 3d, by the Earl of Shaftesbury. The height of the pedestal, which is of gray Cornwall marble, is twenty feet, and it faces the first entrance gate east of Cleopatra's Needle. Dr. Vincent was present on behalf of the Sunday-schools of the United States. Dr. Murphy, of New York, read a portion of the Scriptures, and Dr. Todd, of New York, offered prayer.

A Tract Distributor was Fined by the Dublin magistrates twenty shillings ($5) or fourteen days' imprisonment for offering a Roman Catholic priest a handbill inviting him to a meeting for a friendly discussion. Appeal was made to the Court of Queen's Bench, which held that the act of offering such a handbill to a priest was an insult in itself, and might have led to a breach of the peace.

A Methodist Mandarin.—Rev. Young J. Allen, D.D., LL.D., one of the missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Shanghai, has been made a mandarin by the Chinese Government. It is believed that Dr. Allen is the first foreigner who has attained that high distinction in China. It is hoped that the dignity will give him additional influence with the masses, and lead to his increased usefulness.

Mr. Spurgeon's New Orphanage for Girls.—On June 22d the Clapham Road, in the neighborhood of Mr. Spurgeon's orphanage for boys, was en fête, the occasion being the laying of foundation stones of an orphanage for girls. In the new buildings between 200 and 300 orphan girls are to be provided for and educated, an equal number of boys having been already provided for. The ceremony was attended by a very large gathering. Admission to the new institution will not be by vote; the charity will be administered upon a principle of selection, without regard to the creed or persuasion of the parents. Special attention is to be paid to the cases of friendless orphans who have lost their parents in distressing circumstances. The orphanage is to consist of four houses, and accordingly four foundation stones were laid.

Mr. Spurgeon, who laid the foundation stone of the first or "Sermon House," said the contract for the whole of the buildings to accommodate the 350 girls amounted to 11,100*l.* When he saw the sum he was somewhat surprised, having reckoned on a smaller sum being required. He therefore arranged with the contractor to build only up to the sum of 8000*l.*, and to go no further when that amount had been reached. Already more than 8000*l.* had been subscribed. On the previous day he had received 900*l.* in half-crowns and five-shilling pieces from friends who met him on that spot; and when he reached home afterward he received a letter from a friend who said. "Put me down for 600*l.*" Thus already nearly 9000*l.* had been subscribed for this work. He felt very thankful that people had always gathered round him, but he had never seen so much willingness as on this oc sion. The first of the four houses was called "Sermon House," because the money for it h been given by the author and the publishers of "Sermons." He had a little church of 5 members at Newington Butts; but he had a s larger church in the readers of his sermo spread throughout England, Ireland, and Sc land, and America and elsewhere, and th readers, some of whom wrote to him as th pastor, were always ready to help him in work. The "Sermon House" would always a record of faithfulness to duty and to the f that the sermons had been published week week for twenty-five and a half years, to number of 1542. He trusted that the "Sern House" would bring forth good fruit.

The stone having been laid, a dedicat prayer was offered and hymns were sung. M Spurgeon then laid the stone of a house to named in memory of the five deceased child of Mr. W. R. Rickett, the donor. The ston the third house, to be called the "Olives," gift of Mr. S. Barrow and friends, was laid Mrs. Barrow; and that of the fourth, "Trustees' House," was laid by Mr. Hi There was afterward a promenade in grounds and in the boys' orphanage, and v and instrumental music was performed.

The Mildmay Conference Meetings in L don were held June 23-25, and were larger t ever. The Conference Hall, which holds al 3000 people, was crowded in the mornings evenings, and the various smaller meeting the afternoon were well attended. Some of meetings were presided over by Mr. S. A. Bl wood, C.B., with his accustomed ability tact, and others by Mr. Mathieson, who c pies the leading position in the Mildmay I tution in the place of Captain Moreton, w health has necessitated his travelling to A ica. Among those present were the Earl of more, the Earl of Cavan, Lord Radstock, Polwarth, Major Malan, the Bishop of M and a large number of ministers of all denor tions, and visitors from all parts of the cou

The key-note of the Conference was stru the first meeting by two admirable address the Revs. Horatius Bonar and W. Hay Ai on God Glorified in His Church. The same ject was taken up by other speakers at the ing meeting. A great deal of informatior given at the afternoon meetings on va branches of Christian work. Pastor The Monod, from Paris, was one of the spe Miss De Broen spoke with great eloquen an afternoon meeting, of her work in Paris

A Royal Mission.—At a Recent Noon Pr meeting in Aberdeen, Scotland, an inter statement was read explanatory of mission in Lapland. In this work the Princess Eu sister of the reigning Swedish King Oscar stated to be taking a leading and effective in personal labor and by means of self-sacri gifts, even to the selling of the greater p her jewels in order to support it.

The Prophetic News and Irael's Watc (London) for June may be obtained at the office Christian Herald. Price six cents.

The Second Volume of The Christian H comprising Nos. 37 to 62 (July to Dec., 1879), procured, elegantly bound in cloth, at this Price $1.75.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works are o at the office of the Christian Herald, at pr low as to bring them within the reach of eve Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with phot of Mr Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Ploug Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth, 60 The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volume sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, a h cal exposition of the book of Psalms, five vols. as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon Birth-Day This popular gift-book contains a suitable selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for ev in the year, with a blank space opposite fo graphs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. Sp appear at their respective birthdays. The elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cents. tances shoud accompany orders.

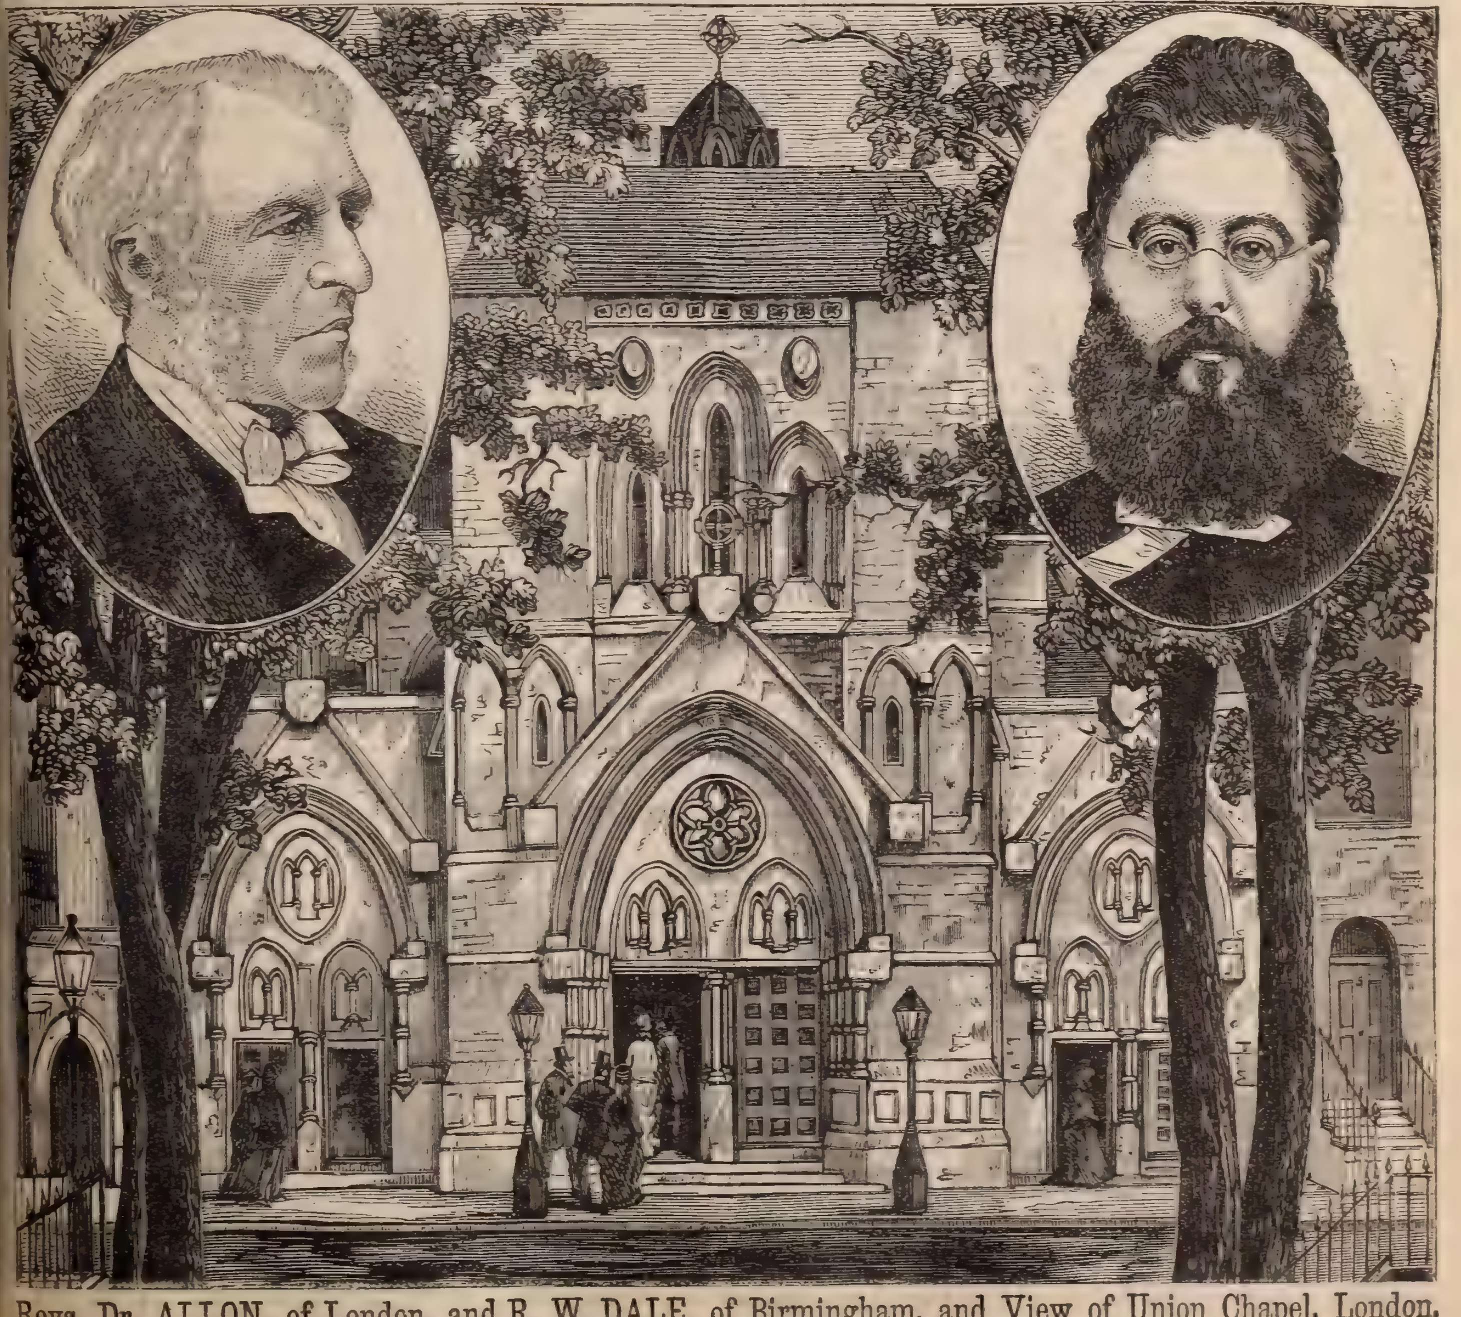
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. ALMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also occasionally a Sermon by the Rev. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL.D., the celebrated Methodist Minister, Rev. W. M AY AITKEN, or some other Eminent Preacher; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Single Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, JULY 22, 1880. 14th Year. No. 30—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

ICTURE OF UNION CHAPEL, LONDON, with Portraits of Dr. Allon and Rev. R. W. Dale, and Sketches of their Lives.
HE STRAIT GATE. An Evening Sermon by Dr. Talmage—A Tin-Worker's Impudence.
OCHESTER TOWER. A New Serial Story, by Miss M. A. Paull (Continued).
THE BRITISH POLITICAL REVOLUTION: Its Prophetic Aspect, by Rev. M. Baxter (Continued).
CURRENT EVENTS: Gen. Garfield's Letter—A Strange Surgical Process—A Liquor-Dealer's Troubles—Work among Tenement-Houses—An Impossible Attitude—An Arkansas Farmer's Difficulty—A Fortune Spread on the Ground, etc.
THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL CENTENARY in London.
MAHANAIM; or, Hosts of Angels. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
Dr. Deems' Reception at the Church of the Strangers.
A WEIGHT OF WEALTH (Continued).
The Call of Abraham. S. S. Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter.
FOREIGN TOPICS: Discontent among British Liberals—Turkey's Approaching Dissolution—A Fatal Mining Explosion—A Banker's Will, etc.



Revs. Dr. ALLON, of London, and R. W. DALE, of Birmingham, and View of Union Chapel, London.

THE REV. HENRY ALLON, D.D.

Minister of Union Chapel, Islington, London.

Henry Allon is a Yorkshireman by birth. He was born at Welton, near Hull, in 1818. His father was a godly man of business, and his example and teaching were a blessing to his son, who became a disciple of Jesus in his boyhood. It is said that even in his school days he was impressed with the attractions of the Christian ministry, and resolved to devote himself to it rather than follow the pursuits of commercial life which were open to him, and through which he might have amassed much wealth. This resolution may be said to have grown with him, and eventually he applied to Cheshunt College to be received as a student. The late Dr. John Harris was at that time principal of the college, and the youth's application having been granted, he pursued his studies at that famous home of Congregational learning for the usual term of years. During his college course he supplied, as did the other students, the pulpits of ministers absent through sickness or other causes, and became known as a man of mark among his fellows for his preaching abilities.

In the autumn of 1843 he was cordially invited by the church in Union Chapel, Islington, to become the co-pastor of that important body. That position had been occupied by the Rev. John Watson, but he had resigned, after nearly ten years' service, during which he had shared the responsible duty of caring for the chief Congregational Church in London with the Rev. T. Lewis, the senior pastor. It was certainly a most responsible post for so young a minister as Mr. Allon to think of undertaking ; but after due consideration he accepted the invitation, and this has been his work-field ever since. He preached his first sermon as co-pastor on the first Sunday of January, 1844, and in the following June was solemnly ordained.

Even in those early years, when reports of sermons were not so numerous as they have since become, Mr. Allon's discourses were frequently published, and they were marked by a freshness, a thoughtfulness, and a certain beauty of style which gave bright promise of his attaining high rank as a preacher in the coming years. On the death of Mr. Lewis, in 1852, the sole charge of the church devolved upon the junior pastor, he having been unanimously chosen as successor to the late venerable minister. In the thirty-five years which have followed this appointment he has nobly justified the choice then made, and the value of his ministry has been increasingly appreciated by the Nonconformists of North London, and has been signally owned and blessed by the Great Master of Assemblies.

The origin and history of UNION CHAPEL deserve special attention. It appears that the movement in which it originated began in the opening years of the present century, when the churches of Great Britain, Conformists and Nonconformists alike, were reaping the effects of the great spiritual revival inaugurated by Whitefield and Wesley, and throwing off the formalism and languor which had for so long a period crippled their energies and emasculated their life. One of the immediate fruits of that revival seems to have been the closer drawing together of evangelical Christians in different communities, and a heartier appreciation of faithful evangelical preaching, whether it came from the lips of learned or unlearned men, of those who had received "episcopal ordination," or of such as were without that special distinction.

At that time the ministry of the Established clergyman in Islington does not appear to have been generally acceptable, or to have been characterized by a healthy spiritual tone ; and hence a number of earnest evangelical Episcopalians, who loved the Gospel more than their church, united with a number of equally earnest Dissenters and formed the congregation from which Dr. Allon's more numerous church has grown. Ther first place of meeting was in a house at Highbury Grove, their terms of membership were faith in Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord, and love to one another and all men. This Union Church, it is further stated, was conducted on union principles. In the morning service the Liturgy of the English Church was regularly used, while in the evening the service was entirely extemporaneous. The Lord's Supper also was administered after the Episcopalian rule at the communion-table to such as desired it, and afterward in the method adopted in Congregational churches. The government of the church was not at first Congregational, inasmuch as the ministers, elders, and deacons were intrusted with the entire control, and it was not until 1835 that church meetings were established, and Congregationalism pure and simple came into force.

In the course of years the Liturgy was discontinued, and extemporaneous prayer took its place. Dr. Allon was convinced, as he has since expressed it, that though EXTEMPORANEOUS PRAYER may lack the literary excellences, the august stateliness, the devotional beauty of liturgical forms, it yet has more than a compensation in that it is the immediate inspiration of living souls. "It is neither the prayer of dead men nor a past inspiration of the Spirit. It may be homely, but it is the expression of a present living experience—it is an immediate teaching of the spirit of truth that dwelleth in the man. Shall a church presume to ordain that the Spirit shall never inspire another prayer for public worship? Use the past by all means, but not so as to forbid the inspirations of the present. Past prayers may be useful, as past hymns are, but both in prayers and in hymns we should be prepared to welcome every fresh inspiration of the living Spirit."

While discontinuing the use of the Liturgy, however, the pastor bent his energies toward making every part of the service of the sanctuary thoroughly devotional and soul-stirring. For years there have been few places of worship in London in which such noble psalmody can be heard as in Union Chapel. Dr. Allon is himself a good musician, and assisted by Dr. Gauntlett he compiled for the use of his flock what has been pronounced by competent judges to be one of the best collections of tunes and chants. The culture and refinement which his people could display in their own drawing-rooms in connection with music he insisted upon seeing introduced into the worship of the sanctuary. He has even expressed the opinion that the man who would not take the trouble to learn to sing with propriety had evidently a defective spirit of worship.

In 1864 Dr. Allon was the CHAIRMAN OF THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION, and his addresses both in the spring and in the autumn deserve to be reckoned among the best and wisest ever delivered from the chair. At the time Colenso and Renan were making no small stir by the opinions they were promulgating, the Chairman of the Union deemed it to be his duty to set the trumpet to his lips and to sound an alarm.

The following were his words to those who were content to be at ease in Zion while the attacks of infidelity were daily becoming bolder : "It was a maxim of Socrates that in times of danger all good men should take sides. The curse fell upon Meroz simply because she stood aloof. It is impossible for more momentous issues to be imperilled. We naturally shrink from controversy, for where the spirit of contention is, the Church is, 'grievously vexed with a devil,' and until it is cast out she can do no healthy work. But sometimes controversy may be the first and most pressing of her duties. The greatest evil that can afflict a land is war ; but to wage war may sometimes be the highest act of patriotism. He who morbidly or passionately exalts into the domain of controversy things of mere expediency, and by fierce, untiring debate distracts the Church, sins against unity, peace, and concord.' But equally guilty is he who permits things of vital principle to be lowered to the sphere of mere expediency, and who, for the sake of an unfaithful peace, refuses to contend earnestly the faith once delivered to the saints. In effeminacy, in its damaged conscience, pea may be more iniquitous and disastrous than w

"To every Sanballat who challenges them th reply, 'We are doing a great work, so that cannot come down ;' the wisest of all repl so long as the enemy remains below 'in plain of Ono ;' but what if he have climbed very walls of the Holy City? What if he saults the builders on its scaffold? What if is tampering with its watchmen, and raising insurrection in its streets? To refuse to fi then were a cowardly infidelity to Christ, wh even the most pious occupation could not ju fy. It is as if the harvestman were to persist the ingathering of his sheaves, regardless of enemy who had landed upon his coasts. It m be a duty to sacrfice even a spiritual harves order to defend the territory upon which all s itual harvests are to be produced."

In closing sixteen years' labor, when he presented with one of his many testimoni Dr. Allon, with a touch of humor, referred the "trepidation" with which he took his service at Union Chapel. He was consciou the fact, he said, that no less than five Doc of Divinity were in the congregation, and s a combination of theological power was eno to shake the nerves of a young man whose lege curriculum had not yet been accomplis Since then, however, the infancy of the chu has passed, the days of its feebleness are g and it now rejoices as a young man to ru race.

Dr. Allon, at various times, has visited Pa tine, Sinai, and Egypt, and America ; his de of Doctor of Divinity is from YALE COLLEGE.

That his ministry is valued in London ma gathered from the fact that when, not long [in 1875,] it was determined to erect a new ch in place of the old chapel, they were not sta by the sum of 28,000*l.*, at which the estim placed the cost. Dr. Allon's first appeal t congregation resulted in a sum of 13,000*l.* b subscribed. In a letter dated January 1st, containing the first public appeal for outside it was stated that the new church would 2650 persons, and the new schools accom date 900 children. But such was the estee which Dr. Allon was held that subscript rapidly poured in, and on the day of openin new building it may be fairly said that all eties about the cost had been abandoned.

It has been truly said that old Union Ch is in many respects an El Dorado as far as w of piety and beneficence are concerned. T London Missionary Society alone it has con uted upward of 22,000*l.* The aggregate c contributions during Dr. Allon's pastorate been considerably over 130,000*l.*, while n 2700 persons have been added to its fellowshi 1874, at the completion of his thirty years' pa ate, Dr. Allon received no less a sum, by w free gift, than 1206*l.* This presentation wa hanced by the fact that it was spontaneou was a free-will offering in the fullest sen the word, for it was originated and comp during a five days' absence of Dr. Allon i country. No one had been asked to contri

Dr. Allon has recently issued a volume o mons which he preached in Union Chap special occasions. It is entitled "The V of God, and other Sermons," and has comn ed a wide circulation.

Drunkenness and Insanity.—Accordin statistics collected by the director of an as for drunkards in Germany, the number of cides has of late increased in every count Europe, save in Norway only. In Norway have been on an average 9 per cent fewer of suicides during the last ten years than i preceding ten years—a fact which is attri by the German writer to the stringent re tions against drunkenness in force there. In German countries the number of cases o cide has increased by from 90 to 100 per ce

ROBERT WILLIAM DALE, M.A.

Minister of Carr's Lane Chapel, Birmingham.

ROBERT WILLIAM DALE is the pastor of Carr's Lane Chapel, Birmingham, and is penetrated by the apostolic conception that he is a "co-worker" with his Divine Master in the sacred cause of humanity. His birth took place in London on December 1st, 1829, so he is now in the fifty-first year of his age. His early education was received chiefly at a private school in Finsbury Square, London, kept by a Mr. Willey. After a brief period as an assistant master, he removed to Birmingham, to enter as a student at Spring Hill College, associated with the Congregationalist denomination, of which both his parents and himself were attached members. Here he remained for the whole curriculum of six years, and as a result of his characterstic application and assiduity, in the year 1853 he graduated M.A. at the University of London, carrying off the gold medal in the department of Philosophy and Political Economy.

Among his tutors at

SPRING HILL COLLEGE

was Henry Rogers, author of the once extremely popular work entitled "The Eclipse of Faith." Its author had a fine literary taste, which he displayed with Draconian severity, and which exercised a most potent influence over the plastic minds of his pupils with the happiest results. The marked affection of the venerable tutor for his brilliant pupil Dale was heartily reciprocated, and to this day the latter acknowledges his lasting obligations to his master with juvenile warmth.

Spring Hill College did much for Mr. Dale, and he has always spoken of the institution in terms of affection and gratitude. Nor have his feelings been sentiments only; at a subsequent period, when the college was under a [illegible], Mr. Dale was its best friend, and by his [illegible] lectures maintained its prestige and advanced its reputation in the country.

Another remarkable friend of Mr. Dale's [illegible] was a good man renowned in the world of evangelical Nonconformity, and whose praise lingers with grateful fragrance in all the churches, John Angell James, the author, among other works, of "The Anxious Inquirer," a book which has been translated into many languages, and has had an immense circulation all over the world. For more than fifty years he was the beloved and eminently successful pastor of Carr's Lane Chapel; and no sooner had Mr. [illegible] completed his university career and the [illegible]e course of special and technical study, in [illegible] than he was unanimously appointed his colleague, and eventually, on the death of Mr. [illegible], succeeded to the full charge of that well-known place of worship.

Mr. Dale presents to every one he meets the appearance of a happy, hearty man, and combines in no ordinary measure Tennyson's desideratum of manhood, "heart, head, hand." His [illegible] practice and his theory of Christian life constitute a perfect harmony. His soul is in his work. Like Cromwell, he prays to God and keeps his powder dry. "What good," he is never tired of asking, "is the petition, 'Thy kingdom come,' if a man is not prepared at the call of duty to take off his coat and descend into the arena of conflict?"

Mr. Dale is a strong admirer of Mr. Moody, and took a prominent part in the evangelistic campaign of Messrs. Moody and Sankey at Birmingham, in 1875.

The Carr's Lane Church consists of 1500 persons, a large proportion of whom are working-men, but there are also many wealthy merchants and manufacturers among them.

Mr. Dale was one of the most strenuous champions of the famous National Education League, which had for its object the complete separation of religious from secular instruction in Board Schools, and was returned at the first School Board election, along with Mr. Chamberlain (now President of the Board of Trade in the Gladstone ministry), the famous preacher, George Dawson, and Messrs. Wright, Dixon, and Vince. They approve of the Bible being read in schools, but without note or comment or denominational teaching.

Neither inside nor outside of the British Parliament is there a more eloquent and uncompromising advocate of Church Disestablishment than Mr. Dale. He approaches the question primarily from the old Puritan standpoint, namely, that the State cannot rightfully legislate for the Church. In an article which he contributed to the Nineteenth Century he says: "The position of a Nonconformist in this country is, to say the least, not a pleasant one. His religious work is carried on in the presence of a government which condemns his creed, condemns his modes of worship, condemns his religious organizations, and sustains the authority of a hostile church."

Mr. Dale has travelled in the East and in the West. He has visited Egypt, the Siniatic desert, and Palestine. His American wanderings, however, have borne the most valuable fruit. His published "Impressions of America" are a most valuable collection. They have been republished in this country by the Messrs. Appleton of New York, and have been favorably received as a fair and candid estimate of the country and people. They are a much more intelligent and appreciative account than Englishmen after visiting this country usually furnish to their countrymen when they return.

AS A PREACHER,

Mr. Dale is remarkable for the clear, logical, argumentative character of his sermons. He is thoroughly evangelical, and every one of his sermons, whatever may be its subject, closes with an earnest appeal to the unconverted, with an enunciation of the fundamental doctrine of salvation by Christ, and Christ only. He preached early in his ministry from the text "Whosoever will let him come and take of the water of life freely." It was the means of the conversion of a large number of persons, and Mr. Dale has made it a rule to preach that sermon on occasions when he has exchanged pulpits with a brother minister, and he has never preached it without its being blessed to the conversion of one or more hearers.

Mr. Dale always reads from a manuscript, and his style is clear and polished. On the preparation of his sermons he expends labor unusual even among English Congregational ministers, who are noted for the literary merits of their productions. The effect of reading a sermon is frequently to detract from its power, but in Mr. Dale's case no such effect is produced. He has given much study to the art of oratory, especially under the direction of the eminent Italian orator Signor Gavazzi, and has been singularly successful in his study. To hear him read, whether it be a chapter of the Bible or a sermon, is a treat to men of a critical taste. A ringing, bell-like voice and a clear enunciation of every syllable combine to make his delivery exceedingly pleasant.

When the pressure of Mr. Dale's pastoral duties is considered, the tale of his literary labors is immense. They include a "Life of John Angell James," a volume of "Week-Day Sermons," "The Atonement," which ran through seven editions in four years, "Lectures on Preaching," "Discourses on Special Occasions," "The Ten Commandments," "Lectures on the Epistle to the Hebrews," an "Essay on Lacordaire," "A Reply to Mr. Matthew Arnold's Attack on Puritanism," etc. Besides contributing to the British Quarterly, the Fortnightly, the Contemporary, and the Nineteenth Century, he has acted as joint editor of the Eclectic Review, and for several years as editor of the Congregationalist, an organ of his denomination. Tolerance, ability, honesty, and earnestness characterize all his productions.

AS A POLITICIAN,

Mr. Dale is a firm believer in the soundness and honesty of what may be called a full life, a life passed in the midst of active thought and work. Pensive seclusion and ascetic retreat present themselves to his active mind and body rather as selfish indulgence than as evidence of true earnestness. Men should, he opines, live in their time and be of it; and those who make or contribute to make history are to him more worthy than the whole tribe of inactive, contemplative critics. One of his favorite views is that man can hardly have too much to do, that it is well to have many irons in the fire, that change of work is pleasure, that there is safety in the multitude of occupations.

Birmingham is a town of politicians. Workingmen and their employers, tradesmen and aristocrats alike take an absorbing interest in political questions. Three fourths of the population are advanced Radicals, and Mr. Dale is one of their trusted leaders. Formerly the town elected two members to Parliament, but Lord Beaconsfield, then Mr. Disraeli, changed the number and manner of election.

Under the new arrangement Birmingham is represented in Parliament by three members, but no elector is allowed to vote for more than two. Lord Beaconsfield thought that by this device the Conservative minority would concentrate its strength on one candidate and elect him as the third member. He believed that if three Liberals were nominated, two would have more votes than were necessary for their election, and the other one would fall below the Conservative at the poll. But Mr. Dale and his Liberal friends called a town's meeting and explained to the people a scheme, which was ultimately carried into execution, by which three Liberal members were elected.

Mr. Dale's name announced at a political meeting, not only in Birmingham but in other large centres, evokes intense enthusiasm, and his speech is always a masterpiece of logical argument.

By no means insensible to the reward of hard work, he is especially proud of having been chosen Chairman of the Congregational Union in 1868, and of having taken part in all the great reforms of the municipal administration of Birmingham during the last seven years. As a lecturer he has had great success at Yale College, whither he went to give a series of discourses on preaching. Mrs. Dale has also had considerable success as a lecturer to women on various subjects interesting to them, and is one of seven ladies who are striving to impart to the working-women of Birmingham a share of intellectual activity. To make sure that the lectures take hold of the audience, these ladies write out questions, and are as much surprised as delighted at the excellent answers in elementary science given by women almost devoid of education. We hope Mr. Dale will continue to preach the Gospel with increasing clearness and demonstration of the Holy Spirit.

A Tin-Worker's "Impudence."—In Describing the difficulties which John Wesley had to encounter when he began his work of preaching the Gospel in Cornwall, one who has written of those days remarks, "The very language of the people was like that of Pagans, who knew nothing of Christian truth whatever." "I asked a little gentleman at St. Just," said Mr. Wesley, "what objection there was to Edward Greenfield, a pious tin-worker on whom the constables had seized." His reply was, "Why, the man is well enough in other things, but his impudence the gentlemen cannot bear." "What impudence has he been guilty of?" "Why, sir, he says his sins are forgiven!" Thus it was counted an impudent thing for a sinner to take hold of the salvation which he was assured might be had for the asking; but happily, through the fervor of Wesley's ministry, and the Holy Spirit's gracious influence accompanying it, there were many who became equally "impudent," and who rejoiced with a joy unspeakable and full of glory in the freedom wherewith Christ had made them free. Cowardice is ever the chief characteristic of the sinner, but holy courage that of the child of God.

THE STRAIT GATE.

An Evening Sermon by Dr. Talmage, preached on Sunday, June 27th, 1880.

"Strive to enter in at the strait gate."—Luke 13 : 24.

The Gateways of Ancient Cities — The Strait Gate of Heaven—Choked Up by Three Obstacles —I. Pride—Seeking Secret Passages—No Underground Way to Heaven—II. Worldliness—Saturday Night—Heaven's Accounts Unsquared —III. Some Special Sin — Aroused, but Hesitating—What is the Matter?—"I Would Rather Die"—Grudges and Apologies—The Way Between the Obstacles — Christ's School — The Diploma First—Praying, or Saying Prayers? —History of the Late Revival—A Scrap of Paper — A Mean Caricature — A Telegram to Thomas Harrison—No Sleep all Night—Breakfast in Philadelphia—The Arrangement Made —The Great Result—One Sadness.

You know that the ancient cities were surrounded by high, thick walls, in order that they might be defended against their enemies. In these high, thick walls there were large gates. Through these gates the people came and went during the hours of the day; but at nightfall the gates closed, and though people might come up to these large gates and knock for admittance, they could not enter. But right beside these very large gates there were small gates, narrow gates, strait gates.

Sometimes a man would come up after nightfall with his camel, and want to get into the city, and he would drive in the camel through this small gate, and it was only with a tug, a tussle, a struggle, that he got through. Sometimes it was entirely impossible; but if in any case successful, it was with a good deal of effort that he got his camel into the city. And it was to this fact that Christ alluded when he set before the people the obstacles in the way of their salvation, and the fact that it required a push, a struggle, in order to enter the kingdom of our God. Strive to enter in at the foot-passengers' gate, at the narrow gate, at the small gate, at the strait gate. Strive to enter in at the strait gate.

I want briefly to-night to set before you some of the obstacles in the way of our salvation, and then show you that it is possible for us to push in between these obstacles, and enter the pardon and the hope and the triumph of the Gospel.

I. The first great obstacle that chokes up the strait gate, and makes the entrance so much of a push and a struggle, is the of the human heart. There may be no ostentatious apparel, there may be no braggadocia of utterance, there may be no supercilious toss of the head; in every case where Christ appears at the door of the heart for entrance, the pride of human nature flashes up against Him. You and I can look back to the time—though for many years we may have been in the service of Christ—to the time when we felt that our reputation for manhood depended upon no one finding out that we were serious about our immortal soul.

PRIDE

We said, Others may weep, we will not weep; others may be anxious about their eternal destiny, we will not be anxious. Take the kingdom of God as a gratuity, receive pardon as a charity? Go down on a dead level with other sinners? I can't do it, and I won't do it. And that pride of the human heart has kept tens of thousands out of the kingdom of God, and has been the chief hindrance in the way of five hundred of you. But, my friend, we cannot get into the kingdom of God as long as we keep this pride of our souls.

Suppose you have a check on a bank, and during the hours of the night you come through a subterranean passage into the bank, and you see the keeper of the bank, and present your check; he will say, You are a robber; you have no right to come in the night-time, and come by underground passages. Why not come in the daylight, at 10 o'clock, and in at the front door? Now, my friend, there is no subterranean passage into the kingdom of God; we have got to be willing to come into the city in sight of scorn, at the front door, or never enter at all. But, my friend, there is no hide-and-seek in religion, no such thing as driving into the gate of God's pardon in a coach and four; if we come at all we must go down on our knees; we must give up our pride, or give up heaven.

II. Another great obstacle which chokes up the strait gate is

THE SPIRIT OF WORLDLINESS.

Men have an idea that the chariot of the Gospel will run over their worldliness, their worldly business, and they cannot afford to be Christians, they think, so they go on gathering, gathering, and raking up and hiding, and clutching with a dying miser's grasp that gold which after a while will be melted and poured molten into an iron bowl, and they will be compelled to drink the excruciating draught to the bottom. Men measure their immortality with a yard-stick; they weigh eternity with a steel-yard; they beat out the life of their immortal soul with the iron bar of the show-window.

Saturday night they square their accounts with the world, but are hastening on toward eternal bankruptcy, and everlasting imprisonment for debt. They have their goods in a fire-proof safe, but are running a risk for that day when the elements shall melt with fervent heat and God shall burn the world up. Oh, this spirit of worldliness has choked up the path of life, it has filled the strait gate with obstacles, it has been the chief hindrance to the eternal salvation of thousands of you.

III. Another obstacle that often chokes up the strait gate is that the man is not willing to surrender. Almost every one has a darling transgression; in one case it is this, in another case it is that; in one case it is the wine-cup, in another case it is salacious desire, in another case it is an antipathy against an enemy that you cannot forgive. I care not what it is, as long as you entertain it; one single sin in your heart and you cannot enter into the kingdom of our God.

SOME ESPECIAL SIN

And how often it has been during this great awakening, and in all awakenings, you find people thoughtless from day to day, week after week, month after month. You do not understand the cause, you give them wholesome counsel, you urge them, you call their attention to the great things of religion; they seem serious, they seem prayerful, they are very thoughtful, they are almost persuaded, and they halt, and they halt, and they die. What is the matter? There is some secret sin they cannot surrender.

This man says, "I can't give up my hostility to that man who did me great damage. You say I must forgive him, I must treat him kindly, I must return kindness for his roughness of treatment to me, I must entertain no grudge against him. Now, sir, if you ask that of me, I would rather die than do that; I won't tell him I apologize." You cannot find God with that mood. You have got to forgive everybody, whether he asks it or not. There is a great absurdity abroad in the Christian church which says, When a man apologizes I will forgive him.

Why, anybody will do that, the world will do that; but it is a distinctive feature of our Christianity that you are to have a forgiving spirit toward all men; though they keep up their war against you day after day, month after month, and year after year, you must forgive them. "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses!" (Matt. 6 : 15.) You treat God worse than anybody ever treated you. Oh, you must give up all your grudges, you must give up all your hostilities, you must be at peace with all the world; if you have one darling sin you must surrender it, or you can never enter the peace of the Gospel.

> "Repent, the voice celestial cries,
> Nor longer dare delay:
> The wretch that scorns the mandate dies,
> And meets the fiery day."

I shall not forget, one night a few weeks ago, when at these aisles an intelligent soul seemed anxious for the pardon of the Gospel, but said, "I can't forgive an enemy; I can't forgive her; I will not forgive her." And God withheld H pardon, and withheld His peace, until she sai after a while, "I will forgive her, I will;" ar Chrst dawned upon her soul through the noo day of peace and pardon. Oh, give up yo last sin, or give up heaven.

Now, I have given the fact that there a obstacles in the way of your salvation, and have shown you that it is a strait gate, bu want to show you the possibility of between these obstacles. Strive to enter in the strait gate. Oh, you say, how am I enter? How many nights must I weep o sin? How many prayers must I pray? H many years of anxiety must I have before I fi Christ? Without weeping one more tear o sin, without offering one more prayer, with postponing another moment, just by one acti of your soul recline on the Lord Jesus Chri and enter into the hope of the Gospel. doesn't say, Weep, and be saved. It does say, Pray, and be saved. It says, Believe, a be saved.

PRESSING THROUGH

And just as soon as you can feel that the L Jesus Christ died for you personally, that m ment you can enter into the pardon of the G pel. For it is not in religion, in the schoo Christ, as in secular education. If a man wa to get a collegiate education for this world enters the freshman class, then he goes to sophomore class, then the junior class, then senior, then he graduates with a diploma. in the school of Christ the order is reversed. man gets the diploma before he enters the sc of Christ, or at the very start; the very first he receives the diploma, he gets pardon, pe life, and heaven; and then he goes on up to higher classes.

The first step, the second step, the third s the last step is, believe. Oh, you say, now come to the technicalities of religion; I d know what you mean by this faith that clergy and the churches so much talk ab Why, you exercise faith every day: you faith in men; you confide in your business ner, you have faith in the architect who buil bridge over which you walk. There is not a of your life when you do not exercise fait fifty people. Why not exercise faith in the Jesus Christ, who never cast any man away believed in His pardoning grace? Wit money and without price, whosoever will him come.

Oh, says some one, I pray, I am accust to pray; I pray every morning and night, a pray for all these things that you report. you sure you pray? Do you pray, or do merely say your prayers? I will illustrate

THE DIFFERENCE.

You are crossing a narrow, shallow str there is a plank across that stream; yo with a friend who passes away ahead of you get half way across this narrow stream plank begins to rock; you cry out to your fr Give me your hand lest I fall into the w you thrust him your hand.

Is that prayer? Oh, no, it is not pr But the steamer Melville is on her way for Royal, and the storm comes down, in the ness, and one steady wave of the sea brea the bows of the vessel. The ship goes to p and all night long you are on a piece of tha sel, and by the gray light of the dawn you boat coming from the shore. It comes a the rocks, and the faint voice of the pass makes you begin to fear the man will not se You hail him; you know that your life de upon your recognition by the man in the You say, "Look this way: help, help!" is prayer; that is prayer.

In other words, it is a concentring of a energies of body, mind, and soul in one st for the Gospel's rescue. No man offers earnest prayer but he finds Christ, and h him speedily. Would God that to-night a sand of you, by such a prayer and earnest centred supplication, might enter throu strait gate. But perhaps, my friend, yo t take this step. Perhaps you do not think it ficiently important. Perhaps there is an in- nal infatuation bewitching your soul, so that u are anxious about the things that perish, ile about things eternal you are thoughtless.

h, hammer of the Gospel, break that rock! , Holy Ghost, breathe on that corpse of death, bone shall come to bone, and sinew to sinew, the nostril shall throb, and the heart shall t, and the eye shall open before a pardoning deemer!

stand at the close of a stupendous day in the tory of this Zion. God for the last ten weeks been marching on in power, such as has been n in no church since the day when Christ e his life for the nations. Six hundred and y-six within this month, perhaps two hun- dd and fifty of them to-day crowding these es—all these aisles radiating from this point, one of them excepted. And when we passed ng the aisles and gave them the right hand Christian fellowship, and welcomed them into church on earth, in glad anticipation of the e when they would be welcomed to the rch of heaven, our hearts were melted within Hosanna to the son of David! Hosanna he highest!

ome six months ago I became intensely im- ssed with the fact that there would come in church, as there comes in every church, ther it is recognized or not, a time for espe- evangelistic effort. The simple fact is, there thousands of the churches of Jesus Christ in country waiting for the spirit of evangelism. ave stood in this presence and before vast mblages for many years; I have withheld e of the truths of the Gospel; I have pre- ed before the people the light and the dark- s—Calvary and Sinai—and those who have rd me these years know I have not withheld truth.

saw a great multitude on the very verge of kingdom, but it needed some extra move- nt, some outside impulse, some gracious fire vangelism, to bring them into the kingdom ur God. And I looked all over the field, with- consultation with any except my own family, I saw one afternoon, about three months . on a fragment of a newspaper which I picked from the floor—the newspaper having been pped around some article of merchandise had come to our home—on that fragment ewspaper I saw ean, contemptible attack on a Christian min- r and evangelist, and I am so formed (and I pose I am a type of the ordinarily fair-mind- nan)—I am so formed that all that went with in favor of the man, and I said, I believe that e man for this evangelism.

A CARICATURE,

he fact was that nine years ago we estab- ed a lay college. Many went forth from it erve Christ in different spheres of usefulness. y of them have won souls to God in multi- s, but the man whom God selected for the est work sits in this assemblage to-night.

bout three months ago, and just after I had this caricature, I went to Philadelphia to re in the Academy of Music. Before going y lecture I telegraphed to the Rev. Thomas rison, asking him if he would breakfast with on the morrow at my hotel.

oming back from the lecture I read the tele- n accepting the invitation. I slept not at all night. I hardly knew why I was awake; excitement of a public address does not keep awake, but I slept not at all. I was con- us afterward of having spent much of that t in prayer. The next morning at the table made arrangements for these evangelistic ices, and how God has blessed them you v, all Christendom knows. And I stand is presence to-night to thank Brother Har- n for his work here in Christ's name.

ay the blessing of the Lord accompany you ver. He has given you a great work to do, he will give you grace to do that work. Be ful unto death, and he will give you a crown ife (Rev. 2 : 10). Hundreds, and thousands, and tens of thousands, I hope, in the last day, will rise up and call you blessed.

I thank all the Christian ministers who have assisted in this evangelistic service. I thank all those who have given their especial energy to conducting sacred song. I thank all this membership, and the membership of other churches, as far as they have assisted us in this work. You have toiled mightily for God, and you have reaped a great harvest. There is only in my soul, and that is, that while perhaps more than a thousand souls have been brought to God at these altars, there are other thousands who have not taken one step heavenward. Strive to enter in at the strait gate.

ONE SADNESS

PROPHETIC EXPOSITION.

Compiled by Rev. M. Baxter.*

(Continued from page 461.)

Mr. McCausland's Conclusions—Cardinal Bonaparte a Probable Pope.

THE REV. J. C. MCCAUSLAND, M.A., the venerable Rector of Clonmore, Dunleer, Ireland, published, in 1860, a prophetic book, called "The Hope of Israel," and in April, 1869, he published the following explanation of Daniel 9 : 27, in a prophetical magazine:

"The Man of Sin will enter into the predicted seven years' covenant with many of the Jewish people at the beginning of Daniel's seventieth week of years; and in the middle of the week, after the lapse of three years and a half, will break the covenant, and openly assert his own godhead, and claim universal homage in that capacity, thus revealing himself as the Man of Sin, and will enact the fearful part assigned to that character in 2 Thess. 2 during the latter and final three years and a half."

He further expressed his prophetical conclusions to the following effect in "Signs of our Times" Journal, in March, 1872:

"All expositors, who are competent to form a reliable conclusion upon the subject, acknowledge that Napoleon I. was the seventh head of the Roman Empire, that is to say, the Seventh Head of the emblematic Wild-beast, which in Revelation and Daniel represents the Roman Empire. And, coincidently with the interpreting angel's fore-statement in Revelation 17, that Seventh Napoleonic head, 'when he came, continued only a short space,' namely, from 1806 to 1815, when, having forced matters to a decisive issue by the arbitrament of the sword, he was 'as it were wounded to death by the sword' at Waterloo (Rev. 13 : 3, 14). But 'the deadly wound is to be healed.'

"Now, whatever hesitation may exist in some minds in specifying the particular Napoleon who is to become, during the final three years and a half hereafter, the Last Head of the Roman Empire and Imperial Antichrist, yet, at least, this conclusion cannot be avoided—viz., that the Napoleon dynasty, in even more than its former power and earthly glory, must be re-established by a Napoleon over the territories of the Old Roman Empire, east as well as west, including Greece, Turkey, Syria, Egypt, as well as Britain, France, Spain, Italy, and Austria. The Rhine and the Danube must form the boundaries of this revived Franco-Roman Empire, and, therefore, Germany must necessarily sustain some unlooked for reverses, in order to be compelled to relinquish all the left bank of the Rhine and Bavaria and Baden. Moreover, the Napoleon Empire must necessarily have possession of Rome, as the capital of the Roman Empire.

"Nor need it cause us astonishment if Cardinal Lucien Bonaparte should become

THE NEXT AND FINAL POPE.

"The prophetic series of events may soon be commenced by a Napoleon regaining the French throne, and, after an interval, making the predicted seven years' covenant with many of the Jews, which will be the closing seven years of this Gentile dispensation, and its latter three and a half years will be the time of general persecution of Christians, and unprecedented tribulation (Dan. 9 : 27; 7 : 25; 12 : 7 : Rev. 13 : 5, etc.). Democracy, in its most revolutionary form and anti-Christian development, must be expected to play a prominent part in connection with the rise and reign of the latter day Imperial Man of Sin.

"The existence of Internationalism, Fenianism, and other democratic revolutionary organizations in Britain and Ireland, significantly confirm the prophetic conclusion, that Britain, as part of the Roman Empire, must be one of the ten Latin kingdoms which are to give their power and strength in an united Latin confederation to the last Napoleonic head of the revived Roman Empire (Rev. 17 : 13). There seems reason to expect that Ireland, never having been part of the Roman Empire, will by that time be legislatively separated from England.

"We stand on the brink of those days of which the ancient seer exclaimed, 'Alas! who shall live when God doeth this?'"

(To be continued.)

A SCOTCH SOLDIER'S MEMORY.

A MISSIONARY who labored in a city where a brigade of soldiers was always stationed, in visiting one of the hospitals came to the bedside of a dying soldier and spoke to him about the concerns of his soul, but he gave no heed to what was said. He was evidently dying fast, but utterly careless and hardened by a long course of sin.

The earnest missionary could not bear the thought of leaving him to die in his sins, yet every appeal seemed ineffectual. At last the thought crossed his mind, "I can hear from his accent that he comes from a country where the Psalms of David are generally committed to memory in youth; I will try if a verse of a Psalm will touch his heart." So, when he had gained his attention, he sang, in a low voice, to a tune familiar to every Scotch child,

"Such pity as a father hath Unto his children dear;
Like pity shows the Lord to such As worship Him in fear.
For He remembers we are dust,
  And He our frame well knows;
Frail man, his days are like the grass,
  As flower in field he grows."

The dying soldier now looked at the missionary earnestly; he stared as if a voice from afar addressed him. The scenes of home and youth rushed into his mind—a tender chord had been touched. The well-known though long-forgotten lines of the beautiful hundred and third Psalm thrilled his soul, and spoke as the voice of God to his conscience.

The missionary saw the effect of his singing, and believing that the Spirit would be his best teacher for a time, left the bedside of the sick man. All that night the soldier lay lost in thought. The old kirk with its solemn services rose before his mind. His pious mother's tender love, her pleading and her prayers all were recalled. In that night he lived his boyhood over again, and all that intervened, the black record of years of sin, was forgotten.

The next day the missionary was at his couch again. This time he was welcomed gladly, and the man, thoroughly broken down and contrite, was asking, in earnest tones, "What shall I do to be saved?"

He lingered two weeks longer, and then died rejoicing in Christ, and the missionary had the duty of sending a letter to the soldier's parents in their Scotch home, conveying intelligence of sorrow and joy—sorrow that their lost boy was dead, and joy that they might hope to meet him in heaven. The bread cast on the waters had been found after many days.

---

* Extracted from "Coming Wars," by Rev. M Baxter, in two pamphlets—five cents each by mail. First pamphlet contains "Ten Signs of the End, and Description of Approaching Events," with two maps and four large diagrams. Second pamphlet containe valuable quotations from Forty Expositors on these events. Address, 63 Bible House, New York.

ROCHESTER TOWER.

By Miss M. A. Paull.

(Continued from page 455.)

Constance's Room—Fears—A Letter from Mr. Ferguson—"A Peep at Aix-la-Chapelle"—Relics.

HAVING left her mother asleep, Constance tearfully sought her own pretty little room, whose pictured walls she was never likely to return to. If she got on well in Germany, and stayed there the length of time she expected to stay, their term in Eglinton Terrace, would be expired before she came back to England, and it had been decided that it would not be right for them to remain there longer. Before Mrs. Anerley and Emmie there were the absorbing feminine occupations of house choosing and house changing, both of which had a certain interest for them.

"It would not be," she thought, "such a pretty house, nor such a large house, to which she would return next year; saddest of all, it would not be a house full of the memories of her father." How this chamber spoke to her of his thoughtful care for her comfort! Her room and Emmie's opened one into the other by the closing or unfastening of a door; they could be together or apart just as it pleased them. A little beyond these two rooms was the study, in which they had spent so many happy hours, where he had been so patient with her ignorance, so anxious for her improvement, so tolerant of her failures. Would any one ever be so kind, so thoughtful toward her again?

The desolating sense of sorrow of the first few months after her father's death had been succeeded in the heart of Constance by a weary, sad belief that though the keen edge of grief was softened by time, yet that she missed him as much as ever, and that she should go on missing him, and needing him, and not having him, all her life long.

The dread, too, that her mother would one day forget him, so far as to marry some one else to give her children a stepfather, was torture to Constance. She did not reflect, as she ought to have done, for we are all of us so naturally selfish in our strongest feeings, that this might nevertheless be a comfort to one of her mother's dependent temperament. She only felt that it would seem to herself like sacrilege; and of all men, how could he who professed to be her father's friend dare to think of this? Did he dare? He had been very kind to them all ever since that awful night when he drove back with her mother and herself from Albert Street, and he had taken a great deal of trouble about her, if it was real kindness, without another motive; but if he had that other motive behind, to be brought forward and acted upon in the far-off future, as she sometimes suspected, she should hate him for it.

Her mother, too, had almost disappointed her. Instead of angrily contradicting her child's suspicions, as Constance hoped she would have done, and as Constance would have been so glad for her to do, she had refused to give the least pledge respecting her future conduct, and had evidently been annoyed that any reference had been made to the subject. Constance was puzzled as to what more she could do. She felt she had better not say anything to Emmie; she would be sure to acquiesce peaceably sooner or later in her mother's wishes, whatever they might be; and she might not understand her younger sister's horror of such an event; she might even allude to the suspicions she had had confided to her to her mother, and to her Constance felt too much had already been said through her own impetuosity.

Cecil might ward off such a misfortune by more watchfulness and more constant care of his mother at all times, but Constance knew she could find neither voice nor words, dearly as she loved him, to communicate such a thing to Cecil.

Besides, how did she know but that Cecil might approve? Her mother was so pretty, and still looked so young and fair, it was no wonder people admired her, Constance thought, and wished heartily that she was plainer and older, and only beautiful in the eyes of her children, and that the deep mourning she wore did not so well set off the dazzling fairness of her complexion and her bright golden-brown hair. Constance was jealous for her father, and one could hardly regard it as an ignoble jealousy.

When Constance had been in her new dwelling-place a very short time she received a letter from Mr. Ferguson. It contained a request that she would furnish some short historical account of the old city, together with her first impressions concerning it, for the pages of Our Chronicle, a paper he had set on foot in connection with his chapel a short time before the death of Mr. Anerley. That gentleman had himself contributed to it once or twice, and expressed his hope that his children would also. So Hermann Ferguson's wish, inasmuch as it revived the wishes of her father, was obeyed, and Constance penned the following essay, entitling it "A Peep at Aix-la-Chapelle," and with it dispatched a letter to her sister:

Aix-la-Chapelle should not be overlooked in a continental trip that makes it possible to take at least a peep at its venerable cathedral and other most interesting antiquities.

The city contains at present nearly 52,000 inhabitants, with a large number of visitors for the waters. It is surrounded by hills, and is therefore sheltered from the cold winds.

I have as yet devoted only one day to the inspection of this fine old city of Charlemagne, but those hours proved rich in interest. With my kind travelling companions I stayed the first night of my arrival at the thoroughly comfortable hotel Dragon d'Or, and next morning we had a most delightful drive.

We inspected first of all the Kurhaus, where we had a peep at the ball-room, the fine reading-room, and from the windows at the pleasant gardens. Then we proceeded to the Regierungsgebände, which being interpreted means the Hotel of the Regency, to view a monster aerolite which is placed on a pedestal in the garden or court of the house—a thunderbolt, which is indeed dreadful to the gaze of any pedestrian, and which, if it had fallen on a building, must have wrought destruction. Thence, leaving these modern wonders, and driving through some nice wide streets and some narrower ones, we came to the venerable Town Hall.

This building is erected on the very spot where more than a thousand years ago the masons of Charlemagne were busy upon the imperial palace of that valiant emperor. The present building was erected in 1353, and has, therefore, a respectable antiquity of its own. Charlemagne's fondness for Aix-la-Chapelle, and his determination to make it the imperial city, do credit alike to his good taste and his good judgment. The neighborhood is beautiful, and the valuable properties of the waters, in which the emperor and a numerous court are said to have been accustomed to bathe, were, of course, known in those days and long before, just as they now draw to it so many strangers even from distant lands.

Aix-la-Chapelle, the French name, means the waters of the church or the chapel: Aachen, the German name, signifies "waters." The original merit of Aix-la-Chapelle lay in its healing springs, and these are very wonderful. It is a curious phenomenon to see gushing up in the midst of a large fountain in the street a spring of hot water, quite warm to the touch even when it has mingled with the other water, and quite hot at its source.

It is eminently suggestive of considerable fires somewhat nearer than we are to the earth's centre. At the handsome baths we tasted of the waters and found them just as disagreeable and brackish as medicinal waters usually are, to which their warmth, however, seemed to impart a specially odious piquancy of flavor.

I have wandered far from the venerable Town Hall, which is ascended by a long flight of steps, while in the square before it, spread out like a magnified specimen of the box of toys I used play with, is the German market, with its gold and purple autumn fruits, its many-hued veget bles, and its quaintly-attired countrywomen ac ing as stall-keepers.

German toys have endeared German hom life to English children more than most peop stay to think about. The child hands th have carved and painted animals and trees a market-baskets in the Rhineland have given t little ones of England of many successive gen ations most accurate models of German ho and farm and country life.

In the Town Hall are portraits of German e perors; one interesting full-length portrait Charlemagne. The honest, manly face, the fi erect form, the dignity of his whole bearing, a all in keeping with my ideas of this notewort emperor. Here are also Leopold of Austria a his wife, the grandparents of Maria Theresa, a Maria Theresa herself—strong and handsome her character; and many another great or whose fame lingers yet in the page of histo and many others whose fame has long si passed away.

Around this Hall of the Emperors are so wonderful paintings, descriptive of the histo and adventures of Charlemagne, whose mem is now the presiding genius of this city of choice, as once his living form favored it with presence.

Leaving the Town Hall, we paused to view fountain in the market place, with the gil bronze statue of Charlemagne. The bronze sin which it surmounts is twenty-five feet circumference. From thence we drove to cathedral, a fine old building, in which are so valuable relics of priceless value to the undou ing believer. They are thus summarized in stranger's guide to the city. I translate the from the French:

1. A robe of white cotton belonging to mother of the Holy Saviour, five feet and a long.

2. The swaddling clothes in which the inf
Jesus was wrapped.

3. The cloth on which St. John was dec
tated.

4. The cloth which encircled the loins of Je when crucified.

It was founded in 796 by Charlemagne, blessed by Pope Leo III. in 804.

From the cathedral we drove along a g road to Lonsberg. This is a hill 890 feet ab the sea, on the summit of which is erecte pyramid, and from it there is a magnificent v of the surrounding country for many mi
The abrupt slopes may be either ascended on by means of steps cut in the rocky formation in a carriage by a winding road, which, of cou much increased the distance. At the top restaurant in the form of a handsome pavil
There are delightful walks through the wo pleasant promenades, and sequestered nook this beautiful hill, and here, no doubt, the l making of Aix-la-Chapelle is largely carried Lovers need scarcely wish a more congenial for a moonlight ramble than on Lonsberg.

On coming to a fine building which Augu our young guide, had already told us wa hospital, he stopped the carriage that we m enter the delightful botanical gardens in w it stands, and in which some of the patie both male and female, were sunning themsel
How I wished that some of our poor conva cents connected with the Albert Mission c have as charming a garden to get well in!

This hospital is new and is a civil hosp placed under the care of the Sisters of St. E beth, which convent of religous women has isted in this city for more than two hun years. The hospital has inscribed on it "M Hill," and thus places itself under the patro and protection of the Virgin. Only too were we compelled to leave the fountains, trees, and the flowers of that large and beau garden to drive back to the hotel and prepar the table d'hôte. The streets of Aix-la-Cha are good, and its public buildings, both anc modern, handsome and well built. It has eral woollen manufactories and a library of 1000 volumes.

(To be continued.)

TE BRITISH POLITICAL REVOLUTION.

Its Prophetic Aspect.

(Continued from page 455.)

By Rev. M. Baxter.

2. The Division of the Eastern Turkish Empire to Five Kingdoms—viz., Greece enlarged orthward — Egypt — Syria separated from urkey—Central Turkey, corresponding with ncient Thrace-with-Bithynia—And Bulgaria ith Servia and Roumania—3. The Legislative eparation of Ireland from England—4. The redestined War between France and Gerany, etc.

E considered last week the first of five protic events toward the fulfilment of which new Radical Liberal Parliament is a prossive step—viz., "the increased prevalence of spirit of Democracy and Radicalism until ain becomes a republic." We now proceed onsider :

The ascendency of Mr. Gladstone's Liberal ernment, which is opposed to upholding the grity of the corrupt Turkish Empire, and ch should it be favorable to his "bag and gage" policy of ejecting Turkish officials and rs from misgoverned Eastern countries, is a gressive step toward the fulfilment of the ocalyptic prophecy, that the mystic "Euphra- or Turkish Empire shall, at the epoch of -83, be "dried up" (Rev. 16 : 12), and also Daniel's prophecy (Dan. 8 : 22, 23), that at epoch the four kingdoms of Alexander's cian Empire, denoted by the four horns of Macedonian goat, shall be revived and reapr—viz., (a) Greece extended northward, so o include Thessaly, Albania, and Macedonia, ; (b) Egypt ; (c) Syria made an independent gdom, and including part of Asia Minor ; (a) ace-with-Bithynia, which, in fact, is the same Central Turkey south of the Balkans and east Macedonia, together with Bithynia, a small tion of Asia Minor ; so that the vast Turkish pire will then have dwindled down to be no er than Thrace-with-Bithynia.

bout 1840 it was shown by expositors, such B. W. Newton and Dr. Tregelles, that the r horn kingdoms of Greece, Egypt, Syria, and ace-with-Bithynia, mentioned in Dan. 8 : 22, and which for many centuries have been llowed up in the huge Turkish Empire, must evived and reappear as distinct, independent gdoms, as they formerly were, because Daniel aks of them as being re-existent at the time of end, and in the last end of the indignation, says that "in the latter time of these kingdms" the last great Antichrist (a Napoleon), "king of fierce countenance," shall arise out one of them, as prefigured by a little horn ing out of one of the four horns—i.e., a little kgdom, such as Macedonia, etc., being carved of one of the four kingdoms, and its ruler sequently being a little horn or sovereign" (n. 8 : 8, 9, 17, 19).

t is most remarkable that, in accordance with s prophecy of Daniel, first, Greece, and, ondly, Egypt have been separated from Turkey, l made independent kingdoms, respectively in 3 and 1840 ; and it now remains for Syria to severed from Turkey as a third kingdom ; l then the remainder of Turkey will form the rth of the original four horn kingdoms.

Prophecy requires a rectification of frontiers the case of Greece, to make it correspond with ient Greece. It must be enlarged northward the addition of Thessaly, Albania, and Macenia. And there is far more chance of this be promoted by Gladstone Liberalism than aconsfield Conservatism. Mr. Gladstone has g been noted for his strong Hellenic sympaes, and, in fact, his scarcely less fervid than that of Lord Byron, o died for Greek independence at Missoghi,

ENTHUSIASM IN BEHALF OF GREECE

The recent electoral victory of the Liberals has been received with great excitement and rejoicing in the East by the Greek and Christian populations. They exclaim, "We shall now have reforms and an end put to anarchy." Their hopes of reforms in European Turkey and Asia Minor and Syria, which are in a state of frightful msigovernment, are rising high, and their very expectation of sympathy and favor from the new British Parliament may encourage them to rise in revolt against their oppressive Turkish rulers.

The revival of these ancient Oriental nationalities, and the infusion of new life into their dry bones, and the restoration of Palestine to the Jews, was hoped by the Anglo-Israelites to be the destined mission of Lord Beaconsfield. But the great work still remains to be achieved. The hour is come for the accomplishment of these events, but the man has not yet appeared. It may be, however, that Mr. Gladstone is to prove the man, or, at any rate, his policy may be the policy which shall lead onward to these results, and now to him, in a measure, the words may be applicable, "Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this ?" (Esther 4 : 14).

The Berlin Conference now sitting during June, are already expected to add some northern territory to Greece.

3. The legislative if not entire

SEPARATION OF IRELAND,

which did not belong to Cæsar's Roman Empire, from Britain, which is one of the ten kingdoms of that empire, as represented by the ten horns and the ten toes, must precede the distinct appearance of those ten kingdoms, because they are to be formed within the exact boundaries of the ancient Roman Empire. And as this separation is indicated to take place by about 1883, if the end of this age is to be in 1890, therefore the legislative separation of Ireland from Britain may be expected by that time.

Long before Home Rulers were heard of—who number at the present time about 62 Members of Parliament out of 652—it was foreshown by expositors such as Dr. Tregelles on "Daniel," in 1846, and Dr. Kelshall on "The Antichrist," in 1846, and B. W. Newton on the "Prospects of the Ten Kingdoms," in 1849, that Ireland, being outside Cæsar's Roman Empire, must become separated at the time of the final crisis of this age from Britain, which was inside the Roman Empire.

Now it is certain that the Conservative party would not listen for a moment to any proposition favorable to the Home Rulers' policy. On nothing was Lord Beaconsfield more determined than to resist the least approach to any measure tending toward the legislative separation of Ireland from England. The Home Rulers had nothing to hope from him. But they have much to hope from an advanced Liberal Government in which the policy of Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Bright is predominant. The disestablishment of the Irish Church by Mr. Gladstone was a measure thoroughly in harmony with the wishes of the Home Rulers, and the new Irish Land Acts proposed by Mr. Bright largely meet with the Home Rulers' approbation. Every little concession made to them they interpret as the prelude and promise of larger future concessions. Having got an inch they will take an ell.

There will be found plenty of Liberal members to contend that it is only reasonable to grant a parliamentary commission of inquiry into the justice of the Home Rulers' demands ; and that local Irish measures can be far better deliberated upon by an assembly of Irishmen in Dublin, like a local vestry, than by Englishmen who were unacquainted with the localities affected by the proposed measures. And much may be said about the expense and inconvenience of bringing witnesses to London, and employing London parliamentary agents, and consuming the valuable time of Imperial Parliament, when such matters might with advantage be left to a local Irish Parliament.

In the Parliament of 1880 Irish questions will meet with more favor and sympathy than in the Parliament of 1879, and when once the ball is set rolling its speed will be accelerated by the ever-growing momentum of repeated successes, until the separation of the Irish shamrock from the English rose becomes a matter of history.

The necessity, too, of the votes of the sixty-two Home Rule members to insure the Liberal majority in Parliament may become a reason for concessions to them in the future, through dissensions in the Liberal camp, although that is not the case at present.

Britain will also find herself ere long in sore difficulties through continental wars and troubles in India and other of her colonies, and the Home Rulers will know how to act on the maxim that "England's difficulty is Ireland's opportunity."

4. The prophetical

PREDESTINED WAR

between France and Germany, which is to issue in France regaining the left bank of the Rhine, is likely to be precipitated by the new Eastern policy of the Liberal Government.

The complete break-up of the Turkish Empire has always been dreaded by politicians, however much they disapproved of its irreclaimable corruption, because they foresaw that a general scramble for its territories would kindle a conflagration of universal war among the nations of Europe. For this reason, as well as for providing a barrier against Russian aggression, political expediency has dictated to England the policy of maintaining the integrity of the Turkish Empire. It was this policy that led England to wage the Crimean War in 1855.

But the British nation has rejected this policy since the Turkish massacre of hundreds of Bulgarians, which was publicly made known in England in June, 1876, and which caused meetings to be held in nearly every English town to protest against our upholding any longer the integrity of the Turkish Empire. Mr. Gladstone then published his well-known pamphlet, "Bulgarian Horrors," in which he advocated the complete extinction of the Turkish executive power in Bulgaria, Bosnia, and Herzegovina, "Let the Turks, then Zaptiehs, then Mudirs, and then Pashas, one and all, bag and baggage, clear out of the province they have desolated and profaned."

Mr. Gladstone recommended that these three provinces should be allowed to govern themselves ; but, as a matter of fact, Bosnia and Herzegovina are now annexed to Austria, while only Bulgaria and Servia are made independent states. Russia is in favor of Mr. Gladstone's plan of making these and other Balkan provinces independent states, while Austria desires to annex them to its own territory, and on this account Mr. Gladstone significantly addressed to Austria the warning, "Hands off."

And here is the bone of contention, which may soon precipitate hostilities between some of the great Powers, and may lead to the predestined war between France and Germany, which is to issue in France regaining the left bank of the Rhine, and acquiring Belgium, Luxembourg, Switzerland, etc. This is necessary in order to form the existing twelve kingdoms of the Western Roman Empire, into the predicted number of five—viz., Britain, France, Spain, Italy, and Austria, with some alterations of their present area.

Whether Russia, knowing that the Liberal party of Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Bright are not likely, like Lord Beaconsfield's party, to engage in any war for the protection of Turkey, will feel encouraged to aggressive movements against Turkey, and to act against Austria's designs upon Turkish territory, time alone will show. But somehow or other there will arise a greater war than this century has witnessed, completely reversing the issue of the Franco-Prussian war of 1870–71. At the same time this predestined inevitable war is no argument against Mr. Gladstone's Liberal policy in the East, which aims at the extinction of the abominable Turco-Mohammedan despotic misgovernment.

(To be continued.)

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50
per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to THE MANAGER, CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House New York.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of back numbers to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

Persons requiring single or special copies can obtain them most conveniently through
NEWSDEALERS.
Any complaint that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer is promptly attended to if we are given the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, July 14th, at 12.30 A.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Gen. Garfield's Letter Formally Accepting the Republican nomination for the Presidency was published July 13th. It has naturally been subjected to close scrutiny, and opinions of its merits and demerits vary with the political principles of the critics. A confession of political faith and a programme of national policy, could not have been framed so as to command the approval of all parties, nor even of all sections of the same party, and therefore Gen. Garfield's letter, dealing, as it does, with issues hotly contested, is freely condemned in many quarters. It is, however, satisfactory to find that among those who condemn it with the most pronounced vigor are to be found men of extreme opinions, who regard it as tame and commonplace. The bulk of the people are anxious that the present era of prosperity should continue, and would have dreaded the possibility of a statesman of either party being elected to the Presidential chair who proposed the initiation of any violent or radical change in the National policy. The Republican nominee does not advocate any such change, and therefore his letter is approved by those who desire "to let well alone."

The Chicago Platform is Adopted by Gen. Garfield in its entirety. He says of it: "The doctrines announced by the Chicago Convention are deliberate convictions resulting from a careful study of the spirit of our institutions, the events of our history, and the best impulses of our people. In my judgment these principles should control the legislation and administration of the Government. In any event, they will guide my conduct until experience points out a better way."

Those who were anxious to see some urgently needed reforms advocated, regret their omission from the platform, but the insertion of such recommendations would probably have been regarded by party leaders as detrimental to its value as a campaign manifesto. Such omissions relate to civil service reform, the temperance question, the silver question, and the tariff. On these matters Gen. Garfield is either silent or disinclined for change.

On the question of State Supremacy, which in various forms has been debated so often in Congress and outside, during the past twenty years, Gen. Garfield adheres to his Congressional record, and is sufficiently outspoken. He contends "that the right of the nation to determine the method by which its own legislature shall be created cannot be surrendered without abdicating one of the fundamental powers of government; that the national laws relating to the election of representatives in Congress shall neither be violated nor evaded; that every elector shall be permitted, freely and without intimidation, to cast his lawful ballot at such election, and have it honestly counted, and that the potency of his vote shall not be destroyed by the fraudulent vote of any other person."

In conclusion Gen. Garfield says: "If elected, it will be my purpose to enforce strict obedience to the Constitution and the laws, and to promote, as best I may, the interest and honor of the whole country, relying for support upon the wisdom of Congress, the intelligence and patriotism of the people, and the favor of God."

The National Democratic Committee Assembled in New York July 13th, to make arrangements for the Presidential campaign. Ex-Senator W. H. Barnum, of Connecticut, was unanimously elected Chairman of the Committee, and Mayor Prince, of Boston, Secretary, and an Executive Committee of eleven was appointed. Subsequently the Committee went to Governor's Island to formally tender the nominations to Gen. Hancock and Mr. W. H. English.

The pleasure Gen. Hancock experienced in receiving the nomination was marred by a painful bereavement. His little grandson, only four months old, whom the General loved very deeply, had died that morning. General Hancock had sat up with the babe all night and watched it with all the tenderness of a woman.

The National Prosperity.—The Census and Government returns for the year which ended May 31st, 1860, compared with those of this year indicate an increase of prosperity unprecedented in any nation in the world. The wheat produced in 1860 was 173,000,000 bushels, this year it is 440,000,000; corn was 837,000,000 bushels, now it is 1,450,000,000 merchandise exports were then valued at $316,242,423, now they are $835,000,000. Other statistics are equally surprising and gratifying, as evidencing the marvellous progress made during two decades. God is giving this country great prosperity; it should be the care of every citizen to render thanks to Him, and to see to it, so far as he is able, that the national life is consecrated to His service and glory.

Efforts to Reform the Tenement Houses which have so long been a scandal to New York are being made by a few Christian ladies, and have so far been crowned with success. The difficulty has hitherto been with the landlords, who so long as they secured their rents did not trouble to do necessary repairs and cleaning. Two earnest ladies have leased one of the worst buildings in the Five Points region, used as a low lodging-house for the vilest class, with the intention of changing it into a decent and habitable dwelling. Few people can have any idea of the task which these ladies have undertaken. To put the place into even fair condition has been a difficult work. The walls have had to be scraped and the whole building fumigated, to kill the vermin and remove contagion; the yard had to be repaved, and an old shed used as a bone-house torn down. As the lease of the place is experimental, only temporary changes could be made; but even these have transformed it within and without.

A Pathetic Incident is Narrated in the New York Tribune. A child only ten years old was run over by the cars at Dubuque, Iowa, and was carried to his home for surgical attention. Not a tear stood in his eyes, but the tender look he gave to those who stood by his side told plainly that he was suffering great agony. After the doctor had dressed his wounds he called his parents, sisters, and brothers to his beside, kissed one and all farewell, and left a tear upon their cheeks. A second time he called his mother to his side, placed his little arms about her neck, and said, "Mother, I am going to die in a few minutes. Please forgive me for not mindin you." With this the little fellow fell back, an as the mother said, "Yes, my boy," and toc another look at his face, she found him dead ar beyond all pain and suffering.

The Woman's National Christian Tempe ance Union will hold open-air meetings this se son at the following places: Ocean Grove, N J., August 9th, 10th; Round Lake, N. Y August 11th–16th; Chautauqua, N. Y., Augu 15th; Lake Bluff, Ill., August 18th–23d; Bi marck Grove, Kan., August 28th, 29th; Ol Orchard, Me., August 28th. The meetings are be made specially interesting by conversations practical themes. People in doubt about a sur mer resort will be amply rewarded by spendir their holidays at some of these camp-ground A portrait and life of Miss Frances E. Willa will be given in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD August 5th.

Dr. Talmage Proposes Spending the next fe weeks in California, visiting Leadville and De ver en route. Though retaining all his spiritu and mental vigor, his physical powers are sorely need of repose. Night after night for ten wee he was by the side of Mr. Harrison at the speci services in the Tabernacle, addressing the co gregation, praying with the anxious, and givi pastoral counsel to those in need of it, and the labors in addition to his regular services on t Lord's day have made rest and change absolute necessary. Our readers will, it is hoped, pr that by the blessing of God he may be strengt ened and made increasingly useful in his wor During his absence we expect to publish sor evening sermons Dr. Talmage recently preach at the Tabernacle.

Sunday Observance in Massachusetts.— society has been formed for promoting the be ter observance of the Lord's day in the B State. Among other methods of operati adopted is that of requesting ministers to prea sermons warning their hearers against Sund excursions, picnics, etc. On moral and natior grounds, apart from the principal ground obedience to the Divine command, the obser ance of one day in the week as a day consecrat to God and His service should be advocated all patriotic citizens.

The Death of Rev. Barnas Sears, D.D. LL. of Staunton, Va., occurred at Saratoga on J 7th. The cause of education has sustained severe loss by this event, for Dr. Sears occupi several responsible positions in connection wi it. He was appointed in 1867 manager of t fund George Peabody gave for educational p poses, and he was for many years President Brown University, Providence. He had gone Saratoga to deliver an address before the Am ican Institute of Instruction, on "Educatio Progress in the United States During the L Fifty Years." The address Dr. Sears complet but on the day he was to deliver it he lay de Dr. Ellis of Boston read it, and it sounded to t audience like a voice from the grave. Dr. Se was seventy-seven years of age when he di He had been feeble for several days, but ho were entertained that he would recover, un a few hours before his death.

A Sermon by the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon h been blessed by God to the conversion of a U versalist minister at Plymouth, Mass. He h preached Universalism for twelve years, but M Spurgeon's sermon set him thinking, and God h led him to see his error and to consecrate hi self and his ministry unreservedly to Christ.

A Drunkard at a Prayer Meeting.—A Ge tleman rose in a Christian meeting in New Yo on July 16th, and said: "About six years ag came to New York, and having heard since a b of the Fulton Street Prayer Meeting I thoug I would come here. I was under the influen of liquor at the time, I am ashamed to say. soon became convinced that this assembly Christians was no place for me. I determin to seek the Saviour, and I found Him. Sin then, He has helped me, guided me, and filled r breast with joy. He has helped me by His gra to lead some souls to Him. This has given r great joy."

Masses in a Lottery.—An Advertisement in e daily journals of Montreal announces a lot- ry for the benefit of a Roman Catholic semi- ary. Among the prizes to be drawn for, are ts of ground, horses, vases, a fancy pipe, pair wheels, chromos, and masses for the living or e dead, some one of which possibly may be ob- ined by the purchaser of a dollar ticket. asses in an ordinary way may, it appears, be rchased at various prices, according to circum- ances; they range from fifty cents to a hun- ed dollars each, but in this case the possessor of "lucky" ticket secures it at the cost of one llar. It is marvellous that men should still nsider such purchasable commodities as holy ngs, or things of any value at all.

A Remarkable Surgical Experiment has been progress at St. Luke's Hospital, New York, ich has occupied six years. A young woman ned Lucy Osborn, had her scalp torn from her ad by an accident in a button-factory, at New dford, Conn., on September 23d, 1874. The al surgeons were unable to deal successfully h the case, and she was sent to St. Luke's spital, where the doctors decided on trying the cess of skin-grafting. Minute particles of n were taken from the bodies of the surgeons volunteers about the hospital, and of persons side who had heard of the experiment and e interested in its success. These particles e laid on the wound, and many of them ad- ed and grew. The new scalp is now complete, the patient in perfect health, but the pro- has been slow and tedious, so many of the ts having failed to grow. The hospital rec- shows that no less than fourteen thousand es of skin were applied before the forehead the top of the head were permanently red.

any persons, impelled by regard for the in- l girl suffered, a slight pain that she might enefited, and she could never have recovered or their kindness. The case is not only an esting one, but as small things shadow forth er ones, it illustrates the love of Christ, that His people might be sanctified, was ed "once for all" (Heb. 10 : 10).

Liquor Dealer in Connecticut has an op- unity of realizing how ruinous are the effects uced by his commodity. Twelve years ago arried a young lady of great beauty and nplishments, whom he loved devotedly. life for a few years was an exceedingly y one, but the abundance of intoxicating r about their home produced a fondness for the breast of the young wife, and she grad- drifted into drunken habits. The hus- almost heart-broken, tried various ways of g his wife's vice, but without avail, and ulti- y she sank into a hopeless and incurable maniac. She is now undergoing a sentence months imprisonment for being drunk and derly in the streets of New York. Those lig a pit for others sometimes fall therein elves (Prov. 28 : 10).

Arkansas Farmer's Difficulty.—A South- urnal relates an incident of the war which ates the condition many people are in who o decided stand on the side of Christ. are willing to be considered Christians by Christian friends, and to be regarded as of orld when in worldly company, thus being hings to all men" in a sense not intended apostolic injunction.

ee Northern officers were appointed on a ission with three Southern officers, after ttle of Prairie Grove, to negotiate an ex- of prisoners. While the commission was , an aged farmer strayed into the room, ng it was the provost's office. His eyes im, but he quickly noticed the uniforms, pposing himself in the presence of the rn staff, began protesting his loyalty to ion. One of the officers facetiously ad- him to be cautious, and pointing to the rn officers told him to look at them. d man put on his spectacles, and recogni- e uniform, explained that his heart was e South in the great struggle, and that y son was a soldier in the Southern army. Gazing around the room he recognized the Northern uniforms also, and was bewildered. At last he leaned both hands on the table, and surveying the entire party, he said, "Well, gentlemen, this is a little mixed, but you jist go on and fight it out among yourselves. I can live under any government."

The old gentleman suffered nothing by his equivocal position; but in the great day of judgment there will be many whose protestations of what they have done in the name of Jesus, will be answered with, "I never knew you: depart from me" (Matt. 7 : 22).

An Impossible Attitude toward the Cause of Christ was recently claimed by a young man in response to a question touching his personal salvation. "Are you on the Lord's side?" an earnest Christian asked him. "No," he said, "I am neutral." There are many people who imagine they can be neutral in this matter, but a time will come when they will see that their neutrality was actual hostility to Christ. A man on a burning ship refusing to enter the life-boat might call his inaction neutrality, and remain to be burned. He would be quite as consistent as those who, being unsaved, are offered pardon and eternal life, but neglect the offer on the plea that they are neutral (Matt. 12 : 30).

A Fortune was Spread out on the Ground near Petrolia, Pa., recently. An old farmer, having made $100,000 in oil, was afraid to deposit it in banks or to invest it. He kept the rolls of greenbacks in his farmhouse locked up in boxes and trunks. The notes became damp, mildewed and mouldy. When he discovered the condition of his fortune, he took the notes from their hiding-places and spread them in the sun about his orchard to dry. The spectacle of a fortune lying loose on the ground among the apple-trees was witnessed by hundreds who were attracted to the farm by the singular proceeding. The money was thus exposed for two days, guarded by the farmer, his wife, daughter, and hired man. Then it was returned to the boxes. The spectacle aroused the cupidity of dishonest people, and the farmer had his house broken into and a considerable portion of his treasure stolen shortly afterward. The farmer's experience is a striking illustration of Matt. 6 : 19.

A Millionaire Reduced to the Poor-House.—Among the inmates of the county poor-house at Milwaukee, Wis., is a man, now decrepit and paralyzed, who seventeen years ago owned five banks and was worth $6,000,000. He was the founder of the Pennsylvania Savings Bank in Philadelphia. At the beginning of the war he lost $2,000,000 in a coal-mine scheme in Logan County, Virginia. Other misfortunes followed until he lost everything. Such vicissitudes of fortune, when they occur to the Christian, leave him still possessed of eternal riches, but coming to the man who has set his heart on gold they leave him poor indeed.

A Wonderful Meteor fell near Macon, Ga., on June 29th. It is described as being as large as a barrel. It started from the zenith, plunged down the northwestern sky, and exploded with a report that reverberated for thirty seconds and appeared to shake the earth. The meteor was about five seconds in falling, during which time the city was lit up as though by a powerful electric light.

Much excitement prevailed in the negro quarter, the inhabitants rushing into their houses, closing the doors and filling the air with screams and prayers. The time between the disappearance of the phenomenon and the report was about three minutes, so the meteor is calculated to have exploded about forty miles from the earth.

A Dying Child's Question.—"Father, I am going to heaven; what shall I tell Jesus is the reason you won't love Him?" asked a dying child of his sorrowing father. The father burst into tears, for he did not love Jesus, and he knew not what to answer. In a few moments his child had fallen asleep in Christ. But the question weighed on the father's heart, and by the blessing of God led him to repentance and faith in Christ.

MAHANAIM, OR HOSTS OF ANGELS.

A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"And Jacob went on his way, and the angels of God met him. And when Jacob saw them, he said, This is God's host: and he called the name of that place Mahanaim."—Genesis 32 : 1, 2.

"And it came to pass, when David was come to Mahanaim, that Shobi the son of Nahash of Rabbah of the children of Ammon, and Machir the son of Ammiel of Lo-debar, and Barzillai the Gileadite of Rogelim, brought beds, and basins, and earthen vessels, and wheat, and barley, and flour, and parched corn, and beans, and lentiles, and parched pulse, and honey, and butter, and sheep, and cheese of kine, for David, and for the people that were with him, to eat: for they said, The people is hungry, and weary, and thirsty, in the wilderness."—2 Samuel 17 : 27-29.

Great Changes in Life—Jacob's Family Quarrels Followed by Angels' Visits—Changes in the Saviour's Life—I. Jacob in the Best Company—1. The Believer Encompassed with Angels—Innumerable—Full of Power—Working in Order—Punctual—2. Sometimes Manifest to Faith—Jacob Oppressed with Cares—By a great Dread—3. Sent for a Purpose—II. David at Mahanaim—Met by Friends Instead of Angels—Enemies becoming Friends—God's Armies varied—Spontaneous Gifts—Saints, God's Angels on Earth—The Host of God—God Must be Seen in Friends—and Helpers.

Let us go even unto Mahanaim and see these great sights. First, let us go with Jacob and see the two camps of angels, and then with David to observe his troops of friends.

Jacob shall have our first consideration.

What a varied experience is that of God's people! Their pilgrimage is over a shifting sand; their tent is ever moving, and the scene around them ever changing. Here is Jacob at one time contending for a livelihood with Laban, playing trick against trick in order to match his father-in-law; then he prospers, and determines to abide no more in such servitude; he flies, is pursued, debates with his angry relative, and ends the contention with a truce and a sacrifice.

This unseemly family warfare must have been a very unhappy thing for Jacob, by no means tending to raise the tone of his thoughts, or sweeten his temper, or ennoble his spirit. What a change happened to him when the next day, after Laban had gone, Jacob found himself in the presence of angels. Here is a picture of a very different kind: the churl has gone and the cherubs have come, the greedy taskmaster has turned his back and the happy messengers of the blessed God have come to welcome the patriarch on his return from exile. It is hard to realize to the full the complete transformation.

Such changes occur in all lives; but, I think, most of all in the lives of believers. Few passages across the ocean of life are quite free from storm, but the redeemed of the Lord may reckon upon being tossed with tempest even if others escape. "Many are the afflictions of the righteous," Yet trials last not forever; clear shining comes after rain. Change worketh ever. We pass from storm to calm, from breeze to hurricane: we coast the shores of peace, and anon we are driven upon the sand-banks of fear.

Nor need we be surprised: for were there not great changes in the life of our Lord and Master? Is not His life as full of hills and valleys as ours possibly can be? We read of His being baptized in Jordan, and there and then visited by the Spirit, who descended upon Him like a dove—then was His hour of rest. Who can tell the restfulness of Jesus' spirit when the Father bare witness concerning him, "This is my beloved Son"? But we read directly afterward, "Then was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil." From the descent of the Holy Ghost to dire conflict with the devil is a change indeed!

But another change followed it, for when that battle had been fought out, and the triple temptation had been tried upon our Lord in vain, we read again, "Then the devil leaveth him, and behold, angels came and ministered unto him." In a short space our Lord's surroundings had changed from heavenly to diabolical, and again from satanic to angelic. From heaven to the manger, from walking the sea to hanging on the cross, from the sepulchre to the throne—what changes are these! Can we expect to build three tabernacles and tarry in the mount when our Lord was thus tossed to and fro?

I. In the case before us we see
JACOB IN THE BEST OF COMPANY.
Jacob, not cheated in Mesopotamia, but honored in Mahanaim; not trying to outwit Laban, but gazing upon celestial spirits. He was surrounded by angels, and he knew it. His eyes were open, so that he saw spirits who in their own nature are invisible to human eyes. He became a seer, and was enabled by the inward eye to behold the hosts of shining ones whom God had sent to meet him. It is a great privilege to be able to know our friends and to discern the hosts of God. We are very apt, indeed, to realize our difficulties, and to forget our helps: our allies are all around us, yet we think ourselves alone. The opposition of Satan is more easily recognized than the succor of the Lord. Oh to have eyes and hearts opened to see how strong the Lord is on our behalf!

Jacob had just been delivered from Laban, but he was oppressed by another load: the dread of Esau was upon him. He had wronged his brother; and you cannot do a wrong without being haunted by it afterward. He had taken ungenerous advantage of Esau, and now, many, many years after it his deed came home to him, and his conscience made him afraid. Notwithstanding that he had lived with Laban so long, his conscience was sufficiently vigorous to make him tremble because he had put himself into a wrong position with his brother: had it not been for this he would have marched on to his father Isaac's tent with joyful foot.

Dreading his brother's anger, he was greatly distressed and troubled: these angels came to bring him cheer by helping him to forget the difficulties round about him, or lose his dread of them by looking up and seeing what defence and succor awaited him from on high. He had but to cry to God, and Esau's four hundred men would be met by legions of angels. Was not this good cheer? Have not all believers the same? Greater is he that is for us than all they that are against us.

In treating of Jacob's experience at Mahanaim we will make a series of observations.

1. First, God has a multitude of servants, and all these are on the side of believers. "His camp is very great," and all the hosts in that camp are our allies. Some of these are visible agents, and many more are invisible, but none the less real and powerful. The great army of the Lord of hosts consists largely of unseen agents, of forces that are not discernible except in vision or by the eye of faith. Jacob saw two squadrons of these invisible forces, which are on the side of righteous men. "The angels of God met him," and he said, "This is God's host: and he called the name of that place Mahanaim (two camps);" for there a double army of angels met him.

We know that a guard of angels always surrounds every believer. Ministering spirits are abroad, protecting the princes of the blood royal.* We look abroad in the world, and calculate the number of persons and forces friendly to our Christian warfare; but these are only what our poor optics can discover: the half cannot be told us by such means. It may be that every star is a world, thronged with the servants of God, who are willing and ready to dart like flames of fire upon Jehovah's errands of love.

"Omnipotence has servants everywhere." These servants of the strong God are all filled with power: there is not one that fainteth among them all, they run like mighty men, they prevail as men of war. A host is made up of valiant men, veterans, troopers, heroes, men fit for conflict. God's forces are exceedingly strong: nothing can stand against them. Whatever form they take they are always potent, even when God's host is made up of grasshoppers, canker-worms, and palmer-worms, as in the Book of Joel, none can resist them, and nothing can escape them. Rejoice, O children of God! There are vast armies upon your side, and each one of the warriors is clothed with the strength of God.

All these agents work in order, for it is God's host, and the host is made up of beings which march or fly, according to the order of command. "Neither shall one thrust another; they shall walk every one in his path." All the forces of nature are loyal to their Lord. Nor do unfallen intelligent agents mutiny against divine decrees, but find their joy in rendering loving homage to their God.

Observe that in this great host they were all punctual to the divine command. Jacob went on his way, and the angels of God met him. The patriarch is no sooner astir than the hosts of God are on the wing. They did not linger till Jacob had crossed the frontier, nor did they keep him waiting when he came to the appointed rendezvous; but they were there to the moment. When God means to deliver you, beloved, in the hour of danger, you will find the appointed force ready for your succor. God's messengers are neither behind nor before their time; they will meet us to the inch and to the second in the time of need; therefore let us proceed without fear, like Jacob, going on our way even though an Esau with a band of desperadoes should block up the road.

Those forces of God, too, were all engaged personally to attend upon Jacob. I like to set forth this thought: "Jacob went on his way, and he did not chance to fall in with them. They did not happen to be on the march, and so crossed the patriarch's track; no, no; he went on his way, and the angels of God met him with design and purpose. They came on purpose to meet him: they had no other appointment.
THE ANGELS OF GOD MET HIM;"

Squadrons of angels marched to meet that one lone man! He was a saint, but by no means a perfect one; we cannot help seeing many flaws in him, even upon a superficial glance at his life, and yet the angels of God met him. Perhaps in the early morning, as he rose to tend his flocks, he saw the skies peopled with shining ones who quite eclipsed the dawn. The heavens were vivid with descending lustres, and the angels came upon him as a bright cloud, descending, as it were, upon the patriarch. They divided to the right and to the left and became two hosts.

How vain is that voluntary humility and worshipping of angels which Paul so strongly condemns. Worshipping them seems far out of the question; the truth lies rather the other way, for they do us suit and service: "are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister to them that are the heirs of salvation?" They serve God's servants. "Unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my son?" But this he has said, first to the Only-Begotten, and then to every believer in Christ.

I have shown you that believers are compassed about with an innumerable company of angels, great in multitude, strong in power, exact in order, punctual in their personal attention to the children of God. Are ye not well cared for, oh ye sons of the Most High!

2. Those forces, though in themselves invisible to the natural senses, are manifest to faith at certain times. There are times when the child of God is able to cry, like Jacob, "The angels of God have met me." When do such seasons occur?
OUR MAHANAIMS
occur at much the same time as that in which Jacob beheld this great sight. Jacob was entering upon a more separated life. He was leaving Laban and the school of all those tricks of bargaining and bartering which belong to the ungodly world. He had breathed too long an unhealthy atmosphere; he was degenerating; the heir of the promises was becoming a man of the world. He was entangled with earthly things. His marriages held him fast, and every year he seemed to get more and more rooted to Laban's land.

It was time he was transplanted to better soil. Now he is coming right away; he has taken t tent life. He has come to sojourn in the land o promise, as his fathers had done before him. H was now to confess that he was seeking a city and meant to be a pilgrim till he found it. By desperate stroke he cut himself clear of entanglements; but he must have felt lonely, and a one cast adrift.

Again, the reason why the angels met Jaco at that time was, doubtless, because he was su rounded with great cares. He had a large famil of little children; and great flocks and her and many servants were with him. He sa himself, "With my staff I crossed this Jorda and now I am become two bands." This was huge burden of care! It was no light thing f one man to have the management of all that ma of life and to lead it about in wandering styl But see, there are two companies of angels balance the two companies of feeble ones. If has two bands to take care of, he shall have t bands to take care of him; if he has double sponsibility he shall have double assistance.

Again, the Lord's host appeared when Jac felt A GREAT DREAD.
His brother Esau was coming to meet him arm to the teeth, and, as he feared, thirsty for blood. In times when our danger is greate we shall be specially under the divine prot tion, and we shall know that it is so. This sh be our comfort in the hour of distress. W can Esau do with his four hundred men, that the hosts of God have pitched their te and have assembled in their squadrons to wa between us and the foe? See ye not the ho of fire and chariots of fire around about chosen servant of God?

Jacob ought to have felt calm and quie heart; I suppose he was while he saw his pro tors. Alas! as soon as he lost sight of th poor Jacob was depressed in spirit again a his brother Esau, lest he should slay the mo with the children. Such is the weakness of hearts! But let us not fall into the grie sin of unbelief.

And, once again, when you and I, like Ja shall be near Jordan, when we shall just be ing into the better land, then is the time we may expect to come to Mahanaim. angels of God and the God of angels both to meet the spirits of the blessed in the so article of death. Have we not heard the mony so often, too, that it could not have an invention and a deception? Have not loved ones given us assurance of a gloriou elation which they never saw before? Is not a giving of new sight when the eye closing?

Yes, O heir of glory, the shining ones come to meet you on the river's brink, an shall be ushered into the presence of the E by those bright courtiers of heaven, wh either side shall be a company of dear co ions when the darkness is passing, and the is streaming over you. Be of good che you see not the hosts of God now, you sh them hereafter, when the Jordan shall be re and you cross over to the promised land.

3. Thus I have mentioned the time whe invisible forces become visible to faith; there is no doubt whatever that they are s a purpose. Why were they sent to Jacob time? Perhaps the purpose was first to an ancient memory which had well-nigh from him. I am afraid he had almost fo Bethel. Surely it must have brought his Bethel to mind, the vow which he ma the Lord when he saw the ladder, and the of God ascending and descending upon it they were: they had left heaven and com that they might hold communion with hi

I like the dream at Bethel better than ion of Mahanaim, for this reason, that the covenant God at the top of the ladde he only sees the angels. Yet is there in this latter sight, for whereas at Bethel saw angels ascending and descending, sees them on the earth by his side, ready ect him from all ill. How sweetly do new mer-ies refresh the memory of former favors, and ow gently does new grace remind us of old romises and debts.
A CHOICE PEARL

Brother, does not your Mahanaim point to ome half-forgotten Bethel? Judge for yourself.
hould our glorious God give you at this time a lear view of his divine power and of his cove-ant faithfulness, I pray that the sight may re-esh your memory concerning that happy day hen first you knew the Lord, when first you ave yourself up to Him, and his grace took ossession of your spirit.

If such a special vision be granted to us, let us ep it in memory. Jacob called the name of at place Mahanaim. I wish we had some way this Western world, in these modern times, of ming places, and children too, more sensibly.
e must needs either borrow some antiquated le, as if we were too short of sense to make e for ourselves, or else our names are sheer nsense, and mean nothing. Why not choose mes which should commemorate our mercies?
ght not our houses be far more full of interest around us we saw memorials of the happy ents of our lives.

Should we not note down remarkable blessings our diaries, to hand down to our children?
ould we not tell our sons and daughters,
There God helped your father, boy;" "thus thus the Lord comforted your mother,
;" "there God was very gracious to our ily?" Keep records of your race! Preserve household memoranda! I think it is a great p for a man to know what God did for his her and his grandfather, for he hopes that ir God will be his God also. Jacob took care make notes, for he again and again named es by the facts which there were seen. Jacob ned Bethel, and Galeed, and Peniel, and anaim, and other places, for he was a great e giver. Nor were his names forgotten, for dreds of years after good King David came he same spot as Jacob, and found it still wn as Mahanaim, and there the servants of
. of another kind met him also.

DAVID AT MAHANAIM.

. This brings me to my second text: for ls did not meet David, but living creatures nother nature met him, who answered the ose of David quite as well as angels would done. So just for a few minutes we will ll upon that second event which distin-hed Mahanaim.

rn to the second book of Samuel, seventh chapter, twenty-seventh verse. David to Mahanaim, and there was met by many ds. He stood upon the sacred spot, accomed by his handful of faithful friends, fugilike himself. There was not an angel about day apparently, yet secretly there were thou-s flying around the sorrowing king. Who is that comes? It is not an angel, but old illai. Who is this? It is Machir of Lo-de-
They bring with them honey, corn, butter,
, great basins by way of baths, and cooking
sils, and earthen vessels to hold their food;
ook, there are beds too, for the poor king ot a couch to lie upon. These are not s, but they are doing what angels could not done, for Gabriel himself could hardly have ht a bed or a basin.

o is yonder prominent friend? He speaks foreigner. He is an Ammonite. What is me? Shobi, the son of Nahash of Rabof the children of Ammon. I have heard of people: they were enemies, were they not l enemies to Israel? That man Nahash, ecollect his name; this is one of his sons.
God can turn enemies into friends when rvants require succor. Those that belong ace that is opposed to Israel can, if God
, turn to be their helpers.

e comes another person we have heard of , Machir of Lo-debar. That is the large r who took care of Mephibosheth. He to have been a truly loyal man, who stuck al families, even when their fortunes were
. As he had been faithful to the house of Saul, so was he to David. We have among us brethren who are always friends of God's ministers; they love them for their Master's sake, and adhere to them when the more fickle spirits rush after new comers. Happy are we to have many such adherents.

Here comes Barzillai, an old man of fourscore, and as the historian tells us, "a very great man." His enormous wealth was all at the disposal of David and his followers, and "he provided the king of sustenance while he lay at Mahanaim." This old nobleman was certainly as useful to David as the angels were to Jacob, and he and his coadjutors were truly a part of God's forces. The armies of God are varied: he has not one troop alone, but many. Those who are of the church of God below are as much a part of the host of God as the holiest angels above. Godly women who minister unto the Lord do what they can, and angels can do no more.

On this occasion Mahanaim well deserved its name, because the help that came to David from these different persons came in a most noble way, as though it came by angels.

THE HELPERS OF DAVID

showed their fidelity to him. He was driven out of his palace and likely to be dethroned; but they stood by him and proved that they meant to stand by him. Their declaration was in effect, "Thine are we, thou son of Jesse, and all that we have." Now was the time of his need, and now he should see that they were not fine-weather friends, but such as were true in the hour of trial.

See their generosity! What a mass of goods they brought to sustain David's troops in the day when they were hungering and thirsting. I need not give you the details; the verses read like a commissariat roll of demands. Every actually necessary form of provision is there. How spontaneous was the gift! David did not demand: they brought before he asked. He had not to send round his sergeants to levy upon the outlying villages and farms; but there were the good people ready-handed with all manner of stores.

Their thoughtfulness was great too, for they seem to have thought of everything that was wanted, and besides, they said, "The people are hungry and weary and thirsty in the wilderness." The heartiness of it all is most delightful. They brought their contributions cheerfully and joyfully, else they would have brought after a meagre sort, and with less variety of gifts.

I infer from this that if at any time a servant of God is marching onward in his Master's work, and he needs assistance of any sort, he need not trouble about it, but rest in the Lord, for succor and help will surely come, if not from the angels above, yet from the church below. In the church of God we see the company of Mahanaim: the saints are the angels of God on earth as the angels are his hosts above. God will send these upon his errands to comfort and sustain his servants in their times of need. Go on, O David, at the bidding of thy Lord, for his chosen servants here below will count it their delight to be thine allies, and thou shalt say of them, "this is God's host!"

And now, to close. While I have shown you God's invisible agents, and God's visible agents, I want to call to your mind that, in either case, and in both cases, the host is the host of God: that is to say, the true strength and safety of the believer is his God. We do not trust in the help of angels; we do not trust in the church of God, nor in ten thousand churches of God put together, if there were such, but in God Himself alone. Oh, it is grand to hang on the bare arm of God; for there hang all the worlds. The eternal arm is never weary, nor shall those who rest on it be confounded. "Trust ye in the Lord forever, for in the Lord Jehovah there is everlasting strength."

The presence of God with believers is more certain and constant than the presence of angels or holy men. God hath said it, "Certainly I will be with thee." He hath said again, "I will not leave thee, nor forsake thee." When you are engaged in Christ's service you have a special promise to back you up—"Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

What are you afraid of then?

BEGONE ALL TREMBLING.

Let feeble hearts be strong. What can stagger us? "God is with us." Was there ever a grander battle cry than ours—The Lord of hosts is with us? Blessed was John Wesley to live by faith, and then to die saying, "The best of all is, God is with us." Shrink? Turn your backs in the day of battle?

If, then, God is pleased to grant us help by secondary causes, as we know He does—for to many of us He sends many and many a friend to help in His good work—then we must take care to see God in these friends and helpers. When you have no helpers, see all helpers in God; when you have many helpers, then you must see God in all your helpers. Herein is wisdom. When thou hast nothing but God, see all in God: when thou hast everything, then see God in everything. Under all conditions stay thy heart only on the Lord. May the Spirit of God teach us all how to do this. This tendency to idolatry of ours, how strong it is. If a man bows down to worship a piece of wood or stone, we call him an idolater; and so he is: but if you and I trust in our fellow-men instead of God, it is idolatry. If we give to them the confidence that belongs to God, we worship them instead of God. Remember how Paul said he did not consult with flesh and blood: alas, too many of us are caught in that snare. We consult far more with flesh and blood than with the Lord.

The worst person I ever consult with at all is a person who is always too near me. The Lord deliver me from that evil man, myself. The presence of the Lord Jesus is the star of our night and the sun of our day, the cure of care, the strength of service, and the solace of sorrow. Heaven on earth is for Christ to be with us, and heaven above is to be with Christ.

I can ask nothing better for you, brethren, than that God may be with you in a very conspicuous and manifest manner all through this day, and right onward till days shall end in the eternal day. I do not ask that you may see angels: still, if it can be, so be it. But what is it, after all, to see an angel? Is not the fact of God's presence better than the sight of the best of his creatures?

Perhaps the Lord favored Jacob with the sight of angels because he was such a poor, weak creature as to his faith; peradventure if he had been perfect in his faith he would not have needed to see angels. He would have said, "I need no vision of heavenly spirits, for I see their Lord." What are angels? They are only God's pages to run upon his errands; to see their Lord is far better. The angels of God are not to be compared with the God of angels.

If my confidence is in Him that He is my father, and that Jesus Christ has become the brother of my soul, and that the Holy Spirit dwells in me according to His own word, what need I care, although no vision of the supernatural should ever gladden my eyes? Blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed. "We walk by faith, not by sight," and in that joyous faith we rest, expecting that in time and to eternity the power of God will be with us, either visibly or invisibly, by men or by angels. His arm shall be lifted up for us, and His right arm shall defend us.

My heart is glad, for I too have had my Mahanaim, and in this my hour of need for the work of the Lord to which he has called me, I see the windows of heaven opened above me, and I see troops of friends around me. For the orphanage now to be commenced I see providence moving. Two camps are around me also, and therefore do I preach to you this day of that which I have seen and known. May the angel of the covenant be ever with you. Amen.

[Portions of Scripture read before Sermon—Genesis 31:43–55; 32:1, 2; 2 Samuel 17:27–29; Psalm 23.]

WALTER WILSON; OR, THE BANK CLERK'S FALL.

A Temperance Story.

Walter Leaves Home—His Father's Advice—Enters on his Situation as Bank Clerk—Marries—Robs the Bank and Absconds—Transported—Joined by his Wife, but all Efforts to Reclaim him, found Hopeless—Sad Denouement.

THE sun was shining brightly, the birds were chirruping blithely, and the cattle, dotted here and there over the meadows, made Burnside one of the pleasantest pictures to be seen even in beautiful Worcestershire, England. It was not alone that spring had come again, covering the fields with flowers, though that was a source of joy, but Walter Wilson, the farmer's son of Burnside, was to set out that day to begin life. A situation had been obtained for him in a bank at Birmingham, and his mother was busy preparing everything for his comfort.

"You'll write often, Watty," said the mother.

"You'll be brave, and persevering," said his father; be careful who you associate with; let them be respectable, steady, and good young men—those who will be a credit to you."

Walter was anxious to depart, and promised to obey every injunction. He had been the comfort of his mother and the pride of his father, and now at eighteen felt that he should like to begin life for himself.

Mr. Wilson, in talking over matters with his son, said,

"Now, Watty, you have a respectable start in life, but remember, your place will be one of great trust. We've never had disgrace in the family of the Wilsons; and Watty, my lad, I will not wrong you by thinking for a moment that you will ever disgrace the name. No, lad; should you ever feel tempted, look up, boy, look up; remember Christ Himself suffered temptation, and can feel for those in peril; cry out, 'Save me, Lord, or I perish!' Set that be your prayer. No one can counsel you better than your parents, and no one on earth will ever love you better than your mother. Beware of company, and beware of the drink, Watty; it's that which leads to ruin."

Arrived at the bank, the manager received him kindly, and introduced him to his fellow clerks. In a few days he had mastered his duties, and found that it was pleasant to be employed. Promotion followed, and years passed on, varied by changes which time always brings.

Walter had prospered; he was advanced to be cashier now, and was receiving a liberal salary. His father and mother were both in heaven, and Burnside had new tenants. Prosperity had followed him, but he was not the Walter of former years. He had formed acquaintances, many of whom were gay, prosperous men, at whose houses the wine flowed liberally, and he had found a liking for such company, and for wine too. Sometimes when he awoke in the morning his head ached from the champagne taken over night, and then resolves were made—resolves which were forgotten when the next night came.

Walter had kept unmarried, and had saved a good amount of money, when one night, at a friend's house, he met a young lady whom he fancied he should like for a companion for life. One day, being with both the young lady's parents, he ventured to open his mind to them, and ask for a speedy marriage.

"I know, of course, that you have property," he said; 'and so have I. I have some houses at Worcester, which bring me in two hundred pounds per annum. That, with my salary, will keep a comfortable, small home, such as I and Hannah desire."

And so it was settled, and in a few months they were wedded. In a neat house, in one of the suburbs of Birmingham, they set up housekeeping, and for a time were very happy. But the habit of stopping out late at night became more frequent, and when he came home he was sometimes unable to find his way upstairs without help.

One night he was later than usual. The weary wife was sitting up alone. She fell asleep, and only awoke just as the summer sun was peeping through the tall trees in the garden, but listening, she heard a gentle tap at the front door. Here he is at last, she thought; but on opening the door she saw Mr. George, the bank manager, and another gentleman with him."

"Don't be alarmed, Mrs. Wilson," said Mr. George, "we only wanted to see Mr. Wilson for a minute;" but when he learned that he had not been home all night, the look which was exchanged between the men told the alarmed wife that something was wrong.

After a time they went away, leaving the poor wife a prey to a thousand apprehensions. Hours flew on, and when the darkness of evening came, dark news came too. Her husband had been found drunk in the streets of Chester, with notes to the amount of eleven hundred pounds in his pocket, and had been locked up for safety. Inquiries were made, and the money was found to have been purloined from the bank the day before by Walter, with the intention of getting away to America, and most likely he would have succeeded in getting away but for the drink. It had made him its slave, and now had become his Nemesis, bringing punishment to the guilty.

His trial came on, and it was proved that he had falsified the books. It came out that he had no house property at Worcester, as stated by him to his wife's father; but that each time he pretended to fetch his rents he had abstracted the amount from the bank. A guilty conscience tormented him, and the wretched man had intended to flee to America. At the Assizes, when the trial came on, he pleaded "Guilty," and asked for mercy. He was sentenced to transportation, and in a few weeks was sent to join a ship going to Australia.

Before he left England, his broken-hearted wife had an interview with him, when he begged so hard and pleaded for another chance of well-doing, that she agreed to join him in his exile. She arrived in the colony soon after he got there, took a house, and by interest exerted by her relations in England he was, after a time, set free and allowed to join her.

The poor lady did all she could to lift the fallen man, and for a time all went well; but the old habit again broke out. Drink had become his master. Reckless of everything, he went from bad to worse. His wife, hoping yet against hope, removed up the country to give him yet another chance, thinking that companions had much to do with it. For some months Walter struggled on against his evil habits, and prosperity once more brightened his home. His cottage became a picture of neatness, plenty was in his barns, his sheep had multiplied, and the letters which his wife sent to her parents told of happy times.

The time came for sending the wool to market, and Walter started with his wagon well loaded, and with a list of the many necessaries and comforts to be brought from town. Long did his wife watch the team as it wended its way across the plains, till at last it was lost to sight, and loneliness came over her, and she retired into the house to weep. Her child was her only solace, and day by day she prattled to it, telling how soon father would be back with many fine things for her baby-boy.

Nine long months passed away, when one evening, as was her usual habit, she went a little distance to a small hillock, which commanded a better view of the road, but no wagon was to be seen. In the distance was a solitary man, slouching along—most likely a shepherd on his way to some up-country station. No other object marked the long road in view. Just as the twilight, which is very brief in those latitudes, was passing into night, a man came up to the door. He entered the house as one who knew the way, and, indeed, he did know it, for it was Walter returned at last, in rags, penniless, and footsore.

The same old story. Drink had made away with his wagon, his horses, and money, and here he was, with nothing to begin life with, far away in the bush, with no neighbors near to give the smallest help.

His patient wife washed his bleeding and bli tered feet, then helped him to bed, where he la for weeks in delirious fever. When he got be ter he proposed returning to town, and there went with his wife and child.

Once more in a home, Walter determined do better, and obtained a situation in a me chant's store. For a short time things we on well; then a change came. One day was sent to receive an account, but did n return. Next day he was found, but part the money was spent—of course in the old wa After that no one would employ him, and lived by doing odd jobs for any one, labor whi was often paid for by glasses of liquor. Th seemed no hope. The once proud man had come careless as to appearance, to honor, or honesty.

An appeal to friends in England brought w that no money would be sent, but if the w would come home with her children—now a and a girl—all expenses would be paid, and c taken of them when they arrived in Engla Walter never knew of that letter. Even t the true wife could not endure the though leaving her husband, though fallen so low, he not in a drunken fit cruelly beat her, and t for fear of consequences, absconded up country. For the sake of the children, the seemed a mother's duty to return home. So left Melbourne. In time they arrived in land; the once fine, handsome girl, old careworn with trouble and anxiety—old in youth, and all her good looks withered.

Here was a man born to command suc brought down to degradation by a beggarly, ish, and worse than brutish appetite; his left to the mercy of the world; his chil reared on charity; himself so low that to k him would only bring disgrace; his name sc honored that his children could never menti without a blush.

The only safeguard by which any young can avoid the sad fate of Walter Wilson, cordial adherence to the teachings of Word, by which alone his way can be clea and also a constant application in prayer a throne of grace for the sanctifying influen the Holy Spirit, which are promised to all ask for them in the name of Jesus Christ thew 7:11).

S. S. CENTENARY MEETINGS IN LON

From the London Christian Herald.

THE great event of the week—at least i religious world—was the Sunday-school c ary. Some 300 foreign delegates visite country, and meetings were held in dif parts of the Metropolis every day throu the week. The more public events in c tion with the centenary began with a m in the London Guildhall, on Monday, June at noon. The spacious building was cro
The Lord Mayor having explained the r why he warmly supported the movemen Archbishop of Canterbury moved a reso expressing gratitude to God for a hundred of blessing on Sunday-school effort. He cated putting an undue value on the intel qualifications of teachers. An experienced had said that the best Sunday-school teac ever knew was a poor mill-girl, who cou have passed an examination in Biblical to save her life, but who loved her Lord a she could induce the children around love Him, too. If Sunday-schools wer needed, they were needed still, in these c conflicting opinion. Sir Charles Reed, t of Aberdeen, Lord Hatherley and Rev Vincent (of New York) and Dr. Punsho took part in the meeting.

On Tuesday morning the Rev. D. Ma
D.D., conducted a devotional service Memorial Hall, London, and on its concl conference was held on the "Position an pects of Sunday-schools on the Conti Europe." A number of foreign delegat part in the discussion. In the evenin eetings were held in various districts of the etropolis. A great representative meeting so took place in Exeter Hall, the Bishop of . Albans in the chair. The proceedings were thusiastic.

On Wednesday there was a festival at the ystal Palace. It was attended by over 30,000 ler scholars and teachers, and the weather be- ig delightfully fine, the number of visitors ounted to nearly 50,000. In the morning ere was a concert, given from the Handel Or- estra, by 5000 of the scholars and their friends, d later in the day a second concert, on a much ger scale, sustained by military bands, was en in the grounds, in which nearly 30,000 ces joined in hymns of praise. On the ter- e in front of the Central Transept addresses e given by various gentlemen, among whom e the Rev. W. Styleman Herring, Messrs. kham (Open Air Mission), Forbes (Holloway), the Rev. T. J. Malyon, LL.B., (of the Lon- Christian Herald). A conference of clergy teachers was held in the afternoon at the y Terminus Hotel, under the auspices of the rch of England Institute.

he conference of the Sunday-school Union resumed on Thursday morning at the Me- ial Hall, Mr. Lee, M.P., in the chair. The c of discussion was "The Church of Christ ts Relation to Sunday-school Work." A ting of clergy and teachers was held during afternoon in the Public Library, Lambeth ace, the Archbishop of Canterbury in the r. In the evening a public meeting con- ed by the Sunday-school Union was held at ter Hall, at which Mr. Wanamaker, of Phil- phia, and Dr. Vincent, of New York, and r foreign delegates spoke.

n Friday there were two meetings of the In- ational Congress at the Memorial Hall, and subjects of discussion were "The Qualifica- s Necessary for Efficient Teachers," and e Future of Sunday schools."

Friday night there was a united commun- service at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, ded over by the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon. ly 3000 persons were present. At the con- on of the service the whole congregation d up, and joining hand in hand in an unbro- chain, extending from floor to platform, from the platform to the galleries above, d in singing:

> "Ere since by faith I saw the stream
> His flowing wounds supply,
> Redeeming love has been my theme,
> And shall be till I die."

e Church of England Institute closed its erings on Saturday afternoon with an as- ly of 20,000 children in the Lambeth Palace nds, at which their five children were present, also the of Cambridge and the Duke and Duchess ck. The close of the Congress took place aturday, when the members again met in Memorial Hall, and proceeded thence at to the Thames Embankment, and assisted unveiling of a statue of Robert Raikes by arl of Shaftesbury. In the evening there grand sacred concert in the Albert Hall, Park, in which 5000 children and teachers part.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES

celebration of the centenary has been by no confined to the Metropolis. At Glouces- statue of Mr. Raikes was unveiled by the of Shaftesbury, services having been held Cathedral, and conferences in the Shire At Manchester the Town Hall was crowd- Monday with the friends of the movement, ddresses delivered. In Liverpool, on Sat- June 26th, 25,000 scholars assembled in of St. George's Hall. There have also celebrations at Bristol, Wolverhampton, gham, Dover, Cardiff, and many other .

Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman n) for July may be obtained at the office of the TIAN HERALD. Price six cents.

DR. DEEMS' RECEPTION

At the Church of the Strangers, New York.

THE return of Dr. Deems from his tour in Europe and Palestine was celebrated by an enthusiastic meeting of his church and congregation on Tuesday, June 29th.

The wall behind the pulpit had been repainted and ornamented with appropriate inscriptions, through the liberality and good taste of one of the ladies of the church. It had been known that, as he left it, that particular part of the church building had been offensive to the pastor's eyes. To give him a pleasant surprise he and his family were conducted to the front of the church and first shown this improvement, with which he expressed his great delight. The committee then escorted the pastor to the chapel, which was crowded to its utmost capacity.

An address of welcome was delivered by Joseph J. Little, Esq., chairman of the Board of Trustees, who reviewed the events connected with the church which had transpired during the pastor's absence, and concluded by presenting Dr. Deems, on behalf of the church, with a pocket-book containing six hundred dollars, as a token of their respect and affection.

Dr. Deems, in the course of his reply, said:

"I am taken at a delightful disadvantage by this display of kindness on the part of the officers and members of our beloved church. No hint has been given me that I should be expected to say or do anything to-night beyond grasping again the warm hands which dropped from mine on that cold December night when we parted.

"There has been a little mysteriousness about movements since my arrival. Our steamer reached the pier at seven o'clock last Sunday morning, and I was met by a committee of church officers, who conducted me to my home. A thorough rest of ten days, during an exceptionally tranquil voyage, had set me up, and I told them that I should be at church. They undertook to tell me that I was too tired, and to advise me to remain with my family.

"Of course I expected to remain with my family," but couldn't I just as well remain with them in church? The friendly officers did not take into account the rare pleasure it is for a pastor to sit in a pew—in a pew beside his wife; nor think that naturally, as a Christian, I longed to hear the Gospel, and, as a pastor, longed to see my own church sanctuary. But you know what an obedient pastor I have always been, and so I succumbed! This evening I learned what it meant. When you met me at the church door and under the lights there was displayed to me the newly and beautifully ornamented apse, with the appropriate inscription and decorations with which it was adorned, I saw that you were kindly keeping this as a surprise to increase the delights which you are heaping upon my reception.

"As to the long tour which I have accomplished, I shall have other occasions on which to address you. But one thing you will be glad to know, and that is, that I have spent six months of total freedom from the cares which for over thirteen years have pressed upon my spirit. It is my good fortune to have the happy faculty of being altogether in the place where I am; so, when I went away, I left entirely.

"For my church, for my family, for all with whom I was connected, I made the most complete arrangements within my power. I knew the officers of the church. I knew you. I knew my son, whom you had called to be your temporary pastor. I knew the Great Head of the Church. I knew that I could do nothing more for you before my return, and that if I suffered myself to be fretted by solicitude the whole intent of my separation from all I most loved would be defeated.

"My friends, if I had gone pleasure-seeking, if I had become tired of my work and disgusted with the Christian ministry, if I had fled like Jonah from some divinely imposed but disagreeable mission, I could not have had this freedom from care. But knowing in the depths of my heart that my tour was undertaken in the interests of this church, and for the increase of the usefulness of my future ministry, I had no misgivings and no anxiety.

"If I have had no anxiety about the church, dear friends, I have not suspended my affection for you. My eyes have been running over this crowded chapel to-night, and their report is that there are no faces present except those of strangers, which I have not seen with the eyes of my heart while riding Egyptian donkeys, Arabian camels, or Syrian horses—faces that have risen up before me as I have gazed on the skies which hang over the lands made holy by the residence of prophets and apostles and of the Son of God. Now my happiness is to see those faces once more 'in the flesh.'

"I have no promises to make. I have formed no new resolutions. But I trust that all that I have seen in distant lands, and all my experiences may come out in my future ministry so as to be profitable to us all. My heart is filled with delight at your unity and co-operation, your faith and zeal, your hope and charity. Some have left us and gone up to other mansions of the Father's House. You will follow them. When the hour of your departure comes, may you find on that other shore, as I found on landing, friends to cluster lovingly about you, and amid the illumination of the Upper Temple see glowing with the light of love for you the words which you have emblazoned above my head, 'Welcome Home.'"

During the absence of Dr. Deems his duties were fulfilled by his son, the Rev. Edward M. Deems, now pastor of the Westminster Church in New York. The Church of the Strangers desired to mark their appreciation of Mr. Deems' services also, and the Hon. George W. Clarke in their name presented him with one hundred dollars. He remarked in reference to the testimonial that it was intended as a mark of their regard, not as representing the measure of their esteem and affection.

Rev. Edward M. Deems, after thanking the church for the expression of good-will and regard, said:

"You have already had your attention directed to the fact that the Church of the Strangers has most successfully stood the strain which the pastor's six months' absence has put upon it. Who is to have the honor of this success? The Lord God our Heavenly Father. Had He withdrawn His presence from us, we should have soon been wrecked. But He did not do so. The Lord of Hosts has been with us, and as to-night we contemplate with satisfaction the happy condition of this church upon the return of its pastor, let us all unite in saying from our hearts, 'Let glory be given not unto us, O Lord! not unto us, but unto thy name.'

"And yet I feel that I ought to add that while, primarily, the successful conduct of the affairs of the Church of the Strangers during the pastor's absence has been due to the presence and blessing of God, the instrumentality used has been the people of the CHURCH. In the days of Nehemiah it was because, 'the people had a mind to work' that the wall of the city of the great king was built up successfully. So the fact that the pastor returns to find the church in so good a condition is due to the fact that the people have each and all wrought faithfully and as in the sight of the Great Head of the Church."

At the conclusion of the speeches the pastor was conducted to the church parlor, which had been tastefully decorated by the ladies, where the members of the church had an opportunity of greeting him each personally. After refreshments had been served, those present spent the remainder of the evening in social enjoyment.

The Man who first Discovered Gold in California, Gen. John A. Sutter, died in Washington on June 19th. Though revealing untold treasure to others, he died in poverty, having even been deprived of his claim to his own land on which he found the gold.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 462.)

Ernest's Proposition.

"Why should he not be his brother's bailiff?" Ernest asked himself. Every day that he was at Clifford Grange he crossed the hills to Rockwood to strengthen and comfort him under the great calamity that had overwhelmed him. There was a pathetic helplessness about Charles that touched the deepest chord of brotherhood in Ernest's nature. He thought of his mother, too, querulous and unhappy, for whom he still cherished half-pitiful, half-chivalrous affection. How was he to leave these two utterly dependent, utterly miserable beings to the care of mere hirelings?

Here, more than anywhere else, he could follow closely the footsteps of his Lord. There was no reputation to be gained in this world, neither dignity nor glory. Ambition must fade away out of his earthly path. If he was to save others he could not save himself.

He had fully, though gradually, made up his mind what he would do, before Ruth found courage enough to venture upon going to see Charles in her old home. Her brother, Captain Symons, the poor heir of the impoverished estate, was with her, as well as Ernest, and the three stood looking down upon Rockwood from the steep brow of the hill immediately above it. It lay directly below them in the bright sunshine. The decaying roof was picturesque with its tufts of yellow house-lee and stone-crop growing luxuriantly upon it, and the tangled garden looked green and wild.

But none the less the light shone pitilessly on ruin and decay. Ruth gazed down upon it with bitter sorrow. It had never seemed so dreary and desolate before, and the sight of it after a few months of absence struck her with sudden force. Yet it was her home, and it was dear to her. Her brother, who stood beside her, was looking down on his inheritance with a gloomy and embittered expression.

"It was a pretty place once, and now it is hardly worth an old song," said Captain Symons; "yet, after all, it's mine. The poor old place has belonged to us for centuries almost, and I should not like to lose it. What am I to do with it, Clifford?"

"It will be years before you can come to it," answered Ernest; "you must nurse your estate for your son. Put it into tolerable repair, and let it on a long lease, that will make it worth while for your tenants to spend money on it."

"Tenants! where shall I find a tenant?" asked Captain Symons; "a tumble-down, dilapidated old place! And who would bury themselves alive here?"

"I can offer you a tenant as soon as Charles can be taken home," he answered; "would you take Ruth and me?"

"Ruth and you!" he repeated.

"Yes," he said; "we have been talking over matters, and Ruth and I cannot see anything better to be done than for me to become bailiff for both your estate and Charles's. You are looking out for an agent, but you really need a farming bailiff; and I am better qualified than any one else. The lands on both of them are as well known to me as Ruth's face is, and I know how to make the best of them. If you accept my offer we will settle down here as soon as Charles returns to Clifford. You can make yourself happy here, Ruth?"

"Anywhere with you," she answered, looking up to him through her tears.

"But!" exclaimed Captain Symons; "you a bailiff, Clifford!"

"I must be that or a secretary," said Ernest smiling; "I can be my own master no longer, with my living to get. I can be anything—anywhere—God with me."

"It would be first-rate for me," resumed Captain Symons, after a short silence, "and for Charlie Clifford. We shall be too selfish to say no to it. Ruth would be at home again, too, and of course no one would look upon you as a mere bailiff, you know. The estate is certain to come to you sooner or later; and it will be all the better for you in the long run. Charlie Clifford would be a rascally scoundrel if he left it away from you. You always had a long head, Ernest."

A long head! Ernest winced a little at these words. But he had not renounced his ambition with any idea that the world would understand and applaud the sacrifice. What did it matter if the whole world thought he was scheming? He would give all he had to set Charles on his feet again, and see him once more at the head of his own house. Ruth knew why he was acting as he had proposed; and surely his brother would know!

They went down into the valley and entered the dreary house. Not a sound was to be heard in any of its rooms, for profound stillness was necessary for Charles Clifford. The farm-yard, that lay a field or two away, had been cleared, that no sharp or sudden noise should break the silence. The door was opened and closed again by Ernest with great caution, and their footsteps fell softly on the matted floor of the passages. They waited for a few minutes in Ruth's sitting-room for Mrs. Clifford to come to see them. She entered silently and dejectedly, and greeted them with tears.

"It is like a tomb," she said; "always just like this. We might as well be buried alive. Poor dear Mrs. Britton came to see me yesterday, and Charlie declared he could hear her voice through three walls and up a flight of stairs. He sent Julia to tell me I must not ask her to stay to dinner; after that long walk too! She was as much disappointed as I was; but what could we do? She says she can spare Jenny to live with me as long as I'm here, and Mr. Britton doesn't object to her coming now; but Charles says no. 'It's not fit for a young girl,' he says; 'it's too gloomy.' Then how can it be fit for me?"

No one appeared able to answer this question, and a short silence followed, broken by Mrs. Clifford's sighs.

"Can he see no one?" asked Ruth.

"Oh, yes! my brother-in-law Wright is with him now," she said peevishly; "and he's come to see him a good deal lately, on business, he says; though he never gives me a hint of what it may be. His will, I fancy; and he might ask my opinion, I'm sure. If his poor father had consulted me we should not have had all these troubles. And old Dunnit has been with him. Old Dunnit's voice is ten times louder than Mrs. Britton's. He doesn't complain of Julia's voice either. It's only one of his whims, and I'm to be made the slave of them."

"Master Charles' ready to see Miss Ruth and Master Ernest," said Julia, opening the door and entering the room a step or two, in her plain black dress and white cap. She courtesied deeply to Captain Symons, and stood at the door to close it after Ernest and Ruth, as a servant would do. There was nothing in her manner to denote that she was the mistress of the house or the widow of its late owner. Julia was carrying out her resolve to be nothing more than Charles Clifford's servant.

Time seemed to be standing still for Charles Clifford; he measured it no longer by days, and weeks, and months. It might have been years already since he awoke to consciousness to find himself a prisoner within the four walls of the room, which he was powerless to quit. He could not even reach the window to catch a moment's glimpse of the sky and cliffs. To all about him the calamity that had befallen him was yet new and recent; to himself it felt to be centuries old.

It had happened so long ago that all his former life had withdrawn into a past, spent and ended ages ago. Childhood and boyhood and manhood were all blended into one distant phase of beauty and gladness; for he was a man no longer, he said to himself in bitterness. There was no perspective in his past life. The great gulf which lay between it and the present set it so far apart from him that all its long line of years were concentrated into a single point. H had lived; he was living no longer.

"How long is it, Julia, how long is it?" h asked frequently; and when she told him it wa yet only so many days or weeks since he had se his sails to the wind and felt the salt spray o his face, he listened in mute anguish. Was i not rather centuries? thousands of years? Ther were no terms broad enough to express the en lessness of the period which separated him fro the common months and years of common lif Henceforth there would be no change of seaso for him; nothing but the slow swinging of th hours from light to darkness, and from darkne to light; and even that with no sight of the su by day, or of the moon and stars by night.

"Ernest," he said, one morning, "would I' been drowned with old Symons. It would hav been better for us both; and you'd have bee Clifford of Clifford again."

Clifford of Clifford! He could not be th himself; he was no man, but a mere log a cumberer of the ground. What was Clifford him? He would never more ride over his field or hoist his sails, or welcome his old comrad to his open house. There was nothing left him but to lie as he was, with no gleam of plea ure, except those that came to him through t ministry of Ernest and Ruth and Rose.

Ruth had not yet come to see him, but Ro had insisted upon staying near him, ready come to his side and talk as cheerily as she coul or sing to him quiet, homely country songs her sweet, low voice. Rose was something lov and delicate to look at, and her gentle mo ments soothed him. Ernest's daily visits, wh he was at Clifford Grange, were a break in t gloomy monotony of the days. How was he tide over the days, if these almost endless spe of light could be called days, when they we back to London?

If Ernest were settled at Clifford again, would make sure of the friendship and consta neighborhood of his brother. His mother a he could stay at Rockwood; for what did matter to him in what dull chamber his log o body might lie? Julia would live with the for she had promised never to leave him. W Ernest and Ruth little more than two mi away, he could reckon on their frequent co panionship; and Rose might be with him alm constantly. How could he make sure of havi them all about him?

Ernest could not live at Clifford without sufficient income to keep it up; and if he h the income of the estate it would be better him to have the estate itself, with all the po and influence it carried with it. Charles ca for money only so far as it procured him p sonal enjoyment. There had always been a v of reckless liberality in his temperament, wh had hitherto taken the form of lavish expe ture, by no means incompatible with selfish regard to the claims of others.

As long as he could fritter away his me upon pleasure he had found it impossible spare any for other purposes. But his pleasu were ended forever; and as he could no lon use his money himself he was willing to gi over into the hands of others.

His Uncle Wright, whom he consulted, sured him that he could not execute a will, m ing Ernest his heir, which he would not h power himself to revoke, as long as he wa sound mind in the eye of the law. Cha knew that he dare not trust himself and his pricious humor; and he was equally sure t Ernest could not trust him. In any hou pique and resentment he might disinherit brother, and give over his old family estate a stranger.

Ernest had already made the name of Clif of Clifford better known and more honore the county than it had ever been; and it wa Charles's power to reinstate him. If Ernest w made absolute master again, it would set free to act as he chose, which would be im sible if he were merely his brother's heir.

(To be continued.)

THE CALL OF ABRAHAM.

S. Lesson for Aug., 1. Gen. 11 : 31, 32 and 12.
olden Text, Gen. 12 : 3. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

THE father of the faithful was once an idola-
r. God says (Isa. 51 : 1, 2), " Hearken unto e, ye that follow after righteousness, ye that ek the Lord : look unto the rock whence ye e hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye e digged. Look unto Abraham your father, d unto Sarah that bare you : for I called him ne : and blessed him, and increased him."
us, however God's call may have come to raham, he stood at first alone in his family d in his land, a believer in the true and living
d. Joshua declares (Josh. 24 : 2, 3), " Thus h the Lord God of Israel, Your fathers dwelt the other side of the flood in old time, even ah the father of Abraham, and the father of or : and they served other gods. And I k your father Abraham from the other side he flood and led him throughout all the land Canaan."

low much of suffering, humiliation, misconction, etc., Abraham went through is known e to God, but it can be in some measure un-tood by those who have been brought out worldliness, the first in their families, and have known Paul's experience at Rome :
my first answer no man stood with me, but hen forsook me" (2 Tim. 4 : 16). One thing re sure of, that under all his trials the real-f the true God and his acquaintance with deepened, and also God made him a power is family ; for when the time of decision , and God called Abraham to come out from ountry, and kindred, etc., there were others s family ready to accompany him ; and how this have been had they not been also ght in contact with the God on whose word were leaning all which was dear and fami-o them? Conversions which stood such t must have been intensely real.

e conversion of a father is no light matter.
rs do not readily learn from their sons ;
e power of the Spirit of God can transpose onships, and make the son to be the spirit-ther of his own sire. To be faithful in our families we must renounce self indeed.
: our weak side is known ; there motives others would not suspect are well under-
, and thus in our own power we can effect ng ; but if, like David with Goliath, we against him who holds our dear ones cap-the name of our God and in His strength, he gates of hell cannot prevail against us.
as we can gather, Abraham had already lest to his father's conversion, his wife's s nephew's ; whether Eleazar of Damascus hen his steward we know not, but it is le that the influence of his faith was upon o went out of his country with him, and od had given him many souls already.
l bless thee," God had said, "and thou e a blessing." Our witness at home is more important than our witness abroad.

God's call to Abraham was, " Get thee hy country, and from thy kindred and from her's house, unto a land that I will shew
" Terah took Abram his son, and Lot of Haran, his son's son, and Sarai his er-in-law, and they went forth with them r of the Chaldees to go into the land of
: and they came unto Haran and dwelt But Abraham was not yet come out s father's house, not yet come into the Caanan. It may be his father feared to far, and said, If you will stay here in between the old land and the new, I will h you ; and it may be Abraham feared to s father to God, and so made a compro-Oh how many of God's children are thus d by relations from coming out fully Lord's side.

all is (2 Cor. 6 : 17), " Come out from hem" (unbelievers, ver. 14), " and be ye , saith the Lord, and touch not the un-ing." How, then, are we to be separate?
lly, by leaving our families, our churches, internally, by a presence of God which makes the whole current of thoughts and motives different from those of others? " Wherein shall it be known here," says Moses (Ex. 33 : 16), " that I and Thy people have found grace in Thy sight? Is it not in that Thou goest with us? So shall we be separated, I and Thy people, from all the people that are upon the face of the earth." Elijah was separate from all around him, because he could always say, " The Lord God of Israel before whom I stand " (1 Kings 17 : 1) ; Joseph was unlike any other servant in Potiphar's house, or any other prisoner in Potiphar's prison, because the Lord was with Joseph (Gen. 39 : 2, 3, 21–23).

It often happens that just this real separation, this looking at all things in the light of God instead of man, of eternity instead of time, is that which brings most reproach from our own relations. The leaving an uncomfortable position in our family for one more to our liking, or leaving one church to find and join one more to our mind, they can understand, because they also seek their own ; but to remain where we are, and yet be different, to be bodily present while our treasures and our hearts are above, and where self, the element in which they live, is not allowed so much as to bias us, this they cannot understand. And the converted among them, who receive the first principles of the doctrine of Christ, or (Heb. 6 : 1, margin, the word of the beginning of Christ) are like Terah with Abraham, our greatest difficulty. Because they go so far with us, they think us bound to stay so far short of the goal with them. They are slow in learning ; and how slow we are in convincing them that to God, and not to us, they stand or fall!

But Terah died, and only then it was that Abraham fully obeyed the call of God. " So Abram departed, as the Lord had spoken unto him ; and Lot went with him ; and Abram was seventy and five years old when he departed out of Haran. And Abram took Sarai his wife, and Lot his brother's son, and all their substance that they had gathered, and the souls that they had gotten in Haran : and they went forth to go into the land of Canaan, and into the land of Canaan they came." Now Abraham was free, nothing was holding him back. As Enoch and Noah had walked with God before him, so he would walk with God. It may be he had heard of Noah, for he was born in the same decade of years in which Noah died, and although brought up in idolatry it was not likely that he was entirely ignorant of the Deluge, and of the holy man who was saved in the midst of it by the ark, and there may have been holy aspirations in his heart to resemble this servant of the living God.

God's promise to Abraham was, " I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great ; and thou shalt be a blessing : and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee ; and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." " They which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham," and " they which be of faith are blest with faithful Abraham" (Gal. 3 : 6–9). " He that believeth on Me, as the Scripture hath said, out of him shall flow rivers of living water" (John 7 : 38). " Everything shall live whither the river cometh" (Ezek. 47 : 9).

" And Abram passed through the land unto the place of Sichan, unto the plain of Moreh. And the Canaanite was then in the land. And the Lord appeared unto Abram and said, Unto thy seed will I give this land ; and there builded he an altar unto the Lord, who appeared unto him." God seems to have spoken to him before, but not to have appeared unto him. God manifests Himself unto us first in His Word, then in other ways, as we are able to bear it. While Abraham had only half obeyed His call, he could neither reveal His will farther, nor yet Himself. Obedience must follow all revelation of God to our souls, and all knowledge acquired through the head while the will is not entirely renounced, only hinders instead of helps us, for it adds to our consciousness of shortcoming.

The path of faith and obedience is the path of rest and power ; when the way to God lies fully open, then it is in everything Emanuel, God with us. We are not alone. " For since the beginning of the world, men have not heard nor perceived by the ear, neither hath the eye seen, O God, beside Thee, what He hath prepared for him that waiteth for Him. Thou meetest him that rejoiceth and worketh righteousness ; those that remember Thee in Thy ways." Above all sense and above all conception are God's revelations to those who wait for Him ; and those who in waiting rejoice and work righteousness are sure to meet with God. He had called Abram out from his kindred, and from his father's house, and while he obeyed him only in part, we can well believe that he could not much rejoice ; he was not working righteousness to the extent of God's revealed will, and thus we do not hear of God meeting with him until he was come into the land of Canaan.

" There Abram built an altar unto the Lord." " He built none in Haran, because he was not walking in the full light of God's countenance. Whenever communion with God flags, there is a reason for it ; let us not attribute it to chance, or look upon it as trial in which we may claim sympathy. The Sun of Righteousness is ever shining, and every cloud which hides His light and heat rises from the earth, and does not come from heaven, and if we remain still and empty before our God, He will surely show us where we are at fault. All real communion with God must be founded on the altar. Because we have " boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, . . . let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water" (Heb. 10 : 19 22). Abram's obedience was no ground of confidence before God, but it removed the hindrance to communion which the altar, typical of Christ, established.

" And he removed from thence"— doubtless guided by God—" unto a mountain on the east of Bethel, and pitched his tent, having Bethel on the west and Hai on the east ; and there he builded an altar unto the Lord, and called upon the name of the Lord." How clearly we see here that each step of faith and obedience leads to further communion with God. We are never promised a path free from suffering ; but guidance is distinctly promised us, so that we have a right at all times to walk in the unbroken consciousness that we please God. We may have to throw down all altars which have been raised to the glory of self, to leave, and break with our old life in all its motives and principles ; but while believing and obeying, the altar of communion is everywhere.

After this Abram made a sad mistake. He " journeyed, going on still toward the south, and there was a famine in the land : and Abram went down into Egypt to sojourn there ; for the famine was grievous in the land." Abram's life of faith was, as yet, little developed, and in this case he did not wait for guidance, but acted in accordance with human wisdom and foresight. One instant that the eye is off God, we leave the door open to temptation. First, Abram thought God was going to let him die of hunger, and that he must help himself by going down to Egypt ; then he thought God would let the Egyptians kill him for his wife's sake, so he, the man of faith, taught his wife to tell a partial lie, to say she was his sister (see Gen. 20 : 12, 13).

We read of no altar built in Egypt. In earthly things Abram prospered. Sarah " was taken into Pharaoh's house. And he entreated Abram well for her sake : and he had sheep and oxen, and he-asses and man-servants, and maid-servants, and she-asses and camels." But God most mercifully shields His own, while at the same time He exposes their sin. " For there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed, and hid that shall not be known" (Matt. 10 : 26). The Lord plagued Pharaoh and his house with great plagues because of Sarai, Abram's wife. But Abram went out of Egypt a rich man, but a child of God distrusted, and therefore dishonored, by the unbelievers.

FOREIGN TOPICS.

Mr. Gladstone's Bill for Securing Compensation to evicted Irish tenants continues to be the ground of strenuous opposition. Lord Frederick Cavendish, a brother of the Marquis of Hartington, has denounced it in strong terms, prompted, it is believed, by his father, the Duke of Devonshire. Other influential supporters of the Government have held a meeting to organize opposition to the measure, which they regard as one of confiscation. The Government has vacillated in the conduct of the bill, and has proposed several important amendments during its passage. In some instances the amendments have been in the interest of the landlords, and in others to the advantage of the tenants. It is expected that the measure will pass the House of Commons but will be rejected by the House of Lords. The agitation in Ireland on the subject is described as intense. The Irish members of Parliament are divided with regard to it; Mr. Parnell and a few friends vigorously oppose it, while other members consider it wise to accept a boon offered them, even though it is not so large as they desire.

The Irish question blocks the course of useful legislation, and is the cause of much embarrassment to the Government. The project is said to be gaining favor among men hitherto opposed to it, of remitting all purely Irish business to a local parliament to assemble at Dublin. Students of prophecy have long believed that some arrangement of the kind will be made, in fulfilment of prophecy, Ireland never having been included in the Roman Empire.

A Terrible Colliery Explosion, in which the deaths, it is feared, will number 119, occurred on July 15th, at Risca, near Newport, in Wales. It was noticed on the previous day that the air in the pit was dull and overcharged. It became increasingly close, and finally exploded, killing all the miners at work. The owners' books show that there would be 119 men and boys in the pit at the time, all of whom are believed to have perished. A cable report says:

"The scenes about the mine are heart-rending. There is a large throng of people present, composed in great part of the relatives and friends of the imprisoned miners. Among them are many women who are bewailing the fate of husbands and sons, while little children are asking anxiously concerning their fathers, their inquiries drawing tears to the eyes of bluff miners whose faces look as hard as their hands, but whose hearts are melted by the pitiful scene before them. Everything possible is being done to expedite the rescue of the men, but scarcely any one hopes to find one of the miners alive. The disaster is attributed by mining experts to unskilful management. A similar accident, causing the death of 155 men, occurred in the same colliery in December, 1860.

The Reply of Turkey to the Demands of the Powers has not yet been decided upon. If it should be unsatisfactory, grave fears of war between Turkey and Greece are entertained, and it is probable that national jealousy will drag other Powers into the conflict. The fall of Turkey in any case appears to be imminent. Students of prophecy will see in the following remarks extracted from an editorial in the New York Herald a remarkable confirmation of views arrived at long ago by those who have devoted much attention to the predictions of the inspired writers.

"Turkey cannot in the nature of things survive a great while as an imperial Power. She is an anomaly in Europe at best. She stands in virtue of an extinct warrant. Her vitality is gone out. She is a conquering Power which cannot conquer. She has lost her grandest conquests in Europe, and there is a tug of tremendous energy to get the rest of what she holds in that part of the world. All the small states on the southern shore of the Mediterranean and Egypt have fallen away by their own weight. Asia Minor would accept, so far as it seems to have any volition, any other political system and any sovereign that Europe might designate as good for it: Syria would like to be independent, and Arabia only awaits a good moment for revolt. In fact, the Ottoman monarchy seems just now to be a scarcely more stable fabric than a house of cards. It may be shaken down and tumbled to pieces by blows that would not have been felt in the days of its greatness, and it may prove that a little war with Greece will be the beginning of the end."

The Date of the National Festival of the French Republic has been changed to July 14th, the anniversary of the taking of the Bastile. On that day, ninety-one years ago, the smouldering embers of discontent among the French people burst into a flame, and the horrors of the terrible Revolution which deluged France with blood commenced. The cruelties and oppression of the aristocracy, borne patiently during many years, had goaded the people at last to desperation, and a fearful revenge was taken. The king had driven out of the country the godly part of the population by his legislative enactments, and he had to learn how merciless is a mob having no fear of God before its eyes.

The festival was celebrated this year with great pomp and patriotic ardor. One of the causes of rejoicing by the people was the return of the banished Communists, all of whom, except nine, have been liberated by the Government. They were exiled for their barbarities at the last revolution, when the Archbishop of Paris and other eminent citizens were massacred, the Tuileries set on fire, and other damage done to the city.

A Curious Bequest has been made to the City of Vienna by a wealthy banker, Herr Heinrich Lustig. The legacy consists of 30,000 francs, to be deposited in the state savings bank at the usual interest, the interest to be collected every quarter and added to the capital, and this process to be repeated until the interest shall amount to an annual income of 5,000,000 florins, a result attainable in something less than 200 years from the date of the first deposit. When this operation shall have been completed, the income is to be applied to the erection and endowment of orphanages, hospitals, and asylums in Vienna, and subsequently in Prague, Pesth, Brunn, Linz, and other large towns enumerated in Herr Lustig's testament. Should the City of Vienna not think fit to accept his bequest upon these terms, the testator directs that it be tendered by his executors to the City of Paris. The Viennese authorities decided to accept the trust, and the money will be invested at interest in accordance with the directions of the eccentric banker.

Mrs. M. Baxter's Meetings in the Scotch Church in the university city of Bonn, Germany, have been crowded and much blessed. The order of the services was simple. Dr. W. Graham, the pastor of the Scotch Church, writes: "Whence came the power which attended Mrs. Baxter's ministry? It was the love of souls—the promised presence of Jesus—the unction from the Holy One. She has the art of speaking to men, the greater art also of speaking to God in prayers. As to the impression left there is but one opinion, viz., that the Lord has been in the midst of us awakening sinners to repentance, and building up saints on their most holy faith."

The Persian Famine is thus Reported Upon by an American missionary in Van, in Persia:

"The number of deaths from famine has already been considerable. In one little village, where there are seventy-eight survivors, the names of seven were given me who had died within a few weeks. In another village where I stopped, and where there are 125 survivors, twelve had died, nine of them during the two weeks I spent in that region. Of these, two perished on the mountain when bringing grain for the government. From a larger village, with about 300 survivors, the headman assured me over forty had died. A policeman, who had just come from Gawar, told me he saw six bodies on the way. Two of my canvassers in going from one village to another saw two who had perished by the way, and two others so weak that men from the village were carrying them to th houses. In Bashkala, a place of 300 to 4 houses, five died in one night, four of them starvation. Many have lived for weeks on t flesh of animals which have died of themselv Roots dug out of the ground, straw, grass-se a kind of chalky stone, and the bulbs of fl seed out of which the oil has been pressed, all used for bread. Those who live on such proper diet are subject to dysentery, and afte time dropsy sets in. 'When once their fa swell,' said one of the most intelligent mer the plain, 'we know there is no hope of th recovery.'"

Mr. G. Muller the Founder of the Orph ages at Bristol, England, has arrived at h safely, after his visit of nine months to United States and Canada. He had an enth astic reception at Bristol, 2000 children b drawn up on each side of the road to greet l Mr. Muller is now seventy-six years of age, in vigorous health.

The Fall of a Railway Bridge in G Britain, occurred on the night of June 17, wl if it had happened a few hours earlier, would eclipsed the Tay Bridge calamity of the December last. A luggage train was pa over the bridge, which crosses the river Wye Brecon, when the structure gave way anc train was precipitated into the water below. engine-driver was killed on the spot, and the man received such serious injuries that it pected he will die. The bridge consist three arches, and was about forty feet The passenger train, which was to have p over the bridge a few hours earlier, but providentially escaped destruction, consist two engines and twenty-four well-filled car taining five or six hundred persons, no whom would probably have escaped if the been passing over when the bridge fell.

Mr. Charles Reade, the English No whose conversion was alluded to in The C tian Herald of May 20th, in a letter to a corrects some errors in the narrative. "very desirous not to disturb the gene pression that he is weaned from the wor humbly desires to serve God," he is anx correct the impression that during the life his deceased friend, he held rationalistic and perverted her mind with them. H "My remorse is for this: I had lived for the world, and so disquieted her w cares instead of leading her on the path o and robbed God of a saint though not c liever."

Another Narrow Escape of the Princ ise and the Marquis of Lorne, in addition former one from being overturned in a has just occurred in Canada. Their spec was approaching a station at the rate miles an hour, when the pointsman fou self unable to close the points so as to the coming train running off the main a siding against a number of shunted c Four assistants strove with crowbars to switch, but failed. A man then ran up waving his arms, and was providentially time: so by applying the brakes the t stopped a few yards from the defective Persian Famine Fund.—J. A., Ky., $1.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works ar at the office of the Christian Herald, at low as to bring them within the reach of e Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with p of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Pl Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth, The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volu sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, cal exposition of the book of Psalms, five v as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon Birth- This popular gift-book contains a suitabl selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for in the year, with a blank space opposite graphs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. appear at their respective birthdays. Th elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cent tances shoud accompany orders.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. ALMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also occasionally a Sermon by the Rev. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL.D., the celebrated Methodist Minister, Rev. W. M HAY AITKEN, or some other Eminent Preacher; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Single Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, JULY 29, 1880. 14th Year. No. 31—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

HE BRITISH HOUSE OF COMMONS AND THE ATHEIST MEMBER.—Picture of the Officer Arresting Mr. Bradlaugh.

HE PUBLICAN'S PRAYER. An Evening Sermon by Dr. Talmage—A Newgate Virago Reformed.

OCHESTER TOWER. A New Serial Story by Miss M. A. Paull (Continued).

THE BRITISH POLITICAL REVOLUTION: Its Prophetic Aspect, by Rev. M. Baxter (Concluded).

CURRENT EVENTS: General Arthur's Letter—Mormonism Declining—A Thief's Hoard Discovered—A Deaf-Mute's Patience—The Wreck of a Family—What a Lady's Handkerchief Did, etc.

PROPHETIC EXPOSITION. Compiled by Rev. M. Baxter (Continued).

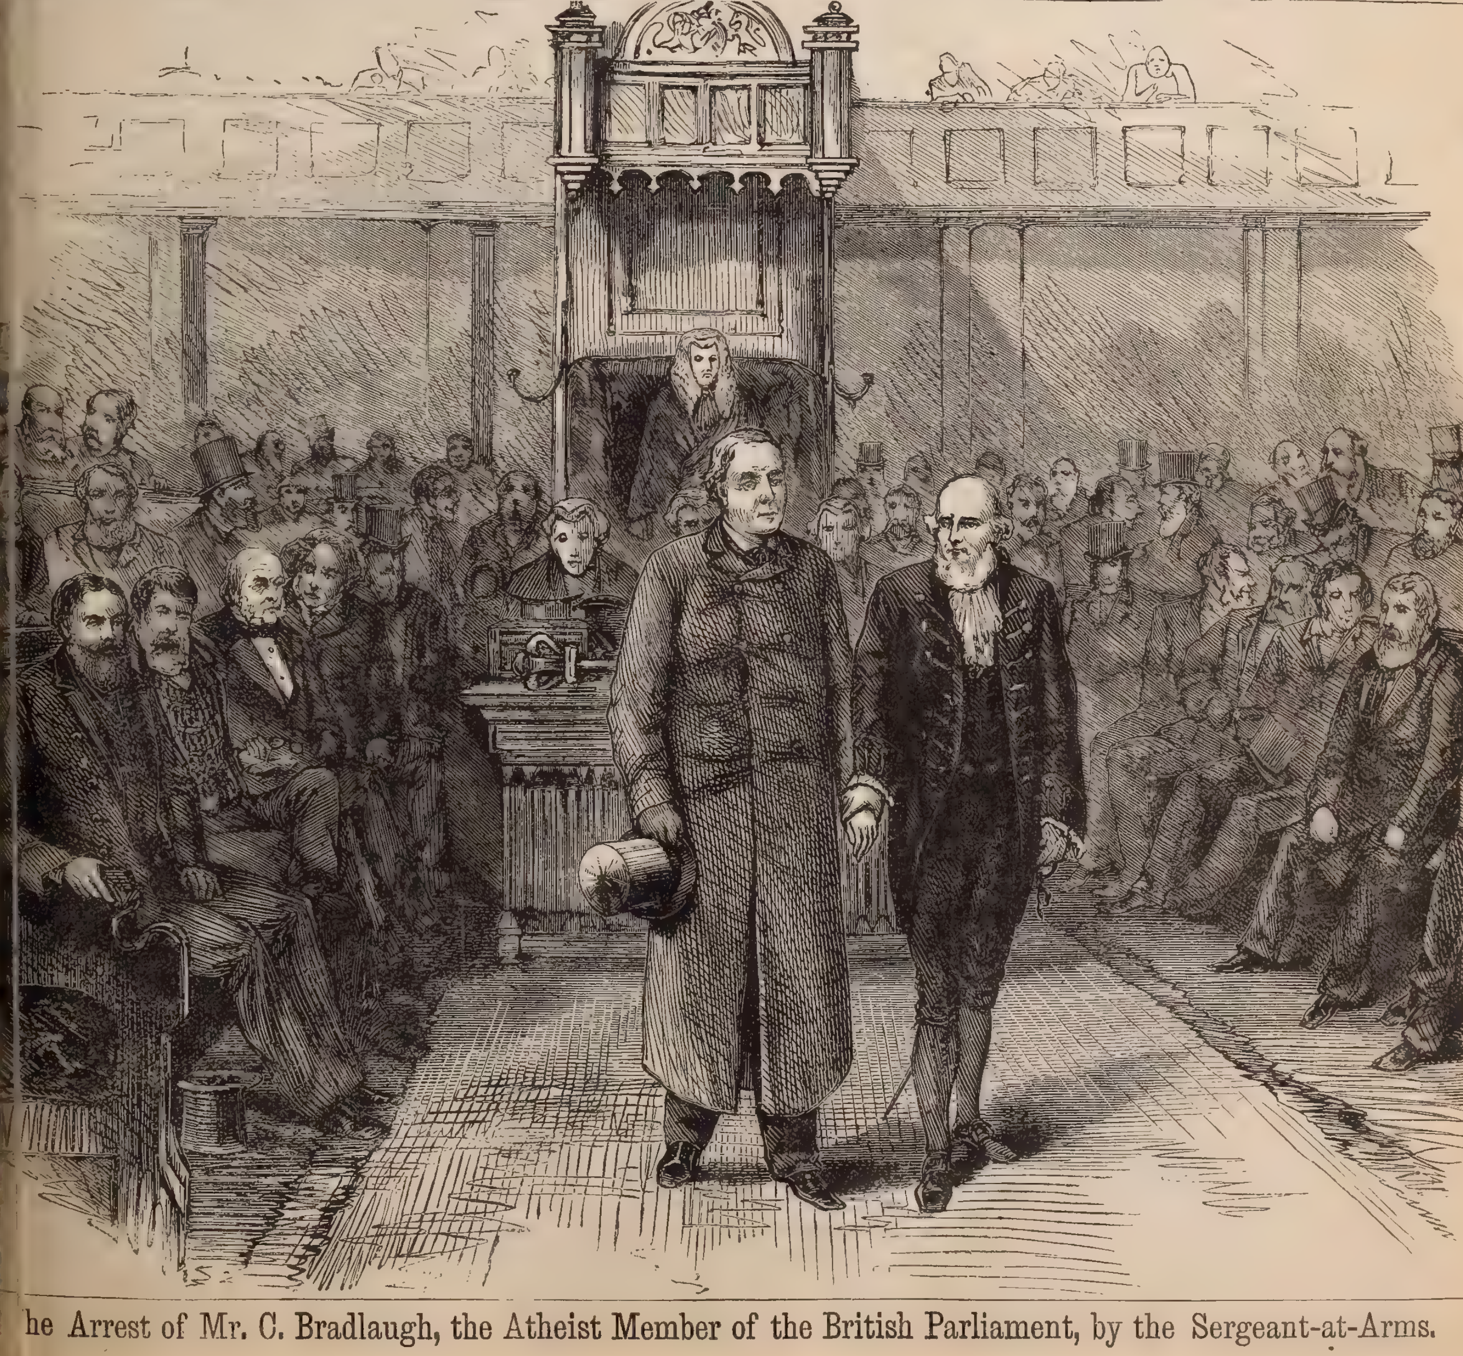
GOD GLORIFIED BY CHILDREN'S MOUTHS. A Sermon at the S. S. Centenary, by C. H. Spurgeon.

A Sailor's Despairing Death in Jail—A Strike against Poverty—A Weaver Relieved by a Dead Raven.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH (Continued).

Abraham and Lot. S. S. Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter.

FOREIGN TOPICS: War Threatened in Europe—The Ex-Empress' Journey—A Missionary's Perils, etc.



he Arrest of Mr. C. Bradlaugh, the Atheist Member of the British Parliament, by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

THE BRITISH PARLIAMENT AND THE ATHEIST MEMBER.

His Arrest by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

THE readers of the CHRISTIAN HERALD have been made acquainted by paragraphs which have appeared from time to time on the last page of several issues, of the agitation which has been caused in Great Britain by the election of Mr. Bradlaugh, an avowed atheist, as member of the British Parliament. We this week give a picture of the extraordinary scene which ensued when Mr. Bradlaugh defied the authority of the Speaker and was taken into custody by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The principles of the British Constitution are so near akin to our own in substance, although so widely different in name, that the dilemma in which the House of Commons was placed is a useful and interesting study to American readers, and we therefore compile a narrative of the leading incidents connected with the struggle, so that our readers may understand how it comes about that an atheist sits among the legislators of a country pre-eminent among European nations, as a Christian God-fearing land.

To form a correct estimate of

THE DIFFICULTY

it is necessary to recollect what position the House of Commons occupies in the British Constitution. It is the most powerful branch of the Legislature, as being the representatives of the people. No adviser of the Monarch can retain his position who has not the confidence of that House. The House of Lords may dislike a Cabinet and may oppose its measures, but the Cabinet can remain in office in defiance of that House, and as a matter of fact such a situation has repeatedly been seen ; but a condemnatory vote of the Commons brings on a crisis immediately. Neither the Monarch nor the ministers can defy that House with impunity.

Such a position has not been attained without a hard struggle. History tells us that for more than two centuries the people have contested for the right of framing the policy by which they are governed. Slowly and stubbornly they have fought their way in spite of ambitious kings and unscrupulous peers, until now they, through their representatives in Parliament, have acquired the controlling power in the Constitution.

A privilege so hardly won is most tenaciously held, for it is rightly considered to be a precious political privilege. When, therefore, Northampton selected an Atheist to represent the town in Parliament, many statesmen felt that, deeply as they regretted such a choice, it was unconstitutional to set aside the decision of the constituency. To admit such a representative was repugnant to their religious principles, to associate with him was painful, but the right of the people to selct their representative could not be impugned without establishing a precedent which might some day be used to the injury of the people and the principles of constitutional government. These considerations account for the fact that many men who, like John Bright, are renowned for their Christian life and high religious character, voted for Mr. Bradlaugh's admission.

Mr. Bradlaugh has for many years been notorious as the most prominent leader of the Atheists in Great Britain. His blasphemy has shocked the public and has disgusted men not avowedly Christian. He has been accustomed at his lectures to lay his watch on the table and say that he would stand there five minutes, and he desired the Most High to strike him dead, there and then, as a proof of His existence and power. A similar exhibition was made in this country, and the blasphemer, in conversation with a Christian gentleman, adduced his defiance as a proof of God's non-existence. The reply he received was very significant. The Christian said : "You forget that God is capable of infinite contempt as well as of infinite justice."

When Mr. Bradlaugh was elected, instead of taking the usual oath of allegiance, he approached the table of the House, and claimed to affirm his "allegiance" instead. The Speaker, however, concluded that the question was one which ought to be referred to the House itself for decision, but the House referred it to a committee, and the committee reported that Mr. Bradlaugh could not make an "affirmation." No action was taken on the report—the House neither accepting nor rejecting it.

Mr. Bradlaugh, anxious to know whether the alternative of taking "an oath" was open to him, again came to the table of the House, and on that occasion Sir. H. D. Wolff raised and protested against Mr. Bradlaugh being allowed to take the oath. Again, after considerable discussion, the matter was referred to a committee, and that committee had decided that Mr. Bradlaugh could not take the oath of allegiance, but it appended a recommendation that the House should permit him to "affirm ;" and on Monday, June 21st, Mr. Labouchere, senior member for Northampton, moved in the House of Commons, "That Mr. Bradlaugh be admitted to make an 'affirmation' or 'declaration' instead of the oath required by law."

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE,

In opposition to Mr. Labouchere's motion, the late Solicitor-General, Sir H. Giffard, made a powerful speech.

Mr. Alderman Fowler, one of the members for the City of London, said the question for decision was, whether a man who denied the God of Christians should take part in the deliberations of the House. It was not tolerable that Friends and Jews should be compared with Mr. Bradlaugh. It was not desirable to admit to the House a man who denied the existence of God and of a future state. Such a man was not likely to be a man of high moral character. The language of such a man must be, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."

After Mr. Sergeant Simon had spoken on the question, Mr. Warton, member for Bridport, hoped and believed that the House would pause when they considered what a terrible effect would be produced in the country by voting to admit Mr. Bradlaugh to the House. Mr. Gladstone and Mr Bright were religious men, and he hoped they would not throw their shields over an infidel and a blasphemer. There was an assumption on the part of Mr. Bradlaugh's supporters that an infidel had a conscience, but this was not the fact. He begged that every member of the House who believed in God would vote against "the fool who hath said in his heart, 'There is no God.'"

General Burnaby refused his voice in favor of Mr. Bradlaugh being allowed to make either a solemn affirmation or take the oath. If he were permitted to do so, it would, in effect, pollute the affirmation now taken by all men who believe in God. Dean Swift had said, "A man called to any office or trust is bound by oath to faithfully discharge its duties, and the oath ceases to be valid except in the case of those who believe that a Divine Being exists." He objected to the air of the House being stained by Mr. Bradlaugh being allowed to swear or affirm.

The Right Hon. J. G. Hubbard said that though he was as fully in favor of religious liberty as any one, it was not possible to leave unnoticed the person desiring to be enrolled among them. Mr. Bradlaugh first of all declared that the oath was obnoxious to him, and then placed his words upon record in a newspaper. Mr. Bradlaugh's manner of dealing with the question was not quite honest and straightforward. Tney had, in fact, to deal with a person who first declared that he could not make a solemn asseveration, but afterward said he would make it. Did not such behavior smack of untruth and gross hypocrisy? He hoped the House would refuse to make itself the accomplice of Mr. Bradlaugh in this matter. The person upon whose behalf they were invited to change the laws of the country, by those who said, "Do away with oaths and affirmations," had shown to the House that he disregarded truth, and knew no arbiter but his own will. While giving every possible latitude to different religions or persuasions, a civilized country could not permit the abrogation of the ties a obligations which were the only security for t maintenance of order and the observance of trut

Mr. Beresford-Hope remarked that they h to deal with the difficulty of the perverse ment conformation of Mr. Bradlaugh. The hon and the moral sense of Parliament were to considered ; and rather than that honor shou be tarnished and that moral sense blunted, would be ten thousand times better that Nort ampton should remain unrepresented.

Mr. A. O'Connor denied the right of a avowed Atheist to take a Christian oath i Christian assembly. There were commandme of higher authority than any Act of Parliame and one of them was, "Thou shalt not take t name of the Lord thy God in vain." It ha however, no sanction for the will of Mr. Bra laugh ; he attached no importance either to t commandment or to the God who gave it.

After a lengthy speech by Mr. John Brig
Mr. E. Stanhope severely commented upon and asked, what did they say in that House the common prayer for the High Court of P liament? Did they not ask the Supreme Bei to direct and prosper all their consultations the advancement of His glory? He claimed remind the House of those terrible days wh in the darkest moment of the French Revo tion, a reaction occurred after the enthronem of the Goddess of Reason. Robespierre hims in the Convention, said it was necessary t that assembly should take official notice of existence of a Supreme Being. He protes against letting Mr. Bradlaugh into the House a side-wind ; it would involve a complete hu iation of Parliament.

On Tuesday, June 22d, the debate was sumed, and during the evening Mr. Gladst made a long speech with the view of show that Parliament should not usurp an office wh the law had not placed in their hands, and discussion was continued by several other me bers. Subsequently, on a division, there wa majority of forty-five against Mr. Labouche resolution, and virtually against Mr. Bradlau the numbers being—for, 230, against, 275.

ON THE FOLLOWING DAY,

Wednesday, June 23d, Mr. Bradlaugh arrived Westminster about noon, and waited in lobby of the House until prayers were c cluded. Half an hour later, when members settled down in their places, the tall figure of infidel M.P. was seen making straight for the ble. As no one seemed to know precisely w to do, several members called out, "Order!
a demonstration which Mr. Bradlaugh pas without notice. As he stood at the corne the table where the oath is usually administe the Speaker informed him of the resolution rived at by the House, and said that he had option but to request him to withdraw.
Bradlaugh, standing with face colorless, firmly set, began to address the Speaker.
was met by peremptory cries to "Withdraw At length he consented to retire while his plication for a hearing was being considered

It was presently agreed "that Mr. Bradla should be heard at the bar." Beginning low voice, he craved the indulgence of House, and criticized the position of those opposed him. As for his opinions, he remai he did not choose them, and he was not asha of them. Suddenly dropping his voice from height of passion to which his indignation carried him, he asked, "What are you goin do with me?" and leaning lightly on the looked with placid interest round the House.
the question were one in which he was only motely interested. "Will you declare the vacant? Well, I shall be again returned.
what next? I have no desire to wrestle you for justice," he continued, holding hands over the bar with deprecating gest
"but if the struggle be sought by the Hou shall fearlessly and hopefully submit the c to a tribunal higher even than this great ass bly, and will ask public opinion to decide betw us." He then turned and left the House.

PROPHETIC EXPOSITION.

Compiled by Rev. M. Baxter.*

(Continued from page 469.)

The Voice of the People, the Voice of God—The True Child of Popery.—Napoleon III. of the Seven—The Adulation offered him—The Abyss.

THE REV. H. SHEPHEARD, M.A., lately Incum- ent of Casterton, and author of "Taken by urprise," etc., published, in 1864. well-written ectures on some chapters of Revelation, called The Tree of Life." He wrote upon Rev. 17 :

"The Interpreting Angel informed St. John hat five of the seven heads or forms of govern- ent of the Roman Empire had already fallen— mely : kings, consuls, dictators, decemvirs, and ilitary tribunes—and one was then in existence, he Roman Emperorship; and the seventh was ot yet come, and when he came, he was to ontinue a short space.' The sixth head was ntinued from the Cæsars through Charle- agne and the long line of emperors of Ger- any—who were called emperors of the Holy oman Empire—down to Francis II. of Austria, ho abdicated that title in the year 1806. The venth head soon afterward appeared in the nasty of Napoleon the First, who claimed the vereignty of Rome, and had his son crowned th the title of King of Rome.

"In accordance with the sure word of proph- y. this seventh head continued but a short ne. It was 'as it were wounded to death' on e fatal field of Waterloo; but 'its deadly wound s healed,' contrary to all probability, when e Emperor Louis Napoleon, his nephew, and e representative of his dynasty, succeeded to s power, and identified himself with his policy. identified himself with the claims of Napo- n to be the successor of the Cæsars, and be- ne, in fact, the ruler of Rome, which was gar- oned by his soldiers.

"IT IS THE ROMAN EMPIRE

der the guidance of its last dynasty—namely, t of Napoleon and his successors—that must identified with the Wild-beast who, together h the false prophet and the kings of the th and their armies, will be engaged in the t conflict against Christ and His people; and n ultimately 'goeth into perdition.' (Rev. : 11; 19 : 19).

"Three unclean Satanic spirits, like frogs, are dicted under the sixth vial, to come out of mouths of the dragon, and the wild-beast, the false prophet, and to go forth unto the gs of the earth and of the whole world, to her them to the battle (or rather the war) of great day of God Almighty (Rev. 16 : 12, The nature of these three emanations st be sought for in the character of the rces from which they proceed.

The first spirit from the Dragon, which is lained in Rev. 12 : 9, to denote the devil, st be a spirit of Infidelity. The second spirit n the wild beast or Roman empire under its head, i.e., under the successor and represen- ve of Napoleon I., is the revolutionary spirit, ch is embodied in the maxim Vox populi, Dei—the principle that the will of the people e supreme law. To this principle the First oleon owed his rise to power; and it pre- nently characterizes his dynasty.

In the great revolution of 1793, the French on had frantically rejected all laws, both ne and human—had madly proclaimed, in a lic and pompous ceremonial, that there was God, and had set up the worship of self-will er the outraged name of reason. Then fol- ed that furious outbreak of the French am- on and lust of conquest, which carried fire sword throughout continental Europe; and oleon Bonaparte, by leading on this attack nst the lives and liberties of mankind, became first the idol of the nation, and then its master. And the present Napoleon III. glories in the title of 'the elected of the people,' and counts his right to the throne by the millions of votes which placed him on it. The characteristic principle of the Napoleon dynasty is democratic lawlessness—ending in despotism.

"The third spirit, out of the mouth of

THE FALSE PROPHET,

is a propagandist spirit, emanating from the Pope and the Romish Priesthood. This revived spirit has been seen in the renewed energies and efforts of the Church of Rome and Jesuits, and is shown in the rapid increase of Popish churches, convent schools etc., and in the remarkable rise and spread of Ritualism or Tractarianism, that offset and true child of Popery.

"Another sign of the times, too remarkable to be passed over in silence, is the diabolical delusion of Spiritualism, the real object of which, according to the avowal of spiritualists themselves, is nothing less than to substitute for the Bible a new revelation derived from the spirits of the unseen world—professedly the spirits of the dead—but in reality, doubtless, the spirits of devils. This blasphemous system claims to number its disciples by millions in America and Europe (See Rev. 16 : 12–16).

"It is at the present period of the drying up of the Euphrates, or dissolution of the Turkish Empire, that these three frog-like evil spirits,* or anti-Christian principles, are predicted thus notably and fearfully to go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world to gather them to the war of the great day of God Almighty (Rev. 16 : 12–16)."

THE REV. JACOB TOMLIN, B.A., Vicar of Wollaston, Wellingboro', England—a great linguist, author of a "Vocabulary of Forty-eight Languages," and other books—also formerly a missionary to India from the Church Missionary Society, published, in 1868, "An Historical Interpretation of the Revelation," in which he gave the usual explanation as to the Napoleon dynasty being the Seventh Head from 1806 to 1815; and also said :

"Napoleon III., being the nephew of Napoleon I., may be truly said to be of the seven, or seventh, and becomes an eighth, or last form of the wild beast. This intimate connection between the seventh and eighth form is also manifest from Napoleon III. professing to carry out exactly his uncle's policy, and to perfect what he left short; and thus he may be said to identify himself with the former or seventh head; and yet is not another new head of the wild beast, but only its last or eighth form. This interpretation, termed the Napoleonic theory, was strenuously maintained by the late venerable Mr. Frere, Mr. Nangle, and others.

"This revival of the wild beast that was, and is not, and is near at hand (parestai, Rev. 17 : 8), under its eighth head or last form, is predicted to excite the admiration of mankind; the following is a sample :

"The Patrie of August, 1861, states that at the emperor's fête the following toast, proposed by M. Massaubian, was received with unbounded applause at Toulouse :—

"To the emperor! To the sovereign whom France proclaimed with universal enthusiasm, and to whom she intrusted, with a confidence that could not be deceived, her happiness, her glory, her liberties! To the man sent by Providence who saved her from and who still protects her with his powerful hand against all excesses! To the immortal genius which has shone forth with equal glory in war and in peace, and which will leave a page in history to be admired in future generations! To the great writer whose vigorous and animated language penetrates the mind and subjugates the soul! To the daring and worthy successor of the greatest captain and ablest legislator of modern times, who revives the honor and glory of his Imperial Dynasty! To him whom we all cherish in our hearts, like the great man whose image he is: and for whom every arm is ready to fight, as ours fought for the first Napoleon! May his destinies be long glorified by the success of his patriotic inspirations, and may his posterity ever reign over France, extended and exalted by his arms."

THE ABYSS,†

"Time will soon determine whether we are right or not, in this Napoleonic Interpretation, and whether we are right in our computations of the prophetic periods of the 6000. 2520, 2300, 1335, and 1260 years, as all converging in their termination toward the present remarkable epoch. he Chronos (Rev. 10 : 6) or Time of 360 years, within which period the mystery of God is predicted to be finished, reckoned from Luther's reformation about A.D. 1517–22 (which is prefigured throughout Rev. 10) terminates about A.D. 1877–82."

(To be continued.)

A LADY BLESSED AT THE MILDMAY CONFERENCE HALL.

A LADY had been for many years a Sunday-school teacher and district visitor, and a helper in every good work. During all that time she seemed to be truly in Christ, and to have much joy in His service. But as years went on she became subject to deep spiritual depression, then yielded to doubts about her personal interest in Christ, and at last gave way to such despair that prayer was altogether given up, and no one was allowed to speak to her of the love of Christ.

Yet, thank God, a bright and happy change was near. She went to one of the meetings in the Mildmay Conference Hall, London. Having reached the Hall early, she had some time to wait before the services began. While waiting she looked at the Scripture texts painted within the Hall, and her eye rested upon the words, "When I see the blood, I will pass over you." She looked again and again at these words, and became each moment more and more riveted by them; and her gloom and despair vanished at once, and peace through the blood of Jesus came. After the meeting was over she called at the house of a friend, who can never forget her joyfulness of spirit and her glad expression of face as she told him that it was not the meeting nor the addresses which had given her peace, but simply and only the text, with its few loving words, "When I see the blood I will pass over you." She went home that day full of gladness.

Soon afterward a severe illness came upon her, but in the midst of it she was rejoicing in the blood of Christ, and in the merciful passing over of God's wrath from the guilty soul because of it. Sometimes, however, the joy which had so wondrously come to her was disturbed. She told her friend that the Tempter had been trying hard to rob her of the precious comfort of the text. "He has whispered," she said, "that the words are only in the Old Testament. But my reply," she added, "was that there were stronger words in the New Testament, such as, 'Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out;' And then," she added, "when I resisted him with, 'It is written,' he left me."

The consolation she had found abode with her as she went down into the Valley of the Shadow of Death; and she passed away leaving to her friends the happy persuasion that she had entered into the joy of the Lord.

Extracted from "Coming Wars," by Rev. M. Ba er, in two pamphlets—five cents each by mail. Fi pamphlet contains "Ten Signs of the End, and De ription of Approaching Events," with two maps an four large diagrams. Second pamphlet contains va able quotations from Forty Expositors on these ev ts. Address, 63 Bible House, New York.

* These three spirits are called frog-like because of their unclean nature, rapid multiplication, clamor, and incessant croaking. As to the position of France as the leader of this Antichristian Confederacy, it is a curious fact that the ancient arms of France were three frogs.

† The phrase The Abyss is popularly used in France to signify the yawning gulf of revolutionary anarchy. The Napoleonic Empire is called in Revelation 11 : 7, and 17 : 8, the wild beast (i.e., Empire) that descends out of the abyss. Now it is lying buried in the Revolutionary Abyss which engulfed it in September, 1870, but soon it will ascend from the Abyss to Imperial Dominion, just as it ascended from the Revolutionary Abyss of 1793–98 and of 1848.—[Editor, July, 1872.]

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50 per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to THE MANAGER, CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of back numbers to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

Persons requiring single or special copies can obtain them most conveniently through

NEWSDEALERS.

Any complaint that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer is promptly attended to if we are given the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, July 21st, at 11.20 A.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Gen. Chester A. Arthur's Letter Accepting "the position assigned" to him on the Republican ticket has been published. It is an outspoken document, and deals with the different points of the Chicago platform, which he cordially accepts. The prominent topic of the letter is the authority of the National Goverment in State elections, which, as we have previously pointed out, will be the most important issue between the two parties in the coming campaign. The votes given at the Presidential election will be the answer of the people to the question raised on this subject.

The Reform of the Civil Service is also Dealt with in Gen. Arthur's letter, but like Gen. Garfield, he does not assume the decided position on the subject that President Hayes adopted. On this subject the candidate for the Vice-Presidency says: "It seems to me that the rules which should be applied to the management of the public service may properly conform, in the main, to such as regulate the conduct of successful private business. Original appointments should be based upon ascertained fitness. The tenure of office should be stable. Positions of responsibility should, so far as practicable, be filled by the promotion of worthy and efficient officers."

General Neal Dow, the Presidental Candidate of the Prohibition Party, has written a letter accepting the nomination. After dwelling on the evils of the liquor traffic, he concludes as follows: "I consider the objects of the Prohibitionists of this country to be of supreme importance to the interests of the nation and the people. Aside from its bearing upon the moral and religious welfare of the people, I consider the suppression of the liquor traffic to be an object of far greater political importance than any other now claiming the attention of the country. . . . While I sincerely wish that the choice of a candidate by the Cleveland Convention had fallen upon some other than myself, I accept the nomination willingly, being sure that it will prove to be the humble beginning of a triumphant end." The importance of the object the Prohibitionists have in view, cannot be overestimated. The liquor traffic is an evil which has grown with frightful rapidity and will in the near future have to be dealt with in a firm and vigorous manner. Opinion is, however, divided as to the wisdom of running a candidate on this principle exclusively, rather than using temperance influence in the choice of a candidate by one of the great political parties. As to the choice the Cleveland Convention made, there are probably many Prohibitionists who will echo the "sincere wish" of General Neal Dow.

Among the Significant Facts Revealed by the Census returns is one in connection with Mormonism. In spite of the large number of immigrants brought over by Mormon missionaries, the Mormon population of Utah has increased only sixty-five per cent., while the non-Mormon population has increased two hundred per cent. Civilization and moral living are thus shown to be gaining ground even in Utah.

The Testimonial to Mrs. Hayes from the Women's National Christian Temperance Union, to which we alluded in a recent number of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, will consist of a life-size portrait of that lady, to remain in the Presidential Mansion as a companion piece to that of Martha Washington. The idea originated with the branch of the Union at Delaware, and has been received with favor by the friends of temperance throughout the country without distinction as to political sympathy. The noble stand made by Mrs. Hayes in the cause of temperance has won for her the respect of all total abstainers, and it is desired that a fitting testimonial should be presented as an expression of that respect. One subscription of a hundred dollars was sent to the treasurer of the fund as soon as the matter took definite shape, and an appeal has been issued for subscriptions of any amount down to ten cents. Contributions to the fund should be sent to Miss Esther Pugh, of the W. C. T. U., 54 Bible House, New York.

The Monthly Tract Society of the United States was formed in March, 1874, on the model of the similiar Society of Great Britain, which has been in operation for above forty years. The society issues a new tract for adults and one for children and young people every month, and these tracts are published in ornamental, illustrated covers and written expressly for persons whose social position keeps them out of the way of tract distributors. Subscribers send the names of friends to the Secretary, Mrs. Damast, at 72 Bible House, New York, and the tracts go regularly every month for a year. The annual subscription is one dollar to addresses outside of New York, and seventy-five cents to addresses in the city. The tracts are sent in closed envelopes, in the appearance of letters, and so, going anonymously, awaken the interest of the receiver. Great good has been done since the society began its work, and many persons whom it seemed impossible to reach by other means, have been led by these tracts to seek the Saviour and to find salvation through Christ.

A Disaster in which Twenty Men Lost their lives occurred July 21, in the tunnel now being constructed under the Hudson, between New York and Jersey City. This difficult engineering work commenced with the sinking of a perpendicular shaft on the Jersey City side of the river to sixty feet below the surface. On the completion of the shaft, the construction of the tunnel running at right angles with it, was commenced. At the point where the walls of the tunnel, came in contact with those of the shaft there was a small crevice, the proper junction not being completed. This crevice was filled with clay to prevent the escape of the compressed air which was relied on as a support of the roof of the tunnel. On the day of the accident the crevice was not watched so closely as it should have been, and the clay was dislodged. Men working near, noticed the air rushing through the crevice, and in, a few moments parts of the roof fell in, admitting the mud and water from above and closing the only exit from the tunnel. Twenty-eight men were in the workings at the time, but eight escaped before the roof fell. Strenuous efforts have been made to reach the entombed men, but hitherto without success. Divers have descended but their search has been stopped by the mud and fallen portions of the tunnel. The eight men who made their escape speak in high praise of Mr. Woodland, the engineer in charge at the time of the disaster. He stood by the door of the tunnel helping the men to escape but making no effort to save himself. He is among those who are lost but it was mainly by his assistance that any of the workmen were saved.

The Berean Bible College has Issued its First annual report, which is of a very encouraging character. The object of the college is to prepare young men for the ministry by an earnest study of the Bible alone. It originated in an effort made in 1879, by Rev. John Q. Adams, the pastor of the Berean Baptist Church, New York, to provide Christian instruction for a number of reformed drunkards, converted to Christ during the Gospel Temperance Revival which had recently taken place in the city. From this beginning the work grew, and various ministers offered their assistance. Among them was Mr. John L. Lister, an accomplished linguist and Professor Alex. Meyrowitz, LL.D., the eminent Hebrew scholar. A gift of one thousand dollars from a wealthy friend who sympathized with the work enabled Mr. Adams to engage suitable accommodation in the Bible House, and now regular lectures are given there, free of charge, in Hebrew, Greek, and Biblical criticism.

Twenty-five regular students have attended the college, some of whom are in the ministry, others are preparing for it, and others are fitting themselves for usefulness in other spheres. As the College is open to all, and free to all, it has embraced among its students all classes and ages. Seven denominations and seventeen churches are represented in it. The funds to pay expenses for six months are already in hand, and Mr. Adams trusts that as money is needed for the useful work, God will take care that it is supplied.

The Rev. Thomas Harrison, the Boy Preacher, whose portrait and life appeared in a recent number of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, is now laboring at the Chester Heights Camp Meeting, in Pennsylvania, and his preaching is being blessed by God to the conversion of many souls. Large numbers are being attracted to the meetings from the surrounding country, and local journals state that the pressure of traffic on the railroads is so great that a double service of engines is required.

The Alleged Outrage on the Stars and Stripes by the Spanish authorities turns out to have been exaggerated. Admiral Wyman, who was deputed to investigate the matter, states that he was assured by the Spanish Governor that his Government unequivocally disavowed any intentional insult or indignity, or the commission of any act at variance with the received usages of all civilized powers. The Spanish authorities proved that the vessels fired upon were not only within six miles of the shore, but actually within three miles—the limit of jurisdiction claimed by the Governments of all maritime nations.

A Beautiful Kind of Memorial Tablet is to be seen in Philadelphia. It is that to an English boy who visited this country with his father in the Centennial year. While going the round of the city charitable institutions, the boy and his father came to the Hospital for Sick Children, and with this the boy was especially pleased. He never tired of talking of the children suffering so much pain, yet cheerful, because they were so carefully tended and in such a happy place. The hospital seemed to fill the boy's thoughts and his conversation, and his letters to his mother in England were full of the subject. During his stay here, he was attacked by typhoid fever and died. His parents, considering the subject of a monument to his memory, thought of the Hospital, and now, over a bed in which lies a crippled child is the inscription "In memory of Edward M——, of Kent, England." If the boy could have chosen for himself, he could not have desired a better memorial.

Still Another Fatal Steamboat Disaster, this ne on the Detroit River. On Friday July 23d, e Garland, an excursion steamer with 1200 ssengers on board, ran into the Mamie at a int nine miles below Detroit, cutting her in o and sinking her instantaneously. The mie had only twenty-four persons on board, of these, sixteen were drowned. It was a ar, moonlight night, and the vessels were dis ctly visible; it is supposed that the Garland s racing with another steamer, and was be d control when the Mamie was sighted. The wned persons were a Roman Catholic priest members of his flock.

Thief's Hoard.—Two Men, while Bathing he Arkansas River, forty miles east of Pueblo, July 18th, found an iron pot containing $3000 old and silver. A letter concealed in a buck purse found in the pot is yellow with age, is dated April 13th, 1860. It says: "I stole money in Chicago from a farmer. My part died in Kansas City, March 15th. I am g to New Mexico. If anybody finds this pot can keep the money. A. T. T." So the ey stolen twenty years ago came to light. often happens, the proceeds of his crime had of no use to the thief.

raid to Tell.—A Little Girl Named Kirchof at Paterson, N. J., recently, from the effect juries brought about in a singular manner. ut three weeks before, she fell from a swing broke her shoulder-blade. She feared that e told her mother, she would be punished etting into the swing without permission, he went uncomplainingly to her work, and ined at her employment for a week, until a nt fever resulted from the injury, and then acts came out. But it was too late to save rom the effects of her neglect of the wound, he died because she was afraid to tell her er. How happy is the Christian who can his Father with confidence and confess his assured of mercy (Heb. 4 : 16).

icnic of Deaf Mutes was a Strange Spec- witnessed in New York on July 13th. The bers of the Manhattan Literary Association af mutes, with their friends, left New York day's enjoyment at Oriental Grove. The bers of the association numbered seventy nd the remainder of the company, also deaf s, over two hundred in number, were ls and relatives of the members, and hailed New York, Boston, New Jersey, Connecti d Philadelphia. It was the fourth annual and by much the largest of any held thus A good many deaf mute couples were on with their children, and it was interesting te how the mothers put their babies to by certain peculiar movements of the facial es. Dr. Gallaudet, whose mother was a ute, and whose wife is in the same cate was on board, in company with his assist St. Ann's Church, Rev. John Chamber Rev. Job Turner, of Richmond, Va., a ute clergyman of the Episcopal Church, veral others.

nvicts' Court of Justice.—"The Convicts penitentiary," says The Southern Chris dvocate, at Greensboro', Ga., "have a court which they try their offenders. There is ge, a prosecuting officer and a sheriff, ter of whom applies the lash according to ce." These men—judges, officer, and sher ve themselves been condemned by legal before they hold their court. It is a type world's courts of justice, in which all en must one day appear before the judgment God to answer for their sins, unless they reviously made their peace by faith in Wreck of a Family.—A New York Daily relates the following melancholy ac "The Bennett family moved in the most able society in Cincinnati ten years ago. her was the Western manager, for several rance companies, was worth about a mil lars, and had a princely residence at Clif uburb of the city. His wife was a bril auty, and the entertainments over which she presided were notably fine. His daughter, Blanche, carefully reared and educated, witty and pretty, was the light of the house. A son was the remaining member of the family. The first change in this household was the elopement of the wife. She went to Chicago, where she died in disgrace. The son fell among bad associates, and finally went to prison for stealing. In St. Louis, a few days ago, a ragged rum-crazed woman was arrested. This was Blanche. The heart-broken father, having lost his fortune, is a clerk in a Western insurance agency." A house in which religion is not the guiding principle is built on the edge of a precipice. Ruin in this world and the next may overturn it in spite of its apparent security.

A Deaf Mute's Acquiescence in God's Will was touchingly evinced in an asylum recently. A visitor was particularly struck with the comeliness and intelligence of one of the young inmates. He entered into conversation with the boy, and found him not only mentally bright, but a sincere Christian. At length he ventured upon a most delicate inquiry: "Why did God make you deaf and dumb, and me to hear and speak?" The boy took the chalk and wrote, "Even so, Father, for so it seemeth good in thy sight." What a lesson for Christians who repine at the hardships of their lives!

A Lady's Handkerchief was by the Blessing of God the means of rescuing William Wirt from a career of drunkenness and vice. He was devotedly attached to a beautiful and accomplished young lady in his young days, but had developed qualities which alarmed her for his future. She had seen him intoxicated and had entreated him to become a total abstainer, but without avail. He made promises of amendment which, however, he did not keep. Finally she told him she would not continue the engagement, and they parted. She did not see him again for some time, during which he sank deeper in vice. But one day in Richmond she saw him lying asleep intoxicated on the sidewalk. Even in his degradation she pitied him, and drawing forth her handkerchief, she spread it over his face and hurried away. When Wirt came to himself he found the handkerchief, and in one corner the beloved name. With a heart almost breaking with grief and remorse he made a vow of reformation. He kept the vow, and eventually married the owner of the handkerchief.

A Blasphemer Drowned.—A few days after the immersion of several persons, a wicked young man took a sheep to the same place in the stream, and, with fearful oaths, swore he could baptize as well as the minister. The shore of the stream was of very gradual slope, so that there was no apprehension of danger from deep water. Three of his comrades stood on the shore to witness his blasphemous performance. Taking the sheep in, and holding it by its fore feet, he pronounced the formula of baptism, and as he leaned over to immerse the sheep, the animal struck him with its hind feet, knocking him into the water, and he was drowned while his comrades stood looking on. When asked why they did not help, and try to save him, they said they were perfectly paralyzed, and could not stir.

A Mountain Swallowed Up.—In Revelations 6 : 14, we read that among the appalling physical phenomena which are to accompany the breaking of the sixth seal, "every mountain" is to be "moved out of its place." What that scene will be, may be imagined from a phenomenon recently witnessed in South America. On June 7th, the inhabitants of San Luis Potosi were startled by a tremendous sound, resembling a thunderclap of unprecedented loudness. Shortly afterward, intelligence reached the town that a small mountain situate near the outskirts of San Luis, had sunk into the bowels of the earth leaving a vast gulf, some six hundred feet in breadth. For some hours after the sudden disappearance of the mountain the surface of the ground immediately adjacent to this huge cleft continued to be agitated by volcanic action.

GOD GLORIFIED BY CHILDREN'S MOUTHS.

A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

In connection with the Centenary of Sabbath-Sch

"Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength because of thine enemies, that thou mightest still the enemy and the avenger."—PSALM 8 : 2.

The Power of God Displayed in Human Weakness—The Enemy met with in the Moral and Spiritual Sphere—I. There is a Conflict—At Present God uses Spiritual Means—A Day when all the Resources of Nature will be Used—II. The Weapons are very Singular—The Commission of the Apostles—"It must anger Satan"—The Weapons Smite by Prayer—By Praise—By Testimony—III. The Warriors Remarkable—Childlike Men and Women—IV. Their Qualification lies on Their weak Side—The Power to Suffer—The Science of Growing Weeds—The Pernicious German Theology—V. A Loving Reverence for Childhood—The Insanity of Doubting Children's Conversions—Victory through Children—What Children do in City Homes.

THIS psalm sings of the grandeur of God as seen in creation. Who has not been impressed with the sight of the starry sky, and the moon walking in her brightness? Truly God is great! Who can stand at night and gaze upward to yonder distant worlds without saying, "O Lord our Lord, how excellent is Thy name in all the earth! who has set Thy glory above the heavens."

The psalm with equal vigor treats of the condescension of God, which is all the better seen when we have a view of his greatness and glory. It is not for us to stoop, we are so low already. We sometimes use the word condescension in reference to man; but worms were never raised so high above their meaner fellow-worms as to be capable of real condescension; that belongs to God alone. "When I consider Thy heavens, the work of Thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which Thou hast ordained; what is man, that Thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?"

This morning our subject is the power of God displayed in human weakness—strength out of babes' mouths; the way He glorifies Himself by using the very least and causing them to show forth His praise to the confusion of His adversaries.

There is a glory of God to be seen in creation, but in redemption there are peculiarly bright manifestations. In creation there was no opposition. When God framed this world there was no opposing force to fight against Him. "He spake and it was done." Absolute nothingness was no hindrance to the creation "in the beginning," neither were chaos and darkness resisting forces in the after-framing of the world. "Let there be light," said God, and there was light. He speaks life, and things live; no trace of rebellion is seen.

It is in the sphere of moral and spiritual things that "the enemy" is met with, and here is a labor worthy of a god—to overthrow this enemy and still the evil voice which curses the sons of men. It is in conquering the opposition of the powers of evil that God gets to Himself a glory more remarkable than that which He obtains by the greatest feats of creative power.

I. So our first thought is that

THERE IS A CONFLICT.

Our text speaks of "enemies," and of "the enemy and the avenger." We know who the enemies are. Are they not the seed of the serpent? Are they not the men of this world, the children of darkness? The enemies of God are all men who have not been renewed in the spirit of their minds; all who have not been turned "from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God."

God has—alas that we should have to say it!—many enemies; and, above all, there is the enemy, that leading spirit, the "prince of the power of the air," who hath dominion over the children of dsobedience, and over those apostate angels whom He seduced into mutiny, so that they revolted with him from beneath the standard of God; the devil and Satan is the enemy who contends against the cause of truth and love, which is the cause of God.

Ever there rages a tremendous battle between good and evil, between God and this avenger, and the evil powers associated with him. This battle rages from day to day, and will never cease till the Lord hath put all enemies under the feet of His glorious Son, who is manifested to destroy the works of the devil. Victory shall crown the strife between good and evil, and the cry shall be heard, "Hallelujah: for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth."

This strife began—I hesitate to conclude the sentence—for the origin of evil is not revealed; but the first historic circumstance we know of was the revolt of the angels who kept not their first estate. How they fell we think we know; but to a large extent our notions are, as a rule, drawn rather from poetical imagination than from positive history; but we do know that the devil was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth (1 John 8:44), and that "God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell" (2 Peter 2:4).

Satan carried the warfare into this world at the fall. Finding a happy pair in Eden, he seduced them with a lie, leading them to partake of the fruit of which their God had said, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." From that fell moment the conflict has never ceased throughout the whole human family, and you find everywhere the seed of the serpent in conflict with the "seed of the woman."

God leads the armies of the right and the true against the spiritual wickedness which maintains the throne of wrong and falsehood. The serpent's seed has continued to fight against the Lord Jesus and against His chosen ones, using all sorts of weapons against them: by lying and slandering, by false doctrine, by soft temptations, by cruel persecutions, by death itself, the enemies have sought to destroy the children of the living God.

It is a battle royal here below, even as it was above; for we read, "There was war in Heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven." The day shall come when there shall be no place found for evil upon earth; but till then, the god of this world seeks to destroy the Lord Jesus Christ, and all that are in Him, and we must wrestle with him until we prevail.

On God's part this conflict is mainly carried on by moral and spiritual means. He does use other means at times, and He will in the end use all the resources of nature for the overthrow of His adversaries. For the most part, however, this battle is not with weapons of nature, but with weapons of grace, and as far as we have to do with it, it is never with the confused noise of warriors and garments rolled in blood; for "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal," though they are "mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds."

II. Secondly, in this conflict, are very singular. What are those weapons? The text replies, "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength." Bring hither yon sweet babe, and let us look into its lovely face! See that little mouth—it challenges a kiss; and note with joy that God may use that little mouth as His conquering weapon against the devil. By men's mouths God's warfare is carried on, and all mouths that have ever spoken for Him were once the mouths of "babes and sucklings." I have seen many ancient cannon upon which were moulded in bronze the words, "The last argument of kings." Yes, but the gracious arguments of the King of Kings are sent home by a human mouth; these mouths are fashioned and framed on purpose to hurl against the enemy the hot shot of the Gospel.

THE WEAPONS

It must greatly anger Satan to think that his craft is not met by craft, nor his clever devices by the wisdom of the world, but that God uses the foolishness of preaching to overthrow him. When our Lord sent out His apostles He did not commission them to assemble squadrons of soldiers, but He bade a tongue of fire sit on each one of them: He did not charge them to establish His religion by the authority of earthly princes, and seek for it the endowments of the state, but He gave them the endowment of the Holy Ghost, and the power to speak His Gospel.

"What gifts, what miracles He gave!
And power to kill, and power to save!
Furnish'd their tongues with wondrous words,
Instead of shields, and spears, and swords.

"Thus arm'd, He sent the champions forth,
From east to west, from south to north;
'Go, and assert your Saviour's cause;
Go, spread the mystery of His cross.'"

Already the testimony of feeble men has been used as the great power of God to subdue the nations to Himself. Satan's kingdom has been shaken and the empire of Jesus extended by the gracious words which have proceeded out of human mouths, mouths which once were those of sucklings.

Seest thou there, fiend of hell, the armory of God? Dost thou see, in yonder infant class, the weapons which the Lord is preparing against thee? The child that sucks at its mother's breast is born to smite thee with his words, and ere long, when the Spirit of God shall rest upon him, he shall batter down thy high places with his proclamation of the Gospel. O smiter of the human race, the youngest, weakest, feeblest of the sons of Adam shall yet tread thee under foot. God shall make use of children's mouths to vanquish and silence the enemy and the avenger.

How are these singular weapons used? These strangely soft, yet sharp, feeble, yet mighty, weapons—how are they used? They smite the enemy by prayer. Children pray while they are children, and, blessed be God, their little pleadings are heard in heaven. I like to remember the words of Luther when things were going very badly. He went into a room and found a number of children in prayer, and he exclaimed, "It is well, for the children are praying for us: God will be sure to hear them." O blessed power of prayer, nothing can stand against thee! The man, the child, the babe who knows but how to pray shall certainly prevail with God, and "still the enemy and the avenger."

"Prayer is the simplest form of speech That infant lips can try,"

and yet it is one of the most effectual forms of assault against the powers of darkness.

These little mouths, too, shall be used for praise; and that is another powerful blow against the avenger; for whenever we praise God we cast down the pride of the great enemy. Praise glorifies God, and that is what Satan cannot bear. In proportion as God is glorified he feels himself degraded, and therefore it is a blessed thing to magnify the Lord. Little children, when they are rightly taught, early praise the Messiah, and, as they grow up, with deeper voices and fuller volume of sound, but perhaps not even then with truer heart, they praise and bless the God of their fathers. The mouths of babes and sucklings are used by God to lower the pride of His adversaries, while they cry "Hosannah!" and sing the praise of Jesus' name.

Nor is this all, for out of man's mouth God sends forth testimony by His Holy Spirit, and this is the sharpest blow of all. The enemy dreads nothing so much as witness-bearing to the Gospel, for he knows that it pleaseth God "by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." Under the head of testimony I would include all sorts of speech concerning our Lord Jesus and the Gospel of our salvation, whether it proceeds from the mouths of men, women, or children. The testimony of Jesus is strength, however feeble may be the voice which utters it. Whoever publishes the salvation of Jesus Christ is, with his mouth, smiting the enemy.

How sweet to think, dear brethren and sisters, that we never know what one child's mout can do! One would like to have seen littl George Whitefield when first he began to prattle. Who would have thought that the mout of such a youngster would utimately set tw nations on fire by its zealous declaration of th truth? I should like to have seen John Wesley, when he was a little child, on the knee of that remarkable woman, "the mother of the Wesleys"—who would have thought that he would rouse the masses as he did? Mouths that pray, and praise, and publish salvation, are the Lord's pieces of ordnance, with which He defeats His adversaries in the great battle of salvation.

III.—REMARKABLE WARRIORS.

Let us notice, in the third place, that the warriors in this warfare are very special. The weapons are singular, and the warriors themselves are remarkable, for the text says that God perfects His praise out of the mouths of babes and sucklings. We may read this spiritually with the warrant of Scripture; for, first, such as are like babes in spirit are God's chosen. Their character cannot be better described than by calling them "new-born babes who desire the unadulterated milk of the word."

Childlike men and women, simple-hearted honest, trustful, loving spirits are the chosen o God. Those who are so very wise, and know suc a great deal that they feel bound to cavil, pic holes, and raise idle questions--these are not God elect. He does not choose the wise, but th foolish things; those who do not know, no pretend to know, but take their instructio from the Divine Teacher. As to mere knowledge, which puffs up so many, there are som things which believers do not wish to know some difficulties which they do not desire r moved; they are glad to have ample room an verge enough for faith, and though this caus wise people to despise them, they care little f that since their names are written in heave and it is out of their mouths, weaklings as the are, that God has ordained strength.

Nay, more than this, not only are such t Lord's chosen, but such are his witnesses. want to call attention to that, because in th 25th verse of the 11th of Matthew our Lord w speaking to His apostles. He had been sen ing them out to preach; and the evangeli records, "At that time Jesus answered a said"; that is to say, at the very time when sent out these special servants of His who we in the judgment of scribes and Pharisees not ing better than poor babes: He thanked G because they were of a kind which He deligh to use; He thanked God that He had not co mitted the Gospel revelation to the wise and the noble, but unto these childlike ones who h guileless minds, and capacity for believing a nothing more.

These poor men could do little else but spe when they were spoken to, and say what they w told, and that is the best qualification for a m ister that I know of—for him to speak only wh God speaks to him, and then utter what God said to him and nothing more. The Fat chooses just such.

Those who are reputed to be wise men do praise too much; they go upon the non-co mittal principle, and prefer criticism to gr tude. They are always criticizing the weath if it is good for the turnips it is bad for wheat, and if dry for hay-making it is too for something else. The worldly-wise man ne says, "Blessed be God for this delightful son; nothing can be better; we are highly vored." No, he thinks he shows his wisdom finding fault; God Himself cannot escape His sage remarks; but if a man is not enough to be for ever grumbling, but is so fo as to be happy, so foolish as to believe the tr so foolish as to trust in the most trustworth al' beings, namely, his God--he is also the of man that praises God, and from such hearts God gets His chief praises.

Our Lord Jesus Christ is coming again, not to ride upon an ass, or upon a colt, the foal of an ass, but to reign in glory ; and when He cometh the first to meet Him and salute Him will be those poor, babe-like ones, who did not boast of culture, but believed in God ; who knew little, but yet knew their Lord, and longed for His appearing, sighing often, "Oh, that He would come and end the strife ! Even so, come, Lord Jesus !"

WEAKNESS THE BEST QUALIFICATION.

IV. Now let us note, in the fourth place, that he qualification of these warriors lies in their eak side. If it lay on the strong side the text ould have been written in another manner, and e should have read, "Out of the mouth of en of middle age, in the prime of life—out of he mouth of wise old men, who have gray airs upon their head, indicative of their long xperience—out of their mouths God has or- ained strength ;" but He takes men at their eakest and speaks of "babes," or children ho are quite young. The word must not be onfined to infants, for it includes young children who are able to run about the streets.

The sucklings also are older children than they ould represent with us, for eastern mothers ften nurse their children till they are three ears of age, so that some sucklings speak dis- nctly. The idea is that if you take man at his ast, out of his mouth God ordains strength. e regards not man as grown up and strong, t man in his greatest weakness, and out of e mouth of weak man God ordains strength. hat doth this teach ? I take it that whatever is eakest about man is that in which the grace of od glorifies itself most.

Man is not only a soul and spirit, but he is in rt material, and hence a poor creature, com- sed in part of the lower elements. He is not re spirit, like an angel, but linked on to other earth by a body of clay, cumbrous and mpering. He is a worm, and yet an angel ; lf-way between dust and deity ; brother to e worm and to corruption, and yet immortal. Satan is no doubt filled with scorn of man en he looks at him and measures him with mself. "Is this the creature that is to be set er all the works of God's hands—made of earth d water, phosphates and metals ? I am no- r far than he. Can I not flash like lightning, ile he must creep about the world to find nself a grave ?" Yes, but herein is the glory God's conflict and victory. The Lord intends overcome the prince of evil by a poor creat- e like man, who is but of yesterday, and is shed before the moth.

t is glorious to my mind that the Lord should gn to embody His power in weak creatures as are, and in that way make Satan see that the ht and the true in the feeblest being is uncon- erable, and that in this form God carries the r into His own territory and defeats him. us the Lord puts the adversary to a perpetual roach. He pits a child against his giant foe l overcomes him. He hurls defiance to Satan of a babe's mouth. Go thy way, O enemy ; u art dishonored by the victory which fee- ness gains over thee.

e have the power to suffer, and herein lies a at part of our qualification to do the Lord's vice before His enemies. It is our Redeem- qualification. He could not save us until suffered, He could not redeem us until He l ; not His strength, but His weakness ed us, for He was crucified in weakness, and hat crucifixion He redeemed our souls.

hink of the men and women who have glori- God on beds of sickness, bearing their pains patience, and blessing God all the while. nk of the many on the rack and at the stake have there extolled the Lord their God ! e music lies not in the sound, but in the it of the song, and hence, I say, none can ch, much less excel, the songs of the martyr . Blessed be God that we can suffer.

e should be denied a privilege if we had not been able to endure the will of God as well as to do it. Surely of all diadems, that crown which is set with rubies, the crown which adorns the martyr's brow, is the most resplendent. Yes, it is man's weak side, his suffering and his dying side, by which God has shown the enemy that men can love their God even unto death, that virtue can triumph over all selfishness, that true hearts can make sacrifices, that mortal man can defy temptation, and can, through God's grace, follow after that which is good to the uttermost of loss and pain.

Now, dear brethren, dwell on this thought, and meditate on the fact that our power to serve God lies on our weak side. He uses not our greatness but our littleness.

You know what the learned men say is the weak part of some of us—they put it something like this : "We regret the preacher's total inability to keep abreast of the times ; his incapacity for modern thought, and his want of affection for the higher culture, which is so much the characteristic of this marvellously enlightened century." That is our weakness. Yes, and our strength, and therefore we glory in it. "I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified." If all God's servants will come to this, they will secure far more success than by the pretentious style of so-called "culture," which is nothing but the science of growing more weeds than usual.

We will believe what God says, and take it as a matter of fact just as a child does. And oh ! what a sweet thing a child's faith is ! Many a time when a dear little girl has come to join the church, and looked at me with her expressive, believing eyes, which seemed to see Jesus, I have admired and envied her pure, unquestioning confidence. Knowing nothing about those horrible doubts which are now sown like thistles everywhere, such as these have the rest of faith without its struggles.

I have desired to be a little child again, and wished that I had never heard of the existence of a quibbler. Those fine books of the broad school which came from Germany years ago, but which we now produce at home, it is a pity to have seen the binding of them. Even doctors of divinity favor us with denials of plenary inspiration, and aid in that form of undermining work ; they may have all their books so long as we can keep our Bibles, and God gives us firm faith in Himself. Let us but know Jesus and lean our heads on His bosom, and the learned men may speculate as they please.

V. That leads me, in finishing, to plead for a loving REVERENCE FOR CHILDHOOD.

If the Lord uses the weak side of man, and if He is engaged to win His ultimate victory over the devil by feeble man at his feeblest, then God bless the children ! It seems to me that in the Lord's battle there is always a babe in the fore-front. The armies of olden times placed a huge champion in their van, like Goliath of Gath ; but it is not so in God's army ; there a babe leads the way.

Pharaoh oppresses Israel, and crushes the people down till their cry goes up because of their sore bondage. God is going to deliver them. How does the work begin ? Here is the opening of the campaign : "And the daughter of Pharaoh went down to the river to wash herself," and there she spied a little ark made of bulrushes, which she sent her maid to fetch, and there was a Hebrew child within it. "And behold ! the babe wept." Thus was the champion of Israel introduced upon the scene ; the goodly child whom his parents in faith had hidden was he by whom God would break Rahab in pieces.

The still loftier story of the battle of the Lamb opens in like manner : "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given." "She brought forth her first-born son, and wrapped him in swadnling clothes, and laid him in a manger." That was the signal for the heat of the conflict : that babe led the way. The holy child Jesus is at the head of all our marches. One may well honor infancy and childhood since this is the case.

Let our subject prevent our entertaining doubts about the possibility of children's conversions : that would be insanity, and almost blasphemy. Do you not know that except ye be converted, and become as little children ye shall not enter the kingdom of heaven ? Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." The childlike spirit is no disqualification ; in some respects it is a vantage ground.

Christianity is

THE RELIGION OF CHILDREN.

Other religions aim at older folk, and pretend to mystery. Other religions are not worth understanding, but yet they affect depth, and secresy ; you must be initiated, and pass through years of study before you can hope to derive any advantage from them ; but the religion of Jesus Christ was meant for the poor and for the lowly. If a preacher can interest a child he can interest anybody. Is it not all a mistake when we say, "Oh ! he is only fit to talk to children. If he is fit to do this he is fit to talk to apostles.

Let us heartily believe, also, in children's praises. I am sure you must do so if you are like your Lord, for He delighted in them. He would not stop the boys when they shouted "Hosannah !" The scribes sneeringly asked, "Hearest thou what these say ?" Yes, He did hear it, and He said, "Out of their mouths God has perfected praise."

Let the children sing, and thank God they do sing. Never despise them. Do not say, "Oh, they are only a parcel of boys and girls." What if they are ? May they not be a better parcel than some of you ? If we were half as free from guile and unbelief as boys and girls it would be better for us : if we could get the simple trustfulness of childhood back again it would be a great gain to character.

Last of all, let us expect victory to come to the Church through little children. It may happen that God will bring the world to Christ's feet by the children. It is written, "A little child shall lead them." Who knows how many are led to Jesus by children ? This city of ours is better evangelized by our Sunday-schools than by all the rest of us put together. I don't mean to flatter Sunday-school teachers, but I must speak well of the children.

When they go home they find that father is hardly dressed, he has not been to a place of worship, but he has been reading the Sunday paper ; he does not want any of your singing and preaching. Little Mary and Tommy come back, and they don't ask him anything about it, but they begin to sing, and when they have their dinner they talk about what teacher said, and perhaps they say something about the sermon, and so father gets more singing and preaching than he bargained for. When they go to bed they clasp their little hands and pray for their father, and he is obliged to hear them : thus he gets praying as well as singing.

The children are missionaries, and they enter where others cannot. The city missionary may be shut out, but father cannot shut out Tommy or Mary, and they must be let to sing or they will cry, and that is worse ; so that their witness cannot be silenced. What little children are doing for London and for our great cities it is impossible for us to calculate. The darlings die, and in this they often do more than by their lives.

How many hard hearts have been broken, and stubborn wills subdued, by the deathbeds of infants ! How many a mother has had her first desires for heaven kindled by the flight of her little cherub up to the bosom of Christ ! They do God's work here below in a wonderful manner. It is true, and will be truer every day, that out of the mouth of babes and sucklings the Lord has ordained strength, because of His enemies, that He might still the enemy and the avenger. God's blessing be with all of you who work among the children. Amen.

[Portions of Scripture read before Sermon.
Ps. 8 ; Matt. 21 : 1-16; 1 Cor. 1 : 18-31.]

A SAILOR'S DESPAIRING DEATH IN JAIL.

By an Evangelist.

ONE of the wardsmen of the county jail called upon me one day and said, "There is a man in prison who is very ill, and who has a great desire to see you." Finding that the case was an urgent one, I went immediately.

On reaching the jail I was conducted to the infirmary; and there, stretched on one of the beds, lay a man, about thirty years of age, whose wasted countenance and laboring breath and the bright hectic flush on his cheeks told too plainly that he was in the last stage of consumption. I found on inquiry that he was a sailor, and that he had been sentenced to an imprisonment of some months for felony. He had been in his boyhood a scholar in a Sunday-school, and then, and for some time after, he had been in the habit of attending a faithful ministry.

He was evidently well acquainted with the Scriptures; for when, in pointing out to him his need of salvation, and explaining the way of life through Jesus, I quoted such passages as I deemed appropriate, he immediately took them up and completed them quite correctly. For example: "God so loved the world," I said, "that He gave His only begotten Son"—he continued, "that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3 : 16). "The blood of Jesus Christ"—"His Son," he added, "cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1 : 7). "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation"—"that Christ Jesus," he continued, "came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief" (Tim. 1 : 15). I found, in short, that there was not a passage to which I referred with which he was not perfectly acquainted.

"Well, now," I said, "cannot you take the comfort these promises afford? Cannot you commit yourself, as a lost sinner, into the hands of Jesus? His blood can cleanse you from all your sins. If you believe in Him, you will not perish, but have everlasting life; the 'faithful saying' is for you. Cannot you believe all this, and trust in the Lord Jesus for salvation?"

"No, sir," he replied, "I cannot."

"But why should you not?" I remonstrated. "The Lord Jesus is just as willing to save you as He is to save me, or anybody else that ever believed in Him. He is as willing as He is able to save you now, and to save you to the uttermost."

Still the reply was, "No, sir, I cannot believe."

I remained with him as long as I thought it prudent to do so, considering his extreme weakness; and I endeavored, to the best of my ability, to assure him of the perfect willingness of Jesus to give him everlasting life; but all in vain. To the last he gave only the same despairing reply.

I prayed with him, and then took my leave, entreating him to think about what I had said, and to lift up his heart in prayer to God for the gift of the Holy Spirit, to clear away his darkness and unbelief.

I went to see him again the following morning. As soon as I entered the infirmary I saw that the bed on which he had lain the previous day was unoccupied. My heart sank within me, and I said to myself, "Can it be that he is dead?" Thinking it possible, however, that he might have been removed to another room, for the sake of greater quietness, I said to the prisoner who had been his attendant, and who stepped up to me after I had stood a few moments looking at the vacant bed, "Well, how is the poor young man this morning?" "He's gone, sir," was the reply.

"Gone!" said I; "and how?"

"Oh, sir," he replied, "it was terrible. About half an hour after you had left he said to me, 'There's another blood-vessel gone!' and sure enough it was so; for the bed-clothes were dyed with blood. He wanted very much to see you again, sir. 'Send for that man,' he said. 'What man?' we asked. 'That young man,' he answered. He got rapidly worse, and his last words were, 'There's nothing but hell and damnation for me;' and soon after he died."

The speaker was deeply affected. I said a few words to him about the necessity of attending immediately to his own salvation, and expressed my hope that what he had just witnessed would make a permanent impression on his heart and life. Many years have passed since then, but the whole scene still rises before me almost as distinctly as if the events I have narrated had taken place only yesterday—that prison-room, with its massive walls and its grated windows; the sufferer—his worn countenance, the anxious looks he fixed on me as I spoke to him, his feeble voice, and his words of utter hopelessness; and many a time I have thought of that death-bed with sorrowful pity.

People who do not believe in Jesus die very different deaths. Sometimes there is reckless hardihood; sometimes there is callous insensibility; sometimes there is a peace which springs from complete delusion; and sometimes, as in the case which has been described, there are terrors which nothing can allay. But in any case it is a mournful thing, to one who knows with what solid peace the Gospel of Christ can cheer a death-bed, that men should die without its consolations. Oh that the unconverted would cry earnestly to God for the sake of Jesus Christ, to forgive their sins, and bestow upon them His Holy Spirit.

A STRIKE AGAINST POVERTY.

IN a Prussian roadside inn one hot summer's day several men were smoking and drinking. The room was dirty and uncared for, and the men, who looked quite in keeping with it, were railing at the anomalies of the world, and contrasting the luxury and idleness of the rich with the misery and hardships of the poor.

During the conversation a stranger, a young man, came in to eat his bread and cheese while his team rested in the shade before the inn. For a time he listened silently to the talk, and then joined in, saying, "You must strike!"

"Strike against what?" asked the peasants.

"Against poverty?" answered the young man, "and the weapon with which to strike is work."

"Well said! Sensibly spoken!" laughed the peasants.

"It would have been well for me had I always been as sensible," continued the stranger, "but I used to be an idle rogue. I was strong and healthy, but I wouldn't work, and if now and then I was obliged to do anything, I was off at once to the alehouse, and like lightning the money was out and the brandy was in. I went from place to place—that means, that everywhere I was turned away, for no master wants a loafer about. I'd soon had enough of farm service, and then I went about to fairs and public-houses as a fiddler. Wherever any one would hear me, I scraped my violin, but with all my scraping I was never able to get a whole shirt to my back.

"Soon I grew tired of music, and then tried begging. I went up and down the country, but most doors were shut in my face. People said a healthy young fellow, like I was, ought to work. That enraged me. I grumbled that God had not made me a rich man, and I was envious of all who were better off than myself. I would have liked to turn the world upside down that I might have been able to lord it over the rich. One day I went into an inn, sat down in a corner, and began muttering my begging speeches. At a table not far from me sat a gentleman (he is, as I afterward heard, a writer of books); he kept glancing at me and I kept glancing at him, for I thought he would be sure to give me a good alms, and so he did. I'm spending it still."

"What was it?" asked the men, who had listened attentively.

"He came up to me and asked me about my early life. I told him I had been a farm-servant, and sent from place to place—in short, I told him everything. He listened quietly, shook his head, and at last said, 'Show me your hands!' Astonished, I held out my hands; he examined them all over, pushed up my shirt sleeves, and again shook his head.

"'What powerful hands! What strength there must be in those arms!' he said. 'My lad, you must join in the war."

"'In what war?' I asked.

"'In a war against your misery!' he exclaimed in a loud voice. 'You fool, you imagine you are poor—poor with such hands! What a mad idea! He only is poor who is sick in body or in mind. You are healthy in body and in mind. Good gracious! with such hands, poor! Set your wits to work and reflect upon the treasure God has given you in your strong healthy limbs. Recover your senses and march forward in the war.'"

"Bravo! That was very good," laughed the peasants.

"And so I joined in the war," continued the young man. "I looked for a place, and now I am a farm-servant as before—nothing better and no richer; but I am content and industrious, and I have served the same master these five years and shall stay with him until one of us dies."

A WEAVER RELIEVED BY A DEAD RAVEN.

IN one of his recent publications Rev. C. H. Spurgeon relates the following remarkable incident:

A poor weaver once lived in the little German town of Wupperthal—a poor man in his outward circumstances, but rich toward God, and well known in his neighborhood as one who trusted in the Lord at all times. His constant faith expressed itself in what became his habitual utterance under all circumstances of trouble and perplexity. "The Lord helps," he was wont to say; and he said it undauntedly, even when it looked as if the Lord had forsaken him. Such a time it was when, in a season of scarcity, work ran short, many hands were discharged, and the master by whom our weaver was employed gave him his dismissal.

After much fruitless entreaty that he might be kept on, he said at last, "Well, the Lord helps," and so returned home. His wife, when she heard the sad news, bewailed it terribly; but her husband strove to cheer her with his accustomed assurance. "The Lord helps," he said; and even although, as the days went on, poverty pinched them sorely, nothing could shake his firm reliance on Him in whom he trusted.

At last came the day when not a penny was left—no bread, no fuel in the house; only starvation stared them in the face. Sadly his wife tidied and swept the little room on the ground floor in which they lived. The window was open, and possibly the words were heard outside with which the weaver strove to keep up thei courage, "The Lord helps." Presently a stree boy looked saucily in, and threw a dead raven a the feet of the pious man. "There, saint there is something for you to eat!" he cried.

The weaver picked up the dead raven, an stroking its feathers down, said, compassion ately, "Poor creature! thou must have died o hunger."

When, however, he felt its crop to see whethe it was empty, he noticed something hard, an wishing to know what had caused the bird death, he began to examine it. What was h surprise when on opening the gullet a gold nec-lace fell into his hand! The wife looked at confounded; the weaver exclaimed, "The Lo helps," and in haste took the chain to the nea est goldsmith, told him how he had found i and received with gladness two dollars, whic the goldsmith offered to lend him for his prese need. The goldsmith soon cleaned the trinke and recognized it as one he had seen before.

"Shall I tell you the owner?" he asked, wh the weaver called again.

"Yes," was the joyful answer, "for I wou gladly give it back into the right hands."

But what cause had he to admire the wonderful ways of God when the goldsmith pronounced the name of his master at the factory! Quickly he took the necklace and went with it to his former employer. In his family, too, there was much joy at the discovery, for suspicion was removed from a servant. But the merchant was ashamed and touched; he had not forgotten the words uttered by the poor man when he was dismissed.

"Yes," he said thoughtfully and kindly, "The Lord helps; and now you shall not only go home richly rewarded, but I will no longer leave without work so faithful and pious a workman, whom the Lord so evidently stands by and helps; you shall henceforth be no more in need."

Thus He who fed Elijah by living ravens proves Himself equally able to supply the needs of His tried servant by the same bird when dead.

THE BRITISH POLITICAL REVOLUTION.

Its Prophetic Aspect.

By Rev. M. Baxter.

(Continued from page 455.)

5. Troubles leading to Queen Victoria's Abdication—A Man must Reign over Great Britain in the Last Day—Gladstone's Unpopularity at Court—The Order of Coming Occurrences.

WE have already in the two former issues of he CHRISTIAN HERALD, dwelt upon four prophetic events toward which the new Liberal Parliament is a progressive step, and we now proceed to notice a fifth one:

5. The existence of an unprecedently strong Liberal government which may promote exreme Radical measures or a democratic policy distasteful to our Sovereign Lady the Queen, tends in the direction of occurrences which may lead to her abdication in favor of the Prince of Wales, as has already been rumored in recent imes, on the ground of advanced years and impaired health. Consequently, the present conjuncture of affairs points more than ever before oward the fulfilment of Daniel's prophecy that A MAN SHALL BE REIGNING OVER BRITAIN (whether he be a king or a republican president) at the time of the final crisis, hen the latter-day ten-kingdomed confederacy hall come into existence, and when Ireland shall e separated from England.

In Dan. 7 : 21 Cæsar's Roman Empire is represented in the last stage of its history, just before he Second Advent of Christ, as a wild beast ith ten horns, and the angel's explanation is hat "the ten horns are ten kings that shall arise;" hat is to say, they will arise simultaneously at at period to reign over the ten confederated ngdoms into which Cæsar's Roman Empire ill at that time become divided, viz., Britain, rance, Spain, Italy, Austria, Greece, Egypt, yria, Central Turkey, and Bulgaria.

The plain language that "the ten horns are n kings," scarcely admits of the supposition at any one of the ten can be a queen; and, oreover, that statement that they are "ten ngs that shall arise, and another shall rise ter them," certainly implies that all the ten ll arise as kings at nearly one and the same ne; and the prophet deems it necessary to ate that an eleventh king, that then appears the scene arises a little later than the other n. Such particularity of description forbids e supposition that any one of the ten should ve arisen as a sovereign forty years previous some of the other ten. Yet we should have suppose that if our Queen were one of the n. Hence it is clear that when the ten confedated kings arise, a male sovereign will be reign- over Britain, and will be one of those ten. ese ten kings may, when they first appear, bout 1882-3, be republican presidents, but we line to think that Britain will not become a public until some three years later, and that therefore the ten kings at first may be crowned onarchs.

Now, if the end of this dispensation is about the year 1890, as prophetic reckonings seem unquestionably to show, then the ten kings must be reigning about A.D. 1882 or 1883, because they are predicted in Dan. 7 : 24, to appear on the scene seven years before the end, for after their appearance a little horn, or eleventh king, arises and subdues three of them, and then makes his covenant with the Jews for the period of the final seven years, according to Dan. 9 : 27.

Not only is the end of this age evidenced by the prophetic dates to be about A.D. 1890, but also the same conclusion is arrived at from the fact that Prince Jerome Napoleon, who seems indicated by various prophecies to be that eleventh king and future great Antichrist of the last days, will be sixty-seven years old in 1890, and consequently on this ground the end cannot be deferred much beyond the year 1890.

That a Gladstone Liberal Ministry may become extremely distasteful to the Queen, particularly if its home and foreign policy proves very different to that of Lord Beaconsfield, is evident from the fact that she is well known to regard with great admiration and favor Lord Beaconsfield and his policy, and to entertain a very marked and pronounced dislike to Mr. Gladstone and his policy. The omission of Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone from the list of those invited to the Duke of Connaught's wedding, at Windsor, in 1878, has been much commented upon, as one of various signs of royal disfavor toward the Premier, for no precedent could be found for leaving out an ex-Prime Minister on such an occasion. Yet this outspoken and honest man of the people, who has been despised and disliked at Court, is the very man whom the nation has delighted to honor, and whose party has been placed by an amazing preponderance of votes at the helm of the state, while Lord Beaconsfield, the Court favorite, is rejected by the nation.

THE ORDER OF COMING OCCURRENCES during the decade of 1880 to 1890, which will be the most eventful and momentous decade in the history of our world, will be briefly as follows: Unprecedented wars and revolutions will produce (probably by about 1883) the formation of the whole extent of Cæsar's original Roman Empire into an allied confederacy of ten kingdoms—the ten toes and ten horns—viz., Britain separated from Ireland, France extended to the Rhine, Spain, Italy, Austria, Greece, Egypt, Syria, Thrace with Bithynia, and Bulgaria with some enlargements (as explained in the foregoing article). Then there will be parcelled out of one of the four-horn kingdoms of Greece, Egypt, Syria, or Thrace, a little-horn kingdom—i.e., a small territory—such, for example, as Macedonia or Palestine, etc.—and a Napoleon (probably Prince Jerome Napoleon) will be appointed its ruler, and will thus become Daniel's little horn or sovereign arising out of one of the four horns, and predicted gradually to "wax exceeding great," and to subdue three of the ten kings, and also to make a seven years' covenant with the Jews about seven years before the end of this dispensation (Dan. 9 : 27). If the end is to be about 1890 he must make the covenant about 1883, but if he makes it after, the end will of course be proportionately later.

Then at the distance of eight months and ten days after the date of the covenant, the Jews will re-establish their daily morning and evening sacrifices in a rebuilt Jewish temple at Jerusalem, and thus commence Daniel's final 2300 literal days (Dan. 8 : 13, 14). Further on, at a distance of about two years, and a fortnight after the date of the covenant, there will occur the Advent of Christ into the aërial heavens to remove the resurrected saints and 144,000 translated living Christians to meet Him there, so as to escape the tribulation coming on the earth (see 1 Thess. 4 : 16, 17; 1 Cor. 15 : 51, 52; Rev. 14 : 1-5).

This astounding event will be followed by an unexampled revival of religion and universal preaching of the Gospel among the nations with new Pentecostal power (as depicted in Rev. 6 : 2, 14 : 6), until the great tribulation and worldwide persecution by the Napoleonic Antichrist commences in the midst of the seven years, and continues for the predicted term of three and a half years (Dan. 7 : 25, 9 : 27, 12 : 7; Rev. 11 : 2, 3; 12 : 6, 14; 13 : 5). The ten kingdoms, after being for a few months red republics, as prefigured by the crownless, scarlet, ten-horned wild beast coming up from the revolutionary "abyss," in Rev. 17 : 3–8, will become crowned monarchies for the space of the final three and a half years, as represented by the ten-horned wild beast of Rev. 13, with ten crowns on its horns, and those ten kings will give their power and strength to the Napoleonic Antichrist as their emperor, for he will "have power over all nations, and all that dwell on the earth shall worship him" (Rev. 13 : 5-8).*

This Napoleonic Mahomet will moreover sit in the rebuilt temple at Jerusalem, claiming Divine adoration (2 Thess. 2; Matt. 24 : 15), and his image, the abomination of desolation, will be set up in that temple and in numerous places throughout Christendom, and grievous penalties, and frequently death, will be decreed against those who refuse to worship it. Millions of people will be martyred throughout Christendom for refusing to bow before it, or to be marked with the number of his name, 666 † (see Rev. 13 : 8-18, 6 : 9-11, 15 : 2, 20 : 4).

The terrible plagues and judgments of the seven seals, seven trumpets, and seven vials, as foreshown in the Book of Revelation, will receive their final literal fulfilment chiefly during those final three and a half years, and the great tribulation will be intensified by the casting down of Satan and his evil angels from the atmospheric heavens to this earth for three and a half years, causing the announcement, "Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down to you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time" (Rev. 12 : 7-14). Our globe will, in fact, during those three and a half years, be a hell upon earth, in accordance with the prophecy, "Then shall be great tribulation, such as was not from the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be. And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened" (Matt. 24 : 21).

At the close of those three and a half years (which will be the second half of the Napoleonic-Judaic covenant seven years) Christ will personally descend on Mount Olivet at the battle of Armageddon and translate alive to heaven a great multitude of living Christians, and destroy the Napoleonic Antichrist and the false prophet, and cast Satan into the abyss, and commence His glorious millennial regin for 1000 years over the surviving inhabitants of the earth, who will be then converted, and will increase and multiply until the earth is filled with a teeming population (see Zech. 14; Rev. 7 : 9, 19, 20; Isa. 66, etc.).

---

* There will be three successive forms of the ten-kingdomed confederacy, or ten-horned wild beast: 1. When it primarily appears as the result of the coming wars, before the eleventh little horn arises, and subdues three of the ten horns, and consequently before the seven years' covenant. Later on, two years after the date of the covenant, there will distinctly exist ten horns at the time of the first fruits' ascension of watchful Christians—the catching up of the man-child, for the ten-horned dragon is to watch to devour it (Rev. 12 : 3–5). 2. When it becomes scarlet colored or red republican with the Scarlet Woman seated upon it—i.e., the then Papal-Mahometan Hierarchy seated in temporal power upon the ten nations as their State Church, drunk with the blood of saints (Rev. 17 : 3–8). This will be the condition of the ten-kingdomed confederacy during an interval of some months just before the final three and a half years. 3. When it becomes leopard-colored—i.e., monarchical, with ten crowned horns for the final three and a half years (Rev. 13 : 5). And then the Romish-Mahometan Apostasy will no longer be seated on it, but as a two-horned satellite, accompanying it. In this form it at last perishes (Rev. 19 : 19).

† 666 is the number of Napoleon's name in its Greek dative, inscriptive, dedicatory form, Napoleonti—thus—N 50, a 1, p 80, o 70, l 30, e 5, o 70, n 50, t 300, i 10—total 666.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 478.)

"A grand thing to do."

CHARLES turned his scheme over in his own mind, and talked of it to Julia and old Dunnit, cautiously at first, but with increasing pleasure every time he spoke of it. He would retain a good income for himself; but the bulk of the property should be made over to Ernest again. Mr. Wright approved of the plan heartily. He had always been proud of his nephew Ernest, though Charlie had been his favorite; and to see the former Clifford of Clifford once more, and immediately, would gratify his pride. Each one of his three counsellors encouraged Charles in his design.

Mr. Wright and he were discussing the preliminary arrangements when Charles was told that Ruth had at last revisited her old home, in order to see him. But though Ernest and Rose had described his condition to her, Ruth was taken by surprise when she saw the change that had passed over him. She was deeply agitated herself, for he was occupying her father's bedroom, and was lying on his bed utterly helpless, save for the feeble movement of the hand stretched out to her as she approached him.

His face was pale and worn, but it was more like Ernest's than it had been before; and his eyes looked up earnestly to hers, with a pathetic mournfulness of appeal in them. Ruth bent over him, and laid her lips gently upon his forehead, while her hand returned the faint pressure of his nerveless fingers.

"Thank you, Ruth; God bless you!" he exclaimed. He had known her, and almost worshipped her from his boyhood, and the tears started into his eyes as he looked up into her pitying face.

"I would do anything for you," she said eagerly; "Ernest and I will do anything in the world. You are our brother. There is nothing we are not ready to give up to comfort and help you."

"I am sure of it," he answered.

"Yes," she continued, stroking back the heavy hair from his hot forehead with her cool, caressing fingers, "I shall often be with you now. You shall not be left alone. Ernest and I have agreed that he shall be your steward and bailiff, to carry out your orders and attend to your interests; and as much as I can I will be your nurse.

"Ernest is fit to be a king," said Ruth, glancing round proudly at her husband, "but he will take the place of a servant to you, to take care of you, and your estate, and your people. You will know now that he is a good man; that he did not take your place to wrong you. As soon as you came back he gave up all to you of his own free will. My husband has always been a good, true man."

"Yes, I know it," said Charles, with a faint smile.

"Ruth is in a hurry to tell you our plans," said Ernest; "but you can think it over, Charlie. Clifford and Rockwood will want somebody to take care of them, and they are no more than I can manage well. Between you, you can pay me a fair salary, and Ruth and I can live here after you are gone home again. I should be close to you, and I should see you almost every day; you would be sure of having Ruth and Rose often. I think you will find it very much to your interest, when you come to look at it quietly."

"It's a good plan," interposed Mr. Wright abruptly and eagerly, lest Ernest's proposal should turn Charles from his purpose; "but Charlie's plan is ten times better. Sit down, my dear," he said, placing a chair for Ruth; "sit down, and let Charles tell you what he has proposed to do."

A short silence fell upon them. Ruth felt a little chill of disappointment, as if Ernest's magnanimous sacrifice of his own interests was being undervalued, and her clear dark eyes were fixed upon Charles's face inquiringly. He could not keep silence under their grave scrutiny.

"How long will it be before I could be taken home?" he asked, in the languid tones of pain.

"Months, perhaps," answered Ernest.

"Months?" he said mournfully. "No, never, till I am carried out dead. I may as well live here as anywhere else, if you call this living. Why should I undergo the agony of being moved? I'm not so fond of Clifford that I want to die where my poor old father died. I should think of his curses more at Clifford than here. No; leave me in peace here; I'll never go back to Clifford Grange."

"Who will live there, then?" asked Ernest.

"You and Ruth and your children," replied Charles. "I'm not a dog in the manger, to keep what I can never enjoy. Every one knows you are best fitted to be Clifford of Clifford, and I'm going to give it up to you again."

"No, no!" interrupted Ernest.

"Hold your tongue, Ernest!" cried Mr. Wright; "Charlie's in the right. You're not to be the only one to do a noble thing. Go on, Charlie, my boy. It's a grand thing to do; a noble, first-rate thing. You'll think of it many a time after it's done, and be glad and proud that you did it."

This little draught of praise acted as a stimulant to Charles's resolution. He met Ruth's earnest gaze with a smile, and spoke again with a stronger voice.

"I shall be glad to think of you both living at Clifford Grange," he said; "and, Ernest, I'm about to make over almost all to you. They say—Julia told me, and if it's not true you can say so—that the longer I live the weaker my brain will grow. It's an awful thing to think of. There will come a time when I might be foolish enough to do a rascally thing—such as leaving my lands away from you. Let me do a grand thing now, while I can. Perhaps God will let it be some atonement. It will be better for my soul, than if I kept all in my own hands."

"I cannot say anything now," answered Ernest, "but it is a grand thing for you to do. Charlie, my boy, I'd give worlds to have you my little brother again, and see you grow up master of Clifford. I would do more than I did to help you to be good and true. Would that one could recall the past!"

"Old Dunnit is eager for it," continued Charles, "and Uncle Wright approves of it. What can I do with lands and money? Let me have you and Ruth and Rose always near me; it is the only comfort I can have now. You shall call your eldest son Charles; and there will be a better Charles Clifford than I could ever have been. You cannot say anything but yes to it, Ernest."

But Ernest was in no haste to bring the question to a conclusion. He insisted upon Charles taking three months longer to consider his purpose, and to take the highest opinion as to the possibility of his future recovery. He had no desire to snatch hastily again the prize for which he had once forfeited his integrity. But at the end of that time Charles remained constant to his purpose.

There was universal joy in Clifford when it was announced that Ernest was coming back to the Grange as its actual owner. The circumstances of his reinstatement did not admit of any outward demonstrations of rejoicing; but the congratulations offered to him were fervent and deep. Old Dunnit was triumphant in his thanksgivings. William Britton felt as profound a joy as any one in welcoming back his friend; and Mrs. Britton expressed her rapture of delight, in terms as enthusiastic as if she had not tasted a moment's happiness since she had lost sight of Ernest and Rose.

It was autumn before Ernest would finally accept the settlement Charles was prepared to make, and before he found himself once more Clifford of Clifford. But already he had resumed his old life, as if he had never quitted it. The former routine, full of pleasant and congenial occupation to him, had closed round him, and filled up his days and weeks. There was only one change in his home; Ruth was in the place of his mother, at the head of his house.

Had he, then, paid the full penalty for his ol transgression? All the world was ready to forget it and blot it out of remembrance, now h was back again in his old sphere. In a littl while it would cease to note that Charles ha been Clifford of Clifford for the space of on short year. Had the dead past buried its dead

That which hurts us most in life is, that ther is no retracing of our steps, no calling back of th fugitive hours, no possibility of undoing tha which is once done. Every sin has an immorta existence. God alone can blot out sin. (Isa 44 : 22 ; Heb. 10 : 17).

Forgiven it may be, and forgotten for a while But while we live it can never be with us as i would have been had that sin never been born It meets us again and again through life; whispers to us in quiet moments; looks across th years to us with its pale, sad face, and in unexpected ways reminds us that it is ours; it belongs to us. It is the lie our own lips spoke the wrong our own hearts were guilty of.

Sometimes still, when Ernest met his frien William Britton tranquilly and contentedl trudging on foot, in any weather, to some distant corner in his parish, for no other purpos than to visit some sick old woman or look afte a truant child, it filled his mind with thought as to how it would have been with himself ha he remained the Vicar of Clifford, and continue to dwell in the little vicarage with Rose growing up beside him.

If he had explained the mistake that had bee made in burning his stepfather's will, Charl would have come home and entered at onc upon his inheritance; and he would have bee nothing else, if he remained in Clifford, than i poor vicar. He was the squire now, rightful and securely. Had he given too high a price f his possessions?

The payment was not to be remitted, becau he had at last retraced his steps into the narr pathway of integrity. There was a sleepi dread in the deepest recesses of his heart, th he had still the heaviest portion of his penal to bear. He talked and looked and acted as man free from anxiety; yet he was conscious a lurking anxiety which he dared not face. I was more fully occupied than ever; but in t midst of all his occupations he kept an alm stealthy watch over Rose, marking every chan in her face, and listening to every word s spoke.

Ernest's love for his daughter was somethi apart from all other love. She had been b while he was still in his earliest manhoo when he had no one else to love, after his fi hasty, boyish marriage had proved a mistake a blunder. Her mother's death had thrown child in utter dependence upon his care; a every stage of Rose's life stood fresh and cl in his memory.

He could recall a hundred images of her to mind. When his eyes rested upon her chan face, he recollected the rosy, merry girl, who filled the old rooms of the Grange with innoc fun and frolic; the questioning little child, w the shrewd curiosity of childhood, running at side through the village street; the small, h less baby lying in his arms, or sleeping in cradle on his study hearth. She represen every phase of childhood and girlhood to hi and his love for her was woven through through the tissue of his life.

It was quite evident that Rose was not reg ing her former bloom and strength in her na air. She spent a large portion of her tim Rockwood, as if she chose the stillness and gloom there in preference to her old home der its changed aspects. Before long the w over the cliffs proved too rough and fatig for her; and Ernest was obliged to drive round by the road, and leave her with mother when the weather was unsettled. began to miss her from his home often eno to feel what a blank would be there if she gone never to return. It was plain that it no longer homesickness that preyed upon h

(To be continued.)

ABRAHAM AND LOT.

S. Lesson for Aug. 8th—Gen. 13. Golden Text, verse 8. By Mrs. M Baxter.

WHEN " Abram went up out of Egypt, he and wife, and all that he had, and Lot with him o the south," he " was very rich in cattle and silver and in gold." But these riches were those of which God had spoken in His pro- me. " I will make thy name great," was the mise, but by reason of his prevarication aham's name was not great in Egypt ; " thou lt be a blessing " was not fulfilled where aham's want of candor must have rendered possible for him to speak with power about true and living and holy God. O let us are of any trifling with the truth, or any other nsistency which may shut our mouths and e it impossible to witness with a free heart he God of our salvation. Unconfessed sin ny kind, though it be but in a word or a pass- feeling, may clip our wings, so that we can- be free with God or with man until it is essed, forgiven, and cleansed by the blood hrist.

raham built no altar in Egypt. It was not mmunion with God that he left the land of ise, it was distrust of Him which led him e stratagem of denying his relationship to ife ; all this was human, and foreign to the f faith which God's Spirit had begun in But " he went on his journeys from the near to Bethel, unto the place where his had been at the beginning, between Bethel lai ; unto the place of the altar which he nade there at the first : and there Abram l on the name of the Lord." This teaches is great lesson. When there is any departure to God, there must be a coming back to the place where we were before there can be progress. This is humbling, but O ! how ary, to our proud and stubborn natural s.

ery sin after conversion is a treachery st the knowledge of God which we possess. now He is on our side, we know He has taken our cause, and if we fail it is be- we are untrue to what we know of Him, us there must be a coming back to the where we deviated from the straight line. thine eyes be straight on, and let thine s look straight before thee. . . . Turn the right hand nor to the left" (Prov. -27). But when we have turned to the right or to the left, the only remedy is to retrace eps until we come into the straight path there is no short cut by which we may re- he road without humiliation. Once re- to the land to which God had called him, the sacrifice, a type of the blood which th from all sin, the estrangement between am and his God was at an end ; he " called he name of the Lord."

Abraham was called upon to undergo a separation from his kindred. We read, also, which went with Abram, had and herds and tents. And the land was e to bear them that they might dwell to- : for their substance was so great that ould not dwell together." It would have an easy solution of the difficulty to part me of their substance, but alas this does sily occur to poor fallen human nature. d, " There was a strife between the herd- Abram's cattle and the herdmen of attle : and the Canaanite and the Periz- velled then in the land." That there be a strife between servants of God was enough, but in the presence of the un- for God's honor it must be stayed.

r day, the sin of disunion among God's s hindering the progress of truth in every There is too often, but thank God not death in our national churches. And o are raised up of God to witness to His d to be winners of souls, instead of re- ; in the churches in a position where they onstrued and despised, but at the same e bearing the Lord's burden, and receiving the education of humility and of suffering which bride souls must undergo—they take the easier path of separating themselves, making a little church of such as understand and appreciate them, and so foster the spirit of division. And thus it happens that in many a town there are children of God of different parties who will not so much as meet together in the same prayer-meetings, and the prayer of the Lord Jesus receives no "amen" from their hearts. " That they all may be one, as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us : that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me " (John 17 : 21).

It was Abraham who first regarded contention as intolerable : he said unto Lot, " Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen, for we be brethren. Is not the whole land before thee ? Separate thyself, I pray thee, from me ; if thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right ; or if thou will depart to the right hand, then I will go to the left." Separate thyself ; it must be Lot's doing—Abraham would not do it. If Lot preferred his riches to the atmosphere of such a household as Abraham's he must go.

This is just the kind of test to which many a converted soul is put. Lot was a righteous (i.e. justified) man (2 Pet. 2 : 7, 8), but self interest was yet strong within him. The world says it is every man's duty to look after his own interests, and to do the best he can for himself, and those who gain large fortunes through the carrying out of this principle are " highly esteemed among men," but how often " abomination in the sight of God " (Luke 16 : 15). Many see their way to getting rich, obtaining honor, etc., without absolutely committing sin, but they are denying by the whole course of their lives the very principle of Christianity " He that loveth his life shall lose it," they do not know it is to deny themselves, take up their cross and follow Christ ; the love which " seeketh not her own " is an unknown principle, discipleship, the following in the footsteps of Jesus, the living no more unto themselves but unto Him which died for them and rose again, all this is ground they have never trodden on. (John 12 : 25 ; Luke 9 : 23 ; 1 Cor. 13 : 5 ; 2 Cor. 5 : 15).

And Lot was such an one. He " lifted up his eyes and beheld all the plain of the Jordan, that it was well watered everywhere, before the Lord destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, even as the garden of the Lord, like the land of Egypt as thou comest unto Zoar. Then Lot chose him all the plain of Jordan ; and Lot journeyed east ; and they separated themselves the one from the other." Lot was the younger man ; had he possessed even natural refinement, it would have been becoming for him to yield the best of the land to Abraham. But the spirit of self dominated, and he chose the best for himself. " That was a good stroke of business," the men of this world would have said—" men will praise thee when thou doest well to thyself" (Ps. 49 : 1). But another Eye is watching, and the cleverness of self interest awakens no admiration, and receives no praise, from the presence of the God of heaven.

We read on, " Abram dwelled in the land of Canaan, and Lot dwelled in the cities of the plain, and pitched his tent toward Sodom. But the men of Sodom were wicked, and sinners before the Lord exceedingly." God does not waste words ; it is not for nothing that He thus describes the men of Sodom : " Wicked " were they, but as though the expression did not convey all His meaning He adds, " and sinners before the Lord," but even to this strong statement He adds exceedingly. And Lot, for the sake of gain was ready to pitch his tent near to such, and he did it by choice. Had he no fear of the influence of the men of Sodom upon his own herdsmen ? O how often do men, and even converted men, undertake a business which is detrimental to the souls of those who are employed in it.

How often do large manufacturers think more of the money which is to be procured by the employment of so many " hands" than of the responsibility of standing in relation to so many souls, or of the influence for God or against Him which the manufactory may have in the town. " Their inward thought is that their houses shall continue forever, and their dwelling places to all generations : they call their lands after their own names" (Ps. 49 : 11). But selfishness reaps its own reward. " Be not deceived," says the Apostle Paul, " God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. (Gal. 6 : 8). In the miserable earthly end of Lot we see how he reaped his reward.

But in all things which occur God is working out His own purposes. Abraham must be separated from all his kindred save Sarah, his wife, before the full blessing of the Lord could come upon him, and God made use of the very self-seeking of Lot in order that Abraham might be freed from him. " And the Lord said unto Abram after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward and southward, and eastward and westward : for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever. And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth : so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered. Arise, walk through the land, in the length of it and in the breadth of it, for I will give it unto thee."

And as surely as God gave Abraham the land of promise, so surely is everything ours which the Lord Jesus has assured to us. The power of Pentecost is ours by the unrecalled Word of the living God. The same mighty Spirit who brought thousands to the feet of Jesus out of Judaism, out of Greek philosophy, out of barbarianism, He is the same Spirit who dwells in those of us who believe. Why then are we not walking through the land in the length of it and in the breadth of it ? O instead of the sinful excuses for our want of power, instead of being satisfied when a mere handful of souls are led to the Lord, and they living a life far below their calling, instead of being content when one or two poor drunkards or lunatics are delivered from the awful power of the enemy, and in one or two cases sick people are healed, let us arise and walk through the length and breadth of our possessions, and learn at last to believe in our God and in the power of the name of Jesus.

The state of things around is crying out for a mighty lever to uplift the Church of Christ once again to her true level. The outward Church will remain as she is, " worse and worse " (2 Tim., 3 : 13), without doubt, but is there not a little remnant whom the Lord shall call ? (Joel 2 : 32), are there not here and there Simeons and Annas who speak to them who look for redemption ? We are children of Abraham, our very life breath is faith in the living God. O let us arise and walk through the land, for it is ours. God means all that He says, His Word is true from everlasting, instead of daring to doubt Him, let us dare to trust Him, and the inheritance of power which was committed to the Church on the day of Pentecost will be ours.

" Then Abram removed his tent, and came and dwelt in the plain of Mamre, which is in Hebron, and built there an altar unto the Lord." Hebron means fellowship. " God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto the fellowship of His Son Jesus Christ our Lord." " That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us ; and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with His Son Jesus Christ " (1 Cor. 1 : 9 ; 1 John 1 : 3). Fellowship is not giving and receiving, it is participation. Fellowship with God is nothing less than exchanging interests with Him, not only receiving sympathy from God, but also, with reverence, showing sympathy with God, moved by that which moves Him. Then at Hebron Abraham built anew an altar unto the Lord. For fellowship there must be a pure heart cleansed by the blood of the sin offering, and there must be the offering of ourselves, a living sacrifice unto Him, which is our reasonable service.

FOREIGN TOPICS.

A General European War Appears to be Imminent on the subject of the Greek Question. Cable reports show that never before has the condition of European diplomacy been in so critical a state. Mutual jealousies of the Potentates of Europe are complicated by the aspirations of the peoples, and a highly explosive state of affairs is the result.

Turkey's reply to the collective note submited to her as the result of the Berlin Conference, is of an evasive character, and it is plain that she will not voluntarily surrender the territory the Conference recommended should be ceded to Greece. The Great Powers are not in a mood to be trifled with, and there is a strong probability that great pressure will be brought to bear on the Mohammedan Government to force compliance. But evidence is lacking of unity among the Great Powers on the details of the scheme.

Russia is opposed to Turkey, but is not cordial in supporting the Greek claims. The Czar is desirous of pleasing the Slavonic section of his subjects, and they desire the formation of a Slav kingdom which would gradually grow into a strong monarchy; but as Austria and Germany both have large numbers of Slavonic subjects, they dread the influence such a kingdom would have on their own internal peace.

Meanwhile, Turkey and Greece are preparing for war. Turkey has applied for, and received, the services of some able German officers to assist her in organizing her resources, and some French officers are assisting in drilling the Greek army. Thus the two old enemies are again confronted in the coming struggle. England has taken so prominent a part in the negotiations that she cannot honorably abstain from participation in war, should it unhappily break out, and Italy, possessed with an absorbing land-hunger, may also fight, hoping for a reward. Thus all the important European Powers are involved. It may be that God in His merciful providence will overrule these ominous signs and, for the present avert war, but that the situation is grave cannot be concealed, and the study of prophecy appears to indicate the probability of such a general outbreak being near at hand.

Afghanistan has been Formally Handed over to the new Ameer with the approval of the British representatives, and the British forces will complete the evacuation of Cabul in three weeks. The present ruler, Abdurrahman Khan, is a cousin of Yakoob Khan, the ex-Ameer, and belongs to an elder branch of the family. His father was the eldest son of the famous Dost Mohammed but was set aside in the succession by his younger brother, Shere Ali. The correspondent of the London Times describes the new Ameer as a man of great knowledge, industry, and strength of character, and adds: "For the moment it seems that we are really on the eve of a satisfactory settlement, and as if, in supporting Abdurrahman Khan, we have found an Afghan Sirdar with whom an agreement is desirable and possible." Thus, unless Russian intrigue is again set on foot, it may be hoped that friendly relations will be maintained between the Afghans and their powerful neighbors in British India.

Nihilism in Russia has been so Quiet of late that many people supposed it to be extinct, but a telegram from the St. Petersburg correspondent of an English journal says: "It must not be supposed that the revolutionary spirit is exorcised. A large proportion of the nihilist leaders have been captured or driven abroad, and the intelligent classes are more hopeful and contented under General Melikoff's wise and liberal rule; but the roots of the social malady are deep-seated, and the nihilists have not lost either hope or energy."

Eugenie, the Widowed and Childless Ex Empress of France, has completed the melancholy journey she so anxiously desired to perform. She arrived in South Africa shortly before the anniversary of her son's death, and proceeded on foot into the valley where his body was found, following precisely the track taken by the officers who went in search of the corpse. The road was stony and rough, but she persisted in walking. In the distance gleamed the white monument, thrown into sharp relief by the dark background, but it only seemed to catch the eye of the Empress when she got to the bank of the donga. Then she lifted her hands as in supplication toward heaven, the tears poured over her cheeks, she spoke no words and uttered no cry, but sank slowly on her knees. A French priest repeated the prayers for the dead, and the servant, Lomas, who had been an eye-witness, went through the sad story of what had happened last year. At sunset her companions retired at her request, and the bereaved woman spent the whole night in prayer on the spot where Prince Napoleon fell. On the following day she went to Fort Napoleon, and thence to Rorke's Drift, and on the fifth day visited the field of Isandula, and prayed with the English women who had come there to mourn their husbands and brothers. On her way back to England she visited St. Helena, where Napoleon I. spent his last days and died a prisoner of war.

The Statue of Prince Napoleon, which it was designed to place in Westminster Abbey will, it is expected, be erected in the Royal Chapel, at Windsor. Queen Victoria and the Royal Family wished it to be put in Westminster Abbey, and Dean Stanley's consent was obtained for its admission, but a decided opposition was manifested against the proposal by an influential section of the public, and finally it was condemned by a vote in Parliament. Dean Stanley therefore withdrew his consent.

Belgium has for a time, at least, thrown off all allegiance to Rome. If Roman Catholic Ultramontanism had a chance of asserting its authority anywhere with success it was in Belgium. Its population is principally Roman Catholic; and if Rome fails to assert her authority there, then she must, indeed, feel that the forces of modern society are arrayed against her. The Belgian Government has repeatedly tried, but failed, to get any assistance from Rome in its efforts to overcome the hostility of the Roman Catholic clergy to the laws of the State, and especially to the new Education Act, which requires the Government inspection of every school. The result is now that the Belgians have broken off all official communication with the Romish Court. Rome is, in the eyes of all Europe, rebuked and discarded by the Power on which she most relied for sympathy and support. Whether or not the priests, Jesuits, and communists will combine presently to raise a revolution again in Belgium remains to be seen.

Mr. Henry Varley has been Arduously Engaged in preaching Christ in Northampton, England, the town which elected Mr. Bradlaugh to Parliament. He has dealt out a succession of well-directed blows against "Bradlaughism," showing the immoral tendency of Bradlaugh's writings in undermining national righteousness, and the insult offered to the nation by the return of men who blaspheme the name of God.

The Suicide in Paris of an American Lady is reported, under deplorable circumstances. She went to Europe about three years ago accompanied by her son, a boy thirteen years of age. Her husband is described as an earnest Christian, with whose manner of life the lady, unhappily, had little sympathy. Speaking of him afterward she said, "He was much too religious for me, and was not satisfied unless I went to church all day Sunday, but he was a good kind man. I never ought to have left him." But at that time she desired to shake off the restraints of his control, and accordingly prolonged her stay in Europe. There she met an English nobleman, the Marquis of Anglesey, with whom she became intimate, and who turned her head by promising to make her Lady Anglesey if she obtained a divorce from her husband. Her son returned to America, and shortly afterward a divorce was procured. Lord Anglesey, instead of keeping his promise to marry the lady as soon as the divorce proceedings were settled, proved faithless and married the widow of an English Peer. The deserted woman, on hearing of treachery, obtained poison and committed cide.

It is strange that women should put fait the promises of such villains. A man enough to trifle with the holy laws of Go the marriage question is a dastard whose p ises are worthless. Even if these sins of ality resulted in a pleasant life, there would be eternal punishment to follow, but God mercifully ordained it, as a warning, that ea misery is also the inevitable consequence of grievous sin. The present state of society remarkable fulfilment of the description wrote of the perilous times to come in these days (2 Timothy 3 : 1-6).

A Missionary's Peril.—Mr. Spurgeon sa this month's Sword and Trowel: "Mr.
sends us an account of some of the diffic that have to be encountered in the Camer West Africa. Two of his native assistants returning from Victoria, and when near they encountered a tornado. The ligh struck the boat, and killed four of the eigh on board, including the two teachers, who both excellent young men. Some time Mr. Lyall himself had a somewhat similar rience, though providentially on that occasi lives were lost. He was going to visit a eighty miles distant, when his boat was c in a tornado. For nearly three hours they do nothing but drive before the storm, and it was over they were glad to rest and dr clothes and provisions. During the nigh tail end of several tornadoes' swept over and in the morning they only escaped bei stroyed by another by running out to sea, ceeding which was accompanied with very risk. Mr. Lyall says that he has been la with fever and dysentery twelve times, ar his wife has suffered so much from the causes that she is obliged to return to Eng

Malarial and Typhus Fevers Prevail i salem, owing to the overcrowding of the small dwellings, the total neglect of sanit cautions, and the scarcity of pure wate Pools of Solomon would furnish abunda plies, but Moslem fanaticism will not per eigners to build an aqueduct.

A Musician was Amazed by a Gentle Edinburgh who had invited some visi his house. When they were all at din host opened with asking a blessing on th
There was an eminent musician present never seen such a thing before. He was ished at the prayer, and a little while said to the host, "I see you asked a bles fore dinner for Christ's sake. Who is C And the good man simply said, "He is Jesus Christ, the beloved Son of God, dear Saviour." The other remained sil shortly after, the manly confession, utter such simplicity, was the means of the m conversion.

Contribution towards the Debt on mage's church received from Mrs. N. J.
Brownsville, Oreg., $1.

The Second Volume of The Christian
comprising Nos. 37 to 62 (July to Dec., 1879 procured, elegantly bound in cloth, at t
Price $1.75.

The Prophetic News and Israel's W
(London) for July may be obtained at the o
Christian Herald. Price six cents.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works ar
at the office of the Christian Herald, a low as to bring them within the reach of Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with p
of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Pl
Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth,
The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volu sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David,
cal exposition of the book of Psalms, five v
as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon's Birth-
This popular gift-book contains a suitab selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for in the year, with a blank space opposite graphs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs.
appear at their respective birthdays. Th elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cent
tances should accompany orders.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

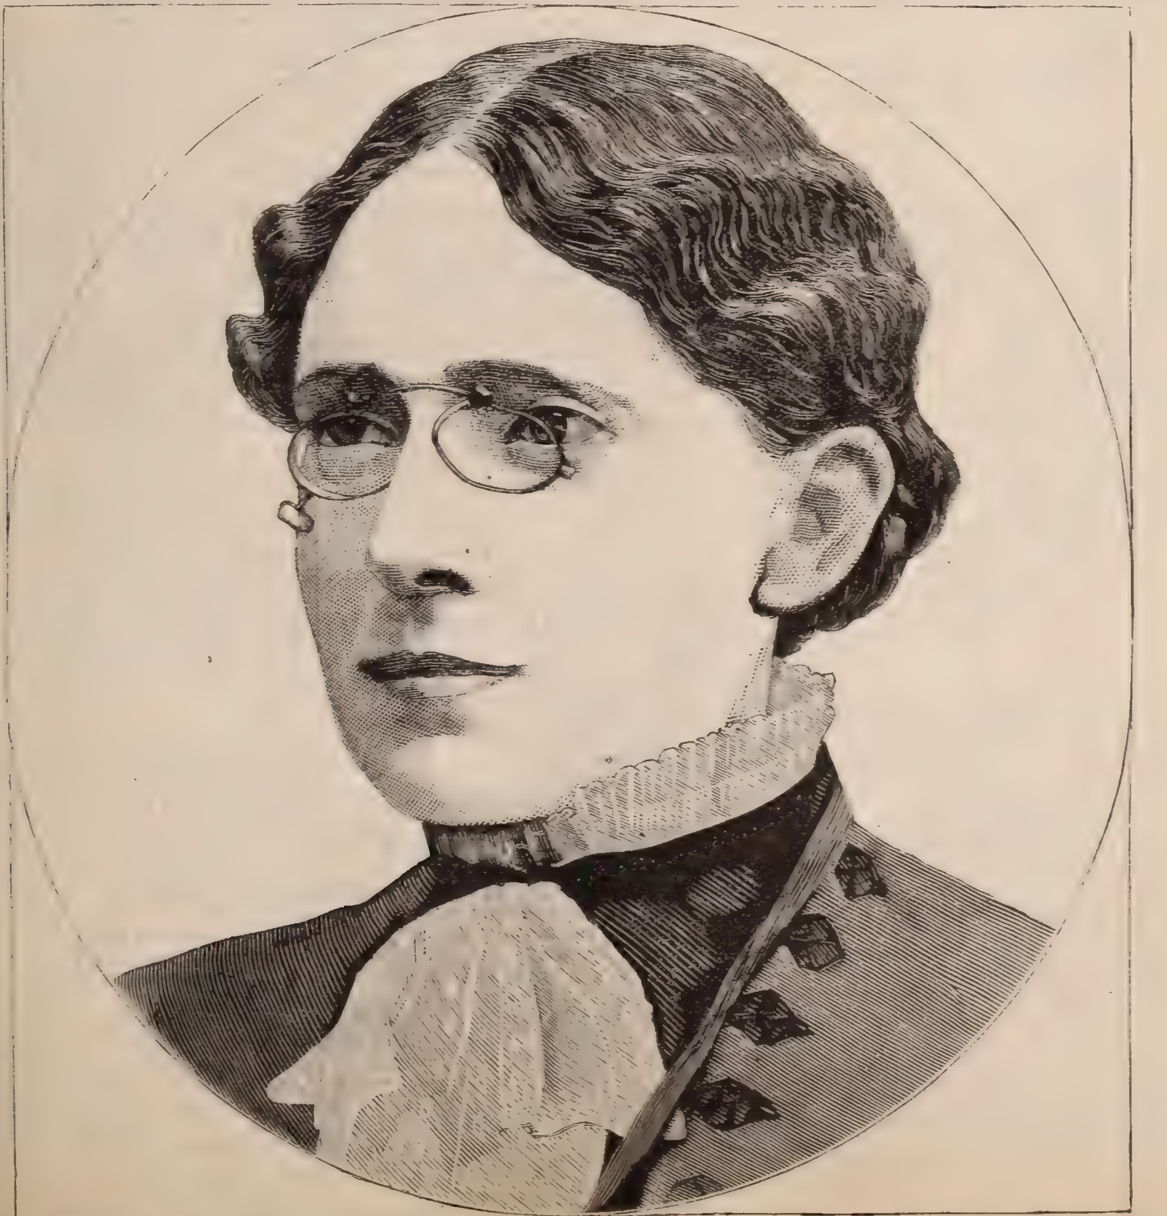
ublished at 63 Bible House, New York City, and 2 Ivy Lane, London. Edited in London by the Rev. M. Baxter, in New York by Mr. B. Aitken.

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. ALMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also occasionally a Sermon by the Rev. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL.D., the celebrated Methodist Minister, Rev. W. M AY AITKEN, or some other Eminent Preacher; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Single Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, AUGUST 5, 1880. 14th Year. No. 32—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

RTRAIT OF MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, with Sketch of her Life.
E VALLEY OF DECISION. An Evening Sermon by Dr. Talmage.
CHESTER TOWER. A New Serial Story by Miss M. A. Paull (Continued).
DRINK-MADDENED FATHER.
THE REST OF SALVATION. A Sermon by Rev. W. Hay M. H. Aitken, M.A.
CURRENT EVENTS: Gen. Hancock's Letter—The Seawanhaka Verdict—A Spanish Bull-fight in New York—A Drunkard Saved by a Dream—A Daring Rescue of a Child from a Convent, etc.
PROPHETIC EXPOSITION. Compiled by Rev. M. Baxter (Continued).
MEN BEWITCHED. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon—An Inebriate and his Child.
A WEIGHT OF WEALTH (Continued).
Abraham and Melchizedek. S. S. Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter—A Sailor Boy's Dream of Home.
FOREIGN TOPICS: A Disaster to the British in Afghanistan—The Irish Famine Ended—Belgian Traffic in English Girls—Protestantism in Spain, etc.



MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, President of the Women's National Christian Temperance Union.

MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Childhood at Forest Home — Mary Willard — "Nineteen Beautiful Years" — "Graveyard of the Pets" — The Artists' Club — Remark in Mary's Journal—The Family at Janesville—Removal to Illinois—Baptism of the Sisters—The Home Broken Up—Miss Willard in Europe—Beginning of her Public Life—Professor and President—The Temperance Crusade—An Important Convention—The Temperance Union—Its Progress—Miss Willard President—Memorial to Mrs. Hayes.

As the first of lady orators, as one of the foremost advocates of the temperance cause in Europe and America, and as the President of The Woman's National Christian Temperance Union, Miss Frances E. Willard needs no introduction to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

The most important period to know about, of a life that we wish to study, is the childhood, and that is also, in one sense, the most interesting period. But it is also the period about which it is usually most difficult to obtain reliable information. So we may congratulate ourselves that in the present case there is a book written by Miss Willard herself, sketching the life of a beautiful and talented sister, who died at the age of nineteen.

In that book, "Nineteen Beautiful Years," published by Messrs. Harper & Brothers, New York, Miss Willard has indirectly disclosed the circumstances of her own early training with a life-like reality that might be looked for in vain from sources more suggestive of the information wanted.

We learn there that the subject of this sketch, and her brother and sister, were reared on their father's farm at Janesville, Wis., described as "one of the loveliest villages anywhere to be found away from the hills of New England," "nestling amid the profuse foliage and deep shadows of an old oak-forest on the sunset shore of Lake Michigan." The very name of the house and farm was poetical—

FOREST HOME.

It is not too much to say that no one thing exerts a greater influence upon some characters, an influence of the kind that makes the difference between a great mind and a narrow one, than the locality of the home in childhood. We say "some characters" because some others are so constituted that they never could have seen, in forest, mountain, and stream, anything but an enlarged backyard, dust heap, and puddle. If such characters happen to be reared in the open country, the only beauty which they see in the landscape is the shortest cut to town; and any shred or rag from Solomon's wardrobe has for them a glory surpassing all the lilies of the field.

But the Willards were not that sort. Both the subject and the author of "Nineteen Beautiful Years" were daily intoxicated with the music and the painting, the joy and the tumult of God's uncorrupted creation. The younger sister died in her girlhood, having realized what a sinless world might be; the other lives to sway the multitude with an imagination fed upon the free winds and the still woods, the open day and the boundless night, the world of verdure and the swarm of life.

They had pets, as such children will have them. Not a dry and dusty canary in a round cage in an airless room; but genuine specimens of the fauna of the place, from lake-margin and forest, hedge row and hillside. These were watched in their haunts or petted on the farm, and finally laid away in the

"GRAVEYARD OF THE PETS,"

with tiny tombstones and childish inscriptions.

Before they were in their "teens" the two sisters indulged their intellectual tastes by organizing themselves into an Artists' Club, after the most regular models, with resolutions and provisos, setting up a studio and throwing it open on set days to "the public," i.e., to mother, brother, and an occasional visitor. Sketching excursions were formally undertaken, with bows and arrows, a clasp-knife, two shepherd's dogs, and a goat laden with provisions for lunch.

We are told, in the introduction by Bishop Foster, that the parents settled at Forest Home for no other object than the education of their children—a notable proof of the discriminating solicitude of which Miss Willard must have been the object in her early years. And another evidence of the refining atmosphere of the household is to be found in the fact stated about Mary, that when a mere schoolgirl she could not be betrayed into the smallest breach of a school regulation, not even as much as to open a book or speak a word during lesson hours.

The following remark in Mary's journal, written in her eighteenth year, shows at once a cultivated mind, a thoughtful habit, and an intense Godward purpose, which suggest the rare gifts the elder sister has been spared to exhibit in her later years: "I know very few young gentlemen, however religious they may be, who speak of God, or of our duty to Him, when they are talking with their lady friends. I wonder if they are so much mistaken as to think that we are too trifling to listen to anything beyond the idle gossip of the day."

We will now take leave of "Nineteen Beautiful Years"—beautiful, we cannot doubt, as regarding both sisters—and give a brief sketch of the life of Miss Frances. The lady's parents were natives of New England, but Miss Willard herself was born in Rochester, N. Y. She was the third of five children, four girls and a boy, two of whom died in infancy. The survivors were Oliver, Frances, and Mary. When Miss Willard was three years old her parents moved to the West, and five years later settled at "Forest Home" for ten years.

Bishop Foster, who was a minister in Janesville part of that time, writes thus of the family: "The son was already a graduate, with honors, of one of the first colleges of the country, and now pursuing a course of theological study; the two daughters, just blooming into womanhood, occupied a front rank in the classes of the excellent institution of which they were pupils.

"Daily, as I sat in my study, I saw them pass and repass with books in hand—books of metaphysics, literature, and science; both delicate of build, the younger tall and slight. The pallor of much thought and earnest effort had fixed its unmistakable impress upon them. Even in youth the inward fire of love of learning was consuming them. . . . Sabbath morning found them regularly in the lecture-hall, most attentive, most thoughtful among the listeners. Above their years they were appreciative."

When Miss Willard was eighteen years of age her father sold his farm, and, with an eye still to the educational interests of his children, moved to Evanston, Ill., where the two girls graduated in the Women's Department of the Northwestern University, the son having gone forth as a minister of the Gospel before the change. There Miss Willard and her sister were by baptism on the 5th of May, 1861. There in June of the following year Mary died, and there, five years later, the father died.

ADMITTED TO THE CHURCH

The loss of her sister had powerfully stirred Miss Willard to "redeem" her own time (Eph. 5 : 16), and carry out the purpose for which God had sent her into the world. Accordingly, in 1868, the year after her father's death, she took a journey for study and observation to Europe, the Holy Land, Turkey, Greece, and Egypt, which extended to two years and a half. She accompanied Miss Jackson, of New Jersey.

Prior to that she had, after her graduation, taught in Pittsburgh Female College, and also acted as Preceptress of Geneva Wesleyan Seminary; after which she was called to a Professorship in the Women's College, Evanston. In 1866 she was Corresponding Secretary of the Women's Centenary Association, that aided in building Heck Hall and the Garrett Biblical Institute.

It was in the East that her sympathies were first roused about the condition of women, an on her return to America she essayed to gi public addresses on female education. Her u affected style, graceful diction, and music delivery attracted notice at once, and sl speedily attained the reputation as an orat she now enjoys. She has lectured extensive during the last eight years, and at the time Mr. Moody's first great public appearance, s labored zealously in connection with his Tab nacle meetings at Boston.

Miss Willard is equally felicitous in expressi with her pen, and besides issuing numerc pamphlets and reports, she has contributed various magazines, and is now one of the cor sponding editors of Our Union, published at Bible House, New York. In 1878 she unc took for a time the chief editorship of Chicago Post, suddenly vacated by the death her brother, the young student mentioned another part of this sketch.

We have said that she was first a graduate afterward a professsor of the Women's Colleg Evanston, Ill. But on her return from abrc in 1871, she was elected President of the Coll Two years later she was made Professo Æsthetics in the Northwestern Univers Her whole soul, however, was in the tempera cause; so she resigned both positions and joi the crusade movement.

How that movement took shape as Woman's National Christian Temperance Un with which Miss Willard's name is now identi has been well told by the lady herself, in "History" of the Union. From that pamp we abridge the following account.

HISTORY OF THE W. N. C. T. U.

Everybody has heard of the Women's perance Crusade, which began in Decen 1873, continued about six months, extended half a dozen of our most populous states, enlisted hundreds of thousands of Chri women. A phenomenon no less remarkable ceeded the crusade.

The women who went forth by an im sudden, irresistible, Divine, to pray in saloons, became convinced that theirs was no easily won victory. But they believed in and in themselves as among his appointe struments to destroy the rum-power in Am and so, though they had ignorantly hop take the enemy by a sudden assault, they bu on the armor for the long campaign.

In the spring of 1874, the women wh been engaged all winter in crusading calle ventions for consultation in their resp states, and from those conventions re several state organizations, called "State perance Unions," which were confederate the Women's National Christian Temp Union at a great convention held in a P terian Church at Cleveland, Ohio, in Nov 1874.

Delegates from sixteen states attend Convention, which was presided over by Jennie F. Willing. A plan was organi reach every hamlet, town, and city in th An appeal to the women of this count provided for, and another to the girls; to lands beyond the sea. A memorial t gress was ordered. The publication national temperance paper, to be con exclusively by women, was agreed up financial plan was arranged, asking a cent from members of the Union. Lastly, a committee was appointed on temperanc among children.

The official board of the Union was ele follows: Mrs. Annie Wittenmyer, of delphia, President; Miss Willard, Corr ing Secretary; Mrs. Mary C. Johns Brooklyn, Recording Secretary; Mrs. M Ingham, of Cleveland, Treasurer; a Vice-President from each state represente Convention. The closing resolution of the tution declared the main principle of the "Resolved, That, recognizing the fact t cause is and is to be combated by determined and relentless forces, we wil g in Him who is the Prince of Peace, meet gument with argument, misjudgment with tience, denunciation with kindness, and all r difficulties and dangers with prayer."

The following remarkable words were used in speech by a prominent member of the Conntion. "Woman is ordained to lead the nguard of this great movement until the nerican public is borne across the abysmal nsition from the superstitious notion that 'cohol is food' to the scientific fact that ohol is poison; from the pusillanimous ncession that 'intemperance is a great evil' the responsible conviction that the liquorffic is a crime."

n the first year of its history the W. N. C. T. ion added six state organizations to its numbs, including scores of local unions; establed as its organ a monthly paper called The men's Temperance Union, which has now ome a semi-monthly journal, and is called Union; sent a memorial and deputation of men to Congress, asking for inquiry and slation in regard to the liquor-traffic, the norial having hundreds of thousands of atures; issued a pamphlet of "Hints and os" concerning methods of work; and blished itself among the active and efficient cies for the extermination of the liquorc.

he Union is now in the seventh year of its ence, and embraces twenty-five states in its sentation. The Sixth Annual Report, d at the end of last year, is a noble record ithful, persevering, and successful work. lls of the election of Miss Willard to the dency of the Union by 99 votes out of 143, te which was immediately declared and ded to be unanimous.

ss Willard's latest honor is her appointment esident of the Commission chosen by the vare Temperance Union to carry out measfor the testimonial to Mrs. Hayes, which nentioned in last week's CHRISTIAN HER- The Commission consists of nineteen and gentlemen, the Hon. Wm. E. Dodge Vice-President, and the Hon. Neal Dow, ps Simpson and Jaggar, and Governor St. being members.

---

e Carpenter and Colporteur.—On the ean Continent recently, a colporteur, just he dinner hour, entered the house of a ter. The man was taking his afternoon nd the first thought of the colporteur was disturb him; but feeling this would be fulness to the man's soul, he awoke him, ked, "Will you not buy a Bible?" "I Catholic," he replied, "and do not want and he turned round to sleep on. "That you say," was the reply; "but God says, e, thou that sleepest, and arise from the nd Christ shall give thee light.'" The arted and sat up. "I woke you pur" continued the colporteur, "without whether you liked it or not; and in like God, through His Word, is awaking you our spiritual sleep." "But we are forto read that book of yours," he said. ' was the rejoinder; "what right has a o forbid what God commands? Obey ther than man." The man was silent. he said, "A thing I had long forgotten o my memory. Twenty-five years ago I king as a journeyman in Hamburg, and a of mine used every night, when we our lodgings, to read his Bible, and he just what you have been saying, to od rather than man.' I can hear his voice now; and perhaps you have been evive the impression before it is too late. will read it. Death may soon come. other day a ladder fell with me on it, as a miracle I was not killed; but it may en God's will I should be spared to s you have urged me to do." With ought a Bible, with the words, "Ah, I ad done this long ago!"

THE VALLEY OF DECISION.

An Evening Sermon by Dr. Talmage, Preached on Sunday, June 6th, 1880.

"Multitudes, multitudes, in the valley of decision."—JOEL 3 : 14.

The Battle of Armageddon—Rendering a Verdict—Three or Four Questions—I. Keep Sin or Give it Up?—A Good Exchange—The Man in the Prison—II. Take Christ or Reject Him?—An Awful Responsibility — III. Christian or Unchristian Association?—The Dying Woman's Baby—IV. A Christian Deathbed or the Sinner's Departure?—Passing Away—A Midnight Cry in Belleville—Charlie's Deathbed—"Halfway up the Stairs"—V. A Glad or a Despairing Eternity?—Suffering in the Next World—A Prospect of Heaven.

THE prophet was looking out, and he saw the fortresses of light and darkness confronting each other. Austerlitz, Sedan, Chilon, Marathon, Thermopylæ, Gettysburg, were great battles, but were nothing as compared with this great Armageddon. I know not where the great battle is to be fought, whether in a foreign land, or in this land; but when I was passing across from Chamounix to Martinique I once saw a place which I thought would be fit for judgment, a great rock for the throne, a glorious rock on all sides, making an amphitheatre where nations might sit and receive their doom.

But where this great Armageddon itself is to be fought I do not know, and do not even expect to know, but there is to be such a great battle; and it is not to be a drawn battle, but, when settled, settled so that all the nations of earth and heaven and hell will understand it. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision.

Well, my friends, this house to-night might take that nomenclature. I run my eye across this audience, and I see neither in the gallery, nor on the main floor, one trifling, not one careless soul. Whatever may have been the state of mind when we entered this house, we feel now we must decide in regard to the future, and every man is asking himself, Where shall I go when some shall go to the right and others go to the left? Stupendous moment! The issues of eternal import are at stake. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision.

When I was studying law I used often to be in the court house, and I noticed the most thrilling moment in the court house is when a jury is about to render a verdict. The court-house is thronged. The testimony has been given; the attorneys on both sides have spoken, the judge has given his charge; and after a long retirement the jury come in, and the clerk says, Who will speak for you? And the jury say, the foreman. The clerk says, Foreman, do you find the defendant guilty, or not guilty? And the moment between the question of the clerk of the court and the answer by the foreman of the jury is the most thrilling moment in all the history of the court house.

Well, my friends, God is empanelling to-night

A GREAT JURY.

Not twelve men, but thousands and thousands. All the evidence has been given on both sides, the voice of God has been heard, the Judge of quick and dead has given the charge, and you are about to render the verdict. Solemn and thrilling moment! Oh, Lord God, help me, and help this auditory, in the valley of decision.

There are three or four questions we are going to settle to-night.

I. THE FIRST QUESTION

we are going to settle it as between keeping sin and giving it up. When a man becomes a Christian he does not have to give up the world in the sense that he surrenders all enjoyment. Where is the place that gives to the man of the world anything that the Christian may not have? You tell me of things that are wrong for a Christian; then I say they are wrong for anybody.

When a man becomes a child of God he is not put on a limit. Talk about the self-denials of those who are Christians. They have their self-denials, but where a Christian has one self-denial, the man of the world has a thousand self-denials. The Christian is not demanded to give up anything that is worth keeping, while, on the other hand, the man who refuses Christ denies himself peace of conscience, denies himself the joy of the Holy Ghost, denies himself the feeling of safety in regard to the future, denies himself the glories of heaven. Which has the most self-denial?

I go into a factory, and there are a hundred wheels. I find only three or four of them are at work. I say to the head man of the factory, Why do you have these three or four wheels working, while all those others are idle? He says, The tide is low, the water is low, this is all the force we have to work this machinery. I come in some day and I find all the hundred wheels at work. I say to the head man, Why this change? He says, the water has risen, the tide has risen, there has been a great shower, and we have plenty of power now.

I come into that man's soul, before grace enters it, and I find part of his nature in operation, but I start him; the water is low, the power is low. I come into that man's soul after the grace of God has entered it, and I find all his faculties, all his capacity, in full play. I say, What is the difference? Oh, he says, divine grace has taken my heart. In other words, a man is a thousandfold more of a man after Christ has taken possession of him.

But I do not deny there are sins he will have to give up. Indeed, all positive sin he will have to give up. Keep your sins and you perish. You are deciding to-night whether you keep sin or reject it. Why, sin will put gall to your lip, it will twist a whip of scorpions for your back, and when you are on the cold mountains of death it will pitch you out into the blackness of darkness forever. Oh, sin is a hard master. There are people in this house who might testify to that fact.

I had a friend who went into a prison one day, and a man incarcerated there crawled up toward the wicket door. Both his feet had been frozen off in his last intoxication; crawled on and climbed up and held fast to the wicket door, and with trembling lip he said to my friend, "Oh, sir, the way of the transgressor is hard. There is no satisfaction in sin."

There are a thousand people here to-night who will bear me out in this statement. For a while the sea may be smooth, but after a while the squall will come, and your peril will follow, and to the hoarse sea-trumpet there will be added the cry of each soul. Down with the hatches, lash fast the mast. And the maniac sea will spit out infuriate, and there shall be a voice in the wave, and a voice in the wind, and a voice in the wreck, saying, "The end thereof is death." Between sin and holiness you will decide to-night. Which will you you have? Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision.

II. There is another question you are deciding, all without an exception, and that is, whether you will TAKE CHRIST OR REJECT HIM.

Now if he were repulsive, and of an antagonistic nature, if he had a hard hand, if he had only chastisement for those who come to Him, I could not stand here and invite you to Christ. But oh, He is the fairest of the fair; with kind looks, gentle face, He has filled earth and heaven. He cured the epilepsy, the pleurisy, consumption, dropsy. He bared His brow to the thorns, His foot to the spike, His back to the scourge, His soul to anguish. And He comes here to-night after suffering in your behalf, O man! O woman!

He comes with bleeding brow, with bleeding back, and bleeding hand, and bleeding feet, and kneels down before you, and asks for your love. Is there one in all this house who will take the responsibility of saying, "Back into the wilderness with Thy sorrow, O Christ! I don't want Thee to reign over me. I choose the world rather than Thee. I despise Thy sufferings. I have no interest in Thy tears. Away with Him, away with Him!" Between taking that Christ into your heart, and rejecting that Christ forever, you decide to-night. You are all deciding: multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision.

III. There is another question you are deciding, and that is, whether you will have Christian or un-Christian ASSOCIATION?

Now I make no apology for the faults of the Church of God. There are mean men in the Church, proud, mean, inconsistent men; we don't deny that—we cannot hide that fact; we don't want to hide it. But there are mean bankers; does that make you ashamed of being a banker? There are mean merchants; does that make you ashamed of being a merchant? There are mean lawyers and doctors; do they make you oppose medicine or law as a profession? Oh, no; then why do you denounce Christianity because mean people believe in it and profess it?

Ah, you don't despise it. Was there not somebody you very much loved who believed in this religion, who belonged to the Church of Christ? They were washed in this baptism, and they drank of the wine of the holy sacrament. You could not understand when you were boys and girls why your parents went so far to church, went to church along a lengthy muddy road, and went through the storm. Oh, no.

Now you understand it; it was because they could say: "How amiable are Thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts! If I forget Thee, O Jerusalem! let my right hand forget her cunning. If I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy, let my tongue be shrivelled and palsied, and cleave to the roof of my mouth." Those dear old souls have gone up to glory. They want no more church membership there; they have joined the hundred and forty and four thousand, and the thousands of thousands that are now chanting the praises of the Redeemer. Oh, you can't despise your father's religion, you can't have any contempt for your mother's dying experience.

Oh, come into Christian association, come into the Church of God. I would rather have my name not taken off the Church record than to have it inscribed on the proudest triumphal arch that was ever erected for the returning victor. I want to live among Christian people; I want to die among them. When my last moments come, I want the elders of the Church to stand around me and pray for my departing spirit.

"Then to my raptured ear
Let one sweet song be given;
Let music charm me last on earth,
And greet me first in heaven.
There'll be no more sorrow there;
There'll be no more sorrow there;
In heaven above, where all is love,
There'll be no more sorrow there."

Oh, come into the Church of God!

A Christian woman was dying, and they sent for me to come and administer the sacrament. I gave her the sacrament. "Now listen," she says, "I am going to die; I want all my children in the Church. Baptize them. Here is the baby, baptize him first. Here are the other children." I baptized them. Years passed on, and when I was preaching in the far West once, at the close of the service a young man came up to me, and he says, "You don't remember me, do you?" I said, "No, I have never seen you before, that I know of." "Well," he says, "my name is George Parrish."

At this I said, "You are the baby I baptized by your mother's dying pillow." "Yes," he says, "I am the one; and I came up here after the sermon, and I thought you would like to know that I have given my heart to God." "Oh," I said, "I knew you would; with such a mother as you had you could not help but give your heart to God." Oh, come into the Church of Jesus Christ. We will do you good. The Lord hath promised good concerning Israel. Between Christian and un-Christian association you choose to-night. Thousands are choosing. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision.

IV. There is another question many of you are settling. You are all settling it, that is, as between a Christian deathbed and

THE SINNER'S DEPARTURE.

I do not suppose there are fifty people in the house who have come to seventy years of age; I do not suppose there are thirty who have come to seventy years of age; I do not believe there are twenty. Why? It is because life is a gauntlet and only a few can run it. Passing away are we.

Every throb of the pulse says, Passing away. We take out our watch to see the time, and the tick of the watch says, Passing away. Some of you will fall from the mast, and be dashed out. Some of you will cough your life away with hasty consumption. Some of you will go down under the sharp knife of pleurisy. Some will fall under apoplexy. But all will be gone. We must die, we must die. But there is a glorious and there is an ignominious way of getting out of life. Death to some is going down, to others it is rising. You are choosing to-night between the sinner's deathbed and the Christian's deathbed.

In Belleville, N. J., my first settlement, I heard that one of my neighbors was very sick. But I heard at the same time that he did not want to see any Christian man, especially did he not want to see any Christian minister. But I felt I must go, I must see him. I went into his room, and though he had the mark of death upon him he was sitting up in the bed, a knife in his hand, eating an apple; and as I entered the door, he lifted the knife as though to throw it at me. And I said, "Stop, stop, I only came in as a neighbor, to talk with you a little while; don't do that." Then he lay down, and turned his back to me; and I prayed for him, and prayed, but he gave no attention, but interrupted me again and again.

I went away from that most unsatisfactory visit. A few weeks after, one summer night it was very hot. All the people in Belleville got up and put their windows down. Why did they put their windows down that night? That man whom I had gone to see was dying, and he cried aloud until his voice rang through the street, and the people could not endure the sound, and his one cry was: "Lord! L—o—r—d!" No wonder they put down their windows that hot summer night. It was a sinner's deathbed.

I have seen the Christian die. One in Philadelphia said, "I move into the light." A bright and beautiful young man in my parish in Philadelphia was another, and his mother came to me, and she thought he was insensible, or perhaps had already gone. She said to him, "Charlie, do you know me?" He made no answer, and then she said again to him, "Charlie, do you know me?" And he opened his eyes and said, "Why mother, why did you call me back? I was half way up the stairs." The death of the righteous that was.

Oh, how Paul went through it! I hear his sword clanging on the shield, as he cries out, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand; I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give me." Which deathbed will you lie on? The sinner's deathbed, or the Christian's deathbed? You are choosing now, to-night. You are all choosing. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision.

V. Yet there is one more question you are all settling, and that is, whether you will have a glad or a despairing

ETERNITY.

I know some people say we will all come out at the same place. It don't make any difference in this world, we will come out at the same place; it don't make any difference what our principles are, we will come out at the same place; it don't make any difference whether we have crimes or virtues, we will come out at the same place.

Every man's common sense says that can't be so. Two roads going in opposite directions car not meet. The Bible says so plainly that won't insult you by continuing long in the quo tation, that all those who reject God will be d stroyed without remedy, that there is no hop for those who die impenitent; that as the tr falleth so it must lie; that if a man don't repe in this world, he will never repent. "Oh," sa some man, "that wouldn't be like God, to ha suffering in the future world."

Why, what a poor argument you make? there not suffering in this world? Is that a proof that God is not good? Explain the hospitals, these Brooklyn and New York ho pitals. Suffering here and there is to be suff ing hereafter. The Bible says it; I must lieve it, or throw my Bible overboard. Alas, those who reject God and perish. The harv is passed, the summer is ended, and I am saved.

Suppose they should cry out that: "I sat in Brooklyn Tabernacle that first Sabbath nigh June 1880. I had the choice put before me. I my duty so plainly that no one could tell me m plainly my duty. I decided in the wrong di tion." There is a fair land which you woulc like to enter. I will not stop to describe Gather all the pearls of the sea, all the diamc of the field, all the glory of the mountain; s out that word heaven; gather all the voice your Christian departed, your glorified depa friends, put them side by side, and in tha radiation of illumined countenances read word heaven.

Why, standing here, it seems if we coul all the beauty of it heaved into one throne, set in one jasper wall, surrounded by one p gate, and as though we could hear the surf of the crystal sea, and the clapping of the bals of the eternal orchestra, and the risi hosannahs higher and higher as the waves c sea dash clear over the top of the Eddy lighthouse; higher and higher, the voi many waters. O my fatherland! shall I eve thee?

"There shall I bathe my wearied soul
In seas of heavenly rest,
And not a wave of trouble roll
Across my peaceful breast."

[The prayers of the readers of this Journ requested for the blessing of God upon its E in America and England, and those whose se articles, or labors for Christ are printed in i for its weekly circulation of more than copies to be blessed by the Holy Spirit to t version of many sinners and the quicken God's people. Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. T especially request prayer every Sunday on behalf of their labors.]

ROCHESTER TOWER.

By Miss M. A. Paull.

(Continued from page 486.)

Mrs. Anerley's Visitor—A Proposal—The Council—Mr. Ferguson Explains.

A sweet, pale face, oval in shape, wit dark eyes full of pathetic sadness, a c raven hair, making the cheeks look still contrast with its glossy blackness, a sligh of middle height, an aspect gentle and w yet timid, almost hesitating, white an tinted gray articles about the head and ders, relieving the heavy crape-edge mourning-dress she wore.

This was the form that met Emily A gaze as she opened the door in answer tc ring at the bell of No. 12 Eglinton Terr evening in the spring succeeding Consta parture.

The two young ladies looked at eac and then the stranger spoke.

"Oh, it must be Miss Anerley, I thin

"Yes," said Emmie, recovering her "I am called Anerley. Will you walk i

The lady entered. When they wer in the parlor Emily said, "Mamma wil in a few minutes;" and then she pa added, "I have not the pleasure of knowing your name."

"Stanley—Salome Stanley. I have come from Mr. Ferguson; he wished me to call."

Emily wondered less. Miss Stanley had probably some good work in hand and wanted elpers, and though their means were so much more limited now than formerly, Emily Aner-ey had found that there are often effectual means of aiding a good cause besides furnishing ounds, shillings, and pence, however necessary nd important money undoubtedly is.

When Mrs. Anerley entered, her daughter in-oduced Salome Stanley to her.

"You will wonder at my intrusion," said that dy, in a low, sweet voice, which seemed ex-ctly to match her lovely face and form. It is ithout doubt a terrible drawback to a woman's eauty of her voice is sharp or harsh, and musi-l tones linger long and pleasantly in the ears those who listen.

"We are glad to have the privilege of your quaintance," said Mrs. Anerley kindly, for e was won by the appearance and manner of is unexpected visitor, though decidedly puz-ed as to her errand.

"I had better come to business at once," d Salome Stanley. "Mr. Ferguson thought just possible that you might be able to help . He says you intended in a few weeks to ve this pleasant house, where everything looks delightfully comfortable without stiffness," d she glanced around with a sad, sweet smile; ut that it is not let to any other tenant, and n have not yet met with any other house that n like. Now, I am very anxious to find a home London. I am in a position to pay suitably, and ugh I should never wish to intrude my society on you, I should be so very glad to be spared trouble of housekeeping by boarding with ; and oh, it would be such a blessing, re-se as I am, to feel there were good, true-rted people living in the house with me!"

o Mrs. Anerley and Emily her words seemed ave a story behind them, but she was not one e easily questioned. The dread you had lest should suspect you doubted her precluded stioning. She went on:

Is it possible, do you think, for you to take in?"

Your friends—" began Mrs. Anerley, and paused.

I must ask you to kindly refer to Mr. Fer-on, and let him act as my friend in this mat-e" rs. Anerley looked a little displeased and led. What had Mr. Ferguson to do with very attractive young lady?

I know his father well," continued Salome ley, "and the elder Mr. Ferguson advised n coming to London to apply to his son."

It is such a new idea to me," said Mrs. rley, better satisfied by this explanation, ut I really must have a little time to think it , and to consult with my children."

You have another daughter?" said Salome ley, looking at Emily, with that sad, sweet of hers.

Another daughter who is away in Germany," Mrs. Anerley, with an involuntary sigh, d my son here in London, to whom I partic-y alluded."

Please say I would not at all intrude myself you," said the stranger. "I am quite ac-med to live a great deal alone, but I do for the quiet of a home to surround me, as I feel sure this would be." She seemed udder a little as she spoke. "I shall be ad to pay exactly what you think proper for here. May I ask Mr. Ferguson to call to ou about it? Do you feel just a little bit ed to try and let me come?"

The soft, sweet voice was full of persuasive rness. Mrs. Anerley was not able to re-er. She could have found it in her heart s "Yes" at once, but for the remembrance r. Ferguson and Cecil. Cecil most of all ined her. Her son might not like anything kind, or he might be fascinated by this attractive woman. He was of a very impressionable age, and in either case the plan would be objectionable.

Both ideas crossed her mind in that quick manner in which our minds take an inventory of surrounding circumstances.

Mrs. Anerley had been more and more conscious since Emily and herself had begun house-hunting that she could never again find a dwelling which would please her so well as that one in Eglinton Terrace, which had been her beloved home, with her beloved husband, for almost ten years. The thought of leaving it and its endeared associations had become extremely painful, and had seemed to tear open afresh the wound of widowhood, which as yet was scarcely covered by the one sad year of time since Mr. Anerley's death.

She had at first thought she should be interested in a change; now she dreaded it more than she confessed to any one.

Salome Stanley did not prolong her visit, and when she left Mrs. Anerley and Emily had, as was quite natural, a long talk about her and the subject she had suggested. They had arranged to write their decision, whatever it might be, to Salome Stanley at her hotel in a few days, when they had been able to consult with Mr. Ferguson and Cecil on the matter.

As soon as Cecil had returned, and they were gathered at table for the evening meal, Mrs. Anerley began:

"Cecil, should you approve of our taking a lady to board, and of our remaining in this house instead of getting another?"

"A lady to board, mother? But that might not be so very particularly easy. Only a very singularly nice lady would be agreeable to you and Emmie, who must have so much of her company."

"The lady who has offered—" began Mrs. Anerley, but Cecil, with a look of great surprise on his pleasant face, interrupted her to exclaim,

"You don't mean to say some one has been here already to propose such a thing?"

Whereupon his mother and sister proceeded to give Cecil a full description of Salome Stanley.

"Mrs. or Miss?" he questioned, rather mischievously, after he had had some faint idea given to him of the loveliness of her person, the sweetness of her voice, and the refinement of her manners. Mother and daughter now looked at each other and smiled.

"We never asked her," said each almost at the same moment.

"And she did not say," continued Emily. "Even her address is simply Salome Stanley. How very strange!"

"Salome!" repeated Cecil. "It seems a queer name for an English woman, and yet it is uncommonly soft and pretty and womanly. Now I think about it, I wonder more parents don't call their girl-children Salome. Well, mother, if you like this lady, and her references prove good, it would be a capital idea for her to come, and for us to stay here. Removals are all very well in prospect, but they make a dreadful amount of bother and trouble when you come to the skirmish of the actual affair. And we shall never, I suppose, get any house we should like quite so well," he added, with a gentle tone in his words.

So without further hesitation Mrs. Anerley opened her desk to write to Mr. Ferguson to ask him what he knew of Mrs. or Miss Salome Stanley.

"That appears to me to be the only queer thing about her," said Cecil. "Why should not a lady naturally tell you exactly how to address her?"

"She might not have thought of it, my dear," said Mrs. Anerley.

"Or she may be sick and tired of the word 'Miss,'" said Emmie; "I think addressing with the name simply has become more ladylike since there is now no dignity whatever in the prefix."

"The use of it is that you know whether a member of the feminine persuasion is married or in a state of single blessedness," said Cecil.

Before Mrs. Anerley had begun her note Mr. Ferguson looked in, as he so very often did, to see how they were all getting on. He had had a letter from his aunt Gretchen at Aix-la-Chapelle, and she gave a very good account of Constance. "Also," said Mr. Ferguson, "I called to speak to you about Miss Stanley, and to inquire whether she had been to you yet."

Mutual explanations followed; then Cecil said, "You called her Miss Stanley, Mr. Ferguson. Do you know, my mother and sister were neither of them in a position to enlighten my ignorance as to her condition of life?"

"Of course, she must be Miss Stanley," said Mr. Ferguson, looking just a little puzzled as Cecil said this. "She lived with her father, old Counsellor Stanley, and I never heard she was married. Of course I do not know very much about her, and I must frankly acknowledge to you that something mysterious attached to her and her father; but I will tell you all, and you must judge for yourselves.

"My father many years ago had a boy come to school to him called Stanley, who was a clever, studious lad, in rather delicate health. He worked too hard, being very anxious to pass some competitive examination. The Stanleys were south-country people—Somerset or Devon, I think—and the lad's father was a barrister of good position and ample means. But I was away so much from home that I don't know all the particulars of the story as well as I might otherwise have done. However, the poor fellow fell sick of brain fever, and was nursed most tenderly by my mother. His father and sister, this Salome Stanley, came to him when he was ill, and remained over his death, which took place in a week or two."

"How sad!" said Emmie.

"Very sad, Emily. They took the body home, and buried him in their family vault. After about four years, much to my parents' astonishment, the father and sister came and took up their abode not very far from the school. Mr. Stanley had given up his profession, and had, as it appeared, also given up all pleasure and interest in life.

"My mother and father of course called upon them, but, though they were received cordially, they were never asked to prolong their visits. Reports were rife in the town about these mysterious inhabitants. Neither father nor daughter ever made their appearance out of doors, except at chapel and in their garden."

"Perhaps he was a miser," said Emily, "and afraid his treasure would be stolen."

"That was one of the rumors about them," assented Mr. Ferguson. "But it seems difficult to believe that a man with abundance of money, and only, as far as we know, the one child to leave it to, should take the trouble to hoard a fortune. Still, his only son's death may have so affected the poor man's brain as to make him partially insane."

"At all events," said Cecil, whose chivalrous temperament was considerably awakened by the story, he had listened to, "it was a most horrible dreary life to condemn a young and beautiful woman to share."

"Very true, Cecil," answered Mr. Ferguson. "I do hope Miss Stanley's future may be much happier than her past. But I think her confidence will be hard to win. If Constance were at home now."

"What?" queried Mrs. Anerley; "what oculd Constance do for her?"

"Constance has such a strong nature," replied Mr. Ferguson, smiling, "that I think Miss Stanley might have felt glad to lean upon her."

"Every Christian, dear Mrs. Anerley," said the minister's kind voice, "has some One to lean upon, an arm that never fails, a hand that is never weary, a heart that is ever full of tenderest compassion."

"Yes. Thank you for reminding me," she answered, humbly; "I am so foolish, so ready to forget that."

(To be continued.)

THE REST OF SALVATION.

A Sermon by the Rev. W. Hay M. H. Aitken, M.A.

The 116th Psalm, specially the 7th verse: "Return unto thy rest, O my soul, for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee."—Psalms 116 : 7.

Anxious Souls who go Wrong—Why the Wife Loved her Husband—I. The Natural History of Love—Great Distress—Encompassed with Difficulty—An Awful Moment—Half-Way to Deliverance—II. An Exhortation to Rest—The Great Object of Faith—The First Revelation of God—Grace and Mercy—The Stage of Struggling—III. Barriers to Rest Removed—The Young Man who was a Good Swimmer.

We have here a Psalm of spiritual experience which I daresay closely tallies with the experience of many whom I am now addressing. You will observe that the Psalmist begins by stating the cause and source and spring of his love for God. The question is often asked, do we love God? Well, my brothers, what is it that will make us love God? We love Him, says St. John, because He has loved us: but it is not until we have grasped that love and appropriated the blessed effects of that love to our own souls that we shall be in a position to love Him. The beginning of love is gratitude, and it is gratitude that is here, described in the language of the Psalm—"I love the Lord because He hath heard my voice."

Do you love the Lord for the same reason—in the hour of your mercy, in the midst of your desire, did the cry of your anguish penetrate into the heart of God? Has the right hand of the Almighty been stretched out to deliver you from your distress? If so, I don't wonder that you have begun to love the Lord. But if you have not yet applied to the Lord for that deliverance which your case requires, and not accepted the provision of His bounty, then it is not a thing to be surprised at that you do not love the Lord.

I meet with a great many

ANXIOUS SOULS WHO GO WRONG

just at this point. They tell me: "I do not feel that I love the Lord. I cannot stimulate myself into anything like spiritual affection." No wonder. How is it likely you should love God by a mere effort of your own volition? You cannot love your fellow-men after that fashion. Love must have a course, and you go the wrong way to work when you begin with the effect instead of endeavoring to see that the cause is present which induces the effect.

Some little time ago I said to a seeking soul who was troubled just at this point, "How did you begin to love your husband—by making a desperate effort to love him, making up your mind you would love him, and so ultimately force yourself into the possesion of that natural affection?" "No," she said "it was not in that way." Well, I said a few words to her and did not see her again till a week or ten days afterward, when she came up to me with a very bright face and said: "Mr. Aitken, I want to tell you how much your remark has helped me. When I went home that night I thought it over. My husband has been dead many long years, but I can remember it all as though it was yesterday. First of all I began to love him because I admired him. He was a noble, upright, straightforward man. Then my love increased toward him because he was kind to me. But the thing that really made me love him most was that I found he loved me."

I. That is the ordinary natural history of love. We may look at God and may begin to love Him after a certain fashion simply because we admire Him, but it is not until we begin to receive a kindness from him, begin to experience in our own lives what His bounty is, till we are the recipients of the mercy He loves to bestow, that our love begins to be true and deep and strong. Do not begin by endeavoring to create a feeling of love; but begin by fixing your gaze on God as revealed in the text, until you can see what your duty toward Him is, and then you shall find that there is that in God which charms your affections, lays hold upon your minds, and binds you to His Eternal Self.

You will observe it begins in a description of great anguish and distress. It was a dire moment in the history of this Psalmist—"The sorrows of death compassed me and the pains of hell got hold upon me," and he found what? Peace and rest? No. I think that there are many of us who have had something of the same experience. We felt as if the sorrows of hell compassed us round, and we were right in thinking so. We do not know much about hell, but we are justified in believing that the sorrows of hell are the sorrows of the sinner's life on earth fully developed, the harvest of the seed which the man has sown—yes, the sorrows of the heart. He is awakened to a sense of sin and finds out the plague of his own nature which may justly be described as the pains of hell.

Further, you will observe, he states that these sorrows of death and pains of hell compassed him round. There is a moment in the experience of the awakened soul when it feels as though it was just hedged in on every side like a wild animal that has been enclosed in a net and rushes hither and thither and finds every possible effort thwarted at every corner, and struggles in vain to make its escape. I dare say that is the experience of some of you. "The sorrows of death compassed me round about," and no further, "the pains of hell got hold upon me." A terrible thing that is. The stern grip of those sorrows makes you feel as though your helpless soul was seized by a mighty power, and all your efforts to escape from its fatal grasp leave you still a prisoner.

It is an awful moment in a man's experience when he realizes what it is to be grasped by the pains of hell. Under these circumstances, the Psalmist does what almost any of us would do—he calls on the name of the Lord. Here was his prayer: "O Lord, I beseech Thee, deliver my soul." It is

A VERY NATURAL PRAYER.

Have you yet offered it? There are some who are not wise enough to go thus far, and it only increases the peril of their case more and more deplorably. Dear friends, if you have got an awakened heart, if the sorrows of death and the pains of hell are laying hold upon you, pour out your plaintive cry in the ears of God: "O Lord, I beseech Thee, deliver my soul."

When a man has got to that point he is in earnest, and when a man is thoroughly in earnest you may be very sure deliverance is not very far off. To have the cry for deliverance extorted from one's heart is half-way to deliverance. Yes, though everything may seem to be against us, and though it seems at first sight as if our cry was addressed to the ears of one who has no sympathy with us, yet you may be sure when that cry begins to rise, the Lord hears it, and He will in His own time give the answer. But how is it to be given.

II. We pass on now to the exhortation which the Psalmist proceeds to address to his own soul, and this is based upon the contemplation of the character of God. "Gracious is the Lord, and righteous; yea, our God is merciful. The Lord preserveth the simple." These are the characteristics of God upon which the Psalmist fixed his eye. Now I advise you to do exactly the same. If you have got to the point of crying out for deliverance, just go and fix your eye on the great object of faith. What do you think about God? Ah! many of us are in a state of bondage and misery and helplessness just because we have a false idea of God. We have an idea that God keeps us waiting, writhing in agony and helplessness and despair. We may build up barriers between God's mercy and our need, but while we may thus employ ourselves, whatever else God does, this He never does.

A STEP FARTHER,

When the father saw the prodigal son returning, he ran to meet him. God is always ready to run to meet us. At the same time, God has His own method of conveying the blessing, and if we won't have it, we must thank ourselves if we do not get it. Now, the first revelation of God is, God is gracious, the source and founta of all free favor. If everybody had whisper that in the ear of Queen Esther as she enter into the presence of the King Ahasuerus, wh a consolation it would have been to her; b look at the poor trembling woman. She know that her life depends almost upon a look.
that monarch frowns upon her she dies; if smiles she lives. If somebody had been able whisper in Esther's ear: King Ahasuerus is f of favor to you, what a burden would have be taken off her mind.

My friends, it is no whisper and fancy, bu revelation from on high, in the clearest a most unmistakable way that the Lord is gr cious. The saints in glory all bear witness to and every weary sinner that comes to the cr and lays his burden down finds peace and p don reach his soul, and goes forth upon his w a new man, a ransomed soul in Christ Jes and every such person is ready to endorse statement which the Word of God here make "Gracious is the Lord."

He is more than gracious. His grace is n mere attitude of favor, but it takes the form Omnipotent Mercy. "Gracious is the Lord righteous; yea, our God is merciful." mercy of God you see is His grace put int different form, as it were, His grace flowing ward the recipient and carrying salvation al with it. It is the grace of God which bring salvation to every man, as St. Paul puts That is His mercy. "Gracious is the Lord righteous." Not only merciful, but also ri eous, in His very mercy remembering just not passing over sin in such a fashion as to l
the impression on the mind of the sinner sin is a matter of no concern to Him, and while He has fulminated terrible threats ag sin, He is quite willing to pass it over if only make application to Him to do so.

Were God to adopt this attitude toward He would be in point of fact fixing a pren upon human guilt, and thus the mercy of would be the source of universal demoraliza
But God will not have it so. Merciful is Lord and gracious, truly, but He is somet more, and that is righteous. As I look yonder cross I learn that God is right God in His own person—for Christ, remen is one with the Father—God in His own son has vindicated His own law. God i own person has demonstrated to the eyes what sin deserved. God in His own perso endured the penalty that belongs to my gu order that it may be possible for me to tak stand as one who is dead to sin and now unto righteousness; and I am now in a po to claim the pardoning love of God, not m because God is gracious, but also because is just. He is faithful and just to forgiv sins of the man that clings to the cross of and the glorious revelation of the love of to man in the Gospel means just this.

THE END OF IT ALL

is just this, that God can be just and yet j
the man that trusts in Jesus.

Well, now, you are seeking after the Fix your gaze on the person of Christ, a Christ see the everlasting Father; and a gaze at Him, then with the clear light bursts forth from His presence resting you, then, I say, turn round upon your soul, and thus address it: "Return again thy rest, O my soul; the Lord hath dealt tifully with thee."

Now, with regard to this phrase, I wan to notice that faith is usually described effort. In one sense, it may be truthful scribed so. At the same time, the express very misleading, and one of the great d ties with the awakened soul is that so time is taken up with one effort and a effort, that it becomes impossible for it the rest which God designs it should enjo fact, that is merely a truism. It is obvi cannot rest while we are working hard—to say, if I am working hard in order to my salvation, I cannot enter into rest w spect to my salvation. A formal prayer may be ttered without much trouble, but when the soul enters into praying it is hard work. "O Lord, I beseech Thee, deliver my soul." A cry of that kind, wrung from the heart's inward desire, speaks for a good deal of inward exertion —the excitation of all the moral forces of our nature, I may say.

And then, from praying we very often pass on o what I may describe as

THE STAGE OF STRUGGLING.

We are struggling to make ourselves what we would like to be. Our hearts are very hard, so we set ourselves to work to endeavor to make ur hard hearts soft—a very difficult process, ou know. Or perhaps we do not feel sorrowful enough for sin, and we struggle to do so. We think over our sins, and try to make ourselves hate them, but we do not; and we go on truggling, and try to produce that state of soul hich we think God demands. And then from truggling to make ourselves feel our sin, we ass on to endeavor to make ourselves believe. We read in our Bible: "Believe on the Lord esus Christ, and thou shalt be saved," and so e set to work struggling to believe.

If I have heard one person say it, I think I ave heard thousands say it—"I am trying to elieve;" and they do try, so very, very hard. ow, what does the Psalmist say? He obviusly begins by struggling, but he goes on to mething better. He takes a view of God, and asps these three great facts—that God is acious and righteous, and then His graciousss and righteousness blend together in one ream of healing, and "God is merciful." nd as soon as he gets this view of God, he rns round upon his poor, weary, tortured soul, d says: "Enter thou into rest, O my soul.

BE STILL.

Cease from your tumult. Give up your struging, you have been working hard enough, you ve been laboring wearily enough: enter thou o rest, O my soul." Why? For the Lord th dealt bountifully with thee. The wonous liberality of God has already anticipated y wants. He has brought within thy reach that thou canst possibly require. "Enter ou into rest, O my soul."

ear seeking brother, you are anxiously iniring, "What must I do to be saved?" You ve been toiling and struggling so wearily. ell, just turn round upon that poor, tortured ul of yours, and say: "Be still. Cease from your struggling, and enter thou into rest, O soul." What is it to enter into rest? I read the Epistle to the Hebrews that "He that ereth into rest hath ceased from his own rks, as God ceased from His."

nly, you know, we cannot look at our own rks and declare they are very good, bese they are very bad. All our struggles, all efforts to mend ourselves, all leave us just ere we were before, in helplessness and ery, until the eye rests upon a happier ob—as God looked at the work of creation, so eye rests upon the work of redemption. We e at yonder cross. We hear this voice of row; we behold the great World Victim red, and as we behold Him bow His head in agony, at last that voice of power leaves lips,

"IT IS FINISHED,"

He gives up the ghost.

s I see the shadows of death gathering round brow I say, "O my God, it is noble work Thou hast accomplished"—even nobler and nder work than He performed when He ed creation into existence, when He set the ld in its orbit, and clothed it with virgin uty. It never cost Him pain or suffering to a world into existence; but it has cost Him and suffering to redeem a world from h, and He has done it, and as perfect was work of His creation, so perfect is the work edemption. And as the Father looked at work of creation and said, "it is very d," and just left it alone, so I look at that k of redemption and say, "it is very good," and just leave it alone. I cannot improve upon it. I can only say, "God hath dealt bountifully with me." There are a great many things He might have given me; but He has given me something better than all. He might have made me the ruler of the planetary system; and yet without Him I should have been miserable in the planetary system. He might have given me the gratification of all my lusts and desires, and after all there would be an aching void in my nature. I cannot satisfy myself until my soul is able to grasp that wondrous provison which exists for me in God.

III. But how are the barriers to be removed? They can only be removed by a gift; and there is only one gift that can bring God within my reach, and that is the gift of God's own Son. I look up into my Father's face and I say: "Thanks be to God for His unspeakable gift;" and as I adore His love I am in a position to exclaim: "The Lord hath indeed dealt bountifully with me;" and inasmuch as He hath dealt bountifully with me, this poor, sad, storm-tossed soul of mine may enter into its rest at last. If the dying lips of Christ conveyed the truth, then finished the work actually is; and if it is not, then all the tears, and all the groans and struggles and efforts that you can add to it will never finish it. But glory be to God, "it is finished," and because it is possible for me just to step on that sure foundation, not to struggle, but to rest—calmly, sweetly, peacefully to rest in Jesus. Shall I repeat to you some lines which have been beautifully expressed by a living poet:

"Rest weary soul:
The penalty is borne, the ransome paid;
For all thy sins, full satisfaction made.
Strive not to do thyself what Christ hath done;
Take the free gift, and make the joy thine own.
No more by pangs of grief and fear oppressed, Rest, sweetly rest! rest, sweetly rest!"

Will you do so.

IS GOD SATISFIED?

Great God, art Thou to be satisfied, and not I? Wilt Thou accept the work of Thy Son, and I not accept it? Oh! meet every doubt and fear in the heart as it arises with that one overwhelming thought—glory be to God—He is satisfied. God trusted Christ to save the world, and I may trust Christ to save my soul. Will you do it?

There was a young man some time ago in India, who just before he started went to see a minister of the Gospel with an old friend of his. They had dinner together, and after dinner they drew their chairs up to the fire and began to talk. "My dear John," said the minister, "we may never meet again. You are going out to a distant country and I would like to ask you before we part company, Is it all right between you and God? Supposing you were to be shipwrecked on the journey, would it be all well with you?" John hung down his head as he said, "I wish I could say it would. For years past I have been thinking about these things and doing everything I know how to do, but I do not seem to get hold of what other people have got."

They talked on for a little time and at last the minister said: "John, can you swim?" "Oh yes, I'm a very good swimmer." "Could you always swim?" "Why, what a ridiculous question; did you ever hear of anybody that came into the world a swimmer?" "Well, I don't know that I did; I ask you the question. Do you remember the time when you could not swim?" "Perfectly well." "Did you ever know the time when the water would not bear the human body?" "It would always do that." "Exactly. You were quite persuaded that the water would bear up your body?" "O yes, I believed that." "And then the next thing was you jumped into the water and splashed about and went down to the bottom, did you not?" "That was exactly it." "And all the time believed the water would bear up your body, did not you?" "Yes." "But it didn't?" "No."

"Do you remember how you learned to swim?" "Yes, I think I do. I was in the water one day and some fellows told me just to throw myself right on my back, and put my head back as far as I could and never mind whether I floated or sank, but just to lie there and make the slightest possible motion. I did so, and to my astonishment found my feet come up from the bottom, and I was floating. I had no difficulty in learning to swim after that."

"Well, all the time you believed that the water would bear you, but every time you got into the water you began to splash about and struggle, and down you went to the bottom. At last you just got wisdom enough to carry out in a practical form what you already knew. You knew the water would bear you; you rested and found yourself floating. John! was there ever a time that you did not believe that Jesus Christ would save your soul?" "Certainly not." "Has there ever been a time when you dropped into His arms as you dropped into the water—when you threw yourself unreservedly into His arms?" The tears came in his eyes and he said: "Ah! I see it now." "John, will you do it now?" So they knelt down together, and he trusted Jesus then and there.

That is what I want you to do at once. John rose up with a peaceful smile on his face, grasped the minister's hand and said: "Thank God! I see it at last.

"IT IS ALL RIGHT.

"I am not afraid to go to India now. I am not afraid to die." He went forth to that distant land and bore testimony to his Master for those long bright happy years before the Lord called him to go on high. Dear brothers, have you learned to float? Have you trusted yourselves to Jesus' hands? If not, will you do it now, this solemn hour while we are all here together? Ah! believe me, there is no thoroughfare to hell through the arms of Jesus. Glory be to God. Now, will you rest yourself into salvation, instead of struggling yourself into salvation? Do you see the difference? Will you stop all this exitement of your energies, the straining of every muscle of your being, and calmly fall back as I did when I was a boy eleven years of age, and say, "It is finished?" Glory be to God, he that believeth hath ceased from his own work, as God ceased from His. Shall we kneel down and tell the Lord so?

A STRANGE DISCOVERY OF A SON.

Many years ago, in the days when sweeps used to clean chimneys by sending a lad up with a small brush, and used often to kidnap boys for that purpose, a little fellow was lost from a house in London. His father and mother tried to discover his whereabouts, but without success. They advertised, and resorted to every expedient, but constantly failed. One day, some years afterward—and the story is the origin of the May Day Festival among the sweeps—a sweep was engaged to clean a chimney in one of the West End squares. As usual, he sent his boy up the chimney, but by some mistake the lad came down the wrong flue, and got into the wrong house. He came down into the drawing-room, and on looking round him everything seemed strangely familiar. He could not tell how or when, but he thought he certainly had been there before.

Just at this moment the lady of the house opened the door and came in, and if the boy was astonished, no less was she to see a little black sweep-boy in her beautiful drawing-room. But with a mother's quick eye she saw it was her long-lost boy. Now, what do you think she did? Did she ring the bell and order the servants to clean the little fellow and dress him? No, no, no. She ran to him, dirty and smeared, and smutted with soot as he was, clasped him in her arms, hugged him to her bosom, and covered him with a thousand kisses. And any mother would have done the same thing, and similarly, if you come to God though you be defiled and smothered with the soot of sin, He will receive you, even while you are a sinner will cleanse you from your sin, will save you now and keep you eternally.

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50

per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to THE MANAGER, CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of back numbers to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

Persons requiring single or special copies can obtain them most conveniently through

NEWSDEALERS.

Any complaint that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer is promptly attended to if we are given the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, July 28th, at 12 Noon, at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

General Hancock's Letter Accepting the nomination of the Democratic Party for the Presidency has been published. It is a grave, dignified document dealing with the national situation from the point of view of a citizen rather than that of a party leader. The General cordially accepts the Cincinnati platform, which is almost the only sentiment throughout the letter which the most vigorous Republican could not indorse. The thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution, General Hancock regards as "inviolable," and says that if called to the Presidency he would consider it his duty "to resist any attempt to impair or evade the full force and effect of any article or amendment of the Constitution, which is the supreme law of the land."

On the subject of the civil service, General Hancock says : "Public office is a trust, not a bounty bestowed upon the holder ; no incompetent or dishonest persons should ever be intrusted with it, or if appointed, they should be promptly ejected. The basis of a substantial, practical civil service reform must first be established by the people in filling the elective offices; if they fix a high standard of qualifications for office, and sternly reject the corrupt and incompetent, the result will be decisive in governing the action of the servants whom they intrust with appointing power."

The burning questions which divide so widely the two great political parties General Hancock does not discuss ; and the tone of his letter indicates that if he were elected and could keep himself free of party domination, he would endeavor to maintain an impartial attitude as to politics, contenting himself with a purely executive position. Republicans who have expressed their fears that General Hancock's election would be the election of a soldier and not that of a statesman, and that as President he would in political matters be merely the mouthpiece of irresponsible politicians, will doubtless see in his letter confirmation of their fears. The letter may, however, be regarded as the utterance of a citizen who, though the candidate of a great party, wishes to be known as a patriot rather than as a partisan.

The Statement that Justice Swayne, of the United States Supreme Court, had in 1875 declared that General Garfield was guilty of a corrupt sale of official influence in connection with the De Golyer contract, turns out, though widely circulated, to have no foundation in fact. The Justice, in a very unequivocal manner, denies ever making such a declaration or saying anything which could be construed into such a meaning. "The statement" says the Justice, "is an entire fabrication. I have the highest confidence in General Garfield's integrity." It now appears that the imputation was made in a lawyer's brief and had no official sanction, but was made in the interests of a client. This and other similar charges against the Republican candidate for the Presidency are being circulated with great assiduity, but it is stated by persons who have thoroughly examined the evidence that they are all baseless, and that an impartial investigation would completely exculpate General Garfield from blame in any of these cases. The fact that he is comparatively poor, after a long public life, tends to confirm that opinion. Many opportunities have occurred during the period General Garfield has been before the public by which an unscrupulous man might have acquired wealth.

Politicians should not forget, in the excitement of a canvass, the commandment "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor," or think that in becoming a candidate for office a man ceases to be their neighbor.

Citizens Suing Themselves will Probably be the strange spectacle seen soon in the law courts of New York. The Manhattan Beach Company, composed principally of the citizens of New York, have served a notice on the Comptroller of the city that they propose proceeding against him for damages resulting to their property by the illegal dumping of garbage in the Bay. The city officials, regardless of the law, and having no scruples about ruining the commerce of the city, by filling up the harbor, still continue their lazy practice of emptying the scows within the prescribed distance, and the filthy refuse is washed up by the tide on the shores on both sides, where it produces pestilential odors and breeds disease. The corporation cannot or will not make their servants do their duty, and therefore the Manhattan Beach Company intend suing the city, and thus bringing the question home to the people who may then be prompted to administee a remedy at the next municipal elections.

The Verdict of the Coroner's Jury Empanelled to investigate the cause of death of the victims in the Seawanhaka disaster, on June 28, is now given. The jury find that "the disaster was caused by the bursting or collapsing of one of the tubes in the starboard boiler, whereby the flames were driven under the grate-bars into the fire-room, thereby igniting the woodwork causing the destruction of the boat." They recommend that the boilers of engines on steamboats be in future inclosed in rooms having their ceilings, floors, and walls, covered with metal and also that the crews be regular trained to act in concert in the event of fire or a panic from other causes.

The Political Effects of the Census are thus summarized by a leading journal : "According to present estimates, under the new census the Southern States will lose thirteen representatives in Congress, and may possibly gain three—two in Texas and one in Missouri. The Northern States will probably lose eight members, and gain eighteen—the gains going to Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, and California. Eleven Democratic States will lose thirteen representatives, and two Democratic States gain three representatives. Four Republican States lose five representatives, and seven Republican States gain eighteen ; while three doubtful States lose three representatives."

A Spanish Bull-fight in New York was Announced to take place on July 31st. A large number of persons collected to witness the degrading exhibition, but those who expected to see the suffering of men or animals were destined to disappointment. In Spain darts with rosettes on their heads are thrust into the ani mal's sides to goad them to ferocity, but in Nev York only rosettes were used, with a little cemen on their backs, with which the torreros fixe them on the beasts as they ran around the arena
Mr. Bergh, the President of the Society for th Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, attended, bu there was no occasion for his interference. Th animals showed no disposition to fight and ha they done so the torreros appeared to lack cou age to play their part, though they wer bedizened with fancy dresses ornamented wit gold lace, and presented an imposing appearanc
The spectators went away declaring themselve victimized by a fraud, and were obviously disa pointed that no blood had been shed. It is significant sign of the times that an attem should have been made to introduce bull-figh ing into this country and that three thousan people should have paid $1.50 each to see it.

Y. M. C. Association in New York State.
There are 88 organizations, with a membersh of over 12,000. Thirty-eight have reading-room and 18 libraries valued at $37,200. Six ha buildings and five others building funds, amoun ing in all to a valuation of $753,079. Thirt four sustain weekly Bible classes, and 31 le tures and familiar talks to young men. Thirt four general secretaries are employed in the Sta a larger number than in any other State. T whole work is under the supervision of an exe utive committee of twenty-three gentlemen fro all sections of the State, with E. P. Platt, Poughkeepsie, Chairman ; Robert Fulton C
ting, Brooklyn, Secretary, and Rev. George Hall, State Secretary. Fifteen new associatio have been organized during the past ye Ninety-eight different places were visited duri the year ; six parlor conferences, 55 local, a 15 district conferences were held. Railroad sociations were organized at twelve points, w railroad secretaries employed at each. T expenses for the year's work amounted $3876.31, which left a balance of $46.79 in hands of the treasurer. The annual report just out, and can be obtained at the Y. M. C.
Building. Address Twenty-third Street, c ner Fourth Avenue, New York City.

A Minister's Son was Killed in a Tunnel cently, at New Hamburgh, N. Y. The yo man was the son of Rev. Addison Wight, Presbyterian minister at New Hamburgh.
and his sister, a young lady seventeen year age, started to walk through the tunnel un
the Hudson to catch a train leaving Fish
When about half-way through the tunnel t heard a train approachng. The young wom who was a little behind her brother, only time enough to throw herself in the ditch to side of the track when the train dashed by freight train also entering and passing the o in the tunnel. After the trains had passed, M Wight got up and called for her brother, but ceived no reply. As she made her way out, found her brother's hat, and feared that an a dent had befallen him. She told the t agent, and he assisted in searching the tun when the young man's body was found c pletely cut to pieces. The bereaved fathe overwhelmed with grief at the sudden los his promising son.

A Thank-Offering to Poor Students from Deems.—The Raleigh (N. C.) News of Jul has the following : "It will be remembered the Rev. Dr. Charles F. Deems last fall dev a sum of money to the University of N Carolina, to be loaned needy students to en them to finish their education. On his re from Europe and Asia he sent $200 more.
his grateful acknowledgment of the di providence which has brought him safely h
It is exceedingly pleasant to see our di guished friend, who so long resided amon thus remembering the institution in whic was once a professor, and helping the young men of the State."

The late Dr. D. T. Coit, of Norwich, has a bequest of $100,000 to Yale College, which he was graduated in 1825.

A Sanctified Life wholly Devoted to Christian rk closed, July 25th, at Newhaven. Mrs. ah Greble was the widow of an officer killed one of the early battles of the war. She was otedly attached to her husband and his death a crushing blow to her. But she determined t her life should not be spent in idle sorrow in works of love and charity. She settled at ladelphia, and there in the hospitals and s-houses her labors in the cause of Christ e continuous. She would leave her home in the evening to carry over old linen for dages, or other comforts to patients there, o sit by a death-bed in the city alms-house— pauper's death-bed, to whom this brilliant rite of society felt it her woman's privilege minister. The same charm of manner, the radiant loveliness that made her sought distinguished in the social world, was ed out at the feet of the poorest or most dless creature that lay dying in an alms- e ward. Latterly she had suffered from an able disease, from which she has died. sorrow had upon her a chastening, elevat- nfluence, and was the messenger of God g her from a life of ease to labor for Him.

Remarkable Instance of Prayer for Extri- n from financial embarrassment being an- d, was related at the Fulton Street Prayer- ng last week. "This morning I was in eed of a sum of money," said the speaker, I laid the matter before the Lord. I was pted after prayer to visit some old busi- acquaintances whom I had not seen for years. They welcomed me cordially, me why I had not come before, and said ad had an amount standing to my credit ven years. This sum they gave me, and it x times the amount of which I was in such ular need." The man had no knowledge debt due to him, and his debtors had lost of him through a change of address, but vho numbers the very hairs of His chil- heads, knew the circumstances, and when ed to for help, moved the Christian to go help was awaiting him.

an Disappeared Six Years Ago from nd, Me., whose fate has been a mystery ecently. His name was Harry Hunter, s family lived at Pittsburgh, Pa. He a letter to his friends, dated September 74, stating that he intended to leave for hite Mountains the next day. He was heard from afterward. His father died, s family gave up all hopes of ever again him. A few days ago his brother re- a letter from the White Mountains, in- him that the body, or rather the re- f Harry Hunter had been found lying on of-the-way bridle-path in the mountains. pocket of what once had been a coat, ildewed and undecipherable papers were by means of which the skeleton was to be all that was left of Harry Hunter, he papers being a certificate, bearing his rom the New York Printers' Union. It osed that while travelling in the moun- was caught in a snowstorm, got lost, k down to die. The lonely death of eller must have been a very sad one, far om human solace and sympathy. But ch a death might have been rendered the young man had, by faith in Christ, ope of heaven. To the Christian, death e is only the entrance into a fuller life.

ing Rescue of a Child from a Nunnery cted by her brave mother recently at n. The father of the child had given her ns to be trained as a Roman Catholic, sed to tell his wife what had become of e mother, after much patient toil, dis- he child's whereabouts. She disguised nd drove at once to the retreat. Not who she was or what she came for, the pened the door at her bidding and er to enter the house. She stated that ed to see the little girl. Disguised as n was, the child recognized her at once into her outstretched arms, crying, "Oh, my mamma." The woman hugged the child to her breast with one arm and with the other tried to open the door. Failing in this, she called to the driver outside to kick the door in. A scene of excitement ensued, and for a few moments there was a desperate struggle between the sisters and the determined woman, the sisters endeavoring to retain their charge, and the mother struggling to rescue it. At length the driver forced the door open, and the woman and child escaped. Another struggle was made at the door of the convent; but the mother drew a pistol and threatened her pursuers with death if she was not allowed to depart, and fearing she would execute her threat they allowed her to go.

A Drunkard was Saved by a Dream Recently in a Western city. As he lay sleeping off the effects of a debauch, he dreamed that he was covered by horrible black slime. His whole person seemed to be immersed in the filth. In his helpless condition he saw near by a stream of pure water clear as crystal. It flowed toward him; it reached him; poured over him; cleansed away the filth, and left him clean. When he awoke the dream was impressed on his mind, and he was unable to shake it off. He saw his moral corruption, and was pointed to the means God has provided for cleansing. He finally sought the Water of Life and was saved.

An Anti Powder Association.—A City clergyman, before the last Fourth of July, proposed to the children of his parish to form an Anti-Powder Association. The money which they would have spent on crackers, powder, pinwheels, etc., was put in a common fund, and an excursion organized to the seashore, to which each contributor had the right to invite one poor little child chosen by himself. The national anniversary had no happier celebration than that of the clergyman's young friends. They not only enjoyed the day themselves, but had the pleasure of seeing children, to whom an excursion was an unwonted delight, enjoy it through their means.

It would be well if the anti-powder associations became more general. Children are anxious to follow the examples of their elders, and even the bad habit of carrying pistols is extensively imitated. Toy pistols have been introduced, and nine boys have died in a few weeks from lockjaw, brought on by injuries received from these dangerous playthings. The Fourth of July is always made memorable by the disastrous effects of the fire-cracker amusement. The following results occurred at Philadelphia this year, and they were more serious still in New York. Killed by the discharge of cannon, guns and pistols, ten; seriously wounded, thirty; amputations of arm or leg from injuries received, six; killed by fires resulting from fire-crackers, etc., four; slightly injured, one hundred and four; houses burned, five.

Two Godless Men were Saved Recently through the example of a converted friend. He had been saved from a dissipated life, and his conversion had been the subject of much comment among his old associates. He seemed happier than when he was leading what is falsely termed a life of pleasure, and this fact astonished them, for they watched him closely. Eight months after his conversion two of his old comrades came to him and said: "We have watched you and believe your conversion is genuine. Led by your consistent example, we have determined to give up our old habits, and we want to become Christians." Thus unconsciously he had been preaching a practical sermon of the best kind, and he had the happiness of seeing his two friends follow his example. Christians too often forget that they are being closely watched by others who judge of the value of religion by its effects (Matt. 5:16).

Dr. Morrison's Epitaph.—On the Tombstone of Rev. Dr. Morrison, the renowned Chinese missionary, is the following characteristic epitaph: "I have sinned; I have repented; I have trusted; I have loved; I sleep; I shall rise; and (through the grace of Christ, though unworthy,) I shall reign."

MEN BEWITCHED.

A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

> "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth, crucified among you?"—GALATIANS 3:1.

The Witchery of False Teaching—All Men Susceptible to its Influence—I. The Subtle Danger—Epidemics in the Family of Christ—The Early Church Infected—The Epidemics of Judaism, Gnosticism and other "isms"—The Witcheries of these Times—Puseyism—The Perils of Evangelical Churches—II. The Only Preservative—Christ Crucified, Preached as the Central Trnth—With Fullness of Detail—With Great Plainness—Set forth Vividly—The Pastor's Realization at Mentone—III. The Supreme Folly of leaving Jesus—The Plea of Decorum in Service—A Commonplace Gospel—The Preacher's own Conversion—The Effect of Modern Doctrine on the Life—The old Colors nailed Afresh to the old Mast.

WITH very great enthusiasm the Galatians received the Gospel when Paul preached it to them. They seem to have been a very warmhearted but fickle people, and Paul found to his great grief that while he was away from them certain false teachers came in and turned them aside from the Gospel which he had delivered to them. He spake out very plainly about the matter. In this verse he uses very strong terms, while he says to them: "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth?"

I do not know that any such witchery has fallen upon any of you, but I do know that, being men, we are all subject to like dangers, and I know also that there is a witchery in the very air at this time, so that many are to be found throughout the churches of this land to whom these words might be justly spoken.

We can only hope to escape this evil which Paul so severely condemns by the use of right cautionary means. It is only, in fact, as the Holy Ghost shall keep us that we shall be preserved from the fascinations of error, and kept true to the grand old Gospel of the blessed God. At this time I shall very briefly speak, in the first place, upon the subtle danger which is hinted at here: "Who hath bewitched you?" Secondly, at more length, I shall speak upon the blessed preservative: there is no way of being kept from this witchery like having Christ Jesus set forth among us, evidently crucified. And, thirdly, a few words, in closing, upon the supreme folly of any who, having tried this Divine preservative, nevertheless do become bewitched by error.

I. First, then, let us think of which is ever around us.

THE SUBTLE DANGER

It was hard work to preach the Gospel at first among the heathen. Men had to lay down their lives to do it. They had to propound new things which the heathen mind did not readily receive. But, by the power of the Spirit of God, converts were made and churches were formed. And now came another difficulty. Even those that were converted, or appeared to be so, became suddenly, as it were, bewitched with error of one kind or another, just as in families children are suddenly taken ill with certain complaints which seem incidental to childhood. If parents had never heard of such things before they would be astonished. They would suppose that they must lose their children when such unaccountable diseases suddenly appeared in them, and yet they survive.

In the family of Christ certain epidemics break out at times. We cannot tell why they should come just then; and at first, perhaps, we are puzzled and perplexed to think that such diseases should come at all; but they do come; and hence it is well to be on our guard against them. Paul calls it being bewitched, because these people fell into strange error—error which had no argument to back it, error surprising and startling. He seems to say, "I cannot make it out. I cannot understand how you should be thus misled."

In Paul's day the error was generally that of Judaism. They wanted to go back to circumcision, and to the old sacrifices of the law. Paul was indignant enough about this. "I testify," said he, "to every one of you, that if he be circumcised he is a debtor to keep the whole law, and he has fallen from grace. If you go back to the old beggarly elements of Judaism, you are leaving Christ, and rejecting Christ, and imperilling your souls." He declares that he could not understand how they should wish to do it.

He calls it witchery, for in his day it was believed that men could cast an evil eye upon one another, and thus work evil upon their fellowmen. It seemed to Paul to be something like that—as if the devil himself were in it, and came and turned men away from Christ Jesus, to go back to trustng in the law and its obsolete ceremonies.

It was not long before Paul found another kind of error in the Church. There came in among the humbler believers certain men of education, who thought themselves highly intelligent— men who knew something about Socrates and Plato; and they said, "These doctrines are too plain. The poor people understand them, and they come into the Church; but no doubt they have a deeper meaning, intended only for the initiated." So they began to spiritualize everything, and, in the process, they spirited away the very Gospel itself.

Paul could not endure it. He said that though he or an angel from heaven should preach any other Gospel than that which he had preached, it would be a cursed deed. Whether it were Judaism, or Gnosticism, he smote it heavily, and said to those who fell into it, "Who hath bewitched you?"

You who read church history know that in after ages the Church fell into Arianism. There were great disputes about the deity of Christ, and the air for a long time was full of that deadly plague. When that battle was over, and such men as Athanasius had settled the question of our Redeemer's Godhead, then came up all the superstitions of Rome—that awful midnight, black with murky clouds, which covered the Church for ages. Indeed, if we look back on history, it seems like a witchcraft, that men who had the Gospel preached among them in all its glorious simplicity, should after all submit their minds to such debasing falsehoods as those of old Rome, and prostrate themselves before images of wood and stone after a heathenish manner, even as their pagan forefathers had done.

At this present time it is a marvel to some of us how the churches have been bewitched again. When I was a boy I recollect hearing Mr. Jay say, "Puseyism is a lie!" I remember the words coming just like that from his reverend lips, and everybody, or nearly everybody, thought with him. It was a wonderful event if a high church or ritualistic place was set up. Everybody was astonished at it; and if you said, "This is the Church of England, and this is according to her prayer-book," everybody said you were uncharitable, and that it was not so. They pitied our fears, and said that a dozen men were going toward Rome, and that was all.

Look ye now, sirs: these things are openly done. Our parish churches are commonly turned into mass houses, and the Church of England is slightly to be distinguished in many parishes from the Church of Rome, and yet nobody is astonished; and if we make a remark about it we are set down as bigoted. Who hath bewitched this Protestant land? With Smithfield scarcely yet swept of the ashes of her martyrs, they set up the crucifix again! What would Oliver Cromwell say if he and his Iron sides could come back again to see what they are making of this land? I wot some strong things he would say; and, as I cannot speak such vigorous words as he would have uttered, I leave the subject with words borrowed from Paul, which well suit the case, "O foolish Englishmen! who hath bewitched you that ye should thus turn aside?"

Nor is this all. You see this witchery in another way among our dissenting churches. At a time not yet forgotten Unitarianism and Socinianism gradually crept into Nonconforming congregations, and the pulpits lost their testimony for Christ; the meeting-houses were deserted, and true religion seemed dying out of the land. Then came Whitefield and Wesley, and all their troop of Methodists, and the blessed flame that was almost quenched burned up again, and we, of this generation, have said one to another, "That experiment will never be repeated: the Nonconformist churches will never go in that direction again; they know better. They see the ill-effect of this modern teaching, and they will stick to the grand old Gospel now."

So I dreamed; but I dream in that way no longer, for scarcely do I look anywhere but I find the Gospel of Christ diluted, the milk of the Word adulterated, and the grand Gospel, as Luther and Calvin would have thundered it out, seldom enough to be heard. O foolish Nonconformists, who hath bewitched you that ye should not obey the truth, but should seek after this novelty and the other—this refinement and the other—and let your God and Saviour go? As for us, if we stand alone, God forbid that we should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ.

This is the peril.

II. Our second head is

THE ONLY PRESERVATIVE.

The apostle says that the Galatians had had Christ set forth before their eyes crucified among them.

Well, then, if you want to be kept right and sound in the faith, the first thing is to get the right subject fixed in the centre of your hearts—Jesus Christ crucified. Paul says that he preached that. He set Jesus forth. Whatever else he might not have made clear, he did set forth the person and work of Jesus Christ. Beloved, settle this in your soul, that your sole hope and the main subject of your meditation shall always be Jesus Christ. Whatever I do not know, O my Lord, help me to know Thee. Whatever I do not believe, enable me to believe Thee, and to trust Thee, and to take Thy every word as the very truth of God.

Beloved, away with the religion that has little of Christ in it. Christ must be Alpha and Omega, first and last. The religion that is made up of our doings and our feelings and our willings, is a falsehood. Our religion must have Christ for the foundation, Christ as the corner-stone, Christ as the top-stone; and if we are not based and bottomed, grounded and settled upon Him, our religion is vain. Paul wonders that any to whom Christ has been the chief thing should ever have been bewitched; and I trow that if Christ be really such to your souls, you will not turn aside through error, but Christ crucified will hold you fast.

But Paul says not only that he had preached Christ to them, but that he had set Him forth, by which I understand that he had taken pains to make all about Christ clear to them. He had preached His person as man and God. He had preached His work as the atoning sacrifice. He had preached Him as risen and pleading before the throne of God. He had preached Him as our substitute. He had made this the main doctrine—that if we are saved, we are saved by the righteousness of Christ, and our sin is put away because Christ bore it in our stead and suffered the penalty due for it, that so the justice of God might be satisfied and we might be saved. That is what he means by Christ crucified.

He had gone into details on this point and set forth the glorious doctrines which cluster about the cross. Brethren, if you want to be kept from the modern witcheries, think much of Christ and go into detail about Him. Be familiar with His divine person. Be well acquainted with His relationships and His offices; know what He is in the covenant of grace, what He is to the Father, what He is to you. Oh, seek to k Him! He yet surpasseth knowledge; but students of Christ. Do not have a mere su ficial knowledge of Him, but seek to k Christ, and to be found in Him. This will you free from error.

When the apostle says that he set C forth, he means, next, that he had done it great plainness. The Greek word has to do a programme or a proclamation; it is as goo to say, "I have set Christ before you as pla as if I had printed a great bill and stuck i before your eyes. I have put the letters dou capitals. As a king, when he makes a pr mation, puts it on the walls, and calls atte to it, so," says Paul, "I have set forth C before you. I have not talked of Him in a tical way, so that you did not know w meant, but I have set Him forth. I have sa Him that He suffered in our stead, and made a curse for us, as it is written, 'Curs every one that hangeth on a tree.'"

Paul set forth Jesus plainly. Now, you the way in which Jesus Christ is preach some. It was well described by old Dr. D when he said, "They preach that the de Christ in some way or other had some s connection, in some way or other, with t vation of men." Yes, that is it—misty, c foggy—a bottle of smoke. We do not Christ in that way, but we just say this,
Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of u and because He was oppressed and He was ed in the room and place and stead of the therefore does God most freely remit the believers and bid them go their way. Su tion—may we never stammer over that—C the sinner's stead.

Beloved, if you will get a hold of that and get it well worked into your soul, y be more than a match for the ritualism tionalism of the age. Give up that do The man who has once drunk it in and its sweetness cannot give it up; for he feel that, having once believed it, it acts as a detector by which he discovers what doctrine, and it gives to him a taste which false doctrine loathsome to him, so cries, "Away with it."

If anything contrary to this comes bef he does not timidly say, "Everybody has to his opinion;" but he says, "Yes, t have a right to their opinion, and so h mine; and my opinion is that any which takes away from the glory of Chris stitutionary sacrifice is a detestable o
Get the real atonement of Christ thoroug your soul, and

YOU WILL NOT BE BEWITCHED.

Nor is this all. Paul says that Christ forth crucified visibly among them.
ever see Christ in this way? I do whether you ever saw a vision. Who w that? I do not ask whether your ima was so worked upon that you thought the Saviour. There would be no partic in that, for thousands did actually see the cross, and they thrust out the tongu and perished in their sins. But let me that it is one of the most strengthenin to our piety to get to feel by faith as th did behold the Saviour.

We do not expect to see Him until H yet when we have been alone in our ch have as much realized His presence wit use of our eyes as if we had literally s
He has been certainly sensibly crucifie us, for this is the point. He says th set forth Christ with such vividness-words painted so thoroughly well, he ken so plainly and so simply, that the to say, "We see it: Christ in our stea bleeding for our sin." They seemed to as if He were before them in ther mids

My dear friends, do not say, "Chris Calvary. That is thousands of miles know that He did, but what matters it died as to locality? He loved you, Himself for you. Let Him be to you

e were crucified at Newington Butts, and as ough His cross were in the middle of this tabnacle. "Oh, but He died nineteen hundred ars ago." I know that He did, but the efficy of His death is a thing of to-day. "He d unto sin once;" and that once pours the endor of its efficacy all down the ages, and thing for you to do is to feel as if you saw m dying now, on the tree now—you standing mediately at the foot of the cross, and look- up, and seeing Him looking down from off t cross and saying, "I did all this for thee." nnot you ask the Lord to make it as vivid as t to you?

want, while I am looking upon this great ong, to forget you all, and to see Jesus standhere with the nail prints. Oh, if I could see n, how humbly I would throw myself at His ! With what love would I embrace Him! h what reverence would I adore Him! But, m Master, I am so sure of the fact that Thou t die in my stead, and that my sins were laid Thee, that even now I see Thee discharging all debts, and bearing all my curse. Though u art gone to the glory, yet I vividly realize Thou wast here. This has become a fact to m henever you get into company where they talking about the doctrines of grace, and ring about them, and whenever you get into her class of company, where they say, ay with your simple worship of God! You have priests and incense, and altars, and do not argue with them. Get alone, and f there is anything of Popish finery about See if there is anything of this philoso- falsely so called, about Him. You will dene as soon as you have seen Him that you all all things else vanity and lies, and bind ospel to your heart. The cross is the school hodoxy. Endeavor to keep there.

K TO SEE JESUS CHRIST OVER AGAIN.

ile I have been alone on the Continent, I in my quiet moments, had realizations of aster's presence, and then I have wished could borrow the wings of a dove, so that ht there and then stand up and talk to you. e been very sick and full of pain, and ded in spirit, and I have judged myself to be men most unworthy, and I judged truly. d to that judgment still. I felt myself only y to be shaken like dust from off the feet Lord, and cast into the bottomless pit for- Then it was that my Substitute was my and in my lonely chamber at Mentone I to His dear skirts; I looked into His s; I trusted myself with Him again, and I that I am a saved man. I tell you there is vation in any other, but only in Jesus. ill not be led away to any other doctrine will return continually to this truth.

e men want a sound pummeling with afflic- get them to love Christ; and some old ors need a touch of poverty sometimes, ttle affliction, or a rack of rheumatism, at would bring them to their bearings, and ould begin to cry out after realities, and of whims and fancies. When it comes to ealings between God and your soul, and stares you in the face, nothing will do rucified Redeemer, and no confidence will a sinner's childlike reliance upon the fin- ork of Him who suffered in our stead. I trongly, but I feel a thousand times more y than I can speak.

The last point is

THE SUPREME FOLLY

who would leave Jesus for anything else. that any man should once have trusted s Christ simply, and have realized the f Christ, and have come into real contact e dying, bleeding Master; and suppose ter that, he should begin to put his con- in priests and sacraments; or suppose should, after that, put on his lavender ves and become a philosopher—what e be? Now do not tell anybody, I pray eep it to yourselves.

he Apostle Paul did not affect the manners of a gentleman, but he spoke very plainly indeed. Do not tell your learned neighbors that I said it, because I did not say it; it is Paul that said it: he says that a man who should do that would be—A FOOL. "Oh, foolish Galatians!" What are you at, Paul? They have been decorating their service; surely you cannot object to that. Don't you know, Paul, that the old Jewish priest used to wear a splendid breastplate wrought with jewels, and he had an ephod adorned with bells and pomegranates? Surely, in the worship of God, we ought to do things decorously and properly! And on this plea these Galatians have decked themselves out exceedingly. "They are foolish Galatians!" he says. Very rude of him, mark you; very rude of him! I shall not attempt to excuse him, for I fully indorse his verdict.

But here is a gentleman who has been reading Plato, and after reading Plato he has been reading the words of Jesus Christ, and he says that they do not mean what the common people think they mean—that there is a very mysterious philosophical sense hidden within them. For instance, when Jesus Christ says, "These shall go away into everlasting punishment," it does not mean at all what the words say. It means that they shall ultimately be restored. Now, Paul, this gentleman is a philosopher; what do you say of him? He says, "He is foolish!" That is all he says, and all that he needs to say, for learned folly is folly at its height. "Oh, foolish Galatians! Who hath bewitched you?"

Why do we think these people foolish? Because we should be foolish ourselves if we were to do the same. A good many years ago, when I was about fifteen or sixteen years of age, I wanted a Saviour, and I heard the Gospel preached by a poor man, who said in the name of Jesus, "Look unto Me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth." It was very plain English, and I understood it, and obeyed it, and found rest. I owe all my happiness since then to the same plain doctrine. Now, suppose that I were to say, "I have read a great many books, and there are a great many people willing to hear me. I really could not preach such as I did at the first. I must put it in a sophisticated way, so that none but the élite can understand me." I should be—what should I be? I should be a fool, writ large. I should be worse than that, I should be a traitor to my God; for if I was saved by a simple Gospel, then I am bound to preach that same simple Gospel till I die, so that others too may be saved by it. When I cease to preach salvation by faith in Jesus put me into a lunatic asylum, for you may be sure that my mind is gone.

A COMMONPLACE GOSPEL

There are hundreds of you who feel perfectly happy in Christ. You believe that all your sins are washed away, that you are justified by the righteousness of Christ, and accepted in the Beloved. Now suppose that you give that up, and say, "Instead of believing in Christ's dying once and making an atonement, I am going to believe in the perpetual sacrifice offered by a human being in the mass;" you will be very foolish. Suppose that instead of trusting in Jesus Christ for perfect pardon and justification, so that you know that there is no condemnation to you because you are in Christ Jesus, you go back to works and say, "I am going to work out my own salvation by my own good works;" you will be foolish to the last degree, and you will soon discover the fact by the misery that will come over your spirit.

Look again. When you have lived nearest to Christ, and trusted most in Him, have you not felt most desire after holiness? Now tell me, if you have tried the modern views, what state of mind have you been in with regard to your daily walk? I will tell you. You could, with those modern views, frequent the theatre and the music hall and feel quite easy; and you could do a sharp trick in business and feel comfortable; but you know that when you have seen Christ you cannot do anything of the kind. You are sanctified by His presence. You feel a strong desire after perfect purity. You feel a horror and a dread of sin.

Judge, then, which must be the right doctrine. That which makes you most holy must certainly be true; and if you turn away from your Lord, whose very presence breathes sanctification, and communion with whom is sure to bring holiness, you will be a fool; and we shall have to say, "Oh, foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you?"

During the late meetings that we have had here, my dear brethren Fullerton and Smith have been preaching the Gospel, the straightout Gospel of Jesus Christ, and at one meeting held afterward, there were scores of persons who rose up to tell of what that ministry had done for their souls by God the Holy Spirit. There were thieves reclaimed, drunkards reclaimed, harlots reclaimed, great sinners reclaimed. Well, now, suppose that after all some of you ladies and gentlemen should say, "We see what the Gospel can do, but we are going to try something else;" you will be fools.

I am always ready to try a new machine; we will try the electric light one of these days instead of gas when we are sure of it; but suppose that it should all go out and leave us in the dark! I will wait till the invention has been tested. So it may happen with the new religious lights that men bring up, which are like dim rushlights compared with the blazing sun of Gospel truth; we are not going to try anything new to the risk of our souls.

We are going to keep to the old, old Gospel until it is worn out. When it gets worn out, and will not save any more, and will not comfort any more, and will not draw us near to God any more, then will be the time for us to think of something fresh. But as that has not come to pass, I beg to say that I will drive another nail into and fasten them anew to the old mast. What I have preached among you these six-and-twenty years I will preach agan; for I am determined to know nothing among men but Christ and Him crucified; and may neither the preacher become a fool, nor any of his hearers become fools, by being bewitched, so that they forsake the glorious Gospel of Jesus Christ. Oh, that you all knew its power, and were all saved by it! God grant that you may be, for Jesus' sake Amen.

MY OLD COLORS

[PORTION OF SCRIPTURE READ BEFORE SERMON—Galatians 2:21; and chap. 3.]

A SAILOR BOY'S DREAM OF HOME.

There was once a boy who ran away from his father, and went to sea. His first voyage was enough for him; boys generally tire with their first voyage. He became sick of the sea, but thought his father would never forgive him for running away, so did not come home. One night he had a dream, and he thought he was back at the old cottage. Looking through the window he saw his father and mother at the fire, with a little table between them, on which was laid the old family Bible and his mother's spectacles. They were talking together, and as he listened he heard his own name mentioned. The tears fell as they spoke of him, and he heard them wish he was home again. Just then, he thought, by some accident he made a noise outside, and the old man came out into the darkness to see what was the matter. He looked at the lad, and then seeing it was his own boy, clasped him in his arms, brought him to his mother, and they both rejoiced over him. That night there was gladness in the house, and as the three knelt together they praised God for bringing back their boy. He awoke, and lo! it was a dream. Not long did it remain a dream, however, for it awakened in his mind the hope that his father would yet receive him, and when he got ashore he went home and found the ready welcome he had anticipated. Much more ready is our Heavenly Father to receive returning prodigals.

A DRINK-MADDENED FATHER.

A Temperance Story.

Dan McKinnon, the Drunkard—His Two Daughters, Eliza and Agnes, Employed by John Nicol, a Tailor— Their Tender Care of their Sick Brother Freddy—The Inebriated Father Enters and Hurls Him Against the Wall—His Death—Eliza and Agnes Adopted by John Nicol—They Meet their Father in After Years.

Dan McKinnon belonged to a well-known gang of thieves; but he was so utterly given up to drink that he was discarded by his associates. A confirmed sot never makes a successful thief. McKinnon, though useful to the gang for a time, sank deeper and deeper, and, at last, through neglecting his three children and thus calling the attention of the authorities, he was forced to leave his native town. He found refuge in Glasgow, in one of those miserable dens in the Kavanah.

The change brought no improvement to McKinnon, for he was now too lazy to steal, and sank into a kind of begging loafer. But with the children, strange to say, it was different. The girls, Eliza and Agnes, had struggled on, Heaven only knows how, and had managed to pick up a few letters and a little writing, when they were discovered by one of the city missionaries. This gentleman, finding that they were willing to work, introduced them to a poor tailor in the neighborhood, named John Nicol. This man had buried a wife and children of his own, but he had a large, loving heart, and not only employed the two girls, but welcomed and loved them as a second father.

With all their hard work and frugality, Eliza and Agnes did not rise an inch in the social scale, and why? As well attempt to fill a pitcher with water while there is a great hole at the bottom. McKinnon—the drunken sot, the brutal madman—was a continual drain upon them. Terrible threats, fearful oaths, and hard blows were their daily portion. At times they gave themselves up for lost, so like a murderer did their father look and act in his determined robbing of their hard earnings, and many a terrible bruise had to be hidden from John Nicol, or spoken lightly of, to save the miscreant from prison.

One Saturday night, in the depth of winter, Eliza, the eldest, was wearily climbing the dark stair to her miserable home, faintly wondering what was to be the end of all their struggles. Agnes, owing to the alarming illness of their brother Freddy, had been at home the whole week, nursing the dear little fellow, while her sister strove, by doubling her energies, to make the difference in their earnings unfelt. And now, just as she was nearing her own door, she caught the sound of some one singing softly a little hymn, and paused to listen. The voice of Agnes she at once recognized; but it was the faint attempt of Freddy's weak voice to join in the melody that startled the toil-worn girl, and made her stand there in the dark, holding her throbbing head tightly in her hands, with the tears crowding thickly into her eyes—

"There is a happy land,
Far, far away,
Where saints in glory stand Bright, bright as day."

The simple strain rose and swelled through the little hovel till the poor girl outside, shaking from head to foot, passionately raised her clasped hands toward Heaven, crying:

"Oh, God, why not take us—take us all now?" She raised the latch and entered. Agnes was seated by the bed, supporting Freddy's light form in her arms. The boy's eyes were wide open and wondrously bright, and a thrill ran through Eliza as she thought that, in spite of his shadowy appearance, he looked better than he had been for many a day. A glad cry showed that she was recognized, and, folding him to her breast, she raised him and kissed him repeatedly. But the sudden joy was too much for him in his weak state, and it took long to soothe and still his convulsive sobbing.

Presently the little fellow said, "I'm so weary, sister 'Liza. If I were to die, would they bury me in this awful place?"

But "sister 'Liza" only covered up her face with her hands and made no reply. Agnes was weeping silently. But there was no sound, only a heavy, heart-throbbing stillness.

"I wouldn't like to be buried here," dreamily pursued the sick boy; "here where the men drink and fight, and bleed, and the women scream and look fierce I would like to be taken back to Edinburgh, to the nice place where mother was buried. The birds would sing over me there, and the pretty flowers would wave about and look bright in the sun.

"Mother will be in Heaven when I get there," softly continued the boy. "I know she will, for she was never a thief, and never got drunk and beat you. I think I will know her, too, among all the great crowd, for I have dreamed so often of seeing her. She was always bright and shining, and holding out her arms toward me, and looking into my face with such beautiful, loving eyes; and when she smiled I cried right out, and tried to run into her arms. But then I awoke, and only found myself here, and I cried more than ever."

Eliza could say nothing, but after a pause, Agnes said, in a choking way.

"But God will make you strong and well, Freddy, and then you'll grow up to be a man and work for us."

"I don't know," sighed the boy, with a weary shake of the head that made him look for the moment an old man. "To-day, when sister Agnes was out, I asked Mr. Irving, the missionary, if he thought I would die, and—and—but I think you're crying, 'Liza, dear," and he tried to get a glimpse of her face.

But she held him closely to her bosom, and whispered, huskily:

"I am not, Freddy. I am calm and happy; but what did Mr. Irving say?"

"He said—but you will not cry if I tell you?"

"I will not cry, Freddy, dear, I will smile and kiss you," replied Eliza, with a shiver.

"Well, he said he wasn't sure, but that I shouldn't trouble my head about it, for God would put me wherever I could do the most good."

At last, fairly exhausted, the little fellow fell asleep.

THE DRUNKEN FATHER ENTERS THE ROOM.

The sisters then looked straight into each other's eyes, and instantly became wreathed in each other's arms, and then sobbed and clung to each other as if they were already alone in the world. Agnes suddenly started and said, "Hush, dear, do you hear that?"

Too well they knew the heavy stagger, hard breathing, and thick cursing, as they heard a man groping toward their door. McKinnon stumbled noisily into the room, with a shower of oaths for greeting.

"Oh, father," cried Eliza, clasping her hands before him in piteous entreaty. "Freddy is so ill. Do step softly, and let him sleep."

"Ill, ill!" he answered, with maddened ferocity. "So am I—dying—dying for something to drink. Bring it—bring it instantly!" and the last furious stamp caused the sick boy to start up with a faint scream of terror.

"Oh, father, don't strike them, don't strike them!" he wildly screamed, with his great eyes nearly starting from his head, as he tried to scramble from the bed; "strike me first!" But then his little stock of strength was exhausted, and he fell back quivering in his sister's arms.

"Strike them!" savagely echoed the drunkard. "I'll murder every one of you if you don't give me money or drink this instant. Come on, now, you ——, where's your wages? Out with them, or I'll strangle you!" and he seized Eliza by the shoulder, and tore her away from the boy.

"Father! I can't give you the money, or I would give you every penny this minute, if only that Freddy may not be disturbed," dauntlessly replied the girl; "but Mr. Nicol was afraid you would get it, and said he would keep it for m and only give me enough for each day as came."

"Liar—liar!" cried the infuriated wret almost wrenching her shoulder out of joint w his strong hand. "Where have you hidden Quick! speak! or you haven't another hou life in you."

"She hasn't hidden it," said the timid Agr firing up into an unusual boldness: "she nothing but a penny to buy Freddy an orang

"Ha! Freddy, indeed!" fiercely returned drunkard, glaring at the wide, round eyes of sick boy; "he must have oranges, while I m either die or risk getting into jail. He prete he's ill, too—confound you, I believe you've l den the money under him. Turn it out qu you young imp, or I'll soon cure you of your ness;" and, hurling off the girl, he made a g at the boy, and swung him out of bed on floor.

(To be concluded.)

PROPHETIC EXPOSITION.

Compiled by Rev. M. Baxter.*

(Continued from page 487.)

The Temple to be Rebuilt—A French Jew's h of Help from France—1806 the Beginning New Era—The Coming Persecution of Christian Church—The Approaching Tra tion of Christians—The Wonderful Scene— sons for Watchfulness.

The Rev. Samuel Garratt, M.A., In bent of St. Margaret's, Ipswich, in his large torical "Commentary on the Revelation 1860, gave fifty pages of explanation of Re tion 11 and 13, showing that the Nap dynasty is the seventh-eighth and last he the Roman Empire; also that there will be versal three and a half years' persecutic Christians at the end of the 1260 years' ter power of Popery and Mohammedanism, sl before or about 1880.† He said.

"Prophecy leads us to believe that the or some of them, will be restored to thei land, and will rebuild their temple in ap —their restoration being promoted by the ence of France, and by a Powerful Rule will afterward become Ruler of the Roma pire, and will ultimately be their False Me (Zech. 11:16, 17; John 5:43; Isaiah 66 When Napoleon I. assembled the Jewish hedrim at Paris in 1806, their language of tion to him fell little short of this. Th idea is not unknown to the Jewish mi shown by a book called "Rome, Paris, lem," published at Paris by a Jew, M. Sal

"He considers that a new era comr in 1806, with the revival of the Jewish San at Paris, which will develop itself into w calls a New Messianism, having Jerusalem centre, in which the substance of Judais array itself in the dress of Romanism, ac much of its outward ceremonial, and re nominally all the doctrines both of Chris and Romanism.

An immense temple is to be built for th mon worship of Jews, Mahommedans, Romanists, and Protestants—a sort of I tional Exhibition of all the religions in th

---

[*] Extracted from "Coming Wars," by Baxter, in two pamphlets—five cents each First pamphlet contains "Ten Signs of the Description of Approaching Events," with t and four large diagrams. Second pamphlet valuable quotations from Forty Expositors events. Address, 63 Bible House, New Yo

[†] Mr. Garratt wisely maintains (as also Savile, Purdon, Nangle, Chester, Polwhele, Pursell, Tuckett, Reinke, Colegrove, G Beales, Evill, Bickersteth, and others) tha rophetic dates have a double fulfilment—year literal day—that thus the 3½ times and 4 (Dan. 7:25; 12:7; Rev. 11:2, 3; 12:14 signify not only the 1260 years of Popery and medanism from 606-20 to 1866-80, but also t final 3½ years, or 1260 literal days, of the Protestant Witnesses, and Persecution of t tain Church.

ich acknowledge the Divine mission of Moses. points out the desirableness of France pos ssing the Holy Land, and is evidently prepared t accept the French Emperor as the Christ of h New Messianism.

What we have now to expect is the

REVIVAL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE,

uding the civilized Roman world in Europe, a, and Africa, and its becoming the object of nse admiration as the longed-for consum ion of human progress, and perfection of lern civilization, together with the blending welding of all Christendom into one relig system (a Roman Catholic Greek Church) * ubmission to a general council at Jerusalem. the decree of this Œcumenical Council the persecution of the saints will be brought to . All errors will combine and form one d apostasy. All the powers of the world be used in making war with the saints. In times Christendom has been red with their d. But this will reach its climax during the three and a half years. (See Rev. 13 : 4–7.)

No truth is received with so much difficulty is—that persecution is awaiting the Chris Church. Only God's elect ones will then tain their ground. The half-Christian will when the multitude yield. None will fast their profession of faith in Christ ex the called, the chosen, and faithful. (Rev. ; 17 : 14.) Perhaps the expression, 'the l-beast that was and is not, even he is the h,' may need for its fulfilment an election me way by the whole Roman world."

H APPROACHING TRANSLATION OF CHRISTIANS.

' see no reason why we who are now living ld not ourselves be in the number of those shall be alive and remain unto the coming e Lord, when the first resurrection shall take according to 1 Thessalonians 4 : 16 : 'For Lord Himself shall descend from heaven a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, with the trump of God; and the dead in t shall rise first; then we which are alive remain shall be caught up together with in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; so shall we ever be with the Lord.'

redicted events are rushing by with giant s. It is wonderful to those who watch the of the times and compare them with the s of God, to see how much more the pres tate of affairs in our world resembles that is to precede the second advent of Christ it did a few years ago. This is the case as respects what is evil and what is good. hings appear to be falling into that form rder which they must assume to satisfy the ements of prophecy before the coming of on of Man.

oon, like the dew drops on the grass, God's will be found rising from every spot, from ell-remembered tomb and the broad ocean. an instant glorious. And not less sudden the change which will then pass over those who are now alive. 'We shall be changed oment, in the twinkling of an eye,'—not w degrees, but suddenly, will that transi ke place.'

rom the very midst of the employment in which each is occupied, some aroused from sleep, some hard at work, in all those various stations in which God's people are engaged, then and there, at the sound of the Archangel's trump, each will be summoned to meet the Lord in the air. It will take place while all is going on much the same as usual, while as yet no overwhelming signs of change have appeared—except the Midnight Cry, disregarded by the world at large.

"Then it shall be that 'one shall be taken and the other left.' For it is of this translation of living Christians that our Lord says, 'I tell you, on that night there shall be two in one bed, the one shall be taken and the other left. Two women shall be grinding together, the one shall be taken, the other left. Two shall be in the field, the one shall be taken and the other left.' (Luke 17 : 34.). The circumstances of day and night are here mentioned to show its universality as to all places, and whatever happens at the same time on both sides of our globe, must necessarily happen both in the day and in the night. Thus there will be a sudden separation between the prepared and the unprepared. Those will be caught up to meet the Lord in the heavens who are ready to be caught up and willing to be caught up, and none besides. Dropping their earthly nature, they will be transfigured, and gain a life which is heavenly and eternal.

"How complete will be the change! We cannot enter into the Lord's presence without being made meet for it; and when that day arrives, 'we shall be made like Him, for we shall see Him as He is.' Our body, so full of sin, infirmity, helplessness, and corruption, will be changed into the likeness of the Son of Man. This is a thought which may cheer the heart of many a patient sufferer. Your weak body may be a burden and constant hindrance to you now, but then it shall be made like His glorious body, according to the mighty working whereby He is able to subdue all things to Himself (Philippians 3 : 21 ; 1 John 3 : 2).

"As particles of steel fly toward a loadstone, so will those Christians who are ready when Christ comes ascend upward to meet Him in the air. All their suffering, temptation and sorrow will be over, and they will be taken while others are left. Then how all-important to have the heart so touched by the Holy Ghost as to be attracted to Christ. To all His faithful people Christ is the supreme object of attraction, the Rose of Sharon and Lily of the Valley, the Bright and Morning Star, the chief among ten thousand, and altogether lovely.

"Our resurrection bodies (in which expression I include the bodies of the translated as well as raised saints) will, like our Lord's glorified body and Enoch's and Elijah's, be capable of ascension. 'By faith, Enoch was translated that he should not see death; and was not found because God had translated him: for before his translation he had this testimony that he pleased God.' 'He walked with God, and was not, for God took him.' Elijah also ascended to heaven in a fiery chariot without dying. Our Lord Himself rose in the air without any such assistance. It appears that His glorified saints will do the same. We need not ask how; it only requires one word from God to affect its accomplishment. Their hold on earth will be loosened; their feet will tread the air; till caught up into the presence of their Heavenly King, amid the wondering gaze of those who are left behind, they are lost in the clouds of glory which surround His throne. (Genesis 5 : 24; Hebrews 11 : 5; 2 Kings 2 : 11; Act 1 : 9.)

"One shall be taken and another left. It is indicated that matters on earth will, for a while, remain the same as before; and the glorified saints will be taken out of sight within the pearly gates and diamond walls of the heavenly Jerusalem, which, although it will one day be seen from earth, will not be visible at that early period. The translated and raised saints taken up to glory will no doubt remain for a time beyond the sight of mortal men, while apostate Christendom runs to its last excess of riot.

"If as saints we are then found of Christ in peace, and not ashamed before Him at His coming, our eternal happiness will commence; we shall find ourselves in the most illustrious society imaginable; we shall see all who have ever loved Christ and glorified God; we shall talk familiarly with apostles and prophets, and saints and martyrs; with Isaiah and David, and Paul and John. 'I count upon seeing these men,' said a dying Christian the other day. If caught up to meet our Lord, we shall see them, and those also whom we have known and loved here below. What a joyous day will that be, to stand on the glassy pavement, and to know for certain we are there. How blessed our condition.

"'One shall be taken.' How earnestly should each inquire, 'Shall I be one of those who are taken?' Would it be so even now? If, while reading these pages, you heard the trumpet sound, would you be willing and ready to be taken? Has Jesus a supreme attraction for you? Could you bear His eyes, which are as a flame of fire? Are you washed in His blood, clothed in His righteousness, accepted through His merits? Are you His, and is He yours?

"Watch. It is the command of Jesus Himself. So much emphasis does He lay upon it, that it seems as if before He came it would be the distinction of His people.

"Watch. For though the particular day of His coming is unknown, there are sure signs thickening around us, assuring us that it is not far off; and, as it comes, we shall need all vigilance to keep our garments and maintain our constancy. Perilons times are at hand. Hours of darkness are approaching. But the expectation of Christ's glorious advent will be to His watching people like a bright and shining star."

(To be continued.)

AN INEBRATE SAVED BY HIS DAUGHTER'S SUNDAY-SCHOOL HYMN.

Multitudes who have never been scholars in a Sunday-school have indirectly shared in the blessings which flow from them. A few years ago, there lived in a city in Scotland a man who was notorious for his wickedness. He seldom opened his mouth without uttering an oath and using the vilest language. He associated with the worst of characters, was constantly drunk, frequently beat his poor wife and children, and was the terror of the neighborhood in which he lived. Late one Saturday night he returned to his miserable home, mad drunk, and after swearing and creating a terrible disturbance, sank down upon his wretched bed and slept.

He woke about eleven o'clock on Sunday morning, and called for more drink, with furious oaths. His wife, fearing his ill-treatment, dared not answer; but his little girl went to him timidly, and said, "We haven't any money, father, and nothing in the house for dinner;" and, with her mind full of a little hymn she had learned at the Sunday-school, added, "May I sing to you, father"

"Yes," he replied, "you may sing if you like, but I want more drink."

With a quivering voice, growing stronger and sweeter as she proceeded, she sang—

"I am so glad that our Father in heaven Tells of his love in the Book He has given;
Wonderful things in the Bible I see;
This is the dearest—that Jesus loves me.
    I am so glad that Jesus loves me,
    Jesus loves me, even me."

When she had finished the hymn, "That is very pretty," he said; "you may sing it again."

As she sang, the scalding tears began to trickle down his cheeks; he buried his face in his hands, and, at its close, he cried, "O Jenny, do you think that Jesus loves me?—a wretch such as I am. Will He love even me?" and presently he sank upon his knees and for the first time in his life prayed for mercy. The prayer was heard. That man became a humble, earnest Christian, and often, in after years, blessed God that his little Jenny had been a Sunday scholar.

Garratt maintains in his sixth chapter, that the d Roman Empire, or Imperial Wild-beast in 3, being compounded of the four Wild-beasts in 7, will possess not only the territory of the Empire, but also that of the other three mpires, viz., of Babylon, Persia, and Greece; at the two-horned Wild-beast of Rev. 13, repre future united Græco-Roman Church—a com n of the Western Roman Catholic and Eastern Churches—whose Œcumenical Council will s decrees from Jerusalem, as its ecclesiastical olis; and that its clergy and Pontiff (who bably be both Roman Pope and Greek Patri ill have real power by Satanic agency to make e down from heaven on earth in the sight of . Sir Isaac Newton identified the Greek Church is two-horned Wild-beast, because even now it professes to work this miracle every Easter in ly Sepulchre at Jerusalem before crowds of s. (See Revelation 13 : 13.)

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 495.)

Father and Daughter.

Mrs. Britton had at last found a suitable situation for Jenny, as governess in Sir Robert Fortescue's family; and she was never weary of retailing any little piece of news which came to her in Jenny's letters. Rose, who had no other chance of hearing the Fortescues mentioned, sometimes listened with eager intentness, and sometimes fled away to the refuge of her old room, empty of its poor and trifling treasures, which had been swept away by her grandmother as soon as she and Ernest had quitted Clifford Grange.

"Jenny tells me quite a secret," said Mrs. Britton one morning to Ruth and Rose; "it is a secret at present, but of course it will not be so very long; so I shall betray no confidence by mentioning it to you. Mr. Robert Fortescue is your cousin-german, I believe; your first cousin's son? If I am wrong you must kindly set me right, dear Mrs. Clifford."

"You are not wrong," answered Ruth coldly; "but I have never seen much of them."

"Still you are the same family," continued Mrs. Britton, "and they speak most kindly of you. Lady Fortescue asked Jenny how dear Rose was the other day; and spoke of having seen her in London when she made her debut there. Very likely you saw Mr. Robert Fortescue in London, Rose?"

"Yes," she answered, her heart beating fast and painfully.

"An exceedingly fine young man, Jenny says," pursued Mrs. Britton, "and only four-and-twenty. He is about to make a most excellent match; quite a wealthy alliance with the only child of a London banker. All the family are exceedingly pleased; but you must not mention it to any living creature, for fear of bringing my poor Jenny into trouble."

"I shall never speak of it," said Rose, rising abruptly from her chair. The color flushed to her pale cheeks, and deepened into crimson as she met Ruth's eyes. She crossed over to the sofa on which her stepmother was lying, and kissed her tenderly.

"I'm going away to old Dunnit," she whispered; "don't let Mrs. Britton come with me."

"Mrs. Britton will stay with me," said Ruth, aloud, "and Rose, you call at the Vicarage and bring Mr. Britton back with you to dinner."

It was a gray day of autumn, with no break in the clouds, and no gleam of sunshine upon the sea. All the brightness seemed to have fled from the earth; and the green fields themselves looked dark and dull. It was not cold, but Rose shivered and trembled as she drew her cloak round her. She saw old Dunnit at work in his garden, but she hurried swiftly past. If she could but bear up calmly till she was out of sight of every one, she might give way to her sorrow and anguish when she was on the solitary rocks beneath the light-house.

Her girlish face wore an air of gray despair as she sped along the rough and narrow track. She felt no fatigue; and the chill that made her shiver was not in the westerly wind. But as she turned the sharp corner of the Lantern rock, beyond which she expected to be alone and unseen, she started to see the stone bench occupied by her father.

Ernest's face was gray and sad, like her own. He had heard that morning the news which he knew would pierce his daughter's heart; and he had come to this spot to think over how he should break it to her. They stood looking at one another for a minute, and then, with a low, heart-broken cry, Rose ran to him and flung herself upon his breast.

"Father!" she cried, "father!"

"My darling!" he said.

"Am I very wicked?" she sobbed. "I thought it would all come right somehow—and now it can never be right. Ruth is very happy; she never loved any one but you. Why did anybody ever think I should be rich, and have Clifford for my own? Father I've lost everything.'

"You have not lost me," he answered.

"Yes, I've lost you," she said vehemently. "I never thought there would be any one before me with you; and I grew up so. Oh! I am very wicked. Everything is changed or gone. I am living in a dream—a bad dream. There is Clifford, and the same houses, and the same people; and yet they are all altered. They can never, never be the same as they used to be. You did not bring me up to bear with trouble, did you, father? And yet trouble will come."

"My darling! what can I do for you?" he asked.

"Nothing," she answered, "nothing; there is nothing can be done. Would you be very sorry if I died? I should choose to die if you would not grieve too much."

"Rose," he said, "it would well-nigh break my heart."

She lifted up her head, and looked at him with a brighter gleam in her blue eyes. She almost smiled as she gazed at his sorrowful face.

"That comforts me," she said, sighing; "and yet I should be grieved if you were grieved. Father, I have tried to get better, and I cannot. I'm just like a pansy trodden under foot; you could never set it on its poor little stalk again. I thought the whole world was good and beautiful; and all at once I found out how cruel and bad it was. That crushed me down.

"Rose," cried Ernest, "if I lose you, my punishment will be more than I can bear."

"No, no," said Rose, "it's my fault, father. If I only had loved God more He would have given me strength; and He will give you strength to bear it [2 Cor. 1 : 4]. You will be happy again without me some day. I think of it sometimes, as if I shall be living then, and see it. You will have other children, and they will love you as well as I do.

"They'll be merry and happy; but I could never be happy again. Oh, father! if I can, I'll come and look at you when you cannot see me. And I'm not going to die directly," she said, smiling through her tears; "we can talk about it often before I go. Perhaps God will let me live until your second child is born. But I shall always, always be your first-born; I cannot lose that."

"Oh, my God!" groaned Ernest, "give me strength to bear it."

"Amen!" said Rose, softly, and touching his cheek with her lips as she uttered the word.

They sat together a little while longer, talking no more, but grasping each other's hand fast, and thinking of the days gone by, in silence. At last Ernest felt her slight frame shivering again, and he roused himself from his painful revery. The grayness of the day was beginning to sink into the darkness of night; and once more, possibly for the last time, he led his daughter homeward along the familiar pathway, and through the village where she had spent her happy girlhood.

In truth, Ernest had at last been brought face to face with his secret dread. It had spoken to him through Rose's own lips, sounding like an irrevocable doom. He could do nothing to avert it; for Rose herself was yielding languidly to the grief that had been stealthily sapping her strength. The most skilful physicians of the county, and from London, were called in to prescribe for her, and she listened to their advice with a quiet, submissive smile, promising to do anything that they suggested; but none the less she was fading away from day to day.

It seemed as if she grew eager to gather up all the scattered interests and associations of her short life; for as long as she was strong enough she visited all the cottages and farmsteads about Clifford, and spent her time, as she had been used to do, in the little village and on the cliffs and beach. Old Dunnit spent long hours with her in her favorite seat under the lighthouse; and Ernest sat beside them, for he could hardly bear to have Rose out of his sight.

Presently the fancy took possession of her, as the weather kept her more in-doors, that s must have her old companion and playfello Jenny Britton, to stay with her.

It looked like a caprice, but possibly there w some lurking hope in her heart, that at last, l fore she died, a short spell of love, of repentar and forgiveness, might be given to her; tl Robert Fortescue might yet return, if he hea she was dying, for a little while to her side, a bring with him the brief rapture of a reconcil tion. She could forgive him so tenderly, if would only seek forgiveness! Now she was near the grave, no pride or bitterness ming with her girlish love for him.

Mrs. Britton demurred greatly about wi drawing Jenny from her situation as govern in Sir Robert Fortescue's household.

"It is so very excellent a position," she s to Ruth, "one we cannot expect Providence offer to us again if we slight it now."

But Mr. Britton no sooner heard of Ros wish than he started off himself, in his shabb black coat, to fetch Jenny to Clifford. Wl Lady Fortescue objected to the inconvenie of suddenly losing her governess, and said must at once fill up that very desirable post, assured her that no consideration on earth co prevail upon him, or Jenny, to keep her a from her earliest and dearest friend.

Lady Fortescue expressed her hope that Ro illness would be a short one, and promise keep the situation open for a fortnight, if Je wished to return. There was no chance of returning in a fortnight, so Jenny lost her place, and on the whole was not sorry to lose though Mrs. Britton did not forbear to bewa in the ears of Ernest and Ruth, until she assured that Jenny should lose nothing by de ing herself to Rose.

Jenny entered upon her new duties buoyar and gossiped and prattled of the doing Fortescue Hall, as she had been used to about other subjects ever since Rose and had been children together. Rose herself c not have told whether it was more pain pleasure to her to hear these details. Bu Ernest it was almost intolerable pain; anc wondered how Rose could listen, with her f heart-breaking smile, and ask Jenny more c tions, in the voice that was growing lower weaker every day.

"It is quite settled that Richmond Forte is to be married soon?" she was inquiring day, when Ernest entered the room just a finished her question, and Jenny answered her clear, young voice.

"Richmond! His name is Robert, not I mond, you know. He'll be Sir Robert whe father dies. Oh, yes! they are to be ma before Christmas, at the latest. Lady Fort is as proud as a peacock about it, and s making the grandest preparations! But I wish them joy. I wouldn't have married Robert, though I have not a penny for m tune. Oh, Rose! what silly things we us say about the persons we would marry!"

"Why would you not marry him?" murr Rose.

"Why?" said Jenny; "well, you kno governesses see the other side, the poorer of human nature. Mr. Robert Fortescue very pleasant, Oh! so pleasant, when it was while, and he was on show; but he was no hero at home. Now your father, or mine, is on show; so you will hardly understa He could be the poorest, meanest, sm creature to those below him, or to thos could not oppose him. I would never wasted a crumb of love on such a nature —Why, Rose, what are you crying for?"

"I wish I could get well and strong ag she sobbed, stretching out her arms to her and leaning her head against him as down beside her; "but it is too late now!

It was too late. The fragile little fl reared so delicately, and uprooted by so and sudden a tempest, could not take again, even in its native soil.

(To be continued.)

ABRAHAM AND MELCHIZEDEK.

S. Lesson for Aug. 15.—Gen. 14 : 12–24. Golden Text, Heb. 6 : 20. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

HE chapter from which our subject for to- is taken, commences with the description war in which the King of Sodom was en- d, and in which Lot, Abraham's nephhew, involved. The kings which made war with King of Sodom, took all the goods of Sodom Gomorrah, and all their victuals and went way. And they took Lot, Abraham's her's son (who dwelt in Sodom), and his s, and departed, (verses 11 and 12). "Who t in Sodom." This reveals the downward of one who had come out from idolatry, left much behind him for the Lord's sake. as without doubt exceedingly inconvenient constantly on the move, in all weathers, to in tents instead of in houses, etc. There more comforts in life to be had when one in a city, where one could procure so more things than in a wandering life like ham's.

d so Lot ceased to be a stranger and a m upon earth; he sought rest in earthly s, and found a home, and also a place of , among those who were living in the most and shameful rebellion against God. Men have present honor, present satisfaction, nt comfort, although at the cost of forfeit- e great position to which God has called us s Son.

very term "eternal life" ought to lift our ptions from the littleness of earth, to set ffections upon things above (Col. 3 : 3). men who are unconverted, who have never "the powers of the world to come" (Heb. seek after those earthly things, there is g to wonder at, it is all which is within nge of their horizon. And when a man of an heir of heaven, comes down from nly things and puts himself on a level with arthly, by the pursuit of what earthly- d men seek after, Oh! how he degrades his ianity; Oh! how he dishonors his God. this time when he went and dwelt in , it would seem that Lot's faith lost all to influence others. The sequel of his and daughters' history leaves no room to se that either of them was converted, and ly we never hear of his winning a soul in . And now he was involved in the ruin ungodly among whom he dwelt, his part t must be with them in "the cares of this ' as well as in "the deceitfulness of riches" 13 : 22).

"there came one that escaped and told the Hebrew; for he dwelt in the Plain of the Amorite, brother of Eshcol and r of Aner, and these were confederate with . And when Abram heard that his r (i.e., relation) was taken captive, he his trained servants, born in his own three hundred and eighteen, and pursued unto Dan. And he divided himself against he and his servants, by night, and smote nd pursued them unto Hobah, which is left hand of Damascus And he brought ll the goods, and also brought again his Lot and his goods, and the women also, people." There is a Church of the First- who are blest and are made a blessing, who ar enough to God to obtain for their n the help they need.

was Lot rescued. Had it not been for m, he might have been destroyed. But Sodom still have charms for him? the goods which he had once so nearly ain have power to make him take root om? Alas! it was even so. And how re there of God's children who have met ll after call from God; children, property, have been taken from them, and yet they to the life in which these things hold a place, they "mind earthly things" 3 : 19). Whether Lot had married a of Sodom is not clear. We hear of no o came with him into the land of Canaan, but at this time we read of "the women" in connection with Lot's rescue, and later of Lot's wife, who became a pillar of salt. If he did marry a daughter of Sodom, we may well conceive how entangled his interests had become with those of the wicked city.

It was just at this time, after the rescue of a fallen brother, that Abraham first met with Melchizedek. Our golden text speaks of this man of God in the words, "Whither" (i.e., within the veil, Heb. 6 : 19,) "the Forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made an high priest forever after the order of Melchizedek." Melichizedek is undoubtedly a type of Christ; some have thought even a manifestation of Christ. We read (Heb. 7 : 1). "For this Melchizedek, King of Salem, priest of the Most High God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him; to whom Abraham also gave a tenth part of all; first being by interpretation King of Rightousness [the signification of the name Melchizedek], and after that also King of Salem, which is king of peace [Salem means peace]; without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God, abideth a priest continually."

This was the man who, by virtue of his priesthood blesed Abraham. "and without all contradiction the less is blest of the greater" (Heb. 7 : 7). What, then, was the form of his blessing? "And Melchizedek, King of Salem, brought forth bread and wine; and he was the priest of the Most High God." Under the law, the priests were fed by the sacrifices of the people. "Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? (1 Cor. 9 : 13; see also Num. 18 : 8–19; Deut. 18 : 1). But here is a Priest who is not fed, but feeds. And our "High Priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek" feeds his people with his own life, of which Melchizedek's provision was the type.

It was just when Abraham had been tasting in a measure of the blessing God had pronounced upon him, "thou shalt be a blessing," and he had been occupied with the interests of another, that Melchizedek met him with bread and wine. We are called to live not unto ourselves but unto Him which died for us and rose again (2 Cor. 5 : 15), to "look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others" (Phil. 2:4), "by love to serve one another to bear one another's burdens," etc., (Gal. 5: 13; 6 : 2). But as by nature, we are all inclined to seek our own, we need the impartation of another life and nature, and Jesus says, "My flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed," and again, "As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me" (John 6 : 55, 57).

Oh! how different were the positions of Abraham and Lot. The latter, greedy of earthly gain, had amost lost all he had, and his faith was not equal to claiming deliverance from God. He had enough of God to keep him from open sin, but not enough to unite his cause with the cause of God, and to count upon Him at all times. For such God uses the Abraham souls, who have the privilege of standing between God and their brethren as a medium of blessing. Abraham was ready to leave his own goods and his own life of peace, and strain every effort to the rescue of Lot. There was no counting the cost, no waiting to see if he could afford it. God had called him to be a blessing, and it was his vocation to carry the presence and power and the deliverance of God to the fearful, erring, and unbelieving Lot.

"Melchizedek blessed him, and said, Blessed be Abraham of the Most High God, possessor of heaven and earth, and blessed be the Most High God, which hath delivered thine enemies into thy hand. And he [Abraham] gave him tithes of all." If this blessing was a power of God upon Abraham, if it conveyed to him that which placed him in yet closer communion with God, then how much greater is the blessing which comes to us through our Great High Priest, "who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life," who "continueth ever," and "hath an unchangeable priesthood: wherefore He is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them. For such an High Priest became us, who is holy, harmless, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens." Our beloved Lord ever liveth to make intercession for us. His last act, before He ascended, was to lift up His hands and bless His disciples. How then shall we doubt, how allow temptation or difficulty to overcome us, seeing that by such an High Priest we are linked with and have access to our God?

Then Abraham gave Melchizedek tithes of all. The priest of the Most High God must have his due portion. The giving of a tenth to God and His work has been often insisted on; still many of God's own children fail to give Him even this part of their possessions, and yet are constantly complaining of the calls made upon them to give to this or the other good work. Of course, for such as give all to the Lord, only retaining the tithe or the fifth for their own absolute necessities, no such rule is needed. But as a commencement, it is most useful to set aside the tenth of our income as soon as it is received, and then we have always a little purse out of which comes a response to many calls, which then bring joy instead of pain and irritation with them. We would earnestly counsel our readers who have not formed this habit as yet, to commence setting aside a tenth as God's portion, to be scrupulously guarded for Him and His interests alone.

It may be objected: But I hardly know how to meet my expenses now, and to take away a tenth would plunge me in debt. Then you must have some needless expenses. Many things which custom says we must have, are not absolutely needful, there are many little things at table and in our clothing that we can dispense with.

"And the King of Sodom said unto Abram, Give me the persons, and take the goods to thyself. And Abram said to the King of Sodom, I have lift up mine hand unto the Lord, the Most High God, the possessor of heaven and earth, that I will not take from a thread even to a shoe latchet, and that I will not take anything that is thine, lest thou shouldest say, I have made Abraham rich." There is a grandeur in this utterance of the patriarch; dependent on God, he was completely independent of men. Oh! how we long to see this spirit in the Church of Christ, to see those who are working for the Lord sufficiently acquainted with Him to believe and to prove that when He calls them to commence or to sustain any work for Him, He makes Himself responsible for the means of carrying it on.

Oh! how bitter is the humiliation that Christians, of whom it is written in the Church's infancy, "Neither was there any among them that lacked," should be reduced to write begging letters for their work, and even to go to the length of being in debt. Can it be God's will that His name should be thus brought into reproach by His own children? may it not be that the work should be lessened and that by the failure of means He is telling them so? It is so painful to hear the appeals of such or such a Christian worker laughed at, with the words, "Oh! he is always at the last gasp, but he is nevertherless always pulls through, and is always extending his work." And so men get callous and the worker becomes embittered against those whom he thinks could give to him. Let us all walk before God, let our expectation be from Him. If all Christians laid aside only a tenth, there would be plenty of means for all God's work, and if Christian workers addressed their petitions to God alone, there would be a certain response for all the work which He wills they should carry on.

FOREIGN TOPICS.

A Serious Catastrophe has Befallen the British arms in Afghanistan. On Wednesday, July 28th, the Marquis of Hartington, the Secretary of State for India, in a voice trembling with emotion announced to the House of Commons that he had received a telegram from India stating that the force, under General Burrows, supposed to number about 2,700 men, had been annihilated by a native army under Ayoob Khan. It appears that General Burrows had gone to assist Shere Ali, whom the British had made independent ruler of Candahar, to put down the resistance of Ayoob Khan, and was drawn on by a stratagem into an ambuscade, where he was severely defeated. The natives cut the telegraph wires soon after the battle, so that the Viceroy of India was unable to learn further details. At that time the remains of the defeated British force were straggling into Candahar in driblets.

Ayoob Khan, who has Inflicted this Severe blow on the British, is a brother of Yakoob Khan, the ex-Ameer of Afghanistan, and was dissatisfied with the British arrangements for the permanent settlement of the country. The British scheme was to make Abdurrahman Khan, a cousin of Ayoob's, the Ameer, and Shere Ali the independent ruler of Candahar. But it has become apparent that any ruler favored by the British becomes, by virtue of that favor, unpopular with the Afghans, and accordingly Ayoob Khan, who was near Candahar, was able to muster a considerable force, animated by hostility towards both Shere Ali and Abdurrahman Khan. Shere Ali was unable to quell this rebellion alone, and General Burrows went to his assistance, and with a combined force of British troops and Shere Ali's soldiers, commenced the campaign against Ayoob Khan. Shere Ali's troops, however, deserted in a body, and General Burrows was thus left to confront a vastly superior force by which he has been overwhelmed. The report is current that Ayoob Khan's army was commanded principally by Russian officers.

The intelligence is very serious, as showing the difficulties with which England has to cope in her Indian possessions. It was hoped that an arrangement had been made which would be satisfactory to the majority of the people, and would allow the British forces to retire with honor from the country ; but it will be necessary now to undertake a new campaign to restore the prestige of England, the loss of which would involve grave dangers in India. Reinforcements are being pushed forward from India, into Afghanistan, and troops are being sent from England to replace them.

The British House of Commons has Passed the Government Bill for the relief of the Irish tenant farmers, and it has been sent to the House of Lords. The general impression is that the Peers, being possessed of large estates in Ireland, will reject the bill. There is, however, the possibility that fear of the disturbances certain to ensue if they take that course, may have a deterrent effect upon them. The House of Commons has also passed another measure, urgently needed in the country, namely, the "Hares and Rabbits Bill." At the present time the farmer sees his crops eaten by these animals, but dares not kill them lest his landlord should eject him from his farm. That bill also will be subjected to the ordeal of a vote by the Peers.

Alarming Gas Explosions of an Unparalleled character took place on July 5th, in Tottenham Court Road, London. A gang of workmen were employed in laying down new service pipes, and the time had arrived for filling the main service with gas. By some means, while the air was still in the pipes, and mixed with gas in a sufficient proportion to produe an explosive mixture, it came into contact with a light, the result being a terrific explosion, at intervals, throughout the whole main over a space of half a mile. Pipes were burst, the ground opened up and flames burst out, the windows of shops were blown out, the basements driven in and undermined, huge blocks of granite and other paving stones hurled into the air, and, unhappily, several persons in the streets terribly, and in two cases fatally, injured. Four hundred houses were damaged, and several totally wrecked. There was a scene of panic and terror in the streets. At one spot a horse and cart were blown a distance of ten feet, the animal being shockingly injured, while the cart was smashed to pieces by the falling stones and bricks. London is so undermined with sewers, gas-pipes, telegraph tubes, and by the great tunnel in which the Underground Railroad is laid, that it is providential such explosions are not of more frequent occurrence.

The Losses of Vessels Laden with Grain was the text of Mr. Plimsoll's speeches in Parliament, and he endeavored to get a law passed to compel ship-owners to adopt some precaution to prevent cargoes of such ships shifting with the rolling of the ship. That his efforts were needed, is proved by statistics he induced Parliament to obtain. The return shows that between the years 1873 and 1880 twenty-six steamships, laden wholly or partially with grain, foundered at sea, and twenty-four were reported as missing ; and during the same period 100 grain-laden sailing vessels foundered and 111 were reported as missing.

The Irish Famine.—The Distress Produced by the Irish famine may now be considered at an end. The various relief organizations have dissolved, and at a meeting of the Land League, Mr. Dillon, member for Tipperary, publicly stated, from personal investigations, that the funds now held by the relief committees and the Catholic and Protestant hierarchy are sufficient for the relief of existing distress in the counties where potatoes are still unripe. Mr. Dillon says there is no further need of American contributions. The committee applauded these remarks. A formal resolution to thank America for her generosity was postponed in order that it might be offered before a full meeting of the League.

The fund collected and distributed by the New York Herald amounted to $341,054.58. Its distribution was the work of a committee of well-known gentlemen, who gave their close personal attention to the work, and who saw that the relief was given where it was most urgently needed. Besides the Herald Fund, the gifts from America comprised the cargo of the Constellation and money sent through other channels, such as the Parnell Fund.

Protestantism in Spain has Made Wonderful progress. Señor Carrasco states that twelve years ago a New Testament was hardly allowed to enter the country, and fifteen years ago a little society having been formed for the simple reading of the Bible, its members were condemned to the galleys ; but now even in Madrid there are five or six Protestant churches ; and if Philip II. were to come back to life and hear the Gospel preached at the very gates of his palace, where Protestants used to be burnt, and were to see people reading the Bible where he ordered it to be destroyed, what would he think of the change?

The German Government has Interposed to protect citizens from the wiles of Mormon missionaries from Utah. A Berlin dispatch to the London Morning Post says : "The German Government has expelled from the country some Mormon missionaries who were making proselytes for their society."

The Jews are Returning in Considerable numbers to their own land. Jerusalem, according to British consular reports, is a growing town. The foreign Hebrew population has increased considerably of late years. That community is now estimated at 15,000, including native Jews, against 10,000 in 1873. The desire to avoid compulsory military service now inforced in most European countries, and the right of holding real property in Turkey, conceded to foreign subjects by the protocol of 1868, probably account for the increased immigration. The settlers are mechanics, artificers, carriers, and agriculturists, and are fairly prosperous. The cl industries remain what they were—the ma facture of oil, soap, and articles in olive w and mother-of-pearl ; the production of the ter articles has greatly increased, as the sal no longer confined to visitors and pilgrims, la quantities being exported to Europe and A ica.

Belgian Traffic in English Girls.—The L don Sentinel has lately published facts show that many English girls and women, gov esses, servants, and ballet-girls, are allured to Belgium by all sorts of false promises and ducements, such as the offer of lucrative si tions, etc., and on arriving there they are ta to houses of bad repute, where they become p tically imprisoned slaves, condemned to a of infamy. Owing to the corruption of the gian authorities it is almost impossible to libe the girls. The Sentinel for July gives a l narrative of an English young lady who taken over to Brussels by a gentleman, stated he lived in Paris, and would marry he reaching his residence there. But she fo herself imprisoned in a house in Brussels. she met seven other English girls, all dec over like herself. But her friends, getti letter from her, by extraordinary efforts bro her back to England from a hospital wher had been sent.

Liquor Dealers Can Appreciate Total stinence in their servants, although they do like their customers to adopt the practice. advertisement for clerk and traveller recentl peared in a London paper. As it was s that "a total abstainer would be preferre Good Templar applied, and received a reply ing him the situation. He then discovered the advertiser was a wine and spirit merc upon which the offer was respectfully decli

Canon Miller, Vicar of Greenwich, Eng who died July 11th, was an eminent mem the Evangelical party, a Liberal, and one o few English clergymen who strongly advo the disestablishment of the Irish Church. served on the first London School Board was a prominent member of Convocation. twenty years he was rector of St. Martin's mingham, where he obtained an influence i town and the neighboring Black Country tricts only equalled by that of Dr. Hoo Leeds, or Dr. McNeile, at Liverpool. We to publish next week his portrait and a ske his life.

Rev. Dr. Fisch, of Paris, says that Fou lion copies of the Scriptures have been s France ; that all the young men in the arm been taught to read the Gospel of Joh that 500,000 young men know that gos heart ; and that 100,000 soldiers drive Protestant Switzerland during the late war returned to France, each with a New Test and various religious tracts.

Contributions for the Persian Famine Henry Ward, Baltimore, Md., $1 ; C. H. Schuylkill Haven, Pa., $1.

The Prophetic News and Israel's Wat (London) for July may be obtained at the office CHRISTIAN HERALD. Price six cents.

The Second Volume of The Christian H comprising Nos. 37 to 62 (July to Dec., 1879), procured, elegantly bound in cloth, at this Price $1.75.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works are at the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, at p low as to bring them within the reach of eve Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with pho of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Plou Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents ; in cloth, 6 The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volume sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, a h cal exposition of the book of Psalms, five vols as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon's Birth-D This popular gift-book contains a suitable selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for e in the year, with a blank space opposite f graphs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. S appear at their respective birthdays. The elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cents. tances should accompany orders.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

blished at 63 Bible House, New York City, and 2 Ivy Lane, London. Edited in London by the Rev. M. Baxter, in New York by Mr. B. Aitken.

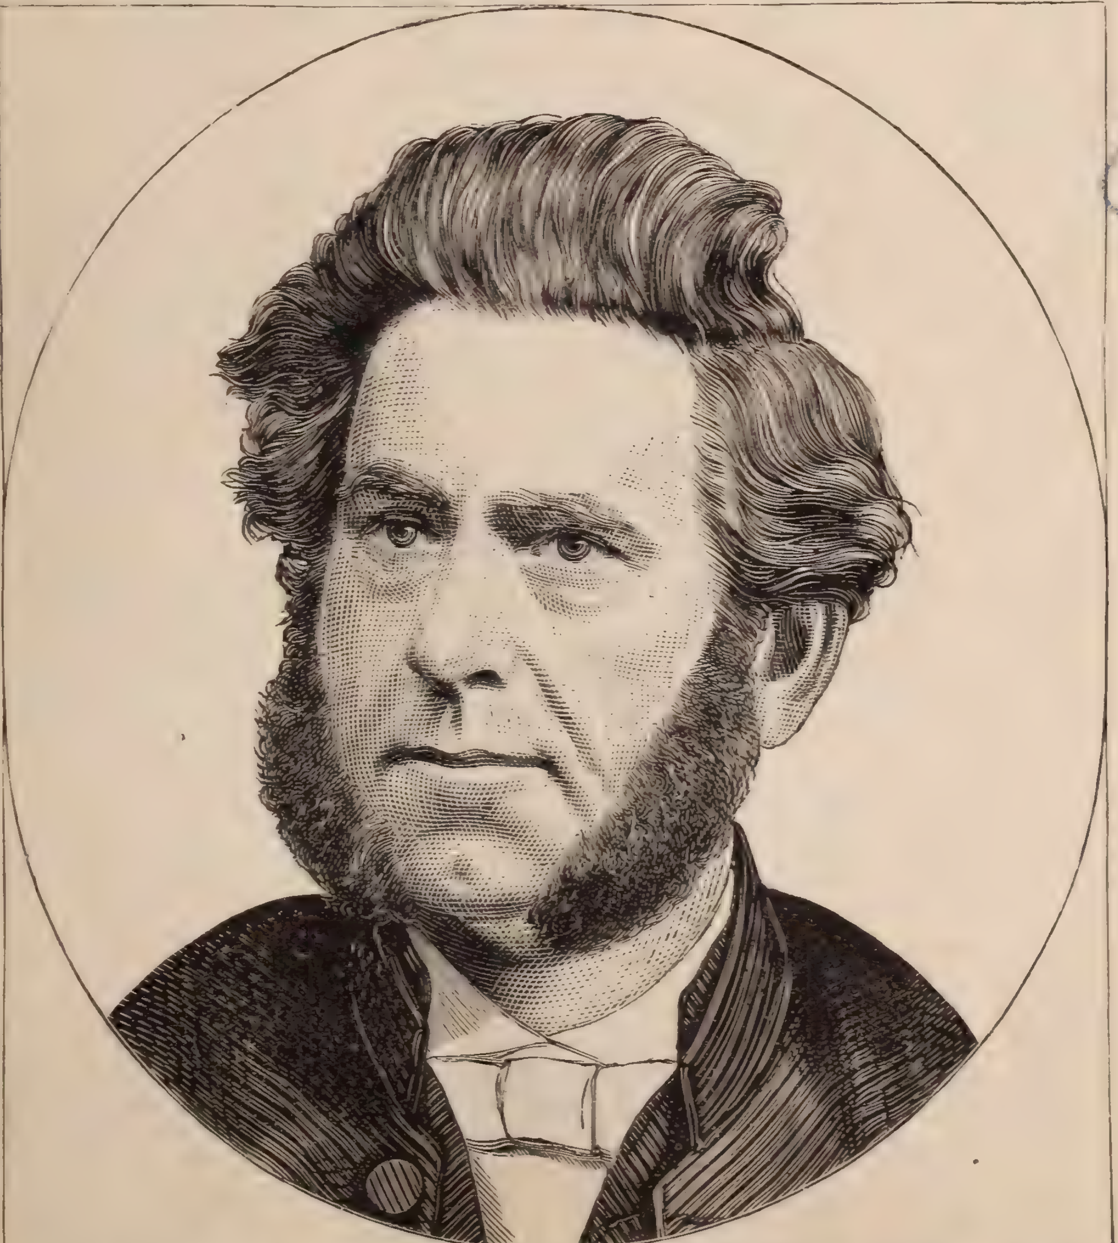
This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. LMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also occasionally a Sermon by the Rev. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL.D., the celebrated Methodist Minister, Rev. W. M Y AITKEN, or some other Eminent Preacher; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Single Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, AUGUST 12, 1880. 14th Year. No. 33—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

RTRAIT AND LIFE OF THE LATE REV. ANON MILLER, D.D.
HAMED OF CHRIST. An Evening Sermon by r. Talmage—A Bird Catcher Converted.
CHESTER TOWER. A New Serial Story by iss M. A. Paull (Continued).
OPHETIC EXPOSITION. Compiled by Rev. . Baxter (Continued).
PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF REV. JOHN CURWEN. The Promoter of the Tonic Sol-Fa System.
CURRENT EVENTS: The National Republican Conference—The Recent Executions—A Young Cripple Healed by Prayer—Seven Convicts in a Sewer—A Trade in Rattlesnakes—The Cost of Keeping a Sailor's Promise, etc.
WHAT RELIGION HAS DONE FOR NEW YORK. By Hon. Thurlow Weed.
GOOD NEWS FOR THIRSTY SOULS. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
APPROACHING PERIHELIA AND CALAMITIES. By Rev. T. J. Malyon, LL.B.
A WEIGHT OF WEALTH (Continued).
The Covenant with Abraham. S. S. Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter—A Drink-Maddened Father.
FOREIGN TOPICS: Trouble in Ireland—The Young Napoleons—A Perilous Situation, etc.

Cut



The Late Rev. CANON MILLER, D.D., who Originated Hospital Sunday.

THE REV. CANON MILLER, D.D.

Born in 1814—Graduates in 1835—Ordained Deacon in 1837, and Priest in 1838—His First Curacy at Bexley—Removes to Chelsea—Becomes Rector of St. Martin's, Birmingham, in 1846—His Interest in Working-Men—Originates "Hospital Sunday" in 1859—Becomes Vicar of Greenwich in 1866—Canon of Rochester in 1871—His Public Services—Death.

THE death of Canon Miller, D.D., on July 12th closes a life of remarkable activity, singularly fruitful of good to a large section of the British people. Nor did the benefits that have flowed down from that life terminate in his native land. One at least of the schemes he initiated has taken root in this country and has been blessed here as it has been across the Atlantic.

If a visitor to Great Britain went to Greenwich or to Birmingham and inquired of the citizens who was Dr. Miller, he would receive a variety of answers, but every one would be an honored one. The members of his church would speak of his earnest and faithful sermons and his personal appeals to the unconverted and his loving counsel to the saved. Members of other churches would speak of him as an earnest industrious Evangelical Churchman; but the great mass of the people would dwell upon the services he rendered to the cause of the poor, the sick, and the afflicted.

He gave his life, wherever he was located, to the work of doing good, and to the relief of spiritual and physical misery, and his memory is fragrant with the blessings of thousands to whom he was the instrument of good. Of such a man we forget the nationality; he was a philanthropist, and he was more, he was a sanctified philanthropist, a Christian whose highest aim it was to be a follower of Him, "who went about doing good." As such we lose sight of minor distinctions of race and nation, and think of him as a member of the great Christian church whose members are "of all nations and kindreds and people and tongues united by one common bond of brotherhood, the love of Jesus."

For forty-two years he was actively engaged in the service of Christ and our readers will, we believe, be interested in the details of a life so full of labor and of blessing.

In the year 1814 there was a gentleman holding an important office in the embassy representing the United States at the British court, named John Miller. He had occupied this honorable position for many years, and during his residence in Great Britain a son was born to him who was destined by God to become famous throughout the religious world as John Gale Miller, D.D.

Dr. Miller was educated at the Brompton School, under the Rev. R. Sankey and the Rev. C. A. Heurtley, Margaret Professor of Divinity at Oxford, he matriculated in 1832, at St. John's College, Oxford, and afterward obtained a scholarship at Lincoln College. A Bachelor of Arts with a first class in Classics in 1835, he was ordained deacon in 1837, and priest in 1838. His first curacy was at Bexley, Kent, under Mr. Hardinge, afterward Bishop of Bombay. While at Bexley he published a volume of sermons, which testified alike to his Evangelical spirit, and to his earnestness in the opening stage of his ministry.

After staying at Bexley two years, Mr. Miller became assistant minister to the Rev. T. Vores, at that time of Park Chapel, Chelsea. On Mr. Vores's removal to Hastings, Mr. Miller succeeded him as minister in sole charge of Park Chapel. Faithful and earnest in his declarations of "the truth as it is in Jesus," and laborious in the discharge of pastoral duties, he labored with much success at Chelsea till 1846, when he was presented by the trustees to the rectory of ST. MARTIN'S, BIRMINGHAM.

The Birmingham Gazette a local secular daily journal, writing of that period says:

"When Dr. Miller came to St. Martin's, the congregation of the church had fallen very low indeed as regards numbers. Sometimes not more than fifty people attended, and we are told that a congregation of no more than a hundred was not at all uncommon. This, in the mother church of the town, and one of the largest ecclesiastical buildings, was a melancholy state of affairs; and it was high time that some one came who could remedy it. For this purpose Dr. Miller was exactly the right man in the right place. His reputation as a preacher had preceded him, and he soon diffused a knowledge of his vigor as a worker, and his capacity as an administrator. St. Martin's began to fill almost as soon as he occupied the pulpit: before long not a sitting could be had: and for years afterward—down, indeed, to the period when Dr. Miller left the town—the great building was crowded to overflowing."

His fitness to attract and interest working men was well tested when he established what was then one of the first working-men's institutions for the spread of religious and secular instruction, and also for social intercourse. He also introduced in Birmingham that which has since become a recognized agency of the church's work—namely, mission services. These services were held at special seasons every night in the week, at the parish church, the addresses being given by different preachers, among whom were Dean McNeile and Canon (now bishop) Ryle.

HOSPITAL SUNDAY.

Birmingham is the seat of manufacturing industry, and the town teems with factories and machinery. As a consequence, injuries to life and limb are of frequent occurrence. The hospitals of the town have always their utmost capacity occupied with sufferers, most of whom are poor and needing gratuitous attenton. Dr. Miller thought much of these institutions and the best means of aiding them. At length his thoughts were led to the scheme of Hospital Sunday, which was established in Birmingham through his efforts and was afterward introduced in all the great cities of England and has now found a welcome in the United States. In November, 1859, at Dr. Miller's suggestion a collection was made in every place of worship in Birmingham for the General Hospital, when the sum of over £5000 was collected. Hospital Sunday has been observed ever since in Birmingham, until an aggregate amount of over £65,000 has been contributed.

Dr. Miller's work in Birmingham was contemporaneous with that of Rev. John Angell James, the author of "The Anxious Inquirer," whose portrait and life was published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of February 20th, 1879. Although the belonged to sections of Christ's Church between which a cordial feeling had not often subsisted, Dr. Miller and Mr. James were drawn together by the attraction of a common aim in life—that of serving God faithfully and laboring for the welfare of their fellows. At the time Dr. Miller settled in Birmingham, it was not an uncommon thing for clergymen of the established church to refuse to take part in any meeting of a religious or philanthropic character if Nonconformists were also to speak. But although Dr. Miller was a churchman and Mr. James a Congregationalist, and each man was regarded by his fellow townsmen as the representative in the town of his denomination, they worked fraternally and harmoniously together in all Christian work of an unsectarian character.

TWO EMINENT PREACHERS

How sincere and unselfish was Dr. Miller's regard for his Nonconformist friend may be gathered from the fact that when in 1855 Mr. James's congregation celebrated the jubilee of his ministry, Dr. Miller was one of the most prominent speakers. In the course of the eloquent address he delivered on that occasion he said of him. "We behold not the dissenter or the churchman, but the man of God—the faithful and honored servant of Christ—claiming our tribute of grateful love for this, not the least of his many invaluable services, that by the consistent tone of his life, no less than by the powerful advocacy of his lips and pen, he has in town of Birmingham drawn so close the bo of Christian brotherhood, and recognized in common union with the Lord Jesus Christ a which shall bind us together in blissful and e less fellowship, when our divisions and t causes are forgotten for ever."

While pursuing an upright, uncompromis course of active hostility toward sin in all shapes and manifestations, Dr. Miller won the spect and confidence of the Birmingham peo Even those who disliked the church and doctrines Dr. Miller preached, had a great spect for the earnest philanthropic clergym How thoroughly that sentiment had laid hol the citizens was proved in the time of

A GREAT CALAMITY.

In Birmingham there was an old fashio bank which had been established many ye It began when the town was little more th village and its business had grown with town's growth until, when the population over 300,000, it was believed to be making enormous return.

The proprietors were men who took an ac part in political and municipal matters. On them had represented the borough in Parliam and had been so prominent a leader in the H that Birmingham erected a statue in his ho Other partners were renowned for their we and their liberality. They were Birming men, and for generations back had been identi with the town, and the town, was proud of t and trusted them.

Suddenly, without any of the disquie rumors which usually precede such a sto the announcement was made that Attwood Spooner had suspended payment. It was awful day in Birmingham. The hard-ea savings of the mechanic were in that bank. widow's legacy was there. Executors, afrai deposit trust money anywhere else, had plac there in confidence. Tradesmen had t money there ready to pay their accounts and wages of their workmen. Religious benevolent societies kept their funds there, on that terrible Friday the town staggered der the blow. The streets were thronged men and women, almost distracted with t anxiety; business stood still and a riot threatened, in which the bank building and private houses of the partners would have demolished.

In that moment of supreme danger it made known that a committee had been pointed to take charge of the affairs of the and protect the interests of the credi "Who are its members? Let us have no trick no plundering," was the menacing cry of the cited populace. "Dr. Miller is chairman the committee," was the reply, and the effect magical. His name operated like a spell, from that moment all serious anxieties as to public peace were set at rest.

It was a significant fact. Intricate acco had to be unravelled, important sales had t effected and business acumen and skill wo the people knew, be sorely needed; and the t was satisfied with the formation of the commi and why? Not because the chairman was a countant of trained ability, but because Chairman was a man of honor, of characte Christian. It was a remarkable instance of value set by the world on an upright, consis life. The end justified the confidence of people. The affairs of the bank were wou with unprecedented promptitude, and the ac loss to the people was consequently com tively small.

In 1866 Birmingham was, to the great regr the people, called upon to part with Dr. M He was appointed to

A NEW SPHERE OF LABOR,

as Vicar of Greenwich; but there the same s and the same activity distinguished him. U his charge flourishing schools sprang up, many other valuable institutions. His winter at Greenwich was one of sore distre the town and along the banks of the Tha oken by the presence beneath the window of unhorsed loaded wagon containing trusses of y, which, quite contrary to all the city rules d regulations, had been allowed to remain in street all night, to be unloaded and stored ly in the morning. Had she fallen on the d pavement or street her death must have n instantaneous.

'You may believe, darling Emmie, that this gedy has excited the whole school, and in at trouble poor Fräulein Hermann is, and still re, Mlle. Laurie, who fears that blame may ly be attached to her, for she forgot to bar door.

Now, Emmie, I want you to tell mamma just what she can know without being ubled about me. I am suffering very little in-now, and before this reaches you I expect e quite well again. I am a thousand times e anxious about Clara. I have only seen her since, and that for a few moments. She is perfectly quiet, almost motionless, half inible, in a room that opens on the garden, re she need not be disturbed by any noise the songs of the birds. I feel so troubled, ie, lest in my passionate desire to keep her death, as I hoped, I may have really injured
I never wish, I mean I pray that I may r have such an awful experience again of my powerlessness to help others.

hen I saw her, her face was dark and some-discolored, and the poor hands on the covwere bandaged, for they are badly bruised.
lein Hermann has just come to me; she I must not write any more; that I have al-written much too long a letter. She bids t it up at once, and go to bed. All this id to me in such a gentle tone. I did not she ever spoke to any one quite so softly, indeed to her dear nephew Hermann Fer-. And then, Emmie, she stooped and l me on my forehead, and said, 'Good my poor dear child.'' And those kisses one down into my heart, to live there. I bey her. She is very good to me. Give ch love as possible to mamma and Cecil lf, from your own CONSTANCE."

(To be continued.)

PROPHETIC EXPOSITION.

Compiled by Rev. M. Baxter.*

(Continued from page 509.)

V. Stone on the Apocalypse—The predicted val of the Bonaparte Dynasty—The Drying the Euphrates—The World being prepared he Culmination of Armageddon——Rev.
err on the Prophecies of the Last Days—Future Apostasy—Spiritualism—Charac-ics of Antichrist—Antichrist deceived.

Rev. W. Stone, M.A., Vicar of St. Paul's,
, London, published, in 1869, "The ypse Explained," setting forth its year storical fulfilment.† He remarked upon ion 16 and 17:

e seven heads of the wild-beast are exby the angel as seven mountains on he woman sitteth; i.e., the seven-hilled
Rome, about which there can be no mis-
They are also stated to symbolize seven r successive forms of supreme rule and nent over the Roman Empire. 'Five len' at the time when St. John wrote in : the sixth head was then existing, and the other or seventh head, had not yet come, but, when come, was to 'continue a short space;' meaning, most likely, the Roman Catholic Imperial Dynasty in the hands of Bonaparte, which had only a brief space of existence, for Napoleon Bonaparte, the so-called 'Child of the Great French Revolution,' had his short-lived career of conquest cut off and brought to a close in A.D. 1815; and his son, who had been entitled King of Rome, died soon afterwards.

"The seventh head having thus disappeared from the scene, the prophecy further shows that an eighth head should arise after him, having some relation and resemblance to him, and, as it were, a revival or integral portion of one of the seven (Rev. 17:11). If the present restored empire of France, whose head (Napoleon III.) is the nephew of the first Napoleon, who also bears his name, and who holds Rome (Papal) under command by his troops to the present day, be the 'eighth head and of the seventh' here spoken of, then we need only wait the result of time and events; when this power shall be fully developed in connection with 'Babylon the Great' and the Antichrist of Rome, and as predicted, and shall go into perdition. (Rev. 17:5, 8, 11.)

BOTH FALL TOGETHER,

"The predicted figurative drying-up of the great river Euphrates under the Sixth Via., in Revelation 16:12, implies the gradual exhaustion of the Mohammedan territorial, political, and religious influence in the East. And this progressive dissolution of the Turkish Empire is for a remarkable object, viz: that the way of the kings from the East might be prepared; that is, the Restoration of the Jews to their own Holy Land, and their becoming rulers over the East under their Messiah as king over all the earth (Zech. 14:9).

"Three Unclean Spirits, working wonders, also go forth during the pouring out of this Sixth Vial upon the Euphrates,' not only through the kingdoms of the (Roman) earth, but through the whole world, preparing them for a future War of Nations, called ARMAGEDDON, on a scale of magnitude and with disastrous consequences such as history has never yet recorded. This preparatory going forth of the Unclean Spirits brings us down to a state and circumstances almost in our very midst, and characterizing the predicted perilous times of the Last Days. And the great event of the coming of Christ to this earth from the Father's throne in heaven is shown by these things to be near at hand." (2 Tim. 3; Rev. 16:12, 15.)

The Rev. W. Ker, M.A., Rector of Tipton, Dudley, published in 1867 an ably-written volume of Discourses upon Daniel and Revelation, called "Prophecies of the Last Days," in which he said:

"St. Paul assures us, in 2 Thessalonians 2, that the Day of Christ, or Great and Terrible Day of the Lord, shall not come until there be the falling away, or apostasy: that is, a general departure or revolt from the Christian Faith, out of which Apostasy the Man of Sin will arise and be revealed, as a deadly exhalation arises from a stagnant pool. This future Apostasy is more fully described in 1 Timothy 4, 'Now the Holy Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall apostatise from the Faith, giving heed to Seducing Spirits and teachings of Demons, speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience seared with a hot iron, forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats'—i.e., the Spirits of Demons will speak lies, forbid to marry, etc.

"Now there never has appeared in the world anything so like this predicted Apostasy as the teachings or doctrines of which, through the mediums and spirits, are leading multitudes to apostatise from the Christian Religion, which they denounce as effete and worn out, and destined to disappear before their new revelation. Many leading spiritualists also advocate the abolition of marriage and abstinence from meat, etc.

SPIRITUALISM,

"The Man of Sin, or Antichrist, is to 'sit in the Temple of God, showing himself that he is God,' and to cause his image, the abomination of desolation, to be set up, and to command all men to worship it, or to receive his mark on their forehead or hand, on pain of death in case of refusal (2 Thess. 2; Rev. 13; Matt. 24:15). The Temple of God must be a literal temple at Jerusalem, for no other building in the world was ever called by that title. Therefore before this prophecy can be fulfilled the temple at Jerusalem must be rebuilt, and consequently the Jewish nationality must first have been restored in Palestine.

"The Antichrist may be even now already in existence. Nay if we are right in believing that the latter-day APOSTASY is already commencing in the mysterious manifestations and phenomena of spiritualism, then it is highly probable that he is even now in being, and awaiting the time of his open revelation.

"But supposing the Man of Sin to be thus even now in existence, it is not at all necessary that he himself should be aware of the awful course he is destined to run, or the terrible character he is to sustain. Nay, it is unlikely that he should.

"Hazael, King of Syria, is a case in point. When the Prophet Elisha forewarned him of the fearful deeds which, as the future king, he should perform, he warmly repudiated the possibility of his acting so; yet he afterwards fulfilled the prophet's prediction to the very letter. (2 Kings 8:11, 15; 10:32; 13.)

"Even thus it is highly probable that the Antichrist will creep into Universal Dominion by slow and gradual steps. His coming is to be with all deceivableness. (2 Thess. 2:10.) Satan is too crafty to exhibit him all at once in the deep and glaring colors of his consummated guilt. Various prophecies, especially those of Daniel, render it not only probable, but absolutely certain that he will be just what the French Emperor showed himself to be—deep, crafty, reserved, of boundless ambition, indomitable energy, unflinching resolution, and determined will; but plausible withal, and courteous: affable, and even kind: generous, and a liberal patron of the arts of polished life.

"Daniel foretells of him that 'through his policy also he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand, and that 'by peace he shall destroy many.' (The Empire is Peace.) It is to be inferred that he may for some time be deceived himself, as well as the instrument, in the hands of his dread master, of deceiving and deluding the whole world. (Daniel 8:25.)

"The Man of Sin is to act his part, as Antichrist and persecutor of Christians during the final 3½ years, which is called 42 months, or 1260 days, or a time, times, and half-time. (Rev. 11:2, 3; 12:6, 14; 13:5; Dan. 7:25; 12:7.) He is to 'confirm a covenant with many (i.e., of the Jews), for one week (7 years), and in the midst of the week shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease; i.e., he will break the covenant; and during the remaining and final 3½ years, he will persecute, and make war upon and destroy the holy people, and saints of the Most High;' after which 'he shall come to his end and none shall help him.' (Dan. 8:24; 7:25; 11:45.)

"As regards the approaching Second Advent of Christ, it will consist of two great acts, with an interval of time between them. The first act will be the advent of Christ as a bridegroom, when He comes to take away His expectant saints from earth to meet Him in the air, or heavens (1 Thess. 4:16), long before He descends on the earth, and previous to Antichrist's ultimate career of three years and a half; the second act will be His advent as an avenger, to 'take vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ,' when He will descend on the Mount of Olives, and overwhelm Antichrist and his armies with destruction (2 Thess. 1:7, 8; Zechariah 14:1, 4; Rev. 19:11, 21; Matthew 24:30)."

(To be continued.)

---

acted from "Coming Wars," by Rev. M. two pamphlets—five cents each by mail phlet contains "Ten Signs of the End, and on of Approaching Events," with two maps large diagrams. Second pamphlet contains quotations from Forty Expositors on these . Address, 63 Bible House, New York.

most judicious expositors agree that most ophecies of Revelation, such as the Seals,
, Vials, etc., have a double fulfilment:
ng somewhat more than 1260 years, and uring somewhat more than 1260 days; the ed the year-day historical fulfilment, the literal-day futurist fulfilment, which latter plained in the book, "Coming Wonders."

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50 per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to THE MANAGER, CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of back numbers to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

Persons requiring single or special copies can obtain them most conveniently through

NEWSDEALERS.

Any complaint that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer is promptly attended to if we are given the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, Aug. 4th, at 11.50 A.M., at the Post Office, New York.

Scores of our readers take the trouble to send us the kindest expressions of their good will. Hundreds more agree cordially in what they say. Now will each of these good friends get us a new subscriber? We may say to persons to whom the commission is an inducement, that we believe our terms are more liberal than those of any other paper.

CURRENT EVENTS.

A General Conference of the Leaders of the Republican Party was held in New York on Thursday, August 5th, to meet General Garfield and arrange plans for the campaign. All sections of the party were represented, prominent Republicans from nearly every State and Territory in the Union being present. Ex-Governor Jewell presided, and among the speakers were Secretary Sherman, Senators James G. Blaine and John A. Logan, Dr. Loring of Massachusetts, and the venerable Thurlow Weed. The utmost enthusiasm prevailed, and the speakers appeared to entertain sanguine hopes of success in the coming contest.

The principal question under discussion was as to the conduct of the campaign in the Southern States. A decided opinion was expressed by several gentlemen that the strength of the party ought to be concentrated on an effort to carry the Northern States, and that it would be useless to contend for any States in the South. This opinion was opposed by several prominent men, and Mr. Jewell said that he would not take the responsibility of abandoning the South as a party. Dr. Loring moved a resolution that the committee be requested and instructed to respond to any appeals for aid that might come from Southern districts, and after considerable discussion the resolution was carried.

The plan generally approved was, to make a determined effort to carry the election in Maine, where the Democratic Party has made an alliance with the Greenback Party, and thus constitute a formidable opposition. The next point of the campaign will be Indiana, Ohio being considered safe in the Republican interest. If Maine, Ohio, and Indiana register a decided Republican success, then it was thought a Southern campaign might be hopefully inaugurated. Senator Conkling absented himself from the conference, being apparently unable to follow the course taken by Blaine and Sherman, who, disdaining the childish role of sulking over their disappointment, loyally accept the decision of the Chicago Convention and place party interests above personal preference.

Gen. Garfield's Reception in New York and at various places on his route was of a very enthusiastic character. On Friday evening the streets around the Republican headquarters were crowded by an immense concourse of people, assembled to do honor to the candidate. The "Boys in Blue," the Republican Assembly District Associations, and other organizations took part in the demonstration. Gen. Garfield and Gen. Arthur addressed the crowd from the balcony, and were followed by Edwards Pierrepont and other speakers.

"Save us from our Friends" would be an Appropriate wish on the part of the Democratic Presidential and Vice-Presidential candidates. Some enthusiastic Democratic liquor sellers have displayed on their banners the words "Hancock and English. No more cold water in the White House." Four years' experience of the influence temperance principles in the White House have exerted on society has not inspired the bulk of the population with a desire for a return to opposite influences. There are many Democrats who are total abstainers, and there are many temperance voters who are not firmly settled in their political views, and such a reason as these liquor-sellers advance for supporting the Democratic ticket, may induce them to vote for Gen. Garfield. Mr. Barnum should caution his too-candid allies.

The Charges made Against Gen. Grant by Gen. John McDonald, in his new book are, it is to be hoped, for the credit of the nation, without any foundation of truth. Even Gen. Grant's political opponents would feel it to be a national humiliation if it could be proved that a man who had been twice elected to the highest office in the gift of the people, had been guilty of participation in the profits of the crimes, for which McDonald and Joyce were sent to jail. The book is professed to be a circumstantial narrative of the proceedings of "the Whiskey Ring" from the time Gen. Grant appointed McDonald Supervisor down to the exposure, and it directly charges Gen. Grant, Babcock and others with a full knowledge of, and participation in, the proceeds of the frauds by which the revenue in McDonald's district was robbed of over three million dollars. The time chosen for making the disclosure, and the admitted culpability of the author, lead to the hope that the charges made are untrue.

Mr. J. Lloyd Haigh, who a few Months ago was respected as one of the principal merchants of New York pleaded guilty, on August 6th, to the charge of forgery on which he was arraigned. The circumstances of the crime were described in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at the time of his arrest. His counsel made an eloquent appeal for a light sentence, on the ground of the criminal's previous respectability and of his now pleading guilty, but the court rejected the former plea and expressed the conviction that it ought not to be regarded in the sentence. He was finally sentenced to four years' imprisonment in the State prison. It is a fearful warning to young men who, in the fierce competition of commercial life, are tempted to do wrong, hoping to rectify it before it is discovered.

The Death of Dr. Nathan Bishop Occurred at Saratoga on August 7th. His life had been one of remarkable activity, and his death occasions a loss, not only to the Baptist denomination, to which he belonged, but to the community at large. He was born in 1808, near Boston, Mass., and graduated from Brown University, which subsequently conferred upon him the degree of LL.D. For some years he was Superintendent of Schools in Boston, but on the acquisition of some considerable property, he resolved to devote his life to charitable and educational work. He was a trustee of Vassar College, and a member o the Boards of the Baptist Home Mission Society and of the American Bible Society. Genera Grant placed him, in 1872, on the Board of Indian Commissioners, and it was during an excursion in that capacity in the Indian Territory that he contracted the malarial disorder whic has ultimately caused his death. He was exceedingly liberal in his gifts to philanthropic an religious institutions, besides rendering willin personal service in their cause.

The Execution of Balbo, the Italian, for th murder of his wife, and of Cox for the murder of Mrs. Hull, lately, after a period of thre years, during which no execution has take place in New York, indicate that the Governo is not disposed to interfere with the course the law in cases of murder. In both instance strong representations and urgent appeals f mercy were made to him, but they were of n avail; he declined to exercise his prerogativ The sympathy somewhat ostentatiously di played toward both culprits, whose guilt w admitted, the gifts lavished upon them whi in jail, and the notoriety conferred upon the by the daily newspapers, tended to exercise a injurious influence on the criminal classes. T criminals were made to appear as heroes an martyrs, rather than in their proper guise brutal cowards, and thus the sanctity of l was not impressed on the public. The Gove nor's obduracy is condemned in many quarte but all will rejoice if it has the wholesome eff of deterring men from committing murder.

Routine in Public Affairs is so Essenti to the efficient discharge of official duty that t much stress is occasionally laid upon it, wh it degenerates into obstruction. A few da ago, while the thermometer was registering 98 the shade, in New York, a policeman report that a dead dog was lying in one of the dow town streets, and a man was sent to remove He returned without the decaying carcase. examination he found it was a dead goat, and his instructions were to remove a dead dog, had come back to wait while his superior off telegraphed to headquarters for instructions remove a goat. Meanwhile, the carcase polluting the air breathed by hundreds of c zens in the crowded street.

Dr. Talmage is Reported to have Explo some of the worst haunts of vice in Leadv A correspondent of the New York Tribune sta that, guided by the police, the eminent preac visited the gambling saloons and dance-hou in the city and came away appalled by sights he witnessed.

A Young Cripple Healed by Faith Prayer.—The Northampton Gazette relates following incident, showing that the praye faith does heal the sick, and the Lord raises t up, according to His promise (James 5 : 15).

"We will state a fact. There is a young at South Hadley of the name of Rennie N This young man has been entirely helpless several years from rheumatism. Last wee colored woman from Connecticut arrived, ing been sent for. Her process is simple—p er, laying on of hands, and touching the head with oil. She continued in prayer and versation from 1 to 4 P.M. Several witn were present. At 4 o'clock Mr. Nash wa with crutches; he now dresses and undr himself, feeds himself, comes and goes at We could say more, but if any are interest learn for themselves, they can call at the h of Erastus Nash, and see for themselves. people here acknowledge this healing to answer to prayer, and this is believed by p sors and non-professors of religion withou ception. The healing is wonderful."

The Spanish Speculator who Introduced fights into New York has received notice he will not be permitted to outrage the p feelings of the citizens by repeating his e tion. Mr. Bergh states that he can legally vent the scandalous performance taking again. The Sheriff has seized the animal properties for debt.

Only Last Week in New York, a Christian entleman met a stranger in a house where he as making a call, and felt impelled (no doubt by e Holy Spirit) to lay before him the way of lvation. So he spoke to him plainly and ear- estly on two points, viz., his need of a Saviour, nd the danger of delay. Next morning the an went out to chop wood, and returned home oughing violently and feeling ill. By the eve- ng he was dead. Are not we to see more than coincidence in this? Did not the Holy Ghost e that the man's end had come, and send the hristian visitor to offer him his last chance of tting into the kingdom of heaven? What an wful warning the case presents of the danger of tting off the matter of the soul's salvation.

The American Bible and Prayer Union Or- nized last March on similar principles to the glish Union, now numbers nearly a thousand embers. In an explanatory circular recently ued, the Secretary, says: Among the applica- ns received is one from a little girl aged nine ars, written with her own hand. Another is m an old gentleman of eighty-four. Another plicant writes, "It is just what I need to help in the divine life, and particularly in the tter of prayer and devotional reading of the ble. I do not have that freedom in prayer t I desire, nor that love for God's word that ught to have; but I hope from this associa- n to be so uplifted as to gain both."

The requirements are very simple. Each per- wishing to join should send a three-cent mp for card of membership, which contains alendar of the chapters for the year. If fur- r desired, subscriptions for the Monthly es may also be sent, at thirty cents for the r, including postage. All inquiries should addressed to Rev. T. S. Wyncoop, Washing- , D. C.

Significant Fact in Connection with Public aries, is noticed in a pamphlet recently issued the Librarian of the Friends' Free Library at mantown, Pa. That library contains no ks of fiction. The Friends believe that the in- nce of novels on the class of readers who efly frequent free libraries, is to give them e views of life and to make them discontent- with their position. They accordingly admit novels to their shelves, and they find that ap- ants for literature of that class are willing to guided in the choice of a book. In 1879, ough there were 1,200 names registered as lers, the trustees lost only twelve books, while er libraries are robbed of hundreds annually. ould thus appear that the kind of reading plied, has had a beneficial influence on the als of the readers.

e Practice of Using Arsenic to Improve complexion, which has of late years become revalent among ladies, is, it has been proved, nded with considerable danger. A young living at Indianapolis, who is handsome intelligent, has been for a long while using nic for her complexion, and recently she has st lost her eyesight. Her eyes began to grow about a year ago, and have been gradually sensibly failing ever since, until it is almost ssible for her to see. Her physician says it om the use of arsenic. If young ladies who o anxious for purity of complexion were as estly desirous to acquire the beauty of which apostle Peter writes (1 Peter 3 : 4), they d exercise a beneficial influence on society ell as gain a blessing on their own souls.

e Cost of Fulfilling a Sailor's Promise In- ed the Atlantic and St. Lawrence Railroad pany in the expenditure of $3,808. The pany, thirty-three years ago needed a piece nd in Portland, Me., adjoining their line, h was owned by James Mountfort. James ntfort's brotherDaniel, had been a sailor, and placed the widow and daughter of one of his nates in a house on the land, and had prom- that they should have it free of rent as as they lived. Daniel lost his life in a reck, but his brother James, to whom the e was left, knew of his brother's promise, llowed the two women to remain on the same terms. When the railroad company wanted to purchase the land, James explained that the house upon it was let on a life-lease to the two occupants. The company asked to see the lease, but James said, "My brother gave no written lease, but gave his word for it as long as they lived, which was higher and stronger than any written lease could be." He offered to sell the land at a low price, on condition that the two women were not turned out of the house, and the company purchased it on those conditions. As they afterward required to pull down the house, they were obliged to pay the rent of another place for the women to live in, and this they continued to do as long as they lived. The widow soon died, but the daughter lived until a few weeks ago, and the company found that the payments made, with interest upon them, amount to $3,808, which had been expended rather than the old sailor's promise should be broken. As the women relied on their benefactor's word, so does the Christian rest with perfect confidence on the word of Him "who cannot lie" (Titus 1 : 2).

Seven Convicts Crawled through a Sewer at Auburn, N. Y., last week, in making an effort to escape. They had dug down from the room in which they were employed and had opened the sewer and crawled in. The sewer is only seventeen inches wide and fourteen deep, and the convicts during their journey were several times in imminent peril of death by getting fixed immovably in the narrow passage and were besides nearly choked by the filthy matter through which they had to force their way. On emerging into the street they found an officer waiting for them, who conducted them back to the prison; so the men had risked their lives for nothing. In the same way men give their lives to Satan, and after years of sin and misery, at their death discover that they have gained nothing, and have lost their souls.

The Riddle Samson Propounded to the Philistines (Judges 14 : 14) is being illustrated in the occupation of a man named Geer, at Basket, Pa., who spends his summers in catching rattlesnakes and extracting an oil from them. He is very fearless of the animals, and catches them by placing a forked stick over their necks. If he wants to keep them alive, he cuts out the poison-glands which lie behind the fangs in the upper jaw. He knows where to find plenty of snakes in the mountains around Basket, and he has a dog which has learned, like its master, to seize them without getting bitten. The oil is said to sell readily at $1 an ounce, owing to its curative powers, which are, truly or otherwise, reputed to be great.

Samson's riddle described the eater giving forth meat, and the strong, sweetness; in this case the venomous reptile gives forth medicine. So it sometimes happens that the example of a drunken or vicious man, by operating as a warning, saves his children from falling victims to the same vice.

An Explosion was Caused in a Denver Boarding house on Sunday evening, July 11th, by a boarder's carelessness. The man was a miner and carried about a quantity of cartridges and caps in a leathern valise, which, on that day, he deposited near the stove and went out. Soon afterward there was a sharp crack, as of a fire-cracker, and then a terrible explosion, as of a cannon. The children fled in terror, while the plastering of the ceiling fell around them and the floor beneath their feet was torn up, and by the time they had made their exit, blood was streaming from their bodies. Each was covered with cuts and gashes, perhaps to the number of sixty or seventy, ranging from a surface scratch to half an inch in depth. The valise they had seen in the room looked innocent enough, but it contained in it elements of danger and death. If they recover and grow up they will find that other apparently inoffensive things have the power under certain circumstances of doing them spiritual harm more disastrous than that worked by the contents of the miner's valise.

GOOD NEWS FOR THIRSTY SOULS.

A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely."—REVELATION 21 : 6.

The Promise Given Directly by Christ — John Charged to Put it in Black and White, that it might not be Forgotten—Christ Spoke from the Throne—A Splendid Preface—I. Explanation—1. All Souls are by Nature in Dire Want—Thirst is Awful—Want of Grace Worse—2. Some are Conscious of their Need—Mistakes of Inquirers—3. Thirst a Desire Arising out of a Need—4. Thirst cannot Quench Thirst—A Remarkably Easy Thing—II. Encouragement—Christ Keeps Open House—Issues Free Invitations—Gives Gracious Explanations—Lively Emblems—Encouraging Instances—A Special Blessing to Thirsty Ones—The A, B, C of the Gospel.

SALVATION is no small thing. It filled the heart and hands of the Son of God, and therefore it ought not to be neglected by us. The precious promise before us concerns the gift of eternal salvation, and it is set forth as the personal word of the Lord Jesus Christ Himself. The apostle is very careful to make this clear, for he inserts the words, "And He said unto me;" as if he knew that poor troubled hearts might doubt so large a promise were they not assured that Jesus Himself had expressly given it.

John is a faithful and true witness; in this as in another case he could have written, "He knoweth that He saith true." He declares to us that He who is Alpha and Omega, Himself gave unto him this word of promise. So specially careful was our Lord that the gospel of grace should be published correctly, and without fail, that He delivered it Himself to John, and also said to him, "Write: for these words are true and faithful." Not content with committing the message in words to the apostle, He charges him there and then to put it down in black and white, that it might never be forgotten. Thus He proved that He assuredly meant what He said, and meant that it should stand good through all ages: "I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely."

It is to be noticed, too, that our Lord spoke these words as a king: "He that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new;" and then He added, "I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely." Divine sovereignty, therefore, is not opposed to the most generous promises of the Gospel. Jesus Christ may give or withhold as He pleases; but His will is to give. He will have mercy on whom He will have mercy, and He will have compassion on whom He will have compassion; but the stern truth of His infinite sovereignty is coupled with the sweet declaration of boundless charity—"I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely."

However much we preach the doctrines of election and divine sovereignty, we never intend to limit the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ; but as freely as if we had not believed in sovereignty we publish our Lord's generous Gospel words, "Him that cometh unto me I will in nowise cast out."

There is a splendid preface to this promise in the three words, "It is done;" this indeed is the reason why grace can be so freely given. When our blessed Lord had completed His work on the cross, He cried, "It is finished," or "It is done," and then the living stream flowed freely for the sons of men. Then was the rock riven with rivers; then was the stone rolled away from the well's mouth; then was the water of life made to gush from under the altar to fertilize a barren world with its ever-deepening flood.

When this world's history is over, when the entire programme of Christ's mediatorial work shall have been worked out, and this dispensation shall have come to an end, then our Lord from His throne shall say, "It is done," and this shall be sung to His glory, that He freely gave to thirsty souls of the fountain of the water of life.

I am most happy to have such a text to preach from! I pray the Lord to bless every word that shall be spoken, and that every one of you—from those in the uppermost gallery, right away to those who crowd the far corners of the area—may come this morning to the celestial spring and drink, and thirst no more. You have drank some of you, many times; come again, and take draughts large and deep, for the fountain is as full as ever. Some of you spiritually may be like those described by Coleridge:

> "With throats unslaked, with black lips baked."

Your tongue cleaves to the roof of your mouth with faintness and anguish, you are burning with strong desire and pressed with urgent need. Come ye! Come and welcome! Hasten, even before we enter into the sermon: drink from the life-giving fount while we linger in the porch of these prefatory sentences. The words of the redeeming Lord invite you to partake of grace at once. O Holy Spirit, apply them with power to every heart.

There will be two heads of discourse at this time. The first is explanation, and the second is encouragement.

I. The first is

EXPLANATION.

We shall only mention a few very simple truths.

1. The first is, that all souls by nature are in great and dire want. Our Lord here speaks of those who are "athirst," and thirst is the index of one of our most pressing necessities. Many things we think we want, and yet we live without them; but the need of which thirst is the expression is a very urgent one, involving the loss of all comfort, and even of life itself, if it be not supplied. A traveller who had experienced both hunger and thirst, said: "Hunger you may palliate, but thirst is awful." He meant much by saying "thirst is awful." There is no forgetting this pain, and no staying it except by drinking. When thirst swoops down upon a man from out of a burning sky, whether he wanders upon an ocean of sand or brine, it is a woeful day for him.

Want of water is a terrible want, but the want of grace is even more dreadful, yet such is the want of all our race. Every man by nature needs grace. He does not always know what he wants; and, indeed, many are so insensible that they do not feel their soul's necessities; yet those necessities are none the less urgent. Dear souls, you need a Saviour; you need the pardon of your sins; you need to be made anew in Christ Jesus; and, whether you know it or not, if you do not get these things you will die in your sins, and therefore die eternally, which is the second death. If this thirst be not quenched you are in a desperate plight indeed, for there is nothing before you but "a fearful looking for of judgment and of fiery indignation."

2. Some persons begin to be conscious of their soul's great need, and these are they of whom the Saviour speaks as "athirst:" they have a dreadful want, and they know it. I sometimes meet with inquirers who, when they are invited to believe in Jesus, reply:

"I DO NOT FEEL MY NEED ENOUGH;

I wish to take the living water, but I am not thirsty enough." I would have you know that frequently those are the most thirsty who thirst to thirst. If I know that I have a thirst I have at least something; but if I am fearful that I do not even thirst, then my thirsting to thirst is a deeper thirst than thirst itself. I speak thus because of the infirmity of trembling hearts.

Let me remind you that no man living knows to the full his own need of a Saviour. I suppose if we could altogether see our desperate condition by nature, or know to the full the heinousness of sin, we should become mad. Do not, therefore, ask to feel your need above measure; but thank God that you know your necessity so much as to apply to Jesus for His gracious supplies.

Remember also that certain pains which are supposed to be a part of spiritual thirst are not necessarily connected with it. When a man is seeking Christ it often happens that the devil comes in and suggests all manner of blasphemies and despairing thoughts. Do not be so foolish as to conclude that you are not thirsting after Christ because you have happily been free from these diabolical insinuations. They are not the work of the Spirit of God; they are malicious inventions of the devil, and you are infinitely better without them than with them.

I have heard of a convert who was years before he could trust the Saviour because he thought himself to be so great a sinner that the Lord could not possibly save him. Do not imitate so bad an example. Unbelieving thoughts are no part of thirsting after Christ, and they are not to be desired, but dreaded. Be very thankful if you can get to the Lord Jesus easily: it is a choice privilege.

Do not look upon your thirst as a preparation for Christ, for thus you will be seduced into making a Christ out of your own needs, and that will be ridiculous and ruinous. What would you think of a man who expected to find a remedy in his disease?

3. Thirst is a desire arising out of a need. Now, so long as you have that desire, you need not stop to question your right to take Christ. A man is thirsty, even if he cannot explain what thirst is and how it comes. I must confess, myself, that I could not give you a physiological account of the origin and effect of the phenomenon of thirst. I suppose that certain organs which require moisture begin to dry up or collapse without it, and so disarrange the functions and cause pain. If I were some learned anatomist, I could give you a lecture upon the theory of thirst; and yet, though I cannot do this, I know practically what thirst is as well as a doctor could tell me. When I am thirsty and am invited to drink, I do not refuse because I cannot explain my thirst.

Nor is there any absolute necessity, in order to salvation, that you should know all about how it is that Christ can supply your needs. If you know enough about Christ to understand that He can meet every need of your soul, and if you take Him to be your all in all, the matter is done. Remember, Jesus Christ often saves poor, simple-minded men when He does not save philosophers. If you take the Lord Jesus to be yours, you shall as truly have the benefit of His salvation as if you were a father in Israel.

4. Let us notice once again that being thirsty is not enough. The text promiseth water from the fountain of life to the man that is athirst; but

THIRST CANNOT QUENCH THIRST.

Some seekers act as if they thought it would. "Oh," say they, "I am not thirsty enough; I wish I felt my need more;" but, my dear friend, your thirst will not be quenched by being increased. "I should have some hope," says one, "if I were more sensible of my danger." Yet that is not a gospel hope. Why should a man's despairing because of his danger operate to deliver him from danger? As long as you stop where you are you may get more and more sensible of danger, until you reach the sensitiveness of morbid despondency; but you will be no nearer salvation.

It is not your sense of need, it is Christ's power to bless you, and your yielding yourself up to Christ, that will bring you salvation. The remedy for the thirsty soul is very plainly hinted at in the text. What does a thirsty man do to get rid of his thirst? He drinks. Perhaps there is no better representation of faith in all the Word of God than that. To drink is to receive—to take in the refreshing draught—and that is all. A man's face may be unwashed, but yet he can drink; he may be a very unworthy character, but yet a draught of water will remove his thirst.

Drinking is such a remarkably easy thing, it is even more simple than eating. I heard the other day of a sad, sad case of a workman with cancer of the tongue who cannot eat. He has not taken solid victuals for six months, but still he can receive food by drinking. Whe people are dying you can still moisten the lips; when nothing else can possibly pass the throats they can receive liquid. So, dear sou whatever thy state may be, thou canst surely r ceive Christ, for He comes to thee like a cup cold water. Does not water run down the thro of itself? So is it with the Gospel. Only l willing to open your mouth to have it, and it yours. Nothing is simpler.

The essence of faith lies in having done wi self and receiving from without, and that, n by any laborious process, but as easily as m receive water by drinking. We do not drink l machinery, we just open our mouths and suff the water to run down; even thus we recei Christ. Be willing to have grace, be ready, it were, to imbibe it by the mouth of faith. blessed faith, which is nothing of itself, and y enriches its possessor! O blessed grace, divir living water, which is ours as soon as ever are willing to have it!

Thus I have endeavored to explain the tex I hope I have not darkened what I wished to in clearest light. O Spirit of God, make m see this open secret, this plain riddle of drin ing at the fount of grace!

II. We are to speak secondly by way of ENCOURAGEMENT.

I am going to dwell upon this figure of thirst it is used in the Scriptures, that I may le every soul that feels its need of Christ to ta Him at once. The first encouragement is th our Lord Jesus Christ keeps open house for thirsty ones. Kindly turn to the Word of G for we must back up everything with Script this morning: let us read the seventeenth ve of the twenty-second chapter of the Book of R elation: "And the Spirit and the Bride s Come. And let him that heareth say, Com And let him that is athirst come. And wh ever will, let him take of the water of life freel

No voice at Christ's door saith, "Stay awa but three voices join with His in cryi "Come." The Spirit and the Bride and that heareth, all cry, "Come," "Com 'Come." No officer stands at the door to s out the comers, and to say, "This may co and the other may not;" but the invitatio "Whosoever will, let him take of the wate life freely." Said I not truly that CHRIST KEEPS OPEN HOUSE?

What can be more free or more comprehen than this? Only publish it in your neigh hood that you intend to keep open house f day, and that everybody who comes may eat drink what he likes at your expense; you not advertise it many times in the newspap only tell a few of the hungry brotherhood, they will swarm like bees. I will warrant y full table from early dawn to set of sun in an our crowded quarters, if you will only pro the best meat and say, "Whosoever will, let come."

O, sirs, if ye do perish, it is no fault of Chri for his table is furnished, and the entrance t banquet-hall is free. In His name do I de the absolue freeness of His grace. He has t the doors from off the hinges to set His wide open, He has put away all sentinels His table, and ordained that none of His vants may hinder coming souls. Our or are, "Whosoever will, let him come," an would be a plain violation of our Master' ders if we were to hinder any. His gen invitation is, "Come and welcome! Come welcome! Come and welcome! Let him is athirst come; and whosoever will, let take the water of life freely."

Now, as if it were not enough to keep house, our Lord Jesus goes further; for i next place, He issues many invitations o freest kind. I will only quote one out of many. Turn to the first verse of the fifty chapter of Isaiah, "Ho! every one that t eth, come ye to the waters, and he that ha money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come wine and milk without money and wi price." Grace must be gratis; the freely" in our text makes it clear that salva- on is an absolute gift, but here the fact is put a negative form that there may be no mistake hatever.

Mercy is "without money and without price" without price in any possible sense. We ither purchase, nor procure, nor earn, nor oduce salvation by merit, effort, sacrifice, or rvice. It comes to us, not because we deserve but because we need it. We are blessed with out of the good-will and pleasure of the Lord, d we do not purchase it by good deeds, good sires, or pious resolves, or persevering en- avors. We are empty and He fills us. In der that you may come to Jesus, no prepara- n is required. You may come just as you are d come at once; only confess that you need m, desire to have Him, and then take Him trusting Him.

oes any one say, "Well, I know that the r-blessed Saviour keeps open house, and that invites men freely; but still I am afraid to e?" Peradventure, dear friend, we may rcome your diffidence by the help of God if remind you that our Lord makes a proclama-, which has the weight of His personal dig-, about it, and comes as from a king. Turn he seventh of John, thirty-seventh verse: the last day, that great day of the feast, Je- stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, im come unto me, and drink. He that be- th on me as the Scripture hath said, out of belly shall flow rivers of living water." is the sovereign word of the King of kings. anding up in the midst of the multitude, roclaimed His own full and free salvation, with His own voice declared the day of, "If any man thirst, let him come unto nd drink." O anxious inquirer, what more u want?

ish you could picture Jesus standing in our this morning and using such words! But u cannot, if neither faith nor imagination elp you to realize His presence, still He is and by the mouth of His servant He still in the place of concourse, "If any man, let him come unto me and drink" Will ot come? What is it keeps you back? all is to any man, any woman, any child, dy; any one that needs mercy, any one who s salvation, let him come and have Jesus ternal life. If you think yourself an out- if you seem shut out with seven bolted yet do not take upon yourself the respon- of condemning yourself. Come and try! thirst, come to Christ, and He will give ace at once.

dventure, a trembler replies, "Ay!

HERE IS A PROCLAMATION;

hould be more comforted if I could read es." Our text is one of the freest prom- ssible: "I will give unto him that is of the fountain of the water of life freely." nd test the promise now and see if it be e. But if you require another, turn to l gospel chapter in Isaiah, the forty-first, me read you the seventeenth verse. Will s suit you? "When the poor and needy ater, and there is none, and their tongue for thirst, I the Lord will hear them, I d of Israel will not forsake them. I will vers in high places, and fountains in the f the valleys; I will make the wilderness of water, and the dry land springs of er o then, you that cannot pray; you that dried up with inward drought that you get the words out, and scarcely feel the within; all you whose very hearts do fail that you despair of hope, believe this of God, who cannot lie, and plead it Him. See if God will not open for you s on the very mountain tops, where you ast expect them, and give you comfort ou looked not for.

I quote another promise out of many? a sound of abundant refreshment in it. he forty-fourth of Isaiah, second verse: pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground." He will not only give you enough to drink, but pour it on you to drench you with delight. Your hot and weary feet shall be ready to start again upon the journey of life, because washed and cleansed by love. There is grace enough in God to allow it to be lavished upon you. If I were in your case, poor, thirsy soul, I would catch at such a promise as that. "Lord," I would say, "I long to have thee; I know I cannot be saved without thee; I am sure that thou canst save me; and lo! I trust thee. If I die, I will die trusting in thee!" You are saved, my brother. There is no fear that God will ever reject a soul that has come to this pass; He will pour floods upon you yet.

Our gracious Lord, still further to encourage souls to come to Him, has been pleased to give many gracious explanations of what He meant. You will find one in the fourth chapter of John. How sweetly He explained to the woman at the well what living water is, and what drinking of it is. He tells you that, by believing in Him, you receive into yourself everlasting life. Further on, in the sixth chapter of John, at the thirty-fifth verse, He shows what drinking of the living water is: "And Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall never hunger, and he that believeth on me shall never thirst."

I tell you, beloved hearers, that my own personal hope lies altogether in the hand of my Lord, and in no degree elsewhere. I have now known the Lord some thirty years or more, and at this moment if any one should ask me what is my hope of eternal life, I can only answer that it is just what it was thirty years ago, namely, the work and death of the Lord Jesus in my room and stead. "Have you not preached the Gospel for years?" Yes, I have, with all my might, and I have by God's blessing brought many thousands to repentance and faith; but I do not in the slightest degree rest my hope of heaven upon my preaching. Whatever the Lord enables me to do for Him is His doing and His work, and He alone must have the glory of it; I dare not claim a grain of merit for it.

I have only Christ to trust to, and I want no more. I have no righteousness of my own, but I trust to free grace and dying love. The cross will float me into the port of peace; if it does not I must be lost, for every other lifeboat has gone to the bottom long ago. Christ Jesus is my hope, and I am persuaded that He is a Saviour as suitable for you as He is for me.

Furthermore, our blessed Lord, in order to make this very plain, has set before us

LIVELY EMBLEMS.

He gives us the figure of the rock in the wilderness. You remember how He supplied Israel's need from day to day till He brought them to rest. The sun blazed upon the desert sands, and the pilgrims were sorely tried with thirst, so that they murmured, and thought it better to die than to suffer such inward burning. How were their pains removed? Moses, with his rod, struck the rock, and out leaped a stream of which they drank with eager joy. Can you not see them bowing down for a draught, or holding their vessels at the place where first the water springs forth. Our Lord Jesus Christ is the smitten rock, whence flow life and refreshing to all who will accept the grace.

Beloved, the very cup of communion, and the whole communion-table itself, is meant, among other gracious lessons, to teach us the way of salvation. Here is bread. What am I to do with it? Look at it? study it? analyze it? I may if I choose, but that is not what it was meant for; it was intended to be eaten; use it that way and you use it well. The wine, too, is meant to be drunk; it is not placed upon the table to be gazed upon, or to be quarrelled over, or to be distilled, but to be drunk. This is an act which any thirsty person can perform. You poor souls who cannot do any good thing, surely you can receive of the food which your heavenly Father provides. If you cannot bear fruit and so give something out, you can take something in. If there be nothing in you, there is all the more room to receive of the divine fulness. Oh, then, let the communion cup, concerning which the Saviour said, "Drink,"—let that tell you how to receive Christ, how to be saved by heartily accepting Christ.

Our Lord Jesus Christ in His wisdom has given us, in addition, many encouraging instances of men who have thirsted for grace. I will not detain you with many of them. We sang a part of the forty-second Psalm this morning, where David said he longed for the living God as the hart panteth after the water-brooks. Further on, in the sixty-third Psalm, he cries, "My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God," and a few verses down he sings, "My soul shall be satisfied as with marrow and fatness." If you thirst after God you shall soon be satisfied. May your thirst increase until you get Him, and then shall you be filled to the full.

Once more. Our Lord has been pleased to give His own special blessing to the thirsty ones; for, when He opened His mouth upon the mountain and gave out the benedictions which commence His memorable sermon, He said, "Blessed are they that do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." Oh! then, ye thirsty ones, you are blessed in your very desires and longings.

I do not know what more to say to you. What more could even inspiration utter? This blessed Book has set before you such a wealth of precious things that one can barely imagine more. What is wanted is that the truth be applied, and that you do now come and take Christ. I beg you to recollect that you must take Christ by a personal act, each one for himself or herself. Each one must willingly believe, for God forces Christ on nobody. If I am thirsty, I must drink; no well or river can quench my thirst if I do not personally drink. It is the wisest thing to say, "I am an undeserving, hell-deserving sinner; but if God is infinite in mercy, why should He not save me as well as any one else? He declares that if I trust His Son He will pardon me; I will trust His Son and partake of His forgiveness. He bids me drink of the water of life; I will drink. I will not question my right to come; He bids me do so, and I will obey. I take Him at His word; I trust in the blood of Jesus. Lord, receive me, for I receive thy Son. I have been trying to save myself, and waiting until I felt something, or did something, in and of myself; but now, Lord, although I neither see nor feel anything but my lost estate, I do believe that Jesus can save me, and I trust on Him." If this be your true act, dear hearer, you are a saved man. Even if you only believed a minute ago, you have passed from death to life. The moment a sinner believes he is justified; the atoning blood operates the moment faith sees it. O thou who hast but this instant believed, go thy way and rejoice; thou art in the hand of Jesus, and none can pluck thee thence.

I have thus tried to preach a very plain sermon, containing

THE A B C OF THE GOSPEL.

I believe that God will bless it to the conversion of many; I shall be terribly disappointed if He does not. I have entreated Him to let His own message have free course and mighty effect, and I know that He will hear me. I beg God's people to pray that this sermon may inclose within the Gospel net more fish than ever we have had before.

Some of you seekers have hitherto thought the door of mercy to be bolted against you. See, it stands wide open. Come and welcome. If any softness of feeling is stealing over you let it work while you gladly yield. Do not talk nonsense on the way home, and so lose the effect of the discourse. Hasten to your chambers, fall upon your knees, and rise not till you have accepted Jesus as your own Saviour. If you do so, salvation will have come to your house this day, and God will be glorified. Amen and amen.

[Portion of Scripture read before Sermon—
John 4. 1—42.]

WHAT RELIGION HAS DONE FOR NEW YORK.

By the Hon. Thurlow Weed.

THE Hon. Thurlow Weed has written a clear and admirably outspoken letter to the New York Herald on the pernicious effects of Colonel Ingersoll's teachings and of infidel doctrines in general. Not many ministers could have argued the cause of Christianity better than it is done in the following passages :

Our city furnishes many examples of the beneficence of religion. Forty years ago a locality too well known as the "Five Points," with a population of several thousands, was the home of the vilest of the vile, and the resort of others equally debased. Men, women, and children of all nationalities and colors herded together, differing only in the degrees of crime and the depths of profligacy habitually practised. Their days were passed in either idleness or depredations. Their nights were spent in dance-house debaucheries. All healthy or wholesome influences were excluded. Children grew up to become either street beggars or inmates of the alms-house and their parents filled penitentiaries and prisons.

These orgies continued year after year, defiant and aggressive, until that pandemonium was invaded by Christian men and women whose patience would not tire, whose courage was indomitable, and whose devotion has been rewarded by a moral and religious reformation so complete that no part of our city is now more quiet and orderly than the once dreaded "Five Points."

Thousands of children then growing up either vagabonds or culprits are now attending schools, in which they are stimulated by precept and example to live industrious and virtuous lives Instead, therefore of sending forth idle, ignorant, and vicious children to prey upon society, the destitute and orphan children of the "Five Points," prepared for usefulness by moral and religious training, find happy homes in our rapidly developing Western States and Territories.

Again, eight years ago

WATER STREET

and its surroundings eastward from Peck Slip had a notoriety almost as unenviable as that of the "Five Points." That region was rife with drunkenness, burglaries, pugilism, and their kindred vices. Jerrv McAuley was conspicuous in all that was wicked and demoralizing. He had the reputation of being a terror to the precint, a reputation which, by his own confession, was deserved.

But this disturber of the public peace was converted, and then he resolved to devote the remainder of his life to the service of his Master, and, with a faithful, affectionate wife as a helper, he has abundantly atoned for all his offences. For a long time the hisses and howlings of his former associates seriously disturbed his meetings, but courage, perseverance, and patience finally prevailed, and his work now progresses without interruption.

The general character of the neighborhood has been improved ; its social and moral tone and atmosphere have been purified. Sailor boarding-houses have been reformed. Sailors now carry their Bibles with them to sea. Moody and Sankey hymns are sung in forecastles. Hundreds of half naked and hungry wives and children, by the conversion of drunken husbands and fathers, now rejoice in comfortable and happy homes.

The Mission Church is crowded every week day and evening and three times on Sunday with intelligent Christian men and women who, rescued from garrets and gutters, are now reputable citizens, enjoying the fruits of their industry and relating with grateful hearts the miseries of their past, the joys of their present, and the hopes of their future. By all who "went to scoff, but remained to pray," Jerry McAuley and his exemplary wife are regarded with affection and will be remembered with gratitude.

TWO TEACHERS CONTRASTED.

Let us contrast the labors of two prominent contemporary teachers—one, Mr. Moody, a Christian, and the other, Mr. Ingersoll, an infidel, missionary. Mr. Moody is self-made and self-educated. Mr. Ingersoll is a gentleman of education, culture and refinement. That Mr. Moody's labors have been in the highest degree beneficial to all classes will not be denied. The highest and the humblest listened with charmed interest, and all left the Tabernacle better and happier. The general effect both of his preaching, supplemented by the never-to-be-forgotten voice of Mr. Sankey, cleared, braced, and purified the religious, moral, and social atmosphere of the city.

The labors of Moody and Sankey were practical. They not only asked "What shall the harvest be?" but they obtained in their inquiry-rooms gratifying responses to their questions. Hundreds of drunkards were reclaimed, gamblers and prize-fighters were converted. Destitute wives and children and desolate homes have been made happy and bright by the rescue and return of reformed husbands and fathers.

Long and gratefully will the advent of Moody and Sankey be remembered. The city is still fragrant with Tabernacle memories. Mr. Moody is turning the results of his labor to good account. The Moody and Sankey hymns, well known to the Christian world, are now sung by native converts in the interior of Africa.

The sale of these hymn-books produces a handsome fund, which Mr. Moody devotes to missionary purposes. At his home in Northfield, Mass., he has erected a suitable building for a mission school and home for Indian girls, some fifty of whom from the far West have already been received. Mr. Moody, therefore, has taken up and will carry on the good work so auspiciously commenced by the late lamented Father de Smet.

And now I invite Mr. Ingersoll or any of his followers to inform the public how and to what extent they have profited by his missionary labors in this city, what salutary reforms he has inaugurated or even suggested, or in what manner and to what extent he has contributed to the general welfare or happiness of his fellow-citizens.

A DRINK-MADDENED FATHER.

A Temperance Story.

(Concluded from page 508.)

A SCREAM burst from the girls as the light form of their sick brother hung in their father's hand, and they endeavored to drag him back. But M'Kinnon stood glaring furiously down on the terror-stricken child.

"The money, you little hypocrite — the money !" he screamed.

The boy's teeth chattered, and he turned deadly pale in the effort to get out words ; but the father, now thoroughly maddened, hurled him backward with terrific force, crying, "There ; that'll make you speak, I think !"

The head of the sick boy struck the wall heavily, and he sank faintly down on his hands and side.

"Oh, father, kiss me before I die !" was all he got out, and with a faint effort to crawl forward, he dropped on the floor in a swoon.

M'Kinnon was not moved—could not be—for at that moment he was a devil, and not a man, and only turned furiously to vent his wrath on the girls.

But an appalling spectacle met his gaze, at least one that for its very uncommonness paralyzed him into helplessness. Eliza, with her eyes burning like live coals, and her delicate form reared almost to a woman's stateliness, had suddenly flung open the door, and now turned and threw herself upon him with the strength of twenty strong men in her slight frame. One grasp—a great wrench, and a pull at the astounded wretch, and she had him out across the passage, and hurled him with amazing force headlong down the stairs.

He was not much hurt, but he was thorough cowed ; and, instead of attempting to come ba and retaliate, by bursting in the locked door, merely slunk away to find drink or money el where.

Poor Freddy got rapidly worse. Tears st into his sister's eyes, as they ever and an recognized the words,

"There is a happy land,
Far, far away."

But there was no bitterness in their tears n

"Darling, wee Freddy," ejaculated Eliza, ' is better that it should be so. He will be ha in heaven. Mother will shield him in bosom, and there father can never go."

Freddy was indeed now out of reach of ministrations. He moaned and tossed, rec nizing no one, and in continual fear of a br father hidden somewhere about the bed, ready to spring on his sisters and beat them mercifully.

"Strike me first, father ! oh, strike first !" was his continual whisper ; but he too weak for even that, and at last sank in half-wakeful slumber. About two o'clock the morning he suddenly started and smi Eliza bent over him in quick joy at finding self recognized ; but at that same moment he back, the light died in his eyes, and his l drooped forward, while his last whisper fel the ears of his breathless sisters—

"Far, far away."

Intercession with John Nicol resulted in Freddy's last wish being realized, that he sh be buried by the side of his mother, in I burgh. Then their kind employer, finding the girls had determined to leave their f and face the world alone, offered to shelter under his roof. They gladly assented, exclaimed : "We will be your daughters and God will help us to be good ones."

"What ! do you really mean it ?" jo exclaimed the lonely man, "and will you me for your father—me, who have nothin hard work and a peaceful home to offer yo

Eliza made no reply, but, dropping o knees, took his hand within her ow reverently kissed it.

Time passed on ; Nicol and the girls re to Edinburgh, and by the energy, brigh and intelligence of his Eliza and Agnes, adopted father was raised from povert obscurity to wealth and commanding r tability. Remembering their own mis youth and early struggles, the girls through the worst slums of the city, an good in every home.

THE DAUGHTERS MEET THEIR FATH AFTER YEARS.

They were walking down the High Str afternoon, when Eliza Nicol—as she was —was grasped by an infuriated dru
"Money—money—money—turn it ou silk-and-satin Jezebel !" he shouted, as a man appeared on the spot, and she hasti duced her purse, and was about to sovereign in his hand, when the policen terposed and said,

"Stay, Miss Nicol, don't trouble yours this villain, but just hand him over to m name is M'Kinnon, and he is an old offen

"Oh, no !" said Eliza to the officer cally. "He is—he is—my father !"

"Ay, her father," triumphantly retur brutal sot. "Her father—starving, dyin she and her sister are rolling in wealt can't take me up for that, can you clutched the money as he spoke, and himself away.

On the night following this meeting E
Agnes, who were alone at home, were s with the news that a strange man was at demanding to see them. They both out in dismay, only to find their worst f firmed. It was M'Kinnon. But he longer insolent. He sank with a groa stone steps, while he tried to speak to t

"I—I'm afraid I'm going to be ill, m said, with a fearful look around ; "and the ctor said I would never get over the attack. want to say good-by."

His face was so wistful and haggard that they th turned away and covered their eyes with eir hands.

"I know that I've been a wicked wretch, and at I killed poor Freddy," said the man, with attering teeth. "He has haunted me ever ice. Don't touch me ; only say good-by."

The two girls, reading each other's heart rough blinding tears, raised the poor wretch th loving hands, supported his quivering ame, and had him put comfortably to bed. elirium came on rapidly, and he was sinking rely to the grave.

"Don't bury me near Freddy—mind, don't!" re the last lucid words he spoke. "I only me to say good-by."

And thus died the man whose career we have ced. Eliza and Agnes, as if purified by fire, se to a brilliant career of benevolence. They re kind and good to all, but particularly to se lost through drink. The poor waifs and ays left in the drunkard's desolating track akened ever their tearful sympathy ; for en did their thoughts go back to a little rret, where a boy lay dying in the arms of o distracted girls, and faintly trying to sing,

"There is a happy land,
Far, far away."

PROACHING PERIHELIA AND CALAMITIES.

By Rev. T. J. Malyon, LL.B.

e "Book of Fate"—Terrestrial and Celestial atastrophes—Moral Revolution and Physical hange—Unity of the Divine Government—Atnospheric Phenomena — The "Times" — Dr. lder Cumming—Mr. Proctor's Statement—Mr. enkins's Data—Believers in Planetary Influnce—Professor Colbert's Assertion—History epeating Itself in the Return of the Black eath.

HE science of astronomy has, in all ages, enged the attention of the poet, the philosopher, the divine, and been the subject of their dy and admiration. Kings have descended m their thrones to render it homage, and e sometimes enriched it with their labors ; humble shepherds, while watching their ks by night, have beheld with rapture the e vault of heaven, with its thousands of shin- orbs moving in silent grandeur, till the rning star announced the approach of day.

he study of this science must have been co- l with the existence of man ; for there is no onal being who has for the first time lifted eyes to the nocturnal sky, and beheld the on walking in brightness amidst the planetary s and hosts of stars, but must have been ck with admiration at the splendid scene, excited to inquiries into the nature, physi- influence, and destination of those far-distant s. Compared with the splendor, the ampli- e, the august motions, and the ideas of in- ty which the celestial vault presents, the most lendent terrestrial scenes sink into inanity, appear unworthy of being set in competition n the glories of the sky.

s improved mechanical apparatus enables us race the pathway of the evening star gilding shades of night—when we contemplate the le bespangled vault, moving in silent grand- like one vast concave sphere, around this er world, and the place on which we stand— a scene naturally leads a reflecting mind to ous and profitable inquiry. Whence come ascending stars ? Whither go they ? What omes of the stars during the day which are irradiating the gloom of night ? Is their arent motion real, or does a motion on the h itself cause this appearance ? Can their ance be ascertained ? Can their bulk be puted ? By what laws are their motions ulated, and what purposes are they destined to serve in the great plan of the universe ? se and similar questions it is the great object of astronomy to resolve, in so far as the human mind has been enabled to prosecute the path of discovery.

For a long period during the infancy of science comparatively little was known of the heavenly bodies, excepting their apparent motions and aspects. Instead of investigating with care their true motions and relative distances and magnitudes, many of our ancestors looked up to the sky either with a brute, unconscious gaze, or viewed the heavens as the Book of Fate, in which they might read their future fortunes, and learn from the signs of the zodiac and the conjunctions and other aspects of the planets the temperaments and destinies of men and the fate of empires. And even to this day in some countries the fallacious art of prognosticating fortunes by the stars is one of the chief uses to which the science of the heavens is applied.

Since our globe first came from the hands of its Omnipotent Contriver many changes have taken place both in our own sublunary region and among the celestial orbs. We all profess to admit, on the indubitable authority of Revelation, that the earth was arranged in perfect order and beauty at its first creation ; and on the same sufficient authority we believe that its exterior crust was disrupted ; that "the cataracts of heaven were opened, and the fountains of the great deep broken up," and that a flood of waters ensued which covered the tops of the loftiest mountains, which transformed the earth into one shoreless ocean, and buried the immense myriads of its population in a watery grave.

This was a catastrophe as tremendous and astonishing as the bursting asunder of a large planet. Although physical agents may have been employed in either case to produce the effect, yet, in consistency with the Divine perfections, no such events could take place without the direction and control of the Almighty ; and when such phenomena appear, whatever appalling or disastrous effects they may produce, they are in perfect harmony with the moral laws by which His universal government is directed.

We know, moreover, that a moral revolution has taken place among the human race since man was created, and that this revolution is connected with most of the physical changes that have happened in the constitution of our globe ; and, if we believe the sacred historian, we must admit that the most prominent of these physical changes or concussions was the consequence or punishment of man's alienation from God, and violation of His laws.

As the principles of the Divine government must be essentially the same throughout every part of the boundless empire of the Almighty, nothing hinders from concluding that a moral cause, similar to that which led to the physical convulsions of our globe, have operated in the planetary regions, inducing the Governor of the universe to undermine the constitution, and to dash in pieces the fabric of some stellar world.

The difference is not great between bursting a planet into a number of fragments and cleaving the solid crust of the earth asunder, removing rocks and mountains out of their place, and raising the bed of the ocean from the lowest abyss, so as to form a portion of elevated land—all which changes appear to have been affected in the by-past revolutions of our globe ; and both events are equally within the power and the control of Him "who rules in the armies of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth," whatever physical agencies He may choose to select for the accomplishment of His purposes.

It is now generally known that extraordinary atmospheric phenomena may be expected during the period from 1880 to 1887. So long ago as May, 1879, the London Times directed the attention of its readers to the fact that the four largest planets in the solar system, viz., Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, and Neptune, would be in perihelia—a word which means nearest to the sun. Such a position of these planets has not taken place coincidently for more than 1800 years. But as the Rev. Dr. Elder Cumming, a Presbyterian minister at Glasgow, pointed out in the Prophetic News for March, "at two different times during the Christian era there has been a concurrence of the perihelia of three of these five planets ; and these dates were marked by "awful and destructive pestilence."

We apprehend that no one will seriously challenge Mr. R. A. Proctor's statement in his learned and reverential work, "Our Place among Infinities," that "not an atom in the remotest orb can move a hair's-breadth without producing in every other atom throughout the universe an effect minute, it may be, to our perceptions, but as manifest to the Almighty as the noonday sun to us."

Referring to the probable connection between the yearly death-rate and the position of the planet Jupiter in his orbit, among a mass of statistical data, Mr. B. G. Jenkins, Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society, said, "During the last thirty-nine years I find that the perihelion and aphelion of Jupiter corresponded in a very remarkable manner with the periods of low death-rate. On the other hand, the evidence seems to point to a very rapid and persistently high death-rate commencing in 1882."

It may be added here that Roger Bacon, Baron Napier (the inventor of logarithms), Flamsteed (the first astronomer-royal) ; Sir Elias Ashmole, Sir Christopher Heydon, Cardan, and many other eminent men of their day, were thoroughly convinced of, and constantly asserted, the physical influences of the planets.

Now, the fact is this, a vast magnetic atmospheric ocean surrounds our globe. The meteors which are seen occasionally falling to the earth are electric scintillations. The radiance and warmth which the sun imparts keep the electric planetary zones in perfect action. It is well known that the great force which vitalizes and preserves animal and vegetable life is all-ramifying, imponderable electricity. It is a principle which is ever operative and never quiescent.

The planets nearest the sun have the most energetic electrical elements, those furthest removed from the great solar orb have the least. It is possible, nay, demonstrably certain, that the position of the four major planets may and does disturb the electric equilibrium of our planet.

The changed condition of our atmospheric air resulting from any causes which interfere with or minimize the customary amount of radiance and warmth, necessarily proves eminently destructive to life and health on the earth.

Records of devastating epidemics may be traced as far back as history extends. Plague, famine, and pestilence have destroyed whole races of mankind ; the conquering army and the vanquished have alike been swept away. In the middle of the fourteenth century the Black Death devastated Europe and Asia. Reliable statistics place the total loss of life in Europe at from one-third to one-fourth the population, and in Asia it was still greater. The air over the sea was infected, and ships were seen drifting about the ocean, their crews, to the last man, having perished. Swarms of locusts darkened the air, and spread themselves over the land in many parts of Europe. A perpetual succession of famines and floods reduced the people to the deepest misery.

The Black Death was both heralded and attended by extraordinary convulsions of nature. Earthquakes were most frequent immediately before the outbreak, and volcanoes displayed unusual activity. At Venice the plague immolated three-fourths of the inhabitants, and the remainder secured immunity only by flight to the islands. Hecker says, "Of the planetary influence which was considered to have originated the great mortality, physicians and learned men were as completely convinced as of the fact of its reality."

Is it not more than possible that when the Lord Jesus Christ signified the premonitory signs of the fast approaching end of the present age, He referred to the startling events which the planets in their periphelia indicate ?

(To be concluded.)

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 510.)

"To-Morrow? To-Morrow?"

ROSE lost her last hold on life as soon as she was convinced of the worthlessness of the man she had loved. Until now she had believed that it was no more a fault in his nature than in her own which had separated them.

But she grew more tranquil and happy after she had given up her last feeble hope. All she had known in her childhood were gathered about her; her old friends were encircling her with vigilant kindness. Ruth gave herself up to ministering to her, aided by her clear, unselfish insight into the heart of the dying girl. As far as that is possible, the loneliness and bitterness of the path leading to the grave were removed for Rose.

It was a short dark day, late in November, with thick mists hiding the sea and drifting past the windows in clouds, that Ernest found himself watching alone beside Rose's bed. The room was the one where old Charles Clifford had died many years before. It had not happened to Ernest to be called upon to witness any death since that one, which had so materially influenced his life. The old carved cabinet that had contained the dying man's two wills was standing yet in its ancient place; though the rest of the antique furniture had disappeared long ago.

But Ernest did not need any outward memento to put him in mind of his last vigil by a death-bed. As he sat where he could watch Rose's white and quiet face, sleeping peacefully, he could not but recall the old man's withered, troubled aspect, and his gray head tossing from side to side on his pillow. All the past rushed back upon him. He was once more the disappointed, tempted man, into whose hand the coveted possession was thrust by chance.

Yet if he could but have looked on to the poignant anguish of this hour, as the final stage of the course into which he was drifting, not all the treasures upon earth could have prevailed upon him to enter upon it.

Jenny Britton was spending the day at home, and Ruth could not be with Rose. He was alone with his daughter. Not his only child now, for a son had been born to him a week ago, the heir to the old Clifford estates; to bear the name and hold the possessions for which he had paid so high a price.

But there was no glow of pride or gladness in his heart. Though he resigned himself to the will of God, and bowed his head submissively to receive this last stroke, there was deep, inevitable, bitter pain in suffering it. For some days past these words had been haunting his brain—"For he that knew his Lord's will, and did it not, shall be beaten with many stripes" (see Luke 12:47). Surely he ought to have known his Lord's will, if ambition and covetousness had not blinded him.

"Father!" called Rose, after a silence long and dreary to him; "father!"

"I am here, Rose," he answered.

"Are you quite, quite willing to let me go" she asked softly, "now you have another child?"

"'If it be possible,'" he cried, "'let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt!'"

"Yes!" she said, "and after the crucifixion came the resurrection; and after the resurrection the ascension; and then the glory. It must always be the cross first, father."

"Yes, my darling."

"It's only for a little while," sighed Rose; "no one suffers always. You will learn to be content without me, father. How could you help being happy with Ruth and your other children? I want you to be happy again soon. I asked God to let me stay till baby was born; and see, He has let me live a little while longer, so that you might have both your children together. It is partly my own fault to die so young. Only I felt sick of life, and of this weary world, where everything seems to go wrong; and I did not wish to live. I'm not strong enough for this world, father. Did you never think so?"

"I thought I could shield you from every hardship," he answered.

"Father," she said, "if you could go back to when we came home from London—Oh! what a happy time that was!—would you keep your secret still, for my sake? If you had known it would kill me, would you have given up Clifford?"

"Yes, Rose, yes!" he replied; "when I gave myself to God, I gave up all. Not to save you could I have kept my secret any longer. Believe me, I thought of your pain and grief a hundred times more than of my own; but I could not keep my brother out of his inheritance, and yet enter into the kingdom of heaven. If I had foreseen this very hour, I should have done, the same then."

"Old Dunnit told me so," she said, with trembling lips; "father, it is a good thing to love God more than all."

"And do you love God more than all?" asked Ernest.

"I'm not very clever," said Rose, "and it seems so far above me; I cannot understand. But of late I've felt as if I could understand how Jesus Christ loves us all Perhaps he once knew a girl like me, neither strong nor wise; only a poor foolish little thing, spoiled and petted by everybody; and so He knows what I am like, and what I want.

"He dosn't expect me to be like Ruth. He's willing to take me as I am; and He has taken me—how I cannot tell you; but I'm not afraid any longer, and I'm not very sorrowful; and it all seems easy and smooth. I dream sometimes I'm in heaven; and it's something like Clifford used to be, with everybody loving me, and everybody true to one another. If every one was only true!" she sighed.

Rose's thin, blue-veined eyelids fell, and her pale lips closed, as if she was tired of looking up at him and speaking to him. Ernest stood beside her, gazing sorrowfully down upon the changed face; but thinking all the while of the other death he had witnessed in this room. Rose was soon to pass away from him, and he could do nothing but watch her till her foot struck against the invisible threshold. When and where and how would he see his child again? In what far-off, unknown world would he meet once more this gentle and fragile spirit, so intimately bound up with his own?"

"Are you here, father?" she cried suddenly, as if waking from her light slumber in some fear.

"Yes, Rose," he answered, pressing her hand.

"I wish I had never been anything but a comfort to you," she said wistfully.

"You have always been dearer than my own life to me," he replied. "I cannot love Ruth herself more than I have loved you."

"But differently," said Rose, with a fleeting smile; "there must be differences everywhere, even in loving. Only I did not understand it, and I felt alone. It seemed as if everything was changed. I could not think of Ruth as my mother, though I loved her dearly, dearly. It was all strange, and I felt lonely. It was foolish of me to feel lonely."

"My darling!" exclaimed Ernest, in a tone of profound grief.

"It was all my fault," she said, lifting her wasted hand to his face, as he bent over her, "and I was really glad you were happy, and I thanked God for it. But it was as if I was shut out, because I was not happy, and you were. It had never been so before. You seemed far away from me, in a sunny place, and I could not any how climb up to the sunshine. I was in a dark, dark cell. At last it was because I learned to know more about Jesus Christ and to believe in Him really; it was that brought me out of the darkness. I feel content now, father."

"Content to leave me?" he asked.

"Yes," she murmured; "I should never be good for much again, if I lived longer; I shou be nothing but a faded, sad little blossom, th could never be bright and light-hearted, as used to be. It has all been too hard for m Father, if you could ever in your life help Ric mond, poor, poor fellow, to grow true and goo Oh! help him for my sake. You are sure to s him again, often; and then you'll rememb your little Rose, and do all you can for hi His father is not a good man; and Richmo thinks so much of you."

Rose's voice was very broken and low, as s uttered her short sentences; but her shini eyes looked up eagerly into her father's face.

"I shall remember you," he answered, wi some bitterness; "do you think I could ev see him without thinking of my darling?"

"That is enough," she said, in a tone of co tentment, as she drew his hand under her he and nestled her thin white cheek upon it; "n I will keep myself quiet. I feel as if I shou sleep very soundly to-night, and have nothing fret about if I awake. Is it almost dark, d father?"

"Almost," he replied, "for I can hardly your face. We will have the lamp brought soon, and I will read to you. To-morrow R will come to sit with you a little while."

"To-morrow!" she repeated softly, " morrow!"

The dim, gray twilight of the misty Novem evening was fast deepening in the room, a filled all the corners with dark shadows; the light from the nearest window fell full u Rose's dear face, and Ernest could still see lying on his hand, pale and worn, but rest with closed eyes, as if she was already asleep. For two or three minutes she lay q silent and motionless, and then a flush of co spread over her wan cheek, and her blue e opened with an air of infinite surprise.

"Can I be dying?" she exclaimed, in a t of solemn gladness; "it is neither dark lonely! Can this be death, father?"

The last word fell from her lips in a low w per, but her smile of gladness and surprise g brighter. He felt the trembling pressure Rose's fingers clasping his hand with a gr more feeble than her baby fingers had been u to hold it when her little feet first trod rough pathway of life at his side. The m moment Ernest knew that God had taken away into His own keeping.

(To be continued.)

A Converted Thief's Story.—The Superint dent of a Sunday-school, at Birmingham, E land, went to Bristol on business. While w ing upon the quay he observed a man in sail garb approaching him. The mariner came stand in front of him, and, after gazing inte into his face for a moment, inquired, "Are Mr. So-and-So?" "Yes," was the reply, 'I Do you know me?" "Yes, I do," said sailor. "Do you remember a robbery at y place some years ago? Well, I was conne with the band who committed it, but I was with them that night. At a meeting a few h before, it was proposed to rob your house said, when the proposal was made, 'No; he my superintendent at the Sunday-school. thereupon left the room and the gang, and solved to begin a better life. I looked about employment, and shortly afterward went to Upon one of the voyages I was wrecked narrowly escaped a watery grave. Among few things I managed to save was a book, Rev. J. Angell James's 'Anxious Inqui which you gave me when I was a boy in y class at the Sunday-school. I began to read grew interested in it. My eyes were opene my condition and danger as a sinner. I was to Christ as the Saviour, and began to lea Christian life. I became, sir," he contin with a tear trembling in his eye, "a new cr ure in Christ Jesus."

Thus the seed had been sown, and had lying unproductive for years, yet at last the came.

THE COVENANT WITH ABRAHAM.

S. Lesson for Aug. 22.—Gen. xv. 1-18. Golden Text, Rom. iv. 3. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

AFTER his success in the rescue of Lot, and meeting with Melchizedek, "the word of Lord came to Abram in a vision, saying, ar not, Abram; I am thy shield and thy ex- ding great reward." Abraham had conquer- and slain the kings, but only because the rd was his shield. He dwelt "in the secret ce of the Most High," and abode "under shadow of the Almighty." He proved the ssed truth of the words: "He shall cover e with His feathers, and under His wings lt thou trust: His truth shall be thy shield buckler" (Ps. 91 : 44). And God be praised, is also at this day "a shield unto them that their trust in Him" (Ps. 30 : 5). Let us have God between us and our past, between and our future, between us and our difficul- in the present, between us and our enemies, then what and who can have power to do us n?

the enumeration of the pieces of the Chris- 's armor (Eph. 6 : 14-18) we find mentioned 16) "the shield of faith, wherewith ye be able to quench the fiery darts of the ed" (or wicked one). But how, in practi- ommon life can we use the shield of faith— realize that God Himself shields us every ent? There is a first cause, and there are d causes in every event which happens. instance, a certain person may seek to in- us by word or deed; he sins against us, our natural hearts would drive us to seek tisfaction. But there is a first cause. God ermitted that person to speak or to do; as permitted us to be thus tried. Here is rst cause. If by His grace we ignore the d cause, the person, and deal with the ause, our God, then we can even praise and be really thankful; by this means we e shield of faith, God shelters us, and that was meant for evil He turns into good.

God said also: "I am thy exceeding reward." Abraham's reward was not the hich was promised him, nor yet the seed was to be "as the dust of the earth" 13 : 16); the Lord Jehovah Himself was ward, and He calls Himself later "the Abraham." Abraham was a priest unto ho said afterward of the tribe of Levi 10 : 8-9), "the Lord separated the tribe i to bear the ark of the covenant of the o stand before the Lord, to minister unto nd to bless in His name. Wherefore, Levi part nor inheritance with his brethren; rd is his inheritance, according as the y God promised him."

"children of Abraham (Gal. 3 : 7), as and priests unto God" (Rev. 1 : 6), as which are blessed with faithful Abraham" : 9), we which are of faith may claim that ssing of Abraham should come upon us : 14), and in our priestly office we bear, ery flesh of which Christ was a partaker, of the covenant of the Lord; our blessed to minister, not unto ourselves, but Him," and to bless in His name. As unto God, it is our promised privilege may forego any personal inheritance. rd is our inheritance: "I," He says, eir possession" (Ezek. 44 : 28).

braham was naturally anxious to know former promises which God had made to be fulfilled. He said: "Lord God, lt Thou give me, seeing I go childless, steward of my house is this Eliezer of s?" And Abraham said, "Behold to hast given no seed; and lo, one born in e is mine heir." It was a real trial of od had said that his seed should be as of the earth, yet year after year passed e was still childless. It might have s though time were being lost. But all the time doing a great work upon nt, and perfecting the faith which con- im the father of them that believe unto It is often the same with us; we build upon a promise which we find in the word of God, but time passes and it seems to remain always unfulfilled. He, however, is working on his children, and the time will come when He shall be justified in the result.

"Behold, the word of the Lord came to him, saying, This shall not be thine heir, but he that shall come forth out of thine own bowels shall be thine heir. And He brought him forth abroad, and said, Look now toward Heaven, and tell the stars, if thou be able to number them. And He said unto him, So shall thy seed be. And he believed in the Lord, and He counted it to him for righteousness" All this interview with God took place in the night, for the stars were shining. "So," said the Lord, "shall thy seed be"—so many and so bright. For Abraham has a Heavenly seed and an earthly seed As the father of them that believe, he has among his seed the wise that "shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." And then there is his earthly seed as the dust of the earth, keeping up their numbers in spite of desolating persecutions, more powerful and wealthy in this day, perhaps, than ever before since the time of Solomon.

There seemed no likelihood of the fulfilment of this promise; but, nevertheless, Abraham believed in the Lord, and He counted it to him for righteousness. This is always the point at issue between God and man. "He that believeth on Him is not condemned, but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God."

According to all human probability Abraham could not have a child—there could be no expectation of such a thing, except God did something out of the common order; but yet he believed in God, "who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were." And Abraham "against hope believed in hope that he might be the father of many nations, according to that which was spoken, So shall thy seed be." And therefore it was imputed unto him for righteousness. He went round by faith to God's side of the question, and He found no impossibility there.

God said further to him, "I am the Lord that brought thee out of Ur, of the Chaldees, to give thee this land to inherit it. And he said, Lord whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it?" At present Abraham must receive everything by faith, must possess everything promised to him, not by actual experience, but by reliance on the Word of the living God. In God's eyes the land was already Abraham's, for He seeth the end from the beginning. The promised seed in God's eyes was already born, because the purpose of Him who could bring it about was formed. And just so have we also possessions in our God, which we have not yet in our experience.

But we must learn to possess our possessions for it is written, "Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given you" (Jos. 1 : 3). It is by personal application of God's promises to us that we enter into our possessions, by standing firmly on His written Word, and letting all our weight rest upon it. There is creative power in the Word of the living God; "the worlds were framed by the Word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear" (Heb. 11 : 3). We have not to wait for "things which do appear" in order that God's work in us should be accomplished. "Hath He said, and shall He not do it? or hath He spoken, and shall He not make it good?" (Num. 23 : 19). There is also transforming power in the Word—Christ gave Himself for His Church, "that He might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the Word; that He might present it to Himself a glorious Church not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish" (Eph. 5 : 26-27).

In answer to Abraham's question, "Whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it?" God "said unto him, Take Me an heifer of three years old, and a she-goat of three years old, and a ram of three years old, and a turtle-dove, and young pigeon." It is not clear why these beasts of sacrifice must be three years old. Was it a sign that the three blessed persons of the Trinity stood to the covenant? Here all was dark and mysterious, not clear and in daylight as in the manifestation of God in chap. 18. In Isai. 15 : 5, the prophet cries in the midst of his lamentation over Moab, "an heifer of three years old," and here the meaning is equally obscure. The heifer (Num. 19) is, as we know, the special type of our Lord as the Sin-bearer who purges our "conscience from dead works to serve the living God" (Heb. 9 : 14). The she-goat was used in the sin offering, and trespass offering, and also the peace offering, the ram in the burnt offering and in the trespass offering, and the turtle-dove and pigeon were used both in the sin offering and in the burnt offering. Perhaps in this sacrifice of Abraham's all these offerings were included.

And Abraham "took unto him all these, and dvided them in the midst, and laid each piece one against another, but the birds divided he not." We have another instance of a covenant made by the dividing of a calf in Jer. 34 : 18. It may be that it represented how the two covenanting parties were equally bound to stand to their agreement. It may be that as the life of the divided creatures was taken, so the Lord and Abraham were staking their own lives upon the issue: "As I live, saith the Lord" (Ez. 33 : 11). "When the fowls came upon the carcases, Abram drove them away:" no unclean thing must touch even the outward sign of God's covenant with him. "And when the sun was going down a deep sleep fell upon Abram; and lo, an horror of great darkness fell upon him." In order to see the future he must be blind to the present; in order to be occupied with the destinies of others who should come after him, this man of faith must be insensible to himself, in a deep sleep.

Oh, how we learn from this our own utter nothingness! God was just about to open to him a vista of several hundred years to come, and shed light upon the future which no other earthly eye was permitted to see, and his preparation for it was "an horror of great darkness." And God "said unto Abraham, Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them, and shall afflict them four hundred years; and also that nation whom they shall serve will I judge; and afterward shall they come out with great substance. And thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace; thou shalt be buried in a good old age. But in the fourth generation they shall come hither again, for the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full." . . . "In the same day the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land from the river of Egypt, unto the great river, the river Euphrates." We look for the complete fulfilment of this promise when the Jews shall be restored to their own land.

In these few verses we follow the dealings of God; how He makes use of one people to teach another. The Egyptians were to be allowed to afflict the children of Abraham until the time should come that God would judge them by His people, who should come out of Egypt, not empty, but with great substance; but they could not really possess the land of Canaan until the iniquity of the Amorites was full. As God deals with nations, so also with individuals. Those persons and things, through whom and through which we suffer most, are doing the work of God upon us, and we in our turn are either being made a help and blessing to others, or we are unconsciously bringing their sin to its climax by our quiet endurance. We read further, that "when the sun went down and it was dark, behold a smoking furnace and a burning lamp passed between those pieces." It was God's signature to His covenant.

FOREIGN TOPICS.

The Bill for Granting Compensation to Irish tenants for ejection when they have been unable to pay their rent, has been rejected by the British House of Lords by an overwhelming majority. Many prominent Liberals, some of whom have held high office in Liberal administrations, opposed the bill. The Pall Mall Gazette, in a leading editorial article on the subject, says: "We shall not have to wait long before the House of Lords will have reason to consider whether the disadvantages of passing the bill are not outweighed a hundred-fold by the dangers of rejecting it." It appears that an organization is already in process of formation, in which English and Irish Radicals are allied, to agitate for the abolition of the hereditary peerage and the substitution of an elective senate. Disturbances are expected in Ireland as a result of the action of the Lords, and a large number of soldiers have been dispatched to that country to suppress any serious rising that may take place.

The British Loss in the Recent Disaster in Afghanistan is estimated at eleven hundred men. The battle at first resulted in a British success, but as the enemy's cavalry charged, the native troops, who were in front, retreated precipitately, and carried confusion into the ranks of British soldiers in the rear, thus causing demoralization and confusion. Cabul, the capital of the country, has been evacuated, and the English General, Roberts, is pressing forward with all speed to the assistance of General Primrose, who is intrenching himself in Candahar. Fears of a general rising in India are expressed in many quarters, and the Government is being urged to send Sir Garnet Wolseley to take the chief command.

Mr. Gladstone, the British Prime Minister, is suffering from congestion of the left lung, and is incapacitated for the performance of his public duties. For some days his condition was regarded as critical, owing to his age and his constitution having been impaired by the arduous duties of the two offices he holds. Secretary Evarts instructed our Minister at the British Court to express the concern of the American Government at his illness, and sincere hopes for his recovery. The latest reports describe Mr. Gladstone as recovering.

A Minute Description of the Napoleon Family is published by a writer who saw much of it during his recent European tour. It will be remembered that the late Prince Louis Napoleon made a will before setting out for Africa, in which he appointed Prince Victor, the eldest son of Napoleon Jerome, his heir. It appears that Prince Victor is a quiet, studious young man of ordinary capacity, not possessing any of the soldier spirit. His younger brother, Louis Napoleon, is, however, a very remarkable young man. He is bold, active, restless, and ambitious, resembling in appearance and disposition the First Napoleon. He reverences no one, and his reckless conduct is continually involving him in trouble. He has earned a nickname, which is expressive, but profane, by which he is generally alluded to by his companions. In mentioning him when he is not present, they call him "the true devil." It is remarkable that such a name should have been given to one who may, in the course of time, be heir to the Napoleonic aspirations.

A Perilous Situation.—An American Gentleman, who recently paid a visit to Italy narrates in a contemporary, a thrilling account of an adventure he had in the Catacombs in Rome. He descended in company with a party of friends, each of whom was supplied with a small piece of wax candle. He was desirous of securing a small piece of marble to bring away as a relic, and while in one of the narrow galleries he saw a suitable piece in one of the tombs. He stayed behind his friends to detach it, and when he had succeeded, his party was out of sight. In hurrying after them he lost his way, and was involved in a perfect labyrinth of passages, each of which resembled the others in having holes cut in the rock where people had been buried. His piece of candle was burning out quickly, and he feared that he would have to stay there for hours, if not days, in the dark with his ghastly surroundings. At length, when he had almost given up hope, his shouts were answered in the distance, and soon he had the pleasure of recognizing his friends and their guide returning to search for him.

His position was like that of many who are lost in the mazes of sin, and who are never rescued until they are found and led into light and life by Him who said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life" (John 14:6).

The Baroness Burdett Coutts, whose Liberal gifts to religious and philanthropic objects caused Queen Victoria to make her a peeress in her own right, is, it is reported, about to marry Mr. William Ashmead Bartlett, a native of Philadelphia, Pa. It is stated that the Baroness is in the habit of inviting graduates of the University of Oxford to visit her country house in Wales, and in this way became acquainted with Mr. Bartlett. He subsequently acted as her secretary, and superintended the distribution of funds the Baroness sent to Constantinople to relieve the sufferers in the Turco-Russian war. There, he was attacked by malarial fever and returned in a very precarious state of health. The attentions of the Baroness were constant during his convalescence, and now it is publicly stated that a marriage has been arranged. The Baroness, who is very wealthy, will lose a considerable portion of her income by her marriage; a sum of money producing $500,000 a year was left to her on condition that she never married a foreigner or a naturalized subject. She is sixty-six years of age, and Mr. Bartlett is only twenty-nine.

An American Missionary Murdered.—A Constantinople telegram to the London Times states that an American missionary named Dr. Parsons, accompanied by an Armenian servant, was making a professional tour in the mountains east of Ismid, and encamped, on the night of the 4th inst., by the roadside in the vicinity of some Zuruks, a semi-nomadic tribe. Two Zuruk shepherds who have since been arrested confessed with cynical composure that they shot the two travellers as they slept, and robbed them of their money, amounting to less than a pound. As Dr. Parsons did not reach his destination at the expected time, and as his horses were found wandering about the hills, his friends instituted a search, and their bodies were discovered under some bushes near the scene of the murder. Inquiries made, satisfy the authorities that the murder was committed for the sake of plunder, and that neither political nor religious animosity prompted the wicked act.

Good done by the Blue Ribbon Army in London.—Mr. William Noble and his helpers at Hoxton Hall keep in view as their chief object the motto, "If by any means I may save some." It was only ten days ago that a young man, one of the early converts, said, "Previous to my visiting Hoxton Hall, I was in the habit of spending my Sundays in pigeon-flying. I was one of the first to take the pledge here, and I am now a Christian, and in the shop where I am at work there are fifteen total abstainers, eight of whom are Christians, and I am now a member of a Christian church." Another case is that of a young man who was "picked up out of the gutter," to use his own words, by a lady and gentleman, who prevailed upon him to attend the meetings. When he signed the pledge he had nothing but an egg-chest for his table! He has faithfully adhered to his resolution, and when Mrs. Noble, in the course of her visiting, called at his home, she found every appearance of comfort and respectability instead of the former wretchedness.

The Earl of Kintore, a British Nobleman, who has long been known as an earnest Christian, died suddenly of heart disease, at his London residence, on Sunday, July 18th, while sitting in his chair. He was born June 7th, 1828. He took the chair at some of Dr. Talmage's meetings in 1879, and he mentioned at the Mildmay Conference in June this year, that he often read Dr. Talmage's sermons in the Lond Christian Herald. The late Earl was himse very acceptable preacher, and frequently c ducted religious services on Sundays.
hope that the present representative of the t will tread worthily in the footsteps of so h ored a father. The deceased Earl was assidu in the discharge of his public duties, and genial and courteous bearing made him a favo with all classes. He was one of the most pro nent laymen of the Free Church of Scotla and always took a lively interest in the proc ings of the General Assembly.

The Famine in Persia.—A Highly-estee missionary, who has lately come from the fan district of North Persia, and is well acquai also with the sufferings of the poor peop Kurdistan and Mesopotamia, says: "In addi to the many lives that have been saved, and terrible suffering that has been relieved, help these Christians have rendered during famine will, in my opinion, do more to brea Mahommedanism than ten years of solid sionary work would have done. The peopl saying, 'These Christians put bread into mouths when we are starving, there mus something good in their religion.' We mis aries know that great and anxious discussi now being carried on amongst the Mosle to the merits of the Christian faith, and are hundreds who are mentally convinced.
have already baptized more than a dozen verts, every one of whom is living a co ent Christian life; and this in spite of 'death penalty' for conversion to Christi which is still the law of Persia."

Earthquakes in Manila, the Capital Philippine Islands, have caused the dea eleven people and serious injury to fifty o
The last of the series occurred on Wedn
July 21st. Not a single public edifice is s
The Guadaloupe convent, which has three centuries, was destroyed, but no were lost. The inhabitants are encamp side the town. The earth opened in places, and jets of boiling water and sho ashes were ejected from the fissures. The dral and the barracks fell in, and the tro camped outside the city. Manila suffe verely from an earthquake in 1865, wh Governor-General's palace, the cathedra several churches were destroyed, and tw sand lives were lost.

Perils of the Pavement.—The Yearly age of persons killed by accidents in the of London is greater than the annual tota sons massacred on all the railways of the Kingdom. During the last ten years in t oughfares of the metropolis 2195 peop killed and 28,071 were wounded. In killed were 236 and the wounded 3699.

The Second Volume of The Christian
comprising Nos. 37 to 62 (July to Dec., 1879) procured, elegantly bound in cloth, at th
Price $1.75.

The American Newspaper Directory for published by Messrs. George P. Rowell & York, is a handsome volume of more than with 500 pages more of advertisements. It a detailed list of 10,287 newspapers and of the United States and Canada, and give information about them that it must be a book to large advertisers.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works ar
at the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, a low as to bring them within the reach of Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with p
of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Pl
Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth,
The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volu
sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David,
cal exposition of the book of Psalms, five v
as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon's Birth-
This popular gift-book contains a suitab selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for in the year, with a blank space opposite
graphs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs.
appear at their respective birthdays. T
elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cent
tances should accompany orders.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Published at 63 Bible House, New York City, and 2 Ivy Lane, London. Edited in London by the Rev. M. Baxter, in New York by Mr. B. Aitken.

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. TALMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also occasionally a Sermon by the Rev. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL.D., the celebrated Methodist Minister, Rev. W. M AY AITKEN, or some other Eminent Preacher; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Single Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, AUGUST 19, 1880. 14th Year. No. 34—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

ORTRAIT OF REV. WILLIAM TAYLOR, the California Evangelist, with sketch of his life.

HE MOUNTAIN OF REFUGE. An Evening Sermon by Dr. Talmage.

Short Life and a Merry One: A Temperance Story—From the Ball-room to the Coffin.

OCHESTER TOWER. A New Serial Story by Miss M. A. Paull (Continued).

APPROACHING PERIHELIA AND CALAMITIES, by Rev. T. J. Malyon, LL.B. (Continued).

CURRENT EVENTS: The President at Columbus—The Sectional Issue—A Grave Indictment—A Saloon-keeper's Conversion—A Lover's Scriptural Answer—A Remarkable Pair of Criminals—The Coming Conference at Northfield—A Strange Refuge, etc.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF MR. GAWIN KIRKHAM, Secretary of the English Open-Air Mission.

THE GIFT UNSPEAKABLE. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

PROPHETIC EXPOSITION. Compiled by Rev. M. Baxter (Continued).

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH (Conclusion).

Abraham's Intercession. S. S. Lesson by Mrs. M. Baxter—The Collegian's Beer-barrel.

FOREIGN TOPICS: Robbery of Arms in Ireland—The I. R. B.—Anxiety respecting Afghanistan, etc, Rev. WILLIAM TAYLOR, the Celebrated California Evangelist.

THE REV. WILLIAM TAYLOR,

The California Evangelist.

Early Life and Conversion—A Vegetable Diet—Life in California—Mr. Taylor's Character—Testimony of a British Officer's Wife—Work in Many Lands—Additions to Churches—Twenty-one Thousand in Australia—The Darkness of Heathenism—Great Missionaries—Red-hot Methodism in India—The South India Conference—Its Wonderful Growth—A Self-Supporting Mission—Moody's Work in Great Britain—Thirty-one Recruits for South America—Brazil Visited with the Gospel—Mrs. Taylor—A Doctor of Divinity Silenced.

The Rev. William Taylor, with whose portrait we present our readers this morning, and who has twice circumnavigated the globe in his missionary tours, was reared in New Jersey, where his parents were members of a Presbyterian church, but strangers to the regenerating power of the Gospel in their hearts. When William was of the age of sixteen a revival of religion took place, under the preaching of some Methodist evangelists who visited that part of the country where his parents resided. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor, with their son, were among the converts, and they threw in their lot with the Methodist Church, in which they first experienced the saving grace of God.

Young William Taylor was brought up to the exercise of manual labor, and he often refers to it in his discourses as that which laid the foundation of his hardy constitution and extraordinary muscular strength. Thus he passed his youth among stirring scenes and exciting adventures, which singularly fitted him for the wandering and changeful life to which God had foreordained him, and supplied him with the anecdotes and illustrations which are one of the striking features of his preaching.

Mr. Taylor sometimes mentions that he ate flesh only about half-a-dozen times in his life till he was past thirty years of age; and to those who look at his stalwart figure, with its big bones and massive strength, that says a great deal for the nutritious qualities of a milk and vegetable diet. It should be added that, for the greater part of his life, Mr. Taylor has been a total abstainer, and he attributes his unusual powers of endurance and capacity for continuous work to that practice.

The subject of our sketch is naturally gifted with a strong understanding, a perfectly Pauline zeal, and great vigor of purpose. So, having been saved from perdition and emancipated from sin himself, he soon determined that his work in life must be to gather souls into the kingdom of Christ; and for thirty years past he has carried on that work on a scale and with an energy that have amazed all who have watched him.

THREE REMARKABLE QUALITIES,

He studied for the ministry, and received ordination, and made his first great impression in California; for he boldly carried the message of salvation among the lawless ruffians of the gambling-hells, where murders were not unusually committed in open day with impunity. The frightful condition of California during the gold mania is almost proverbial, but we know no more graphic account of it than that from the great preacher's own pen in "California Life Illustrated," Phillips and Hunt, 805 Broadway, New York. We can also recommend "Seven Years' Street Preaching in San Francisco" for an account of the struggles of his hard but successful attempt to plant Methodism there.

It is important to note the causes of this man's singular success. In the first place, he is truly converted. It is almost impossible to overrate the living testimony of a man who might be so strong in himself and yet who never forgets "the God in whose hand his breath is, and whose are all his ways" (Dan. 5:23). Those who know him most intimately are those most impressively struck at seeing a man with the courage of a lion and the spirit of a hero, yet weighed down with the consciousness that his life, his health, his means, his faculties, and his opportunities are held at the will of the King of kings and Lord of lords. Then, as to the testimony of his lips, nothing but a sense of pardon after a load of sin upon his conscience could make him speak as clearly as he does about Jesus Christ as the Saviour of men.

In the second place, he is devoted to his Master. That simply means that, recognizing the sovereignty of God, he has dedicated to His service abilities and energies which would have distinguished him in any department of life. He is always at the service of persons anxious about their souls, and will readily spend from four to six hours with a single inquirer.

THE WIFE OF A BRITISH OFFICER, with whom he once stayed for some months, said to the writer, "He is the most unselfish man I ever saw; he cares about nothing but his work." Regarding these abilities, besides the three features already noticed, we may mention a power of work that commands respect wherever he goes, knowledge of men, address in dealing with them, patience and forbearance, powers of conversation, gentleness of manner, and a genial kind-heartedness that has won the affection of men, women, and children, whites and blacks, in America, Europe, Australia, Africa, and Asia.

Mr. Taylor's popularity as a preacher is due more to the matter than to the manner of what he says. He speaks in a distinct, strong, and much modulated voice, very deliberately, and without a pretence of eloquence; but he is a master of the art of arresting attention and sustaining interest, while perhaps no preacher has surpassed him in the power of stating truth clearly and illustrating it forcibly. He also considers that one of the first aims in preaching ought to be what he calls "incisive application."

After laboring for some years in California, Mr. Taylor entered upon the great work to which he had been called, as a travelling evangelist, and since that time he has been incessantly on the move in the United States, Canada, the West Indies, Great Britain, Australia, South Africa, Palestine, India, Ceylon, and South America. God has greatly blessed his work at most of these places. In South Africa 1200 colonists and 7000 Kaffirs professed conversion under his preaching. The review of his work is most gratifying.

IN AUSTRALIA

He has written of it: "During my former campaign in those colonies, of two years and eight months, the ministers on personal profession and record by name reported over 6000 converts at my meetings; and the work so widely extended that the aggregate net increase of members, not including probationers, in the returns of the Australasian Conference, for three years inclusive, amounted to over 11,000. Then, according to their Annual Minutes, instead of a shrinkage, the first year after I left they had a net increase of over 3000 more; the next, 2000; the next, 1000; the next, 1500; and the year of my return, over 3000; making a net increase for the seven years of over 21,000 members. . . Sixteen of the young men who had been saved during my first tour in the Australian colonies I found, on my return, engaged in the work of the ministry, besides scores of local preachers."

A great part of Mr. Taylor's preaching in foreign countries is done through an interpreter, and he describes in one of his books how he studied the art of preaching effectively through an interpreter, and the pains he used to take to drill his interpreter before the service. Although a member of the California Conference, he receives no stipend and accepts no remuneration. He has supported himself all along by the proceeds of his books, which have an extensive sale.

The want of Christian missionaries in heathen lands is greater than it is easy to describe. All the foreign missionary reports that deluge our homes and churches fail to convey an adequate idea of it. And the occasional attempts to divert sympathy to the poor of our own race, or to the colored population in the South, merely betray ignorance or non-appreciation of the aggravated conditions of a country where the national religion is heathenism. It is not surpri ing, therefore, that denominational differenc are overlooked as they are by missionaries the spot in India, and that, as the rule, the men heartily recognize one another as witness for Christ among a people by whom not the se ondary doctrines of Scripture are misunderstoo and its minor precepts neglected, but to va numbers of whom the very message of the Go pel is unknown. The fair land stretches in eve direction, peopled by millions upon millions idolaters, ignorant, degraded, unprogressive, a as vicious as an inert people can be.

Among these people, at the time we are wr ing of, Carey, Marshman, Duff,* Wilson, a other distinguished missionaries had spent th lives, though chiefly in educational efforts, a the result was that the country was dotted wi mission stations and mission schools, that trac and copies of the Scriptures were scatter broadcast, and that a very respectable body native converts were spread over the land. B the progress of Christianity was slow, the tes mony of laymen to the saving power of Chr was rarely heard, and the influence of the va ous missionary bodies was insinuated among t community rather than aggressively forced up it. The American Methodists had, from 18 planted churches in a small part of North and the English Wesleyans had done similarly Madras and Mysore; but their missionaries ing few in number, and no man of command originality of character having yet appeared their head, they conformed to the existing pl of operation instead of storming the field a the distinctive manner of Methodism.

INDIA,

Meanwhile, the missionaries of every den ination prayed without ceasing that God wo put forth His power in the land, and cause banner to be lifted up and His praise to sounded in every part of it. In 1872 that pr was heard, and William Taylor was the ag appointed to carry out the answer. With l notice or warning, Mr. Taylor made his app ance and cast down red-hot Methodism on In The first sign that his work was genuine was storm of opposition and ridicule with whi was assailed. The second sign was that (fearing, saintly men, of whatever denominat were solemnized before it.

In two years Methodism was the most spicuous form of evangelization in the cou In four years it was organized as the South I Conference. The chief cities of the penin of India were occupied one after another lines of railway became lines of religious munication, preaching-stations multiplied, street preaching, outspoken testimony, loud-sounding praise were familiar matte occurrence Up to the present time Mr. T has found and sent to India about forty mi aries, a number rendered possible only by principle of self-support on which the wo that Conference is carried on. All these and women have gone out to face the usual gers and hardships of missionary life, wit additional drawback of having no salaries anteed to them. They take their chance a their church-members, casting all their care God, and God has put some of them th much severe privation, which is doubly t in a country where society is divided in alien population on the one hand and a ha aristocracy of wealth and fashion on the o

This great work was not accomplished out exertion and endurance altogether b the power of ordinary men. Mr. Taylor' severance was a wonder to many, and he ceased to acknowledge that God was sust him. The following reference to his pe tions appeared in a religious paper at the ning of his labors in Western India: " never has been, to our knowledge, a m abused in Bombay as this evangelist has

---

* We shall probably give a life and portrait Duff, the great Scotch Presbyterian Missionary next number.

A sorts of calumnies have been uttered against an who came to this country at his own rge, pays all his own expenses, is ready to re what he has with any poor man, takes hing from any ; a man devotedly attached us family, yet who has foregone their society six years that he may proclaim the Gospel of G' to those that are afar off. . . . Our con- poraries sometimes favor us with articles ex- atory of what they call the failure of mis- s, the powerlessness of the pulpit, etc., re ng in terms by no means flattering to the of money, comfort, position, in those who ch the Gospel. From the strain of their re- s one would infer that they would be en- ured to see a man against whom no trace of h feeling can be alleged."

uch of this virulence of feeling has passed and the warm recognition given to God's est, and in some respects most wonderful, in India is evidenced by the presence of nisters of as many as six different denomina- at the annual all-day prayer-meeting of the odist Episcopal Church in Bombay.

e fact of such a giant demonstration of the r of God having been vouchsafed under the odist Episcopal Church is a signal honor t body, whose missionary field in India has d out to dimensions only dreamed of ten ago. The Bishops' Address to the dele- at the General Conference at Cincinnati May contained the following statement of rogress of the mission : "The South India rence, which was organized in 1876, has ged its field by extending, not only into districts in South India, but also into Ran- Burmah. It now embraces three districts, 7 travelling ministers, 45 local preachers, 69 members and probationers." Nothing top the work now. It will overrun the ry.

must guard here against the danger of im- that this development has taken place in tive church. It has been mainly among the h and Indo-Britons. But there is good for hope that now, as the heathen begin that Christianity is not merely the relig- the missionaries, one formidable barrier r acceptance of the Gospel has been re- . Mr. Taylor's view of the matter is thus in a recent letter to the Church in India : nt to speak to you specially about God's in raising up the churches which compose uth India Conference, viz., a self-support- ssionary movement for the salvation of ple of the country. My sympathy and r the English-speaking people of India are eyond expression, but the whole of them, , would only equal the population of one y city in England or America ; so that to age, in thought or action, the idea that k is to be confined mainly to the English es, is treason against God's purpose in us up.

e are true to God and walk after the Spirit, the mission to which he has called us. rd Jesus in person will command our and accomplish His purpose through our The great mountains which obstruct rch shall be removed by simple faith, not by miracle, but by the application of ovel, drill, and blasting operation of each daily applied. That is God's way of g such mountains. Every one of our embers should lead at least one Hindoo every year."

aving India, in 1875, Mr. Taylor worked ort time in England in connection with ody, whose campaign in that country was its height. He then returned to this and received indications that it was the ill he should open up South America for G spel. Accordingly, he started for the oast of that continent, and finding that was more open to school-teachers than hers, he sounded a call for such, whether s or laymen, and in a year and a half e men and women had gone to advance K gdom of Heaven in South America.

The Bishops' Address at Cincinnati contained the following account of this work : "The western coast of South America was visited a few years since by Rev. William Taylor, and under his influence several young men and women have gone to that region, chiefly as teachers, risking their support among the people, and also endeavoring, when there is opportunity, to preach the Gospel of Christ. This work, though not under the control, nor at the expense, of our Missionary Society, has yet been so far sanctioned that the mission field has been extended to embrace all South America, and a few preachers have been appointed by the Bishop to that work."

No sooner was that work satisfactorily started than Mr. Taylor laid his next plan for work in Brazil, and on the 5th of June last, notwithstanding some strong appeals to engage in usefulness where he would be among friends and sympathizers, he sailed, in faith in God, for that strange land. We cannot doubt that his heavenly Master will see him safely through what he has to do there.

Mr. Taylor has been blessed in a wife who is as faithful a servant of God as himself, who encourages him with her letters during his long absences from home, and who has made up for his loss to the children by giving a double portion of her own attention to their training. Mr. Taylor has only been three and a half months within sight and speaking distance of his family for more than twelve years. A lady said to Mrs. Taylor, "I can't help but think hard of Mr. Taylor, for going away and leaving you alone so long." She replied : "Well, he never went but with my concurrence, nor stayed longer than I permitted, and if I don't complain, I don't think anybody else has any right to complain."

A Doctor of Divinity called to see her and said emphatically, "Mrs. Taylor, I consider that my first duty is to my family." She replied : "Yes, Doctor, you and your wife, and ministers and their wives generally, are many, and I and my husband are but two, perhaps the only two whom God has called in this age to such a line of self-sacrifice ; and you know that God has cared kindly for me and mine." The other replied with evident emotion : "Yes, I know He has." There are now four sons remaining out of a family of seven, and it is one of their parents' joys to know that they have submitted themselves to Christ, and are His whether for this world or the next.

A SHORT LIFE AND A MERRY ONE.

A Temperance Story.

"Now, Robert, you had better think of what I have been saying," said Thomas Walters kindly, laying his hand on Robert Wilson's shoulder. "You know what the end will be if you don't alter."

"I think it's bad enough now," said Robert gloomily. "Here am I, discharged from the shop where I have worked, man and boy, for twenty years or more. I do think master is hard on me for that bit of a spree I had last week."

"But you know, Robert, that you have often been on the spree, as you call it, lately, and thrown some pressing work back by your doing so."

"I don't know whatever to say to Mary. Matters have been getting worse and worse at home for a long while. She has been ailing, and unable to go to work as she used to do. Now, I am likely to be idle, all of us will have to go short indeed," said Robert, turning his empty pipe round in his mouth, and twirling his thumbs hopelessly.

"Why, man, if you had done what you promised to do before the minister, you would have spent less at the public house, and kept your wife at home.

"That's all very well, but a young man must have a little enjoyment now and then. What's a working-man's life worth, if he cannot have a little pleasure? It won't do to have all work and no play. 'A short life and a merry one' is my motto."

"Surely, you don't call your present position pleasure ; out of work, with overworked wife, and a heavy score at the Blue Boar, and a name in the town for being unsteady. And besides all this, you know that after your short and so-called merry life, there is the judgment, when you must give a strict account of the precious time God has given to you to use for His glory."

"Why, you're almost as good as a parson, Thomas," said Robert, with a faint smile. "But what you say now is true, as I think of it, the merry part was short indeed. And then I cannot forget what the Old Book says about after death the judgment."

"Thank God, you can reform. It is not too late to mend. Look to the Saviour for pardon and help. Give up the drink at once and forever. I will see if I can get you on at Mr. Watson's shop, though I fear you won't earn so much as you used to do. Go home and tell your wife all about it, and tell her you mean, by God's help, to change, and I am sure she will think half the burden gone."

So Robert Wilson parted with his friend, a sadder yet wiser man. Now he had lost his work and was unable to treat his former companions, they left him. But Walters had taken him home the Saturday he was discharged, given him a good tea, and then led him into the garden for a serious talk ; and it was here the foregoing conversation had taken place.

Robert told his wife the bad news, and, poor soul! her heart was heavy indeed. But when her husband went on to speak of the talk he had had, and of his half-formed purpose of turning over a new leaf, her face brightened, and she tried to cheer Robert up with the hope of soon obtaining work at another shop.

A fortnight passed away, during which time Wilson sought work in different places in the town, but he found his character had gone before him, and that masters were unwilling to engage an unsteady man. His wife and children were sorely pinched, and at last he had to pawn his watch, given to him by his father.

It was a time of sore struggle with Robert, and he frequently was on the point of going to the Blue Boar to drown his troubles ; but the thought of the unpaid score, and the certainty that the landlord would not trust him now he was out of work, kept him back.

On the second Saturday afternoon Walters called at Wilson's house to tell him he had obtained work for him. He found his friend very dull, but when he told the good news, tears came in the poor man's eyes, and he grasped Thomas's hand, and said, "God bless you!"

Robert Wilson found the work in the new shop much harder and worse paid than his old employment ; but he kept on, bravely refusing the invitation to drink with his shopmates, and keeping himself much quieter than he had been used to do. The Saturday came, and he took all his wages home, except the few shillings necessary to clear his score at the public ; this he paid without tasting anything, although the temptation was great.

As time went on, and he brought all his money home, his wife was able to manage without going to the factory, and soon the children, as well as the house and housewife, bore evident signs of improvement.

Robert was induced by his friend to attend a place of worship on Sunday, and here he listened to the good news of salvation ; and at length he was enabled to lay his burden at the Saviour's feet, and he asked the help of the Holy Spirit to lead a happy, and not necessarily short life.

Some time after Robert Wilson said to Thomas Walters, "Do you remember taking me to your house, Thomas, that afternoon, after I was discharged? You took me out into your garden, and talked plainly of my past life. Thank God, I began to see then the falsehood as well as the folly of the saying, 'A short life and a merry one is the best!'"

THE MOUNTAIN OF REFUGE.

An Evening Sermon by Dr. Talmage, preached on Sunday, May 23, 1880.

"Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain; escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed."—GEN. 19 : 17.

The Darlings of the Mountains—A Deadly Lake—"Escape for Thy Life"—I. An Urgent Warning—A Blind Man on the Railroad—II. Starting no Security—The Cambria and the City of Boston—III. Danger of Looking Back—The Scaffold—The Convivialities of Society—IV. Loitering by the Way—An Interruption on the Atlantic—"All a Hoax"—V. Thinking there is No Hurry—Two Periods of Last Sickness—Albert Barnes on Death-bed Repentance—A Lady's Resolve—Three Months too Late—A Sea-Captain's Rashness.

THE lakes of the earth, for the most part, are the darlings of the mountains, wreathed with wild flowers, their foreheads flashing in the sun. But not so with one lake. Accursed of God, and loathsome, the traveller comes and looks at it, and hastens away. Water-fowl are very slow to fly that way; they shy off from the lake. There are no living fish in those waters. The otter steps in, and comes out encrusted with the salt and nauseated with the bitter draught. That sea occupies the place once occupied by thirteen cities of the plain,

AMONG THEM SODOM.

It would be unpardonable in this presence to recount the crimes of that city. Suffice it to say, they mobbed an angel from heaven that came on a mission of mercy. Lot was resolved to leave that city, and he started away from it, but he went out at so slow a pace that there was danger that death would overtake him before he got to the mountain of refuge. Therefore an angel seized hold of him and pushed him on and pushed him out, crying in his ears, "Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, stay thou not in the plain; escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed."

Well, the fatal day came. It may have been the morning was as bright as that of any other day; but suddenly there was a flash in the sky, then there was an earthquake, with an upheaving of bitumen that lay all under that region, and as soon as this combustible material came in the presence of the falling fire, it ignited, and it made an upheaval of the asphaltum, and the flying flame roared and crackled, the consuming hurricane of God's wrath. Sodom shrieked its last curse, and died.

Well, my friends, God hates sin now just as much as He did then, and we all want to get away from our transgressions. There is no man of us but wants to leave his sins, and start for the mountain of refuge; but some of us are going at so slow a pace that we will not reach the mountain of refuge in time. And therefore the angel of God's mercy lays hold of us to-night, and he pushes us on, and he pushes us out, crying in our ears the words of the text: "Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, stay thou not in the plain; escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed."

I said we all want to get away from our sins. Well, what is wanted? Sin is just one thing. A legislature makes an enactment; a man breaks that law; he is incarcerated. You make a law for your household, a reasonable law; your child stubbornly faces that law; you punish him. God makes a law for the human race: we have all offended against that law; and we must be punished, and we must be severely punished, unless a door of rescue be opened. Blessed be God, I have to tell you to-night there is a mountain of refuge, and I want myself, and I want all this audience to escape with me to that refuge; and therefore it is that I sound in your ears the words of the text: "Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, stay thou not in the plain; escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed."

I. My text in the first place suggests to me on the part of those whose business it is, whose holy business it is, to get the people out of their sins. Why did not this angel accost Lot more politely? Why did he not picture to him the beauty of the mountain of refuge, and then gently induce him to start for that place? Oh, it was an urgent case, and the angel seized hold of Lot, and pushed him on. And yet, when we talk about the things of God in the pulpit, and in the pew, and in the prayer-meeting, we are so cold of heart and so stiff of manner that the world do not believe we are in earnest.

THE URGENCY

Suppose a blind man were on a rail-track, and you saw an express train coming, would you go to that man and tell him: "Now, my friend, there is a thing commonly called a locomotive, invented by James Watt, that is gradually approaching you at every revolution, and unless you change your style of pedestrianism it will soon be demonstrated which is the stronger?" You would not accost him in that way, no; you would cry, "Get out of the way; the train is coming!" Oh, would God that we who stand in the pulpit, and sit in Christian assemblage, and talk to men about their eternal interests would practice the same common-sense, the same alertness, the same enthusiasm.

Ah, my friends, there is need of great urgency. The angel did not stop to discuss with Lot the chemical properties of the storm that was coming. He just gave the alarm. And if we are honest in our Christian work, we will take the people by the arm and we will cry in their ears with something of divine earnestness: "Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, stay thou not in the plain; escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed."

You know some one asked Garrick why ministers of the Gospel sometimes seemed to lack in vehemence and earnestness, and Garrick said: "We actors speak as though fiction were reality, but you ministers speak as though the reality were fiction." May God Almighty impress those who preach, and all these Christian workers in the different departments of usefulness, that there is divine urgency demanded of those who would get the people out of their sins and get them to the mountain of eternal refuge.

II. Again, my subject impresses me with the fact that mere starting

GIVES NO SECURITY.

If Lot and his wife had stopped half way between Sodom and the mountain, they would have perished there. They might just as well have perished in their own home, and stayed in the city, as to perish half-way. There is no safety between where you are and the cross of Christ. There was not a foot of ground where it was safe for these people to stay between Sodom and the mountain of refuge, and there is not one particle of space in all the world for you to stand on until you reach Christ or the Mountain of Refuge.

I am surprised sometimes to hear people talk as though they thought that because a man started for the cross he was therefore safe. The Cambria went out of New York harbor for Glasgow, but it never got into port. The City of Boston started for New York, coming out of Liverpool harbor, all flags flying, but the ocean keeps the awful secret of her burial. Men may start for the kingdom of God, and yet never reach it. Suppose my house is on fire, and I put out the flames in three of the rooms, and do not disturb them in another room. I might as well not have brought any buckets of water, I might as well have saved my strength. In other words, to be half saved is not to be saved at all.

Here is a man who has been very sick, sick almost unto death; but by skilful medicament he has improved, he is convalescent. He takes a walk in the fresh air, he takes a cold, he has a relapse; in twelve hours he is gone. And so it appears sometimes with us. Under a divine treatment we are almost cured of our sins—we have been convalescent; but under some cold draft of worldliness we have had a relapse, we have gone back. Will we die?

Suppose the prodigal son had perished halfway between the swineherds and his father's house; he might better have stayed and chewed the carobs of the desert. Better that than nothing at all. Oh, my brother—and I speak pe haps to two hundred people in this part of r discourse—Oh, my brother, because you start t ward Christ, and start toward heaven, do n erroneously conclude therefore that you are sa I seize hold of you with all the earnestness the Gospel to-night, and I tell you not to st half-way, push on, push up. "Escape for t life; look not behind thee, stay not in all t plain; escape to the mountain, lest thou consumed."

III. But my subject further impresses with the idea that people sometimes start the kingdom of God, and then

LOOK BACK.

It was very natural that Lot and his w should look back. His friends were in that c of Sodom, her friends were in that city. always love the city of our residence, e though it may have many sins. But God l distinctly forbidden Lot and his wife to lo back. Lot's wife looked back, and she perish and there are a great many men who start the kingdom of God who look back. There a young man who was almost a Christian in father's house He was tenderly and lovin brought up He came to New York or Brooklyn a few years ago, and now in the st or shop, or factory, or office, the sceptics la at the religion of his father and mother. has almost got over all serious impressions is about to give up the Bible, he does not p as he used to pray; in other words, he is lo ing back.

Here is a man who once almost escaped f the thraldom of strong drink. He though had recovered from the thirst. His friends gratulated him; he moved out into differen sociations. But one day he just tried one gla he looked back. As the snake catches the of the bird on the tree-branch and fascinat until the bird begins to tremble, and the comes from a higher branch to a lower bra and on and down to the ground, and caught in the jaws of the serpent and crus so the wine-glass is fascinating, and it ch men, and they go down from one circle of so to another, and on and on, down, down. finally they are caught in the coils of that w biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an a (Prov. 23 : 32). Oh, how many have gone under the power of strong drink! And while these men start off in the right direc they pause, they stop, they are looking bac

There stood a culprit on a scaffold. The sl said to him, Now you have five minutes to if you have anything to say, say it. The about to die for his crime said: "I have th say: Rum ruined me. I had a little brother was a bright-eyed lad; I loved him very m One day I came home intoxicated, and he picking berries in the garden, and I was irri about something, and I took up an iron rak I killed him. And now I have to die fo crime. I have one word to say, and that is not take strong drink." Oh, is it not st that if a man gets out of that thraldom he to go back?

There are others who are destroyed by convivialities of society. They break away evil associations, but some night they say, I guess I will go down to the rooms, and se boys. They go down to stay an hour. stop all the evening, and all the time of evening is passed, and all their good resol and good intentions are gone. The men there are wicked, and brilliant, and bad. have gone for one hour, they go for ete Or perhaps the man is captured by the ho shame, like those who go as oxen to the sl ter, or as a fool to the correction of the s until a dart strike through his liver; as hasteth to the snare, and knoweth not tha for his life. As Solomon says in describin doom of the impure. (Prov. 7 : 22, 23). it not strange, when they quit that Sodom they look back?

IV. But my subject further impress at after men start for the kingdom of God ey sometimes as the text suggests it, they tarry in the in. You know very well men do not succeed worldly things unless they put their minds on m. Nothing is done without hard work and dgery. Yet there are some men who are too y for this world, and too lazy for eternity. If are going to be saved, we have got to con- tre all our energies of body, mind, and soul, hurl them in one direction. And yet peo- loiter by the way!

LOITER BY THE WAY,

nce I was crossing the sea, mid-Atlantic, at night. The China stopped. The machinery been rumbling for six or seven days, and our were used to it. The halting of the machinery e us all up; we went up on deck and asked, t's the matter? What's the matter? The m-engine of the China had stopped—stopped nid-ocean. There is always peril about a mer's stopping on the sea; it suggests harm; ggests danger. And I have to tell you that e people who stop half-way between the where they are and the cross of the Son of are in peril. They are in danger of ship- k. Oh, you started so well, my brother, ister, why don't you keep on? Why tarry e plain?

ay did Lot and his wife stop? Perhaps his said, suppose now we get to the mountain, our property is confiscated, and the city is maged; how absurd we will look! She ght it all a hoax. And so there are those hink that all this talk about judgment and ity is a mere hoax. I do not wonder that who believe that should reject the Bible. do not understand how any believe that ccept the Bible, when it says that God will with the hail of His vengeance all the of lies; and when Christ, in the perora- f His magnificent Sermon on the Mount, us one house built on the rock, that and another house built on the sand, and ell.

must all appear before the judgment-seat ist, that every one may give an account for ings done in the body, whether good or (2 Cor. 5 : 10). I see the day coming. The s begin to glow; they redden; they roll n waves of glory; herald angels in ad- crying through the heavens: "Make od is coming. The judgment, the judg- ' And all the islands and continents of rth, with uplifted hands and blanched repeat: Make way, God is coming. The nt, the judgment. And yet they halt, they tarry in the plain.

I think another reason why Lot and his re tempted to halt behind in Sodom was, ey thought, perhaps, his day is just as bright as we ever saw. hing were going to come, there would be ing among the hills, there would be omi- adows on the mountains. Ah, no; it moment music, the next moment vol- nd horrible obliteration. So it is with ow; they think there is no hurry; it is ough yet. But suppose your breath stop. Don't you realize, as intelligent women, that life is uncertain. I don't to take the words of the preacher; ask mercial man whose business it is to cal- ne uncertainties of life.

THERE WAS NO HURRY.

ys some one, I will wait until my death- nd I really suppose there may be a thou- ple in this house who are adjourning le subject to the death-pillow. I have in regard to last sicknesses that the ness is generally divided into two parts. half the patient expects to get well, or sulting about medicines and physicians; half he is in a delirium, or in stupidity, sternation which prohibits thought. In half he expects to get well; in the last annot think. I have travelled all this r, and I have crossed the sea, and I whole empires, and I declare here to-night that the poorest spot on earth for repentance is a dying pillow.

You know of Albert Barnes. He was a very cool-headed man. He never said anything rashly, and he gives his experience in regard to seeming death-bed experiences. When speaking to his audience he said: "I have seen a great many people who professed to repent on their dying pillow, or what they thought was their dying pillow, but who got well; and how many of these people, who seemed to repent on what they thought was their dying pillow, after they got well, proved by their behavior that their seeming death-bed repentance was genuine? How many," said Albert Barnes, "in my life of seventy years have I seen who, seeming to repent on their dying pillow, yet in after-life proved their repentance was genuine? Not one; not one." Oh, you see, my friend, the folly of putting off to such an hour as that things so important.

I cannot leave you to-night, I cannot sit down, until I have impressed the idea upon every one of you—for you have an immortal soul like myself, to be saved or lost—I cannot sit down until I have brought this idea fairly before you. I want to show you what a folly it is to tarry in the plain, waiting for a death-bed repentance. A gentleman was telling me of a lady who, having the subject of religion presented to her, said, "I will in six months, I will in just six months become a Christian; I always stick to my word, and when I make a promise I keep it; and just six months from now I will become a Christian."

Three months passed along—half the time; and in the evening she was talking with some friends and she said: "Do you know I am going to become a Christian? I made a promise I would in six months; it is three months from now." In the morning she did not come to the breakfast table. They went to her room and knocked; the door was not opened; they went in. Her spirit had gone to God who gave it. Three months too late. Oh, to be three months too late; to be one month too late; to be one week too late; to be one day too late; to be one hour too late; to be one minute too late; to be one second too late—is to be forever too late. To the mountain; to the mountain! God is the mountain of refuge; the cleft side of Christ is the cleft rock in which we are to hide. To the mountain!

But, says some one, there is no peril; I don't realize there is any peril.

SO SAID A SEA CAPTAIN.

A mariner had discovered a rock in the Mediterranean, and he came home and reported it, and the chart-makers defined that rock on the chart. The sea-captain looked at it, and said, "Ah, there's no rock there; that is a deception. I have been around that place many times, and with my ship I will prove it in my next voyage." So he started out on his voyage, and to show his contempt of that danger he came right along by that very spot. "Now," he said, "my lads, we'll come to the place where they say that rock is. I will sail right across that place." He sails on. Five minutes were passed. "There," said he, "did not I tell you there was no danger, no rock?" When, just at that moment, crash went the ship.

A few escaped in life-boats; the last they saw of the sea-captain was his hair flying in the wind, the despair of death on his face. And men sail on and say there is no danger, there is no peril. Why, we have been along this place many a time; you can't alarm us, they say: until, in a most unexpected moment, they strike a rock and go down.

May God Almighty, by His Spirit, if never before, move through this audience. The door of mercy is wide open for all of you. Come in. I do not ask where you came from, or what your history has been, or what your sin. I give one universal invitation, and without any discrimination, while I cry: "Whosoever, whosoever will, let him come." Do you think I would tell you of a peril, if I did not know of a refuge and a rescue? Christ, the Son of God, with all His wounds, to-night pleads for your eternal salvation. Now, this moment, is your chance for heaven.

"Bow the knee, and kiss the Son;
Come, and welcome, sinner, come."

[The prayers of the readers of this Journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors in America and England, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and for its weekly circulation of more than 185,000 copies to be blessed by the Holy Spirit to the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Talmage especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

FROM THE BALL-ROOM TO THE COFFIN.

"I HOPE you will not go to the ball to-night, Thomas," said Mrs. F. to her son, a young man who had just attained his majority.

"Why not, mother? I can't see any harm in dancing."

"There is harm in anything, Thomas, which diverts your mind from the concerns of eternity. You have lived twenty-one years and have not yet commenced the great work for which life was given; and is it right for you to trifle with God's mercy and forbearance by spending your time in frivolous amusement?"

"Mother, you are too strict and puritanical in your notions. I wish you would become as liberal as my former Sunday-school teacher. There was a time when she seemed to think of nothing but religion, and she made me uneasy and unhappy by talking of my sins and my danger; but lately she is more agreeable and lively, and last week she was persuaded to attend a dance. If it is proper for her it certainly is for me."

The mother's heart sank within her. She had hoped much from the teacher's influence; she believed that it had once led her son very near the foot of the Cross; but she had yielded to the worldly influences which surrounded her; she had ceased to watch; she had returned to the gayeties which had once been solemnly renounced, and now her example was telling on the interest of an undying soul.

Thomas went to the dance, and from that hour he plunged with mad eagerness into every form of earthly pleasure. Sometimes he was impressed with a solemn providence; sometimes conscience would waken under the clear light of God's truth; but he lulled it to sleep by the reflection that he was only a little more gay than his former Sunday-school teacher and others, who were church members, and that if they found religion so dull and unsatisfactory that they were obliged to resort to worldly amusements, it could not be wrong for him to do the same, and he would certainly secure religion to die by. Thus he rushed on, until, without a moment's warning, at an hour when he was not aware, the last summons came.

While amusing himself with a favorite horse he received an injury which proved fatal in a few hours. Agonizing pain, followed by utter insensibility, filled up the time which he had purposed, when in health, to spend in securing the salvation of his soul, and then the tolling bells announced that he had passed to the Judgment Seat of Christ. Did his old Sunday-school teacher hear in that sound the knell of a lost soul? and had she no fear that the blood of that soul would be found on her garments?

The Plans for Taking the Census in a single day in Great Britain next year are nearly perfected. The arrangements show a wonderful power of concerted action. A religious journal makes the suggestion that with a similar system, extending its ramifications throughout a given district or country, great good might be done, in circulating the truth, preaching the Gospel from house to house for a witness to all people in a day.

ROCHESTER TOWER.

By Miss M. A. Paull.

(Continued from page 519.)

Cecil Anerley's Character—Salome's Influence—Her Refusal to join in Mission Work—Her Power in Music—Cecil's Love—His Mother Discovers it—Consultation with the Minister.

Constance Anerley's letter, describing her night adventure with the afflicted pupil was read at the breakfast-table of the Anerleys, and caused the relatives who loved her so much some anxiety.

"Poor, brave girl!" said Cecil, finally, as he rose from the table. "But, good bye, I must be off to business."

Cecil Anerley was one of that fine class of young men whom right-thinking people rejoice to remember are in existence, when they are sick and weary of contemplating the idiotic youths who waste brain and health in our music-halls. With manly modesty he was not ashamed to confess that Christ was his Saviour. And there are times and places and associates in our great cities and our country towns, when and before whom to do this requires the bravery and the zeal of a martyr age.

Lads and men whose own consciences are dead, and who have hardly sufficient intelligence or moral culture to appreciate the beauty and glory of the Messiah's heroic life and sacrificial death, are yet numerous enough and impertinent enough, and of course have influence enough to make life a very difficult thing indeed for those who are brought up in godly homes, who, so many of them, mean at first to do well and please their pious parents, but who too often dread the sneer and laugh and taunt, and then, alas! learn to scoff and swear and run riot with the rest.

Half their difficulty, could they only understand this, arises from their yielding in some small measure at the very first to the prevalent tone of feeling around them. If a youth, on entering warehouse, or shop, or office, is not afraid when he is interrogated, or "pumped," to avow himself a Christian, a teetotaler, and a despiser of tobacco, he will have to endure a miserable coldness for some time from the worthless, and a shyness from those whom the worthless have already in their clutches. But it will be hard and unnatural if he does not soon rally to himself some one of like aims; and it will be his own fault if in a few months he does not win the respect of his employers, and the good will of at least many of the employed.

Cecil Anerley was of a sunny temperament, as free as possible from a desire to condemn others. He was not even perpetually intercommuning with his own heart. He was extremely affectionate, and his father's and mother's influence was very strong over him; but the most intense feelings of his heart had not hitherto been awakened when Salome Stanley came to Eglinton Terrace. Her refined beauty, her winning grace, her manner that so unintentionally and yet so unmistakably seemed to appeal for the sympathy and care of those about her, were all different to what he had observed or been accustomed in his mother and sisters; at least they were different manifestations of the same things, and struck Cecil with all the pleasant force of novelty.

It was delightful, too, to be thanked in such a sweet voice for every little courteous attention which mother and sister received as only dutiful, natural and proper. Life grew brighter, and sunnier, and sweeter to Cecil Anerley; now, indeed, for the first time in his life, he seemed to live. He came home a little earlier every evening, for this new interest in his home quickened his footsteps.

Cecil Anerley could hardly have grown into a fop to save his life, he was too essentially manly; in these little matters that he now observed it was the anxiety to please that was uppermost in his consideration.

Tenderly and kindly, but decidedly, if Cecil could only have understood it, Salome Stanley refused to accept as personal any little attention which he offered to her. Blinded by his admiration, hoping ever, happy in his new found joy, Cecil could not, or would not, understand this.

She had not been with them very long before Cecil tried to interest her about the Albert Mission, to which, since his father's death, he had regularly devoted one evening every week. He was the President of the Band of Hope and an immense favorite with the children, to whom his cheery face, gay, joyous, playful manner, and happy hopeful temperament, were like a revelation of a brighter world than the one they lived in.

But Cecil was not successful in his attempt. "I have no ability whatever to do any good in that way," she said. "You would not believe how ignorant I am of the poor, and I am ashamed to own it, but I do shrink from contact with dirty people, unless I could really do them some great good."

"I believe you could," said Cecil.

"You are very kind, but I am afraid I have nothing in common; we should never understand each other."

"Oh, that's such a mistake, begging your pardon!" said Cecil, heartily. "That's just what people think till they get among the poor. But you know there are, after all, such a number of things we all have in common. To begin with, hunger and thirst. Why, even if we are lucky enough never to have been ravenously hungry or awfully thirsty, we have all of us waited long enough for a meal, some day or other, to understand these terrible cravings in a minor degree. And then there's the love of finery and love of children, and beautiful little acts of self-denial, that make the whole world kin. I wish you would come some evening."

But though Salome Stanley smiled, she still shook her head.

"Then why not go and visit the babies in the day nursery with Emmie?" suggested Cecil. "Every good woman has a soft place in her heart for little children."

"Not yet, not yet," said Salome, gently, in a tone so sad that both Cecil and Emily Anerley looked at her in surprise.

"Some day, dear friends," she added, "when you have helped to make me good and strong, and more like yourselves, I may be able to aid just a little in your work, but not now."

Cecil was dreadfully puzzled. He decided that she must have had a lot more trouble than he had had any idea of, and began to think himself a blunderer. He had better propose a trip to Kew or Richmond and a row on the Thames, or a turn at sight-seeing, or a walk in the parks.

This last was the only relaxation and recreation out of doors that Salome Stanley agreed to for the present; and many a lovely spring and summer evening Emmie and Cecil accompanied her in the long, quiet, and pleasant strolls. But even in these walks she did not care to frequent the most fashionable parts of the parks, nor did she ever go out unveiled.

Only in one occupation did she show a passionate enthusiasm and emotion—her music. Emily Anerley listened with surprised attention to the soul that awoke in their piano whenever Salome Stanley sat down to it. She had purchased for her own parlor a sweet-toned American organ, and on this she performed exquisite morsels from the oratorios, and tender quaint old chants and hymns, till the house was full of the harmony of sound; and she herself listened as one entranced, and not as if she called it forth to this delicious music.

Cecil, like so many other people, had been always fond of music as an agreeable pastime, without feeling that it had a special language for him. Salome Stanley inspired her friends, and most of all Cecil, with something of her own whole-souled devotion to this glorious art. Each favorite passage was a friend to her, instinct with memories and associations full of her very existence.

And when she sang, which was but very rarely, the song took wings straightway, and flew into your heart. It was dangerous for Cecil to listen. Perhaps she felt so, for seldom as did sing, it was nearly always when he was in the house. The days grew warmer, the s rays were brighter, summer had come.

"Summer," said Cecil to himself, "has c to my nature, and it is blossoming; my hea
the flower, Salome is the sun."

It gave Cecil no trouble that Salome, th kind and friendly, showed no disposition v ever to be flattered by his attentions, or t cept them as serious. He could not have t forward woman, who deliberately set her at him, and simpered and looked for him w ever he approached her. The uncertainty h about Salome Stanley, and the distance he sidered her beauty and her talents put bet them, though they might have tortured a hopeful nature, served but to intensify the she had inspired. Only when he thoug that distant future, when he should som manage to feel he might dare to tell her c love, did his courage fail him, as he asked self was it possible she would say "No"?
it possible that, spite of all his devotion, a anxiety to please her, he should never wi love? Then, indeed, it seemed to Cecil th sunshine would go out of his sky, and the clouds gather.

Mrs. Anerley and Emmie were not v without suspicion as to Cecil's infatuation.
haps it is hardly possible for any young much less one of Cecil's candid tempera to be in the same house day after day wit woman he is learning to love more and fondly, as it appears to him, every hour existence, without revealing his secret t perception of those who love him. Cecil' smile if he saw Salome Stanley on enteri room, his cloudy brow if he missed her alacrity with which he sprang to do her bidding or to render her in any way more fortable and at ease; the fascinated glanc which his eyes rested on her and follow every movement; the attention with wh listened to her slightest word; the rapt his countenance expressed on those mos occasions when she let him hear her pl sing—all proved a sufficient index to the s his heart.

Mrs. Anerley felt some difficulty as growing attachment between her son and Stanley. As usual, in her difficulties s cided to take counsel of the Rev. Mr. Fe
He called one evening to find her alone and Emily having taken Salome Stanle walk in Kensington Gardens. She to this, and then added, "I am afraid m dear boy is becoming fascinated by Mis ley."

"Well," said the minister, "consideri beauty and gentleness, it is not imp
And would that be anything very dread
dear Mrs. Anerley?"

"We seem to know so very little abo
She never confides in us."

"Has she not told you of the death brother and father?" asked Mr. Fergus

"Oh, yes, she did tell us just what y mentioned — just what we knew befor served Mrs. Anerley.

"But what she did not know, that I you, and probably all that she has to tel the minister. "There are very few r enacted by the people who lodge with us are mostly done by people we have ne and never shall see. This is a very world, and though, of course, curious t happen occasionally, most of us live a v straightforward life. Spite of somethin mysterious in her style and manners, I pect Salome Stanley would make an wife for your son Cecil."

And Mr. Ferguson, being a good de tomed to settle matters, at all events in mind, looked upon his decision as final.

"I should consider her much too Cecil," said Mrs. Anerley.

"Should you?" remarked the "Now I don't think a few years matt ere is real similarity of tastes and habits. I ink you may safely leave your young people to emselves. The less interference in such affairs e better. And here they come," he added, oking through the window. "Miss Stanley as quite a pretty color; how it improves her!"

(To be continued.)

PPROACHING PERIHELIA AND CALAMITIES.

By Rev. T. J. Malyon, LL.B.

(Continued from page 525.)

ur Saviour's Language—The Pestilence—Prof. Lockyer on Solar Changes—Mr. Jenkins on "Epidemics and the Stars"—Dr. Knapp's Evidence—Dr. Trail's Deductions—Solar Influence—Testimony of the Ancients—Familiar Scientific Facts.

NOTHING seems to be more definitely taught our Saviour, or less capable of a figurative inrpretation at the period of complete and final lfilment, than the prediction that the Millenum shall be preceded by terrible judgments, nines, pestilences, and earthquakes. The year of the redeemed" has always been a "day vengeance" to the wicked. Great changes ve usually been brought about by great comtions. The great moral changes by which d has from time to time advanced the work redemption have generally been accompanied convulsions which have shaken terribly the th. The deliverance of the righteous has en the signal for the infliction of judgments the wicked. Both the settlement of Israel in land of Canaan and the bringing in of the ntiles into the Christian Church were accomnied by unprecedented judgments.

f these preliminary changes and advances in kingdom of Christ have been accompanied the signal judgments of heaven, much more y we expect the yet greater change—the aking up of the present order of things—will brought about amid yet greater commons and yet severer judgments. It shall be a of "great tribulation, such as was not since beginning of the world to this time, no, nor r shall be" (Matt. 24: 21). The dreadful wars, tilences, famines, earthquakes, massacres, l carnage that came on the Jews at the siege l destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, nd as a mere figure, type, or representation of se far more awful and extensive tribulations ich are coming on the earth.

Among the judgments that shall go before the rd, as He comes to revolutionize the world is pestilence. The Bible account of the pestice is that it is a scourge inflicted by God on rebellious and disobedient; was inflicted on ael when they worshipped Baal-peor, when y despised the manna and made the golden ; inflicted on the subjects of David when he nbered Israel, and on the Egyptians when y oppressed the people of God." It was sud, desolating, fatal, noisome, and especially l in cities—a destroying angel stalking over length and breadth of the land, walking as Pestilence by night and as the Destroyer t wasteth by noonday.

mong the physical causes which may be ployed by the great Creator to bring about a es of terrestrial calamities, the approaching ihelia of the four great planets may be numed.

rofessor Lockyer, an eminent English astroner, whose patience of research and scientific lifications are well known in England and other ntries, and who has made the sun his special dy, inclines to the opinion that recent solar nges must produce very serious results. The ppearance of hydrogen from the corona, ch is universally admitted, means that solar t has decreased, and this necessitates, at t in its earlier stages, an increase of heat on earth; for the gases thrown out by the sun ts normal condition, and which act as proing media, disappear as the heat decreases.

a recent contribution of Mr. B. G. Jenkins, .A.S., to the Pall Mall Gazette, on "Epiics and the Stars," he said, in reference to the Black Death epidemic which has recently appeared in Russia; "The magnetic lines in which the greatest power is manifested are advancing west at the average rate of about one-seventh of a degree annually over the regions in which are the present epidemic-stricken quarters of the globe—Russia, Persia, United States, Brazil, and Western China. As the magnetic poles advance, these lines advance, and epidemics on man and beast accompany them." On calculating back, it will be found that the magnetic line which is now passing across Russia must have passed over the region 500 years ago. This takes us back to the period of the Black Death—the middle of the fourteenth century—when precisely similar magnetic conditions existed.

In a paper which Mr. Jenkins has also sent to the Royal Astronomical Society, he has affirmed upon scientific data that "within the next seven years there will happen that which has not happened for hundreds of years—all the planets at or near their nearest point to the sun about the same time. It is true of the earth that its magnetic intensity is greatest about the time when it is near the sun; the same is probably true of all the planets; therefore we may expect extraordinary magnetic phenomena during the next seven years and great plagues, which will manifest themselves in all their intensity when Jupiter is about three years from his perihelion—that is, in 1883."

In a lecture on Babylonian literature, by the Rev, A. H. Sayce, delivered at the Royal Institution, he said that the disclosures of the cuneiform inscriptions prove that the phenomena of the weather were observed and recorded by the Assyrians, together with the configurations and influences of the heavenly bodies.

Dr. Knapp has shown, in a historical paper to the New York Medical Journal, that all the wide-spread pestilences for 3,000 years past have occurred with the perihelia, or nearing of the large planets to the sun. At former periods it has been noticed that the near approach of one or more of the large planets of the solar system occasioned disturbances in the atmosphere, causing great heat and cold rains, droughts, and blight in crops and fruit, epidemics among human beings, and epizootics (a murrain) among animals.

Dr. J. B. Trail, in the Philadelphia Star, says—"We shall not have to wait long for the appearance of the expected pestilences, for we are approaching a very pestilential period. Jupiter, 1,000 times as large as the earth, revolves round the sun every twelve years. Saturn once in about thirty years. Neptune once in 164 years, and Uranus once in sixty years. The perihelion of all these planets does not occur at the same time more than once in thousands of years In the sixth century and again in the sixteenth century, the first three were coincidently in perihelion, and these were the most pestilential periods of the Christian era. The perihelion periods of Jupiter and Saturn coincide with the extensive prevalence of plague, cholera, and other epidemics But in the future, from even now to 1885, we are to have what has not happened for 1,800 years, viz, the nearest approach to the sun of all these four planets coincidentally The obvious deduction from this fact and theory is, that the changed condition of the atmosphere consequent on the interference with, or abstraction of, the usual amount of light and heat will be increasingly unfavorable, to life and health on our globe, from the present time to 1880, and from 1880 to 1885 the adverse influences will be greater, after which they will gradually diminish"

In a learned work by Mr. John Kendrick, M.A., entitled "Ancient Egypt under the Pharaohs," it is said that "by their heavenly science the Egyptians could foretell years of scarcity and plenty, pestilences, earthquakes, inundations, and the appearance of comets, and do many other things surpassing the sagaciy of the vulgar."

Pliny relates of Anaximander that "he foretold the earthquakes that overthrew Lacedæmon." Pliny also relates that Anaxagoras foretold the fall of a meteoric stone, about the second year of the 78th Olympiad, which occurred near the Egos, in Thrace.

Claudius Ptolemy, the Egyptian astronomer, has handed down to us, in his "Tetrabiblos," or "Four Books of the Influence of the Stars," the views of the ancients concerning particular constitutions of the atmosphere.

Without quoting the statements of Lord Bacon and the highly-gifted Kepler on the physical influences of the primary planets, it may be sufficient to adduce the fact that Dr. Goad, who was an eye-witness of the Plague of London, in 1665, published a work in which he referred the proximate cause of that epidemic to the action of certain planets on the atmosphere.

The author of the "Approaching End of the Age" says that the sun and moon may be said to drive the whole clockwork of terrestrial nature, "the periodic duration and withdrawal of various degrees of light and heat, with resulting days and nights and changeful seasons; the movement and circulation of all winds, from the gentlest zephyr to the most terrible tornado; the control of all-pervading electric, magnetic, and chemical changes; these, together with the constant exercise of the most potent of all physical influences in the development and support of vegetable and animal life, constitute a sum of solar and lunar operations which seems to leave but little to be effected by other agencies."

He then adduces "familiar scientific facts" to justify the statement and give it its due weight. "Be it remembered that every atom in the universe attracts every other atom with a force inverse to the square of the distance." The globe we inhabit yields to the influence of the sun "as the wave to the wind." "Other influences exerted on the earth, as that of the moon, and that of her sister planets, are not without their effect." "Nothing in all its vast extent, no single atom in the material substances which form and clothe the crust of the earth, is long at rest. And this unending and infinitely-varied movement may be traced to the influence of the sun and moon. The huge world itself submits to it, and every drop of water, every leaf, every insect, is similarly subject." It is through the heat of the sun, "its light and its actinic, magnetic, and electric influences, that it operates on the atmosphere of our earth, on its seas and continents, on its flora and fauna, and on mankind." "The sun exerts mighty and mysterious influences over the earth, independently of his attraction and of his heat. That there is a close connection between solar and lunar force and magnetism has been abundantly demonstrated."

Now, from these statements it is evident the way is cleared for the belief in the operation of natural laws and planetary influences. It is a remarkable coincidence, to use no stronger term, that the most fearful visitations of the Black Death in Europe, Asia, and Africa were contemporaneous with the perihelia or conjunction of the primary planets; and it can be shown that whenever there was a maximum of planetary influence, epidemics, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, etc., coincided.

(To be concluded.)

A Table that Belonged to Rowland Hill was used by the Rev. John S. Inskip on his arrival in London the other day. Our readers remember that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of June 10th, contained a portrait and biographical sketch of Mr. Inskip, and an account of the "Round the World Tour" on which he and two other ministers, with their wives, were then about to start. The party reached England safely, and on the 11th July, began their services in Surrey Chapel, a famous old church which was opened by Rowand Hill on June 8th 1783. The table we have mentioned—a strong, massive piece of mahogany—was the communion table of the church for about seventy years, when it was displaced by some modern improvements and was removed to the pastor's study, where it still stands.

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50

per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to THE MANAGER, CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of back numbers to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

SINGLE COPIES

can most conveniently be obtained through newsdealers. Any complaint that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer is promptly attended to if we are given the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

Scores of our readers take the trouble to send us the kindest expressions of their good will. Hundreds more agree cordially in what they say. Now will each of these good friends get us a new subscriber? We may say to persons to whom the commission is an inducement, that we believe our terms are more liberal than those of any other paper.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Sectional Issue in the Presidential Campaign, it was hoped would, considering the character of the candidates nominated, be altogether dropped from the speeches of politicians. It has however become already unpleasantly prominent. As usual in such cases, no one is ready to assume the responsibility for its introduction. In a recent interview, General Garfield emphatically repudiated it. He said: "I am the last man to be charged with a sentiment or desire for such a canvass. There were some who would have gone into the campaign with that sentiment, but I desired to check it. Our Democratic friends have torn open the sores, not I. They have revived the issues, not I." It is probable that Democratic speakers would repel the charge with similar vigor, but the fact is in evidence that the campaign is assuming a distinctly sectional character, whoever may be responsible for it. It will be well for the country if General Garfield's supporters remember that their candidate is opposed to a canvass of that character.

Federal Aid for Educational Purposes, especially in the Southern States, was advocated in an important speech delivered by President Hayes, at Columbus, Ohio, on August 11th. He said: "The principle applied by general consent to works of public improvement is that wherever a public improvement is of national importance, and local and private enterprises are inadequate to its prosecution, the General Government should undertake it. On this principle I would deal with the question of education by the aid of the National Government. Wherever in the United States the local systems of popular education are inadequate, they should be supplemented by the General Government by devoting to the purpose, by suitable legislation and with proper safeguards, the public lands or, if necessary, appropriations from the treasury of the United States."

Gen. Garfield's Presence at Chautauqua was the occasion of a very cordial though not a noisy demonstration on August 8th. The General arrived at Chautauqua on his way home on Saturday evening, and having conscientious objections to travelling on Sunday, spent the day at Chautauqua. He attended the Sunday-school camp-meeting in the morning and unostentatiously took his seat among the teachers. But he was soon noticed and was welcomed with demonstrations of respect. At the Y. M. C. A. meeting in the evening he was also enthusiastically received and invited to speak; but he declined, saying that in his opinion Sunday was not the day for him to make a speech.

Temperance in Politics Appears, in the Light of the Presidential nominations, to be gaining ground. Of the four candidates nominated by the great political parties for the highest office in the country, three are earnest temperance men and advocates of prohibition. General Garfield, the Republican candidate, General Weaver, the Greenback candidate, and General Neal Dow, the nominee of the Prohibitionists have all by precept and practice endorsed the principles of total abstinence. General Hancock's views on the subject have not been made public, but it is a significant and encouraging fact to temperance reformers that of the prominent men in the coming campaign so large a proportion should be pronounced friends of temperance.

A Prayer Offered by Dr. Deems at the Meeting of the United States Commissioners for the World's Fair of 1883, on Wednesday, August 11th, is deserving of special notice at a period when elections to important offices are about to take place. Dr. Deems, in the course of his prayer, petitioned for many national blessings, and among others that God would "remove from public places all cowardly, profane, and licentious men." It is plain to all who have given much attention to the conduct of public business that Dr. Deems had only too weighty reasons for such a petition, and that he indicated one of the most serious dangers which threaten our national life. But while the help of God is rightly asked in the difficulty, many persons habitually hold aloof from politics altogether, and thus neglect the means within their reach for rescuing the nation from its peril.

Mr. Moody's Invitation to the Conference at his home in Northfield, Mass., has been issued and will probably result in a large and interesting meeting. The conference will commence on September 1st, and continue to September 10th. Mr. Moody says: "The object is not so much to study the Bible (though the Scriptures will be searched daily for instruction and promises) as for solemn self-consecration, and to plead God's promises, and to wait upon Him for a fresh anointing of power from on high. Not a few of God's chosen servants from our own land, and from over the sea will be present to join with us in prayer and council. All ministers and laymen, and those women who are fellow-helpers and laborers together with us in the kingdom and patience of our Lord Jesus Christ—and, indeed, all Christians who are hungering for intimate fellowship with God, and for power to do His work—are most cordially invited to assemble with us.

"It is also hoped that those Christians whose hearts are united with us in desire for this new enduement of power, but who cannot be present in the body, will send us salutation and greeting by letter, that there may be concert of prayer with them throughout the land during these days of waiting."

A Grave Indictment of the Business Principles and practices of commercial society in America is made by Rev. J. Milton Greene. In an exhaustive article recently published, he describes customs, which he states are widely prevalent, which are diametrically opposed to the principles of Christianity. Among others is that of some commission agents who purchase goods for retail traders and forward to their clients two invoices, one of which states the correct price they expect to receive, and the other, a much higher one, is sent for the retail dealer to show to his customer. The object of sending the second invoice is to assist the dealer in deluding the consumer making him believe that a smaller profit has been realized fron
the transaction than is actually the case. Mr Greene asserts that this practice and man others of a similar kind are generally adopted and that professedly Christian tradesmen stifl their consciences with the plea that "every on does it."

It is obvious that in such circumstances conscientious Christian must find himself al most shut out from success in business at th present day. As a clerk, there are many house where he could not retain his situation for day, and as a tradesman, he would find it difficul to compete with unscrupulous rivals. We ma infer from such a condition of affairs, what tha time will be which is spoken of in Rev. 13 : 1 when no man will be allowed to buy or sell sav him who has the mark of the beast.

A Shocking Disaster, by which Twelve Pe sons were killed instantly, and fifty-seven other were wounded so seriously that it is feare many of them cannot recover, occurred o August 12th. A party of excursionists numbe ing fifteen hundred persons were returning fro a trip to Atlantic City, on the West Jersey Rai road, to Philadelphia. The number of passe gers being so large, two trains were filled, whic were run at too short a distance from eac other. As the trains neared May's Landing th brakes of the rear section were found to be o of order, and when the engineer of the first se tion slackened speed at a curve, the locomoti of the second train crashed into the car in fron crushing several persons to death. The sho carried away part of the locomotive, and a delu of boiling water and steam was ejected, severe scalding the occupants of the car. The suffe ings of the wounded were agonizing, and son jumped into the river in their frenzy. Aid w promptly rendered to the injured passengers, b many were held in the boiling water by fra ments of the wrecked car, and were only ext cated with difficulty. It is believed that but f of the passengers in the car can recover. Gre indignation is expressed toward the engineer the rear train, who is in custody. It is stat that through carelessness he neglected to sh off steam with sufficient promptitude. Some the passengers searched for him immediate after the accident, declaring their intention shooting him, but he escaped them and w arrested to await the coroner's inquest.

The Practical Mode of Celebrating t
Robert Raikes Centennial, adopted by the B tist Sunday-schools of the United States been very enthusiastically received. It is a markable fact that letters have been received the American Baptist Publication Society fr Sunday-schools in thirty-seven States—all but vada—and from several Territories. The do tions thus far received are about $4000. As ma more Sunday-schools will unite in the cent nial celebration, it is hoped that a large sum be contributed before the close of the year the aid of new and poor Sunday-schools.

A Lover's Scriptural Answer.—A Bost young man, who had consecrated his life to service of God as a foreign missionary, was ab to proceed to his work in Spain; but bef starting he sent a proposal of marriage to a l for whom he had long cherished an affecti
Her reply was merely this: "Rom. 15 : 2
